15 IT is a scourge greatly to be feared, with the which God (being displeased) doth punish nations, when he giues them children for Princes, and women for Gouvernors: for the young age and weake sexe being alwaies little respected, and these instruments easie to gouerne by flatterers, and to be terrified by the violent, wee haue alwaies scene in such raignes, Maiestie in contempt, Iustice troden vnder foot, the people oppressed, the good recoyled, Truth banished, and the Country in prey to their neighbors. D. Fernand of Castile being a child, the yeare 1295. when his father D. Sancho dyed, the gouernment of him, and of his Realme by the will of the deceased King, should remaine in the hands of the Queene D. Mary his mother. A little before D. Henry his great vnckle was come into Spaine, who hauing bene chased out of the country for his turbulent spirit, during the raigne of Don Fernand the third had runne through many countries, both Christians and Infidels, and tryed diuers conditions: so as after many yeares he brought backe into Spaine the same qualities which had expelled him, yea far worse: by whose aduice the Queene was forced to gouerne her selfe, so as in effect he was Regent himselfe, which the Earle D. Iohn Nunez de Lara, and his brother D. Nugno Gonçales did enuie. Besides the Noblemen who during the life of the deceased king were out of the Realme, hoping in this new raigne to be restored, through the fauour of their partisans and friends, were now returned, which did not a little trouble the Queene mother, who for these considerations was forced to giue D. Henry great authority against her will. D. Diego Lope Diaz de Haro had vsurped the authoritie in the ancient patrimonie of his house of Biscay, and there were newes that the Infant D. Iohn came out of Affricke, to contend for the kingdom: Besides, that on the other side D. Alphonso de la Cerde, fauoured by the forces of Arragon, France, and Nauarre, carried himselfe openly for king of Castile.

Not.

Troubles raised by D. Henry.

A Notwithstanding all these crosses and dangers, this Princeesse who was of a great courage, caused Don Fernand her sonne to be proclaimed and crowned King of Castile, Leon, and other lands depending in the city of Toledo, writing vnto the Noblemen and Prouinces to acknowledge and receiue him: and to the end they should doe it the more willingly, she did release them of a tribute called Sica, which the deceased king, being prest with great necessitie, had imposed. In the beginning no man refused it, but the Noblemen mentioned bred such a confusion, as she had almost sunke vnder the burthen. D. Henry to settle his authoritie of Regent, which he sayd did belong vnto him, stirred vp the townes of Castile to open rebellion, so as the Queene mother and her sonne being come to Vailledolit, where she had called an assembly of the Estates, they shut the gates against them, and caused them to stay without vntill night: neither would they then suffer such as had accompanied them to enter, but onely she, her sonne, their Officers and household seruants. Don Henry came thither, who hauing scarce saluted the Queene, he began to perswade her to end this dangerous warre, and to disperse the conspiracie of so many Princes against her and her sonne by her marriage with Don Pedro of Arragon, to whome this Princeesse gaue a courragious and sharpe answer, reiecting this marriage as vnfit and pernicious.

The Infant Don Iohn the Kings vnckle, being arriued in Granado, came to Extremadura, and seized vpon the towne of Pont, or Alcantara, and then entered into Portugal, where by the fauor of the King Don Denis, he tooke vpon him the title of King of Castile, both of them writing to the Inhabitants of the frontier, that they should hold him for their Prince and Soueraigne Lord: and Don Denis not content herewith, sent to proclaim warre against the Queene D. Maria, and Don Henry. The wise Queene mother withstood all these dangers, and preuented them as well as she could, yeelding to the malice of the time, resisting soepe, and giuing contentment to others, with the least preiudice she could.

The king of Portugal came to Cite Roderigo, whereas the afflicted Queene mother with her sonne and puple were, and there they did in some sort renew their old allyances: they imposed silence to the Infant Don Iohn, who seemed to relinquish: and they did againe conclude a future marriage betwixt the king Don Fernand, and D. Constance Infanta of Portugal. To these intestine troubles, were added the enterprises of the Nauarrois and Arragonois, who led by Alphonso de la Cerde, calling himselfe King of Castile, entered the country by S. Esteuan de Gormas, and passing vnto Leon, hee was there receiued without any difficultie. There Don Iohn, who was rebelled againe, caused himselfe to be crowned king of Leon, diuiding betwixt them the Realmes of Spaine: so as Don Alphonso should be king of Castile, Toledo, Cordoua, Murcia, and Iuen: and the Infant Don Iohn of Leon, Galicia, Extremadura and Seuille. Into this confederacie entered the Kings of Arragon, Portugal, Granado, and the Queene D. Violant, widow to the king Don Alphonso, with whom there also ioyned Philip of France and Nauarre, with many Noblemen and Knights of the Countrey: in all whose names Don James, king of Arragon, had sent to proclaim warre against the Queene D. Maria and her sonne Don Fernand, in the yeare 1269. so as there was a pittifull reuolt in all parts of Spaine: these afflicted Princes, mother and sonne, hauing no entrance into any towne without great difficultie. After this inuasion of Leon, the Nauarrois and Arragonois led by D. Alphonso, entered into Sahagun, where they crowned him king of Castile, and tooke Villagarcia, Tordeillas, Medina del Riosecco, la Mota, Villa Fafila, with many other places and forts.

*D. Alphonso de la Cerde, calling himselfe King
of Castile.*

*Confederacie
against the King of Castile.*

An. 1269

Notwithstanding being at the seige of Maiorga, a place distant fise leagues from Sahagun, he continued there three moneths, and finding no man to make resistance, God shewed his power, for the plague falling in the Nauarrois and the Arragonois Campe, they were forced to rayse their seige, and make a truce with the Queene widow to return home, who being oppressed with infinit miseries, without counsell, ayde, or support, not onely made a truce, but also sent them linnen, carpets, and such like things, to the end they might carry away the bodies of many Noblemen and Knights which were dead of this contagion, the more honorably, among the which were the Infant D. Pedro of Arragon, Don Symon of Virea, and Raymond Anglesol Arragonois, giuing commandement that

Plague in Don Alphonso de la Cerde's campe.

Infant of Castile by the king of Granada.

that they should suffer them to cary them away without any let or hinderance. Thus some retired into Nauarre, and others into Arragon. The king D. James on the other side, being entred by the frontiers of Murcia, had conquered the greatest part of that kingdom. Hee of Portugal, notwithstanding the conference and league made at Cite Roderigo, showed himselfe in armes vpon the frontier, and had spoiled the countie vnto Simanca, and neere to Vailledolit, where beeing aduertised of the Nauarrois retreat, hee returned also, hauing taken most of the places of Alfajares and Sabugal, with some others about those quarters: but the king of Granada thinking to effect some great matter in Andalusia, was repulsd by D. Alphonso Perez de Guzman Gouvernor of that Prouince.

16 During these warres, many Iewes moued with feare more then with deuotion, turned to the Christian Religion in Spaine, where they had dwellings & Synagogues almost in all the good townes. The occasion was, that in the citie of Auila, there rose vp a certaine man of the Iewish nation, who rearmd himselfe a Prophet, with whom another of the town of Aillon, thrust on with the like spirit, did ioyn: who telling of many secret reuelations, prophesied vnto the Iewes that the time of their deliuerance did approach. The authority of these two personages, well knowne, was not little among them, and therefore they were easily credited; and the rather, for that they did accompany their preachings and discourses, with modestie, grauitie, and holinesse in their outward behaviour: so as these newes running throughout all Spaine, the people gaue themselves to prayers, fasting, almes, and all other commendable good workes, attending the day of their redemption, the which was foretold them by these Prophets, and appointed the last day of the fourth moneth: on the which (sayd they) should appeare many signes in heauen, with a loud sound of a trumpet. Thus hauing past the time in great repentance, feare and terrour, vnto that day, they were throughout all the townes, early in the morning, all attired in white before their Synagogues, as they are accustomed to do the day of their expiation, to pray vnto God to see those celestiall signes, and to receiue their Messias: but seeing nothing, they returned to their houses, whither fleeing come, as they say, there appeared many crosses on the walles, and vpon their garments; whereof some made good vse, thinking it came from our Sauour Iesus Christ, who reprooued their hardnes of heart: and therefore acknowledging the error wherein they had liued, receiued the holy baptisme; among the which was a great Philition called Alphonso, who did afterwards write against the Iewes obstinacie. Others persisting in their impietie, did beleue that these crosses were illusions of the diuell to deceiue them.

The storme wherewith Castile had bene beaten from Nauarre, Arragon, Portugal, Granada, and her owne rebels, beeing somewhat pacified, the Queene-mother leede an armie into the country of Leon, whereas the Infant D. John reigned, and besieged Paredes: and on the other side D. Henry went to the frontiers of Granada, where hee was defeated and put to flight, and without the speedie assistance of Alphonso Perez de Guzman, he had bene taken. This losse which did much preiudice the Realme of Castile was accompanied with combustions and praetises, which Don Henry made, to the hurt of the king Don Fernand, in the citie of Toledo, and the Diocesse of Auila and Segobia, where hauing gathered some troupes together, he marched to the campe before Paredes, and wrought so, as he made them raise the seige, vnder colour of holding a Parliament which was called at Vailledolit and in the meane time he fought vnderhand to corrupt the Deputies of townes and commonalties, and of the other orders of the countie, to the preiudice of Don Fernand. The Queene D. Maria preuented all these disorders, which were not hidden from her, but with great paine, seeking to content Don Henry. During these garboiles, they had newes, that the Nauarrois breaking the truce, had seized vpon the Iuisuerie of the citie of Nagera, a place strong by nature, the which they fortified, saying, that they held it in the name of the Infant Don Alphonso de la Cerde, whome they called king of Castile, and as they would haue gone on along the riuer of Oja, they were repulsd by Don Iohn Alphonso de Haro, who besieged them in the Iuisuerie, and prest them in such sort, as they were forced to leaue it, and to yeeld: this was in the year 1297. when as the kingdom of Nauar was gouerned in the name of the King and Queene of France by Alphonso de Ronay.

Alphonso de Ronay Gouverneur of Nauar.
An. 1297.

At

A At which time Don James king of Arragon was in Italy, where the peace made in the year 1295. betwixt him, the king of Naples, and the French king, was renewed and confirmed in the towne of Anania, in the presence of Pope Boniface, and the better to confirme the friendship betwixt these Princes, the king of Nauarre yeelded vp the townes of Lerda, Vlsiera and Sauueterre vnto the king Don James, beeing taken from the Crowne of Arragon: so as for this cause, the peace and amity betwixt Nauarre and Arragon was firme and vnited against Castile. By these treaties the fort of Albarazin was yeelded vppe to D. Iohn de Lara, to entertaine him, and was taken from D. Fernand bastard brother to the king Don James, as if it had bene vniustly taken from the father of Don Iohn, who did homage to the king of Arragon.

B The widow Queene of Castile seeking by all meanes to preferue her sonnes Realme from so many imminent dangers, renewed againe the treatie of mariage betwixt him and the Infanta D. Constance of Portugal, in the towne of Alcaniz, whether the Infanta was brought by the king her father, and accorded for a future spouse vnto the young king D. Fernand, and to make a more strict League of friendship, the King D. Denis concluded a marriage betwixt D. Beatrice Infanta of Castile, and his eldest sonne D. Alphonso, who was then but eight yeares old. These marriages were made with great disadvantage for the king of Castile, for the conuentions made in consideration thereof, were these. That the king of Portugal should hold in pawne Oliuencia, Conguera, Campo Moya, and S. Felix de los Gallegos, places belonging to the Crowne of Castile. Then did the king D. Denis renounce the league which he had with the Infant Don Iohn, who reigned in Leon, and gaue vnto the widow-Queene three hundred horse to go against him, but they returned soone after, hauing not done any thing. The Infant Don Alphonso de la Cerde on the other side seized on the towne of Almazan, and the troupes of Don Iohn Nugnes, and of the Infant Don Iohn had almost surprized Sigença; who finding themselves in great want of siluer, coyned great store of false money, vnder the stampe of the king Don Fernand, and did many other acts which were not commendable, the which necessitie, and ambitious obstinacy do force men vnto: so as D. Denis king of Portugal, at the instance of the widow and the young King, entred into Castile by Cite Roderigo, in shew to make warre against the Rebels, but it was all counterfeite: for the effects did shew he came more to fauour them then otherwise: whatsoever it were, hee did not act of an enemy against them, but propounded some conditions of peace, fauourable for them; beeing of opinion, that to retire the Infant Don Iohn from his pursute, and to draw him to the king Don Fernand's seruice, they should grant the Realme of Galicia to him and his for euer, and that of Leon for his life time; the which beeing disliked by the Councell of Castile, the king of Portugal grew thereat discontent, and so returned into his countie: after which the Rebels tooke heart, and it was the cause of a new reuolt of many knights and townes, and protestations of others to do the like, if they did not what they demanded: wherefore the Queene D. Maria and her Councell, were forced to yeeld to many vnworthy things, and was rather gouerned with her sonne and her Councell, by her subjects, then she did gouerne them.

C

D To this was added a new care which came from Nauarre, where as Alphonso de Roleed was Gouvernor in the year 1300. who sent an Ambassador into Castile, in the name of king Philip the Faire, and D. Jeanne his wife, Queene proprietarie of Nauarre, to demand the lands and ancient patrimonie of the Crowne of Nauarre, vsurped by the precedent kings of Castile, extending from the limits which were then betwixt the two kingdoms, vnto Atapuerca, and places neere vnto the citie of Burgos; which Ambassadour beeing a knight of Nauarre, was sent backe to the Queene D. Maria and her Councell, with the best words they could giue him. The French king was then much troubled with the Flemings of Bruges and others, by whom he had received a notable route, with the death of many Noblemen: among the which were Robert Earle of Artois, Renald of Nesle Constable of France, and aboue two hundred men of esteeme. The Ambassadour beeing returned, the Gouverneur held a Councell with the Infant D. Alphonso de la Cerde, D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara, and other enemies to the king of Castile, at a place called Duegnas, where they resolved to send D. Iohn Nugnes vnto King Philip, with other Ambassadors,

Nauarre.
An. 1300.

Castile.

Foundation of Bilbao.D. John Nue-nes de Lara defested and taken prisoner.
An. 1301.

to the end he should authorize the promises made in this assembly, to ayde one another A to conquer the lands of the riuer of Oja for the Crowne of Nauarre, and the Realme of Castile, for the Infant D. Alphonso de la Cerde. These Ambassadors were well received in the Court of France, and present dispatches were made, with approbation of all that had beene done, the king writing vnto the gouernor, that he shold giue all ayde and assistance to them that were fled out of Castile against the King D. Fernand.

17 At that time we find, that the towne of Bilbao was built by Don Diego Lopes de
Haro, who had made his peace with the young King Don Fernand, and did enioy Biscay.
This place is built vpon a riuer called in the country language Ybay cabal, which signifi-eth Great-riuer: for it is the greatest in all these quarters, and some affirme, that it is the riuer which was anciently called Neruium, very navigable, the which falls into the sea at B Portugalette, two leagues from Bilbao. This towne retained the name of a little hamlet neere vnto it so called as that time, but they now call it Bilbao the old, to make a difference betwixt it and the towne, where there is at this day as good trafficke for the Nor-therne parts, as at any vppon that coast. It was first peopled by men borne thereabouts.
Beyond that towne the Bascangado language is no more in vse, which they will haue to be the ancient Cantabria.

In the assembly of Vaileddolit, the Queen D. Maria had obtained great summes of money from some of the townes and Commonalties, to make warre against the rebels, and D. Henry had beene made Gouernor of the Moors frontier, who notwithstanding sought to entertaine the troubles and diuisions, wherein he tooke great delight, neither did hee care if that Tariffe had fallen into the king of Granados hands. Don John Nuegnes de Lara C beeing returned out of France, hee beganne to ouer-runne the Bishopricke of Calaoorra, with the Nauarrois and French, against whom D. Alphonso de Haro advanced with some troupes leui'd in hast, and finding him in a conuenient place, he fought with him, defeated him, and tooke him prisoner, deliuering him into the hands of the Queene D. Maria, who hauing recovered from him all the places he held of the Crowne of Castile, and made him sweare that he shold from thenceforth faithfully serue her sonne D. Fernand, she gaue him his libertie. In the yeare 1301. the King of Portugall came to Plaisance to meet with the Queene D. Maria, where they did treat to sue vnto the Pope for a dispensation of the marriages which they had contracted betwixt the Infants of Castile and of Portugall, conferring of the charges they must be at, not onely to obtaine these dispensations from Pope Boniface, but also the legitimation of the King D. Fernand, for that the marriage betwixt the deceased King D. Sancho, and D. Maria of Molina, had neuer beene dispensed withall. For the effecting whereof they must haue good store of doubloons: for Pope Boniface although he were of a Spanish race, yet would he not do any thing for them without a good fee. After the taking and composition of D. John Nuegnes de Lara, the Infant D. John seeing himselfe abandoned of his best friend, reconciled himselfe vnto the widow Queene, and to the King Don Fernand her sonne, quitting the title of king of Leon, and all that he held in that country: and for that D. Diego Lope de Haro held the country of Biscay, which did belong vnto his wife D. Maria Diaz de Haro, hee had in recompence therof the townes of Mansilla, Paredes, Medina de Riosecco, Castro-nouo and Cabreros: for the Councell were not of opinion, that they should discontent Don
D. Diego Lopes in dispossessing him.

These things thus repayed, it seemed that all troubles had beene pacified within the Realme, but those which were entertayned by the Infant Don Alphonso de la Cerde: wherefore it was resolu'd to repell him courageously, beginning by the siege of Almazan, which held for him: but D. Henry who desired no peace in Spaine, disappointed this en-terprife, and afterwards the King of Arragon and he hauing met at Ariza; they made leagues and confederacies, without acquainting the Queene or her Councell therewith.
The King of Arragon tooke Lorca, both towne and castell, by the sufferance of Don D. Henry and Don John also. Thus was this courageous Queene oppress'd with a thousand insupportable difficulties in her Gouvernement and Regency, which were procured by her owne subiects, besides the feare she had of forraigne enemies.

There was a new assembly of estates called at Burgos, and afterwards continued at Zamora.

A Zamora, where there were granted a subuention of great summes of money for the war;
and also for the dispensations which they demanded from the Pope, who by that meanes granted them, and they were published. The Infants D. Henry, and D. John beeing still discontented, did soone begin to make new practises, to diuide the king and his mother, whose wisdom and iudgement did displease them. The Queene beeing at Burgos, there came other Ambassadors to her from the French king, to aduise her to do him reason for the lands of Nagera, the riuer of Oja, and others that were held by the precedent kings of Castile, otherwise they did protest in their Masters name, that he would haue recourse to armes: whereat the Queene was much perplexed, apprehending greatly the forces of such a king as Philip the Faire was. Hauing conferred with D. Henry, D. John of Castile, and D. John Nuegnes de Lara, it was concluded with the Ambassadors, that the Queene of Castile, and the Gouernor of Nauar should meet at Victoria, where they should treat of all differences. Whilst that this poore Princeesse did labor to maintaine her sons estate, the Noblemen aboute named carried away the king to Leon, and did separate him from her:
neither was there any thing concluded at the interview of Victoria, for the great differences of either part.

The king D. James sent a knight vnto D. Maria Queene of Castile beeing at Victoria, to tell her, that if she would be a meanes, that he might hold the towne of Alicante without any controuersie, he would restore all that he had taken in the Realme of Murcia: wherunto she would not consent: for hauing (like a Lady of iudgement) intelligence what was C done by her neighbours, she did not now so much feare the king of Arragon as shee had done, seeing him in trouble with his Nobility, by reason of a tribute which he had imposed as well vpon the Nobility as the rest of his Realme, called Selga: wherefore she fought to haue intelligence with the malcontents of Arragon, to intertaine and augment these diuisions. About this time dyed the Queene D. Constance, mother to the king D. James and D. Frederick at Barcelona.

The Queene-mother of Castile hearing the wrong they had done her, in carrying away her son, she came with all speed to Vaileddolit, and to disappoint her aduersaries des-seigns, she sent vnto the king of Portugal, to effect the marriage betwixt the king her son, and the Infanta D. Constance, that by this means she might get from him the places which D he held in pawne of the Crowne of Castile, wherunto the Portugois yielded. But they which held the young king D. Fernand, desirous to entertaine the king of Portugals fauor, to the end they might be supported by him in their tyrannies, aduised him not to yeeld vp any thing, promising that the marriage should be accomplished when he pleased: whereat he was very glad, and stayed not long to put the married couple together, but did not giue vp the townes. Hereupon the king D. Fernand called an assembly of the Estates at Medina del campo, whither the Deputies wold not come, without the expresse commandement of the Queene-mother, but she appointed them to go, promising to be there her selfe. The Deputies made great complaints, that the kings person was detained by the Infant D. John, and D. John de Lara. They for their part objected many things against the Queen: In the mean time the king being practised by his mother, stole from the knights which had debauch't him, and followed her, holding the way to Burgos, but as he was yong and inconstant, before they came vnto the city, he abandoned her, and D. Henry, who was newly made great Master, and returned with the others; by reason whereof there was much dispute. The Queene bearing and dissembling all, being wise, and excusing her sons youth, who went to winter at Leon.

Whilst these things were in question, Mahomet Myr king of Granado, hauing alwaies entertained the friendship of the seditious Prince D. Henry of Castile by rare & continuall presents, after that he had tryed all meanes to recouer Tariffa, in the which D. Henry had alwaies fauored him, propounding it in the open Estates, and aduising them to yeeld F it vnto him: but seeing he could not preuaile by these meanes, he vsed open force, assayling Andalusia, which was neere vnto him, and laying siege to Alcaudete, the which hee tooke thinking to do the like at Baena: Alphonso Peres of Saavedra was Captaine of the castell, and D. Fernand Alphonso of Cordoua, Payo, Arias, John Martines of Argote, and others, being in garrison in the towne, he was repulst, and forced to returne into Granado.

An. 1302.

But soone after hearing that the towne of Laen was not well manned, and that a peece of A the wall was fallen, he came with greater forces, and gaue a furious assault, so as many good fouldiers dyed in the defence thereof: and among them Henry Perez of Arana, a Knight of a noble house, yet it was preferred from the furie of the Moores: and king Alphonse seeing he could not take it, went to Quesada, the which hee forced. This king of the Moores was strictly allyed, and a great friend to D. James king of Arragon, to whome he had promised to ayde Don Alphonso de la Cerde with all his meanes to recouer the Realme of Castile, demanding for his part of the conquest of Tariffe, Medina Sidonia, Alala and Bejar, which were wont to belong to the Crowne of Granado, the which was granted, but he did not see it effected, for he dyed in the yeare 1302. the thirtieth year of his raigne, and of the Arabians 685. In whose place reigned his sonne Mahumet the third B called Aben Alhamar, or Alamir Aben-Azar. About that time dyed Raymond that great Philosopher, (yet had he no great learning, but in opinion) he was borne in the Iland of Maiorca, and in his younger yeares was a merchant. Beeing wearie of the world, he retired into the deserts, and there composed that briefe Art, or abridgement of diuine and humane sciences, whereby they haue beleueed that men in an instant might become very learned: the which (he sayd) he had by reuelation. He was religious, and thinking to draw the Mahumetists to the knowledge of Iesus Christ, he past into Affricke, where preaching the faith with an inconsiderate zeale, he was stoned by the Moores. Notwithstanding his writings being examined and censured some yeares after his death, by the Iudgement of Aimeric a Iacobin, and other Inquisitours Spaniards, they were condemned by Pope C Gregory, sitting at Auignon, as dangerous and full of ill doctrine, contrary to our faith.

Castile.

Entervue of the kings of Castile and Por-
tugall.

18.

An. 1304.

The king of Castile, beeing (as he thought) at libertie, for that he was from his mother desired to confer with D. Denis king of Portugall his father-in-law, the which the Queene D. Maria, D. Henry, and D. Diego Lopes de Haro fought by all meanes to hinder, but they could not: for these two kings met at Badajos. The apparent colour of this interview was, that the king D. Fernand had of his father-in-law a present of a million of Marauidis of mony currant in those times; but what was treated in secret was suspect to D. Henry, to Diego Lopes de Haro, and euen to D. John Manuel, son to the Infant Manuel with others, D who fearing lest they should plot something against them, made a league with the king of Arragon, and D. Alphonso de la Cerde, and would haue comprehended the Queene-mother in their league, but she refused it, and gaue good reasons for her excuse: wherefore they receiued the Infant D. Alphonso de la Cerde for king of Castile, the which the Queene seeking to hinder, she laboured in vaine, and retired to Medina del campo, the Inhabitants of which towne were faithfull to her sonne. Thereupon, being in the yeare 1304. Don Henry, who was very old, dyed, whose inconstant and turbulent spirit had troubled both himself and others, and so this league vanished: he was buried in the church of Saint Francis at Vailledolit. This death did much content the king, who was then at Cordoua, and hauing there settled his affaires with the new king of Granado, who made a league with him vpon the same conditions, and paying the same tribute which his father had done, he departed, leauing D. John Nuges de Lara for Governour general of the frontier, diuiding all the goods and possessions which D. Henry had held among his Knights, whereof a good part fell to D. John Nuges, although the king loued him little, but he feared him. The Queene-mother was then forced to follow his humors, yet she did all things for his profit and good. By her meanes D. Diego Lopes de Haro reconciled himselfe vnto him. But there fell out another contention betwixt D. Diego and the Infant D. John, who notwithstanding any accord that had bene made, would haue the Country of Biscay, which did belong vnto him in the right of his wife. The Queen and the Noblemen of the Councell sought to pacifie them, but not able to do it, they stayed the decision of this controuersie, to end matters more important to the realm, with the king of Arragon, and the Infant D. Alphonso de la Cerde: for the one held in a manner all the Realme of Murcia, and the other intitled himselfe still king of Castile: for the which Don John of Castile was sent to the king of Arragon, to take some good course with him, to end their pretensions and quarrels, who preuailed so, as the king of Arragon put that which concerned him.

Compromise betwixt the Christian Princes
of Spaine.

A himselfe to compromise, choosing for Arbitrators the King of Portugall, who had married his sister Donna Isabel, the same Don John, and the Bishop of Sarragossa. The Infant Don Alphonso content in like manner that his right should be friendly decided, did choose and elect for Arbitrators, the kings of Arragon and Portugall, and the same Don John: the which, the King Don Fernand did willingly allow of, but not the Queene his Mother, who did fore-see, that the end of this compromise would fall out to her sonnes preiudice.

This election of Arbitrators signified to the King of Portugall, and accepted by him, hee went to Tarassone in Arragon, passing by Medina del Campo, from whence the King Don Fernand did accompany him vnto Soria. To Tarassone there also came B the King of Arragon, Don John, and the Bishop of Sarragossa, who employed themselves to examine the rights and pretensions of the parties, whilest that the King Don Fernand, and the Queene his Mother, attended their sentence in Agreda. In regard of the Realme of Murcia, the King of Portugall, Don John, and the Bishop did pronounce: That the riuer of Segura should make the separation betwixt the Lands of Murcia and Valencia, so as that which is to the South of Murcia, should be of the Iurisdiction of Don Fernand: and from the sayd riuer towards Valencia, should belong to the King of Arragon: so as Don James did not onely get the towne of Alicante, which hee had demanded, but also many other places.

As for the differences betwixt the king Don Fernand, and Don Alphonso de la Cerde, which were greater, for that Don Alphonso pretended the whole Realme of Castile to belong lawfully vnto him, it was iudged and arbitrated by the kings of Arragon and Portugall: That for the right and interest which the sayd Don Alphonso pretended, by an arbitrarie sentence pronounced vpon the pretension of Don Alphonso de la Cerde, the king Don Fernand should giue and surrender vnto him the places which follow: Alba de Tormes, Bejar, Val de Corneja, Gibraleon, Gargantalaolla, Torremenga, Passaron, el Reall de Mancanares, Algaua, Mont de la Greda de Magan, the Towne of Sarria, with the appurtenances thereunto adjacent, Monçon, Lemos, Robayna Aliadra, Almonia, Canall, and la Barka Estercolina, Torre Blanca, Rodo Eledia, Hornacuclos, las Hazennas of Corduba, the D Royall right and inheritance of Bonilla, with the appurtenances thereunto belonging, Colmenar of Sepulveda, and Aldea maior, with Sal de Campos, Vencos, Gaton, Ferran, Moliellas, the Salt-pits of Rubio, Belbimbre, Castro Caluon, the Port of Vizagra of the Cittie of Toledo, and the Martinengas of Madrid, and of Medina del campo.

All these fore-mentioned places were adiudged and giuen by the Arbitrators, to the Infant Don Alphonso, into the possession whereof, hee should (without any opposed contradiction) bee actually put and inuested by the king Don Fernand, by our Lady day (otherwise called the Natiuitie of the blessed Virgin Mary) in September following: and in consideration thereof, the Infant Don Alphonso should no more intitle himselfe king of Castile and Leon, nor carrie the armes quartered of Castile and Leon, as hee had done before, and continued it to that present day: and hee should deliuer vp, and surrender vnto the king Don Fernand, the Towne of Almagan with the appurtenances adiacent, and some other places which hee had taken during the warre.

This arbitrarie sentence was giuen and pronounced by the Arbitrators in the yeare one thousand, three hundred and foure, whereunto were added and annexed great penalties and forfeitures to the partie that should infringe or violate the same: at the which were present Don Raymond Bishop of Valencia, Don Martin Bishop of Lisbon, the Bishop of Huesca, and the Bishop of Cordoua: Don John Osorio Master of the F knights of Saint James, John Ximen, Diego Gonçales Secretarie of Tarassone, Gonçalo Gonçales, Raymond Altar of Aguilar, Pero Lopes of Padilla, Fernand Gutierrez of Quixada, Gonçalo Diaz de Cavallos, Lope Garcia of Hermosilla, Martin Fernandes, Porto Carrero, Alphonso Perez of Saavedra, Sancho Ruiz of Eicalante: moreover, there were also present at that time, Yelafco Peres of Leyua, Stephen Peres of Auila, Lope

Perez of Burgos, with many other Noblemen and Knights; and it was written and signed by Andrew Perez of Corbera, publike Notarie of Tarrassone. In this last sentence Don John was no Iudge, but Agent and Attorney for the king D. Fernand, in whose name hee yeelded. As for the Infant D. Alphonso, what shew soeuer he made, he was nothing pleased, as it will appeare by the euent. The kings hauing bene some daies together as well at Tarrassone, as at Agreda, parted good friends.

These matters beeing ended they resolued to determine the controuersie betwixt the Infant D. John, and Don Diego Lopes de Haro: to which end D. Diego was cited to come to Court, which was then at Medina del Campo, to answer to the demands of Don John and of his wife D. Maria Diaz de Haro, heire proprietarie of Biscay: D. Diego would not plead in the Court of Leon, but he appeared in that of Castile, which gaue ninty dayes B respite to the defender, notwithstanding if he let the thirtieth day passe and did not present himselfe, or giue a lawfull excuse, they might seaze vpon their sheepe, oxen, cotes, and swine, and eate them, tying the secte against the walles and trees, in signe of the demanders possession.

Don Diego appeared, and pleaded for his defence, that considering the accords and transactions made heretofore, betwixt him, Don John, and Donna Maria his wife, by the which they had yeelded vnto him the possession of the Segneurie of Biscay, in regard of the recompences which they had receiued, wherewith they were contented, and had sworne and confirmed it by oath: they were now fallen from all the right they could pretend to the sayd Segneurie, and the dependances. The cause beeing pleaded of either side, with allegations of maine reason, they were referred to counsell: and in the C meane time, the Queene D. Maria foreseeing some new trouble, laboured by all meanes to accord them, or to vndergo an arbitrarie and friendly sentence: but Don Diego Lopes would not yeeld thereunto, but departed without the King or Queenes priuite, and returned into Biscay, the which was very ill taken. The assembly beeing ended, the king came to Valedolit, where he was so importuned by the Infant Don John, as he pronounced sentence, by the aduice of his Council, containning, That D. John and his wife Donna Maria Diaz should be put in possession of Biscay: yet he did suspend the execution of the sentence, thinking that Don Diego would grow thereby more tractable: but he was resolute to hold his Segneurie: so the king seeing his obstinacie, would haue dismembred the country of Guipuscoa from his Crowne, to giue it to his vnkle in recompence: wherunto he yeelded, to end all quarrels: but D. Maria Diaz de Haro beeing obstinate, sayd resolutely, that she demanded nothing of another mans, and that she would neuer quite her fathers inheritance, no not if they would giue her ten times as much as the Segneurie of Biscay was worth.

These poursuites did so trouble and disturbe euery man, and euen Don John himselfe, as they all thought it fit and conuenient (the King so commanding) to surcease the processe for two yeares, during the which the parties should haue truce, and not attempt anything one against another. And for that the great loue and friendship betwixt Don Diego Lopes de Haro, and Don John Nuges de Lara, was suspect vnto the king, he sought in the meane time to breede and stirre vp some ieaousie and diuision betwixt them, gratifying Don Diego in many things, making his Sonne Don Lopes Diaz de Haro Lord Steward of his house, but it was not possible to diuide them: neither could Don Diego by any meanes bring Don John Nuges in fauour with the king, who was resolute to make warre against him, against the opinion of the Queene his mother, and all his Council: so as hee was forced and constrained to dislodge hastily in the night from Aranda of Duero, and came to Don Diego Lopes and his sonne, who altogether made a league and confederacie against the king: Whereupon there were many enterprises and incounters, without any great effect: so as beeing returned to Aranda, and the king not able to draw Don Diego from that partie, there was a day appointed to meet at Cerezo, and in the meane time a truce was made.

There Don Alphonso Perez de Guzman who did negotiate for the king, prevailed so with them of the league, and the Queen-mother with the king D. Fernand her son, who attended the resolution of this assembly in the towne of Pancoruo, that all these, that

Sentence giuen
by the king
against *D. Diego
Lopes de Haro*.

A is to say, the Lords of Haro father and sonne, and D. John Nuges, should remaine his seruants, and he receiued them into grace, yeelding vnto them all they were wont to enioy, and they for a gage of their faith deliuered some places in pawne. Don John of Castile, who pursued the Seignurie of Biscay, was not pleased with this accord, wherefore he did presse theking to haue the sentence giuen by him in fauour of D. Maria Diaz his wife, put in execution, wherewith the king was much troubled; and both he, the Queene and others of the Councell, sought by all meanes to agree these parties contending, who were resolued to go to armes: to preuent the which, the king made many great offers vnto Don Diego Lopes, the which he refused: but afterwards he repented it often. There was so great labouring for a peace, and especially by the Queene-mother, as in the end they yeelded to this composition. That Don Diego Lopes should, during his life, enioy the Segneurie of Biscay, and lands belonging thereunto, and that after his decease the possession should be giuen to Don John, and to D. Maria his wife, or to their heires, except Vrdugna, Val de Balmeseda, and S. Olalla, which three places should remaine to Don Lopes Diaz de Haro, sonne to D. Diego: to whom moreouer the king should giue for the enter-tayning of this peace, Miranda of Ebro, and Vilalua of Lofa. D. Diego Lopes yeelded to these conditions, to please the king though vnwillingly.

The troubles and seditions wherewith the Realme of Castile was afflicted at that time, was a plague which humane policie could not preuent: for when as one fire was quenched, another was suddenly kindled: so as these miseries continuing, men perished, the C treasures were wasted, and Christians ruined one another in these ciuill warres, giuing meanes and leysure to the Moores of Granado to assure their Estates, who furnished themselves with such store of munition, and built so many forts, towers, and castels, vpon the sea coast, as they maintained themselves for many yeres, against all the attempts of their enemies. D. John Nuges de Lara was not pleased to see an accord made betwixt D. Diego Lopes, and the Infant D. John of Castile: wherefore he retired from Court, and fortified himselfe in Tordehumos, where he was besieged by the king: but in the end the King was forced to giue him Moja and Cagnette, and to receiue him againe into fauour, seeing his vnkle D. John, to hinder the sege vnder-hand, caused the Knights to disband: yet for all this they liued not long in peace, for all these seditious men, although they had many quarrels among themselves, yet they agreed in this point, to keepe the Realme in perpetual combustion. The Infant D. John, and D. John Nuges did afterwards make a league against the king, vpon a false aduertisement, that the king meant to kill them: whereupon they troubled the State againe, so as they had great difficulty to retire the Infant D. John from this enterprize: but as for D. John Nuges, he continued in his rebellion, and would not come to the Estates held at Burgos, where there was question to treat of the kings patrimony, and the reuenues of the Crowne, which were greatly impaired.

As for the State of Castile.

E Mahumet Aben Alhamar, the third king of Granado.

*T*He Moores (as I haue sayd) during these garboiles, did fortifie themselves in Granado, ouer whom reigned Mahumet Aben Alhamar the third king, and third of that name, by the decease of his father Mahumet Myr, who at his death had left two sonnes, the which reigned one after another, and one daughter. The younger was called Mahumet Aben Nacar Aben-Lemin Abeadille. King Mahumet during his raigne was blind by an accident, his sister was married to a great knight, a Moore, called Ferrachen Arracz, or Capitaine of Malaga, who was alwaies much esteemed by the king, and honoured for his vertue. This Ferrachen vsurped the towne of Ceuta in Affrick, and did great exploits both by sea and land. He had many children by his wife, who was Infant of Granado, among the which were Ismael and Mahumet, who reigned in Granado, as we will hereafter shew. This king Mahumet Aben Alhamar being blind, had from his entrance continued the war by his captaines against the Christians, the which had been begun in his fathers life time, and tooke Bethmar and other places, during the boyles in Castile.

Ornada.

Wherefore for a time he exempted himselfe of the tribute, which his predecessours had A payed to the kings of Castile: but the king Don Fernand in the year 1304. hauing (as hath bene sayd) renewed their League, and sent Fernand Gomez of Toledo his Chancellor, with a Lew called Samuel, to Granado, to demand the tribute, where they treated a truce with Mahumet, whereat Mahumet was well pleased, and they did agree that either should enioy the places which they had taken one from another: that is, the king of Castile Tariffe, and the king of Granado Alcandese, Quejada, Bedmar and others, and that the yearly tribute should be payed to the king of Castile. Which Articles were signed by king Mahumet and the Ambassadors, and afterwards confirmed by the king D. Fernand in the city of Cordoua, whether was sent to that end from the king of Granado, an Algaui called Mahumet. This truce continued about foure yeares, during the which the B Moores were carefull to furnish their countrie with all things necessary, to repell the inuasions of their forraigne enemies: yet had they troubles among themselves: for Mahumet beeing growne contemptible among his subiects, by reason of his blindnesse, Aburabe an audacious Moore, who was Gouvernour of Almeri, began to tyrannize, and to vsurpe the title of King: and although he were chased away, and forced (the towne being taken) to flie into Affricke, yet he left not to call himselfe King, and would haue surprized Ceuta.

During these things, Arnaud of Puyane, Bishop of Pampelona, a Basque by nation, held their Synods for reformation of his Clergie, which was very needfull. Two yeares C before their had bene a Synode held of many Bishops at Pegnascel, where it was decreed that Priests might keepe Concubines secretly, but not openly.

In Arragon a marriage was treated betwixt the Infant D. Maria, daughter to the king Don James and Lewis Hutin the eldest Sonne, and then with the Earle of Poitiers second sonne to King Philip the Faire, and of the Queene Don Jeanne his wife, but it tooke no effect. We haue sayd before, that the King Don James, the better to entertaine the peace which he had made with the French reigning in Naples, had promised to marrie Blanche the daughter of Charles the Limping, the which he did. By this Ladie he had the issue which follows: Don James his eldest, who was married to D. Leonora Infant of Castile: but hauing not touched her, he sent her home, and made himselfe a knight of the order of Saint Iohn of Hierusalem, and was afterwards Master of the order of Montesa. D Alphonso his second sonne was king after him. Don Pedro the third, Earle of Ampurias, D. Raymond Berenger Earle of Prages and Ribagorça, Don Iohn who was Archbishoppe of Toledo, and afterwards Patriarch of Alexandria, and Arch. bishop of Tarragone. Moreouer D. Constance married to Don Iohn Manuel of Castile, sonne to the Infant D. Manuel: D. Maria who was wife to Don Pedro Infant of Castile, sonne to Don Sancho the 4. D. Blanche a religious woman, and a Prioresse of Sixena: D. Violant married to the prince of Tarentum: and D. Isabella wife to Don Frederick Arch-duke of Austria: these were his lawfull children: and by his stolne loues he had a daughter, which dyed young, and Don James of Arragon, who hauing married the daughter and heire of Don Lope de Luna, was Earle of Luna.

The marriage treated betwixt D. Maria of Arragon, and the second sonne of France, by the meanes of Pope Boniface, tooke no effect, for that the conditions propounded seemed very preiudiciall to Lewis Hutin, to whom the succession of Nauarre by right belonged as the eldest, the which the Pope and the king of Arragon would haue transferred to the Earle of Poitiers, with the Earledomes of Champagne and Brie, and other lands belonging to Queene Jeanne their mother. This Donna Jeanne Queene of Nauar, a little before her death, caused that famous Colledge of Nauarre to be built in Paris, endowing it with good rents in Champagne, as well for the enterpayning of Regents and Professors in Diuinity and Humanity, as of the chappell and Ministers thereof. The same Princeesse built the towne called Pont de la Roine in Nauarre, otherwise called Cares, and hauing liued in France one and thirty yeares, and neuer returned into Nauarre, she died in the year 1305. leauing Lewis, Philip, and Charles, who reigned in France and Nauarre successiue one after another, and Isabel who was Queene of England, married to Edward the second, her children. She was buried at the Franciscans in Paris. A yeare after the

Nauarre.

Priests allowed to keepe concubines.

Arragon.

Genealogie of Arragon.

Nauarre.

An. 1305.

A the decease of this Lady King Philip desired to make an allyance with Castile, demanding by his Ambassadors D. Isabel, sister to the King D. Fernand, but this marriage tooke no effect, for some reasons not written, some say it was three yeeres after the death of Queene Jane.

Lewis Hutin the first of that name, six and twentieth King of Nauarre.

B 19 Lewis, sonne to King Philip and Donna Jane, surnamed Hutin, first of that name amongst the Kings of Nauarre, succeeded his mother in the sayd realme: he did not intitle himselfe King, vntill hee had bene crowned at Pampelone, but onely the eldest sonne and heire of the Realme: his surname of Hutin signifies mutin or riotous, which he purchased after his comming to the crowne of France, or as some say before, whether it were that he had bene the cause of contentions, or that hee had pacified them. The Queenes death being knowne in Nauarre, the Estates assembled at Pampelone, where they resolued to send Ambassadors into France, to beseech King Philip, to send them Lewis his sonne, their naturall Prince; and hauing written letters to that effect in the name of the Estates, they dispatched D. Arnaud of Puyana, Bishop of Pampelone, and Don C Fortun Almoraid, who were well and honorably accompanied: who being come to the court of France, they gaue the Kings to vnderstand the great grieve the people of Nauarre had for the death of their Queene, and Soueraigne Lady; for whose consolation, they besought them that their new King Lewis might goe thither as soone as might bee, accompanying this extreame desire of the Nauarrois, with necessary reasons, for that they had great complaints to make of the gouernment of their Viceroys, who had gouerned the affaires of the realme, to the great preiudice thereof. Whereof the continuall absence of their soueraigne Magistrate was the cause, who could not visibly see the Estate of his country and people, but was serued by the eyes and eares of others, whose reports are commonly false, and the truth either concealed or dissembled. This request seemed iust vnto the Kings, both father and sonne: yet King Lewis came not into Nauarre but two yeeres after, and in the meane time hee married Marguerite daughter to Robert Duke of Bourgongne, with whom hee had in marriage fifty thousand Liuers in siluer, and the lands of Gyen vpon Seine: of which marriage issued Jeanne, who was Queene of Nauarre, married to Philip Earle of Eureux, son to Lewis of France, by whom the Kings of Nauarre haue pretended right to the Dutchy of Bourgongne against the Kings of France: for Robert Duke of Bourgongne, father to this Marguerite, hauing had many children, most of them left not any heires, and their posterity which had children, failed soone, there remaying no issue of the house of Bourgongne, but that of this Lady, married to Lewis Hutin.

E 20 Whilst that the King of Nauarre delaied the time to come into his Realme, there were Gouvernors, or Viceroies, after the accustomed manner. The great quarrels which had happened in France some yeeres before, betwixt King Philip the faire and Pope Boniface the eight, had caused many disorders, by reason whereof there was a great famine throughout all the realme. Pope Boniface had excommunicated King Philip, and giuen his realme in prey to him that could take it; but hee was a prey to the French, who being led by Nogaret of Saint Felix, and by the intelligence of Sarra Colonne, surprized the Pope at Anania, and intreated him so ill, as soone after for rage and spight hee died at Rome: whose successor Benedict the eleventh, absolved the King, his house and his realme, who held the sea but eight months. After whose decease there grew great F factions for the election of a new Pope, so as the sea was voided aboue tenne monethes, for that the French and Italian Cardinals, beeing assembled at Perugia, could not agree, who in the end concluded, that three French Cardinals should be named by the Italians, or else three Italians by the French, one of the which should bee chosen Pope by the other faction.

Nauarrois send Ambassadors to the King of France and to Lewis Hutin their King.

Genealogy of Nauarre.

The

The Italians would needs name three French prelates, whom they knew to bee discontented and enemies to King Philip, among the which was the Archbishop of Bourdeaux, called Bertrand Gor, sonne to Bernard, a Basque by nation, who was chosen Pope by the French, and that at the instance of King Philip, who during the delay of forty daies, which had beene referred for the two parties, after the nomination, to aduise which of the three they should choofe, was aduertised of all: and they say that hee aduertised the Archbishop that he was one of the three named, and that if hee would promise and sweare vnto him to doe many things which he propounded, and among others to change the Popes sea from Italy into France, it was in his power to make him Pope. The good Archbishop desirous to attaine to that dignity, promised it, and did effect it being chosen, causing all the Cardinals and Officers of the court of Rome to come to Lions, where he was crowned in the Church of Saint Iust, that yeere 1305. There were present the French King, with many other Princes and Noblemen, and an infinite multitude of people of all sorts.

Duke of Brittain any slaine at the eyes consolation.

During the pompe of this coronation, John Duke of Brittain was slaine with the ruine of an old wal, on the which there was a world of people to see this spectacle, and the King and Pope himselfe were in great daunger. Hee was called Clement the fifth, who sent three Cardinals to Rome, to gouerne the city, and other places of the territories of the Church. Hee made his residence in France, for the most part in Auignon where other his successors remained for the space of seuentie yeeres, which were Clement the fifth, John the two and twentieth, Benedict the twelfth, Clement the sixth, who bought Auignon of Queene Iane, Innocent the sixth, Vrbaine the fifth, and Gregory the eleuenth, who returned the sea to Rome: It is called by the Italians the new transmigration, and captivity of Babilon. This Pope granted to the French King the tithes of the Clergy, for reparation of the spoiles which the warre had caused, and the right of patronage of many Churches which were vacant, to prouide Ministers and Pastors worthy of their charges. King Lewis Hutin did accompany his father during all the alterations, so as he could not so soone goe into his realme of Nauarre, as he desired, besides hee was very young: notwithstanding all dispatches were made in his name. After that the Kings of France had

Pretention of Soveraignty in Nauarre by the Kings of Castille.

An. 1306.

Lewis King of Nauarre comes into his realme.
An. 1307.

vnited the crowne of Nauarre to theirs, all quarrels for precedence, which the King of Castille pretended, ceased, the which hauing in former times gotten ouer France by their great power, they now lost by the same right of a greater power, which was that of France. Philip Earle of Poitiers, brother to King Lewis Hutin, to whom the King of Arragon had fought to marry his daughter Mary, vpon condition that they should make him King of Nauarre, was married in the yeere 1306. to Iane daughter to Orselin Earle of Bourgongne, the marriage was celebrated at Corbeil, after the which Lewis King of Nauarre went vnto his realme, well accompayned with French Nobility; being at Pampelone, hee was crowned, to the ioy of his subiects, in the yeere of our Lord 1307. and then hee beganne to stile himselfe King, being about sixteene yeere of age. Hee swore to obserue the lawes and rights of the realme, and then hee went to visit the towns and places thereof, with a great concourse of his vassals and subiects, who had not of long time scene their Kings and Soueraigne Princes, to whom the King shewed himselfe milde and affable: Notwithstanding being in the towne of Estella, hee caused D. Fortun Almoraid and Martin Ximenes of Ayuar to bee put in prison, who had mutined for the preuiledges of the Nobility of Nauarre, against the French Gouernors, and had meddled in the government, for the preferuation of the country: whereat the Nauarrois were somewhat discontented, but hee paid them with reasons, and parting out of Nauarre, to returne into France, hee carried these two prisoners with him: D. Fortun died in prison, but Martin got his liberty through the fauour of the Earle of Vallois, who notwithstanding liued not long after. Hee was followed by about two hundred gentlemen Nauarrois, whom hee aduanced in France, both to make them more affectionate by his bounty, and to accustome them to the manners of the French, and also to haue so many hostages, of those whom hee distrusted.

Pope Clement
the fifth transports the Papal sea into France.

21 Pope Clement the fifth, hauing (as we haue sayd) done a memorable act, which did much import the Italians and other nations, to haue transported the Papal sea into France

A France vnderooke an other businesse worthy of no lesse fame, the Knights Templers being growne very rich, were by consequence insolent; they were enuied by great men, and generally hated; so as the people either moued in conscience, and desire to reforme, and roote out vice, or seeking to haue part of the spoile, in the yeere of our Lord 1308. made informations against them through al Christendome: sending word to the Bishops to make inquiry in their Bishopriks, of their liues, manners and religion, citing them generally to appeere at a councell which hee had called to that end at Vienne in Dauphine, in the yeere of our Lord 1310. Before and after this councell, many of them (after informations made) being attainted and conuicted of greuous crimes of heresie, Apostasie, & other impieties, against God, nature and al good manners, great executions followed, many being conuicted were put to death by fire, and other punishments: many (whose accusations were not well verified) being cruelly tortured, and of this number was the great Maister of the Order, called James Mole of Bourgongne, many also without any confession, were put to death: wherefore the Pope hauing made a strict serch, resolved to abolish this Order, and pronounced this sentence against them, in the presence of the Kings of France and Nauarre, of Charles Earle of Vallois, Philip and Charles brethren to Lewis Hutin and others. The execution of this sentence was suspended, in regard of the Knights Templers of Castille, Arragon, Majorca and Portugal, the suppression of whom the Pope referred to the disposition of the Apostolike sea, to prouide according vnto reason.

An. 1308.
Papal sea for the abolition of the Temp-lers.

Sentence given by the Pope against the Templers.

C Thus ended the Order of the Templers, which had continued about two hundred yeeres: a president which should be followed in other things, which hauing beene instituted to a good end, and whose beginnings were not wholly to be blamed, are since so degenerat, as the professions of Christians is made odious and abominable to other nations. In time the knights Templers of Castille, Portugal and Arragon were suppressed with the rest, being growne the more odious to all men, for that they had beene condemned by a councell. The Knights of Saint Iohn of Ierusalem were enriched with the spoiles of these Templers, who had in the yeere of our Lord 1308. taken the Island of Rhodes, or at the least hauing beene conquered by other Christians, were put in possession by Pope Clement the fifth. These Rhodiens (as they were afterwards called) made profession of the order of Saint Augustine, and obtained great preuiledges from the Popes, enioying this Island about two hundred yeeres. They had helpt to ruine the Templers, and therefore had part of the spoile. Pope Clement and King Philip the faire diuided their mouable goods betwixt them.

Hospitalliers enriched with the spoiles of the Templers.

22 Other Orders of holy knight-hood had their beginnings by the ruines of this, as those called of Christ in Portugal, by the deuotion and diligence of the King D. Denis: who assigned them rents and reuenues of the Templers Comanderies and benefices: and it was ordained that they should carry for a marke or badge, a white crosse with a red. This King of Portugal wrought so, as the knights of Saint Iames were separated and exempted from the subiection of the Mastery of Castille, wherein hee was assisted by the Apostolike Authority, who made Alcacar de Sal the chiefe place of the order of Saint Iames, the which was afterwards translated to Pamela, D. Fernand King of Castille seized vpon the places, townes and forts, and all the reuenues of the Templers in his country, to dispose thereof as should be thought fit.

Portugal.

Order of Chris-
tus in Portugal.

23 The Order called our Lady of Montesa tooke its beginning by the ruine of the Templers, in the realme of Valencia which is like vnto the knights of Calatrava, and vnder the Order of Cisteaux, vnto whom were rents assigned out of the Templers confiscations. This Order was afterwards confirmed by Pope Iohn the two and twentieth, successor to Clement the fifth. In the time of this Clement, Robert King of Naples sonne to Charles the Limping, was crowned in Auignon, being before Duke of Calabria, a great enemy of D. Frederic King of Sicile, of which Kingdome of Naples, we will forbear to speake, for that it concerns not the affaires of Spaine, vntill that the Arragonois were called to that crowne by Queene Iouane the two and twentieth, as we shall heereafter shew.

Arragon.

An. 1309.

Warre made by Castille and Arragon
against Granado.

Moore.

24 The accord betwixt the Kings of Castille and Granado, as soone as the King D. A. Fernand saw his estate somewhat settled, was broken: for the Kings of Castille and Arragon hauing met at Monreal, in the yeere of our Lord 1309. besides the marriage which was created betwixt the Infant D. James of Arragon, and the Infanta D. Leonora of Castille, they concluded to make warre against King Mahumet Aben-Alhamar the blinde: and although the conquest of Granado did belong to Castille, yet a sixth part thereof was granted to the King of Arragon, who made preparation to besiege Almercy, whilst that the King D. Fernand should besiege Algezire.

The King of Granado aduertised of this plot, was much incensed against these Princes, which had not kept their words, but especially against the King of Arragon, who had no interest to Granado; the diuision being made betwixt the ancient Christian Kings, and by the Popes authority. He sent a good garrison to Algezire, and to all other places; attending the event of this warre, the which was begunne by the King of Arragon, who sent some galleys in fauour of Aborabe the Moore, who was expelled, styling himselfe King of Almercy, who besieged Ceuta in Affrike, and tooke it by meanes of these succors; at the same time the King of Arragon came and layed siege to Almerie, and he of Castille to Algezire.

The Moores incensed most against the Arragonois, went to field on that side, and gaue many routs, and hindrances to them that held the siege, and to them that came to it. Algezire being well furnished, defended it selfe in such sort, as the King D. Fernand finding the siege would bee long, sent the Archbishop of Seuille, D. Alphonso Perez de Gusman, and D. Iohn Nignes de Lara, with part of the army to Gibraltar, the which C place was yeilded, and the Inhabitants and souldiers transported into Affrike, with their baggage, in ships which the King of Castille did furnish, according to the accord: for an old Moore being there, who complaining vnto the King of diuers alterations, where vnto he had bene forced, all the people were resolute to passe into Affrike, and not to liue any more in Spaine. This Moore beeing come thither at the newes of the taking thereof, sayd vnto the King: I was an Inhabitant of Seuille, when thy Great grand father D. Fernand tooke it, from whence being expelled, I came to remaine at Xeres, from thence D. Alphonso thy grand-father chased me, and I retired to Tariffe, the which being taken by the King D. Sancho thy father, I thought to liue here in peace, from whence you dislodge mee: wherefore I will passe into Affrike, to spend the remainder of my daies, with all the Inhabitants of this place, where wee shall haue no cause to feare the Christians.

The King Don Fernand being returned to Algezire, and seeking by all meanes possible to force it, the Moores by commission from their King made an accord with him, to yeeld vnto him all the places taken in the former warres in Andalusia, and moreouer fifty thousand doubloons, so as hee would raise the siege from before Algezire. This accord was made when as the King could not doe any more by reason of the commodities which his army suffred, through the continual raine, and other crosses, so as many Noblemen died of infirmities, amongst the which was Don Diego Lopes de Haro; by whose decease the Siegneurie of Biscay went out of the familie of Haro, and fell into the possession of them of the bloud royal of Castille, by D. Iohn husband to Donna Maria Diaz de Haro, daughter and heire to Lope Diaz de Haro, slaine at Al-faro. During this warre D. Alphonso Perez de Gusman died also in an encounter against the Moores, beeing shot through with an arrow, hee left one sonne and heire, Don Iohn Alphonso de Gusman, Lord of Saint Lucar.

These losses were increased by the retreat of Don Iohn of Castille, who carried many knights away with him, the which did much weaken the army: wherefore the King resolved to agree, and receiued the sum of gold aboue mentioned, with the places of Quesada, Bedmar, Quadros and Chungin.

Thus Algezire was deliuered, and a truce made betwixt the Realmes of Castille and Granado: but when as the King D. Fernand found himselfe seized of these townes, and of a good summe of money, hee did not much care to maintaine that which hee had promised, but sent Don Pedro his brother with the rest of the army, to the castle of Gibraltar taken.

Accord betwixt Granado and Castille.

Bispe falls to D. Iohn of Castille.

A of Tempul, neere to Algezire, the which he tooke, and then returned to Seuille, where D. Iohn Nignes de Lara was newly arriued out of France, from Pope Clement, of whom he had obtained permission for the King, to take the tithes for the warres against the Moores. King Mahumet the Blinde was soone after depofed by his owne brother Mahumet Azar Aben-Lemin, being fauored by many great men Moores, who were discontented to be gouerned by a blinde King, who could not lead them to the warres in person. He was taken and dispossessed in the yeere 1309. hauing reigned seuen yeeres, the six hundred ninty and two of the Arabians.

As for the siege of Almercy, it was nothing fortunat for the Arragonois, who were beaten both by the succors that were sent from Granado, and by the besieged which sallied out vpon them, so as they lost many good knights and valiant souldiers. Such was the religious dury of vassals to their Lords, and of subiects to their Prince, & so holy and inuolable the military discipline in those daies, that Martin Ximenes of Ayuar, holding a fee of Symon Perez of Arenos, slaine in that warre, was accused of felony, for that he had not succored his Lord in fight: but he prouoed his alibi, and that he was not in that encounter: and D. Pedro Martines de Luna being accused of the like crime, purged himselfe by oath, before the King and Noblemen, that he was not at the charge whereas Symon Perez had bene slaine, D. Fernand Infant of Majorca was at this siege, where he gaue great proofes of his valour.

Some Authors make mention of memorable exploits, done about that time in Grece, by some troupes of Arragonois and Cattelans, the which we may not omit. It happened about the yeere 1302. that in Italy betwixt Charles the Limping King of Naples, and D. Frederic of Arragon, holding the Island of Sicile, contrary to the treaty of peace made at Tarascon, after many routs giuen and receiued of either part, there was an accord made by the meanes of Charles of Valois and others; the conditions were. That D. Frederic should enioy the realme of Sicile during his life, the which after his death should returne to King Charles of Naples, or to his successors. That the Princes treating this peace, and hauing interest therein, should bee a meanes that the Island of Corsica and Sardinia should be giuen to D. Frederic and his descendants.

The townes taken by the Arragonois and Cattelans on this side the straight should bee yeilded vp. The Mediators should bee sutors that the interdict of Sicile should be discharged, and the prisoners should be deliuered, amongst the which was Philip Prince of Tarentum, sonne to Charles, and Gautier Earle of Brenne, which accord was ratified by Pope Boniface, who imposed a tribut of fifteene thousand florins of gold vpon the realme of Sicile, paiable yeerely vnto the church of Rome. Vpon the conclusion of this peace, the captaines and souldiers of either part retired into other countries. Roger de Loria, who had bene in great reputation to bee an excellent sea captaine, yea the best of his age, retired himselfe into Spaine, where he died in the city of Valencia, in the yeere 1305. and left an honorable posterity. About foure thousand Cattelans and

E Arragonois, and amongst them some Sicilians sayled towards Grece, vnder the command of Roger Florio, Berenger Entenza an Arragonois, and others, to serue the Emperor Andronicus Paleologus then raigning, whose sonne Michel Paleologus slue Roger Florio in treason at Adrianople, a man of valour, of a German race, but borne at Brindisi, much lamented; wherevpon the troupes of Cattelans and Arragonois did choofe for their General Berenger Entenza, being commanded vnder him by Fernand of Ahones, Corbaran of Lect, Bernard of Rochfort, Raymond of Montanero, William Sisnar, Symon Albert and others. Being mutined by reason of these Grecean Princes, they fortified themselves vpon the straight of Calipoli, and there made warre with all violence against the Emperor Andronicus, and cut in peeces Caio Iean one of his children, with foure hundred horse, which were sent against them, at a place called Pont Roial, six miles from Constantinople. But soone after Berenger Entenza beeing incountred at sea, and taken by Edward de Oria, was carried prisoner to Pera, and from thence to Trebysonde: yet the rest of his army held the fort of Calipoli still.

The strength of this army consisted in two thousand five hundred horse at the most, who being led by Bernard of Rochfort, who was chosen their head after the raking of

The King of Granado depofed.

Arragon.

Tribut imposed by the Pope upon the realm of Sicile.

25 Cattelans and Arragonois in Grece and Thrace.

Grecians defeated by the Cattelans.

Entenza

Entenza, gaue a notable defeat to Michel Paleologus, sonne to Andronicus (who had with him all the Cauallarie of Constantinople) neere to the towne of Apros in Thrace, so as Michel being wounded was forced to saue himselfe by flight, and shut himselfe into Adrianopoli, whereas the Cattelans beseege him long.

Their fort of Calipoli being afterwards assailed by Andriol Moro (who led Theodore Paleologus Marquis of Montferrat into Italy with an army) was so well defended, as there were about sixe hundred with their commander Andriol slaine there. Yet necessity in the meane time did consume these Cattelan troupes being in an enemies countrie, few in number and farre from all succors, so as finding themselves in extreame despaire, D. Fernand, Infant of Majorca, arriued happely, being sent by D. Frederic King of Sicile, to giue them some releefe. Then was Berenger Entenza returned from prison, who seeking to resume his authority of capitaine generall, against Bernard of Rochfort, there grew such a quarrel betwixt them and their partisans, as Entenza was slaine; wherefore the Infant of Majorca detesting so rash and mutinous an army left them, and thinking to returne into Sicile, fell vpon the Isle of Negrepont, where hee was staied and carried prisoner to Saint Omer, a fort of Athens: being put into the hands of Gautier of Brenne, ruling in that country.

The French defeated by the Castellans in Greece and Gautier of Brenne slaine.

Genealogie of Majorca.

Soone after Bernard of Rochfort and Albert his brother, commanding the Cattelans at Calipoli, suffered themselves to bee surprized by the Gouvernor of Negrepont called Thibaud of Sipoise, who deliuered them to Robert King of Naples, who caused them to die in prison: by reason whereof the Cattelan troupes beganne to ouerrunne the country, like made men, without commanders, and without order, and falling vpon the country of Macedonie which was nere, they past through it like a lightning, ouerthrowing all they incountred, vntill they came into the territorie of Athens, whereas the French commanded; staying there they demanded to bee entertained in pay by Duke Gautier, but hee desirous rather to chase away this vagabond people, who were poore and insolent, went to incounter them with his forces, to fight with them, by whom notwithstanding hee was defeated and slaine, and almost all his men. By this victory the Cattelans made themselves Maisters of all that the French held in that country, and lodged themselves there, whereas since they had many commanders successiue, as D. Manfroy son to D. Frederic King of Sicile, then D. Frederic Alphons his brother, who remained Gouvernor there, and married the daughter of Boniface of Verona a Nobelman of great power in Negrepont, with others: from thence is come the title of Dukes of Athens to the Princes of Arragon. D. Fernand Infant of Majorca being deliuered out of prison through the fauour of Robert King of Naples, his kinsman, married Isabel the heire of Morea by whom he had D. James who was King of Majorca after D. Sancho his vnckle, hee tooke Clarence, and made many other conquests in Morea. D. Fernand to his second wife married a Princessse of Cypres, of whom Fernand was borne, who was husband to Eschine daughter to Hugues King of Cypres. After this second marriage, and the birth of this sonne, D. Fernand of Majorca Prince of Morea, hauing performed great matters both in the East and West, died in the floure of his age, about the yeere of our Lord 1315. so as the affaires of the Arragonois in that countrie went to ruine.

He was the third sonne of D. James King of Majorca the first of that name, whose posterity we haue gathered out of histories, after this manner. He had by his wife Esclermonde of Foix, James his eldest sonne, who being wholly giuen to deuotion, left the succession of the realme, to his yonger brother, and became a Franciscan friar. D. Sancho the second sonne was King after the father, in the yeere of our Lord 1312. who hauing married the daughter of Charles the second King of Naples, named Marie, had no children by her, wherefore dying, hee left the Realme of Majorca, to Don James sonne to his brother D. Fernand above named. Of this first stemme of Majorca, wee finde there issued these three sonnes, D. James, D. Sancho and D. Fernand, and one daughter named D. Sancha, married to Robert Duke of Calabria; to the which some adde D. Philip the fourth sonne.

Nauarre.

But returning to Spaine, we finde that about the time of these last wars of Granado, whereof

A whereof we haue newly made mention, or soone after, the Nauarrois renued their old quarrels against them of Arragon, to whom (notwithstanding any accords) they were neuer good friends: so as going out of Pitiella, a place then of the Kingdome of Nauarre, they entred the neighbour country of Arragon, and committed great spoiles, whereat D. James King of Arragon being incensed, hee sent an army to beseege that place, but they were dilodged by the Inhabitants of Sanguesse, a frontire towne of Nauarre, being assisted by some French troupes, who fought with them and they were defeated. The Arragonois being returned againe into Nauarre, and hauing runne as farre as the towne of Olite, and foraged the country, they were againe charged by them of Sanguesse and other neighbor places, being ready to passe the riuer of Arragon, at the ford of Saint Adrian, and were there defeated with great slaughter of their men, and the losse of the Standard royal of Arragon, which they of Sanguesse carried away, by reason whereof, and in remembrance of their vertue and valour, they carry for their armes, by grant from King Lewis Hutin, the bands gueules of Arragon, but in a field argent.

Arragonois
defeated.

26 In the yeere of our Lord 1312. were the troubles of Lions vpon Rhoin, betwixt the Inhabitants of the towne and their Archbishop Peter of Bresse, by reason that he did surse vpon the Kings Iustice: King Philip sent his sonne the King of Nauarre thither, who tooke this Prelat prisoner, and sent him to the King his father, for which cause, and for that he durst presume to lay his hands vpon an Archbishop, he was called Hutin, or mutin as some say. The citizens of Lion being pacified, they mutined againe, by reason of the differences which they had with their Archbishop, but they were suppressed, and punished by the same King of Nauar, and reduced vnder the King his fathers obedience. It was at that time that Marguerite Queene of Nauar, the Countesse Ieanne of Poitiers & Blanche of la Marche, who had married the three brethren of France, Lewis Hutin, Philip and Charles, were accused of adultery, & put in prison at Chasteau Gaillard, of the which the Countesse Ieanne of Poitiers, was found innocent and absolved: but Marguerite Queene of Nauar, and the Contesse Blanch being conuicted, were condemned to perpetual prison, whereas Marguerite died soone after: the adulterers were put to death with cruel torments: the which were Philip and Gautier of Aunoy brethren. An vther of the chamber, who serued as baud and messenger of their loues, was hanged. It is reported of this Queene of Nauar, that seeing any faire yong man passe by, she caused him to be taken, & brought secretly at night into her chamber, & that after she had taken her dishonest pleasure with him, she caused him to bee cast into the riuer of Seyne, to the end hee should not vaunt thereof: the which was discouered by a scholler, who saued himselfe by swimming, being not wel bound. Thereof grew that ambiguous sentence, Reginam interficere nolite timere bonum est. This vnchastnesse is attributed by some to Ieanne mother to Lewis Hutin, Queene of Nauarre, who was a scourge to the Flemings, and the cause of all the wars betwixt the King and them.

An. 1312.
Troubles at Lions.

The king D. Fernand about the end of the war of Granado, gaue order for the building of Sauueterre, and Azpeity in Guipuscoa, granting then the rights & preuiledges of Victoria: he married his daughter Isabel to Duke John of Brittain, and made D. John Manuel of Castile, sonne to D. Manuel, Lord Steward of his house, taking that dignity from his brother D. Pedro, to whom in recompence he gaue Almazan and Berlanga: whereby it appeeres that these offices depended on the kings pleasure. This D. John Manuel had two daughters, which were both Queenes, the one named D. Ieanne, wife to Henry the second King of Castile, and the other D. Constance, married to D. Pedro King of Portugal. During the marriage of Duke John of Brittain, and of D. Isabel at Burgos, the Infant D. John of Castile, alwaies like himselfe, turbulent & seditious, came nere vnto the city, accompanied with soldiars, & would not enter without assurance, the which was giuen him: yet notwithstanding the King commanded he should be taken and slaine; whereof being aduertised by the Queene mother, vpon whose word hee was chiefly entered into the Citie; hee went forth verie early in the morning, seeming for to goe a hunting, and so escaped: Being pursued in vaine by the Kings men which hee had sent after him. Many knights and among others D. John Nugnes de Lara, detesting the Kings treachery, and withal ill affected to him, followed D. John, and beganne new troubles.

Distrust of D.
John of Ca-stille, and treachery of the King D. Fernand, the cause of great troubles.

R r

Alliance renewed betwixt Castille and
Arragon.

Two brethren executed unjustly.

Alcaudete taken by the King of Cas-
tile.

troubles in the Realme of Castille. The Duke of Brittain gave them leau to end A their quarrels, and carried away his spouse into Brittain. The Queene mother, with the Archbishop of Saint Iames, and the Bishops of Palence, Lugo and Mondogedo, labored to pacifie, and content these rebels, and in the meane time D. Constance the Queene reigning was brought in bed of her sonne D. Alphonso, in the city of Salamanca, who was heire of the Realmes of Castille and Leon. The King of Castille and Arragon, had an interview at Calatajub, where a promise of marriage was made betwixt D. Leonora of Castille, who was but three yeeres old, and the Infant D. James of Arragon, and an other marriage was concluded betwixt D. Pedro brother to the King of Castille with Donna Maria daughter to the King of Arragon, and there the two Kings made a new league and confederation against the Infidels, to make warre against whom the King of Castille called an assembly of the Estates of Castille at Villedolit, from whence D. Pedro the Kings brother was sent with an army, to beseege Alcaudete. In the meane time the King staied in Castille, making seizures, and taking by force certaine castles which did belong vnto his Rebels. Afterwards hee came in person into Andalusia where being arrived at Martos, hee caused two knights brethren to bee apprehended, being accused for a murder committed on the person of Don Iohn Alphonso de Bedonides, who had bene slaine at Palence, going out of the Kings lodging. These two brethren whom they called Peter and Iohn of Carauajal, being condemned without any great proofes, to bee cast downe head-long from the top of the rocke of Martos, as they were at their execution, protesting of their Innocency, they adiourned the King to appeere before the Tribunal seat of Almighty GOD, within thirty daies after, to giue reason of the death which he made them suffer vnjustly: notwithstanding all this, they were executed.

The King being come to the Campe before Alcaudete, hee beganne to beill, and came to Iacn, where hee remained some daies, litle regarding his Physitions, in the meane time D. Pedro tooke Alcaudete.

Mahumet Aben-Azar the fourth King. of Granado.

Moore.

IN the realme of Granado, the yonger brother hauing dispossessed the elder, had much ado to be receiued, and obeyed by the Moores Granadins, who resisted him, especially Farrachen his brother in law, captaine of Malaga: so as Alcaudete could not be releued. The new King Mahumet Aben-Azar. Aben-Lemin, being in some sort seiled and assured of his Kingdom, caused his brother that was prisoner to be cruelly slaine, and sent to the King D. Fernand being at Iacn, to renew the league which the Kings his predecessors had with Castille, the which was done, the Infant Don Pedro being present, where amongst other resolutions, it was concluded, that all together should make warre against Ferrachen of Malaga: but the sodaine death of Don Fernand, crossed this designe.

Castille.

Death of King
F. Fernand the fourth.

Naples.

The King being laied to sleepe one afternoone, the thirtieth day from the assignation which was giuen him by the two gentlemen which were executed at Martos, when as they of his chamber thought that he slept more then was fit, they entred into his chamber to see what he did, where they found him stark dead, the which was attributed to the iudgement of God. This vnexpected death which happened in the yeere of our Lord 1312. did much trouble the Realme, he was about fife and twenty yeeres old, he had reigned about seuteene, and was buried in the great church at Cordoua.

Soone after Philip the Faire the French King died, leaving the Crowne and Scepter to Lewis Hutin King of Nauarre his sonne. Some hold that this King Philip had the like adiournement to the Iudgement of God, in the towne of Bourdeaux, where there was a knight of the Templers executed in his presence, being borne at Naples, who seeing the

A the Pope and the King at a window, to behold this execution, cried out with a loud voice, seeing there is no worldly power to the which I may appeale from the sentence giuen against the Templers by the Pope, at the Kings instance, I doe adiorne them both to appeere before God within one yeere, so as that yeere being 1313. they both died.

An. 1313.

Lewis Hutin had then reigned eight yeeres in Nauarre, when he came to the crowne of France, King Philip the faire his father is noted to bee very vnfortunat in many things, both in religion, in the gouernment of his realme, and in his owne house. Hee was neuer in peace with the Church of Rome, in the which (although he were the eldest sonne) he caused many scandales, hauing had deadly hatred with the Popes, especially with Pope Boniface the eight, whom hee forced to die miserably: hee transported the Sea of Rome into France, Clement the fifth being made Pope, whom he vsed as a fit instrument, in many bad practises, as hatred and couetousnesse did moue him: hee did ruine with a strang cruelty and without discretion the Order of the Templers, which sect, admit it were corrupted yet many deserued better vsage: he falsified the money in France, exacted tithes of the Clergy, imposed the tribut called Maltofts, and the fifth penny vpon all Marchandise: he was prodigall without iudgement: hee intreated the Flemings vnjustly, and their Princes cruelly, by captiuities and vnworthy vexations, not sparing the innocent virgin Philip daughter to Count Guy, who had bene giuen him in hostage, whom they say he caused to be smothered: others affirme he caused her to be poisoned: some say shee was drowned, with many gentlewomen and maidens of honour which did attend her, others, and it may be the most certaine, write, that she died for griefe. All this Kings children died young, their wiues were accused and convicted of adultery, and his owne suspected to haue bene vnchast: yet he instituted the Court of Parliament of Paris, and caused the palace to bee built, which may bee numbred amongst his memorable deeds. The first notable act which his sonne Lewis Hutin did after his comming to the crowne of France, was that he caused Enguerrant of Marigni, Earle of Longueville to be hanged, being accused to haue hindred the King from subduing the Flemings, but the chiefe occasion was, for that he was suspected to haue robbed King Philips treasure, the which was found empty by his children Lewis, Philip and Charles: he had no greater enemy then Charles of Valois the Kings vncler, to whom Enguerrant had once giuen the lie, debating in council of the bad gouernment of that treasor as they say. There is no great memory of that which past in Nauarre, after that King Lewis came to the crowne of France, his daies being but short, for eightene monthes after he died at Bois de Vincennes, being about foure and twenty yeeres old, leaving Clement his second wife, daughter to Charles the second King of Naples and sister to King Robert, great with child of a sonne, which liued not. Hee had married Clement presently after the condemnation of his first wife Marguerite, by whom hee had one daughter, named Jeanne, who was Queene of Nauarre, but not so soone: for attending Queene Clementes deliuey, Philip of France, Earle of Poictiers, was chosen Regent of the two Realmes of France and Nauarre, so gouerne them vntill the child which should bee borne, if it were a male, should come to the age of foureteene yeere; and if it were a daughter, that to her and her sister Jeanne should belong the Realme of Nauarre, with the counties of Champagne and Brie: but he should succeed to the crowne of France, by vertue of the law Salique, as some Authors thinke: but rather by the right of custome inueterat amongst the French, conformable to the order which God hath set in nature, and according to the good constitutions of ancient Estates, not to receiue a woman to the crowne, who is made to bee gouerned, and not to command. Whatsoeuer it were, this law was then practised, as well in regard of France, as of Nauarre, whereas Philip the Long, brother to the deceased King reigned, in the yeere of our Lord 1315. not without great troubles and tumults amongst the Nauarrois.

27
Vnfortunat observations in Philip the Faire and his posterity.

Marriage of Lewis Hutin
and his death.

Rr 2

D. Alphonso

D. Alphonso the twelfth of that name thirteenth King of Castille and foure and thirtieth of Leon.

Castille.

28 THe unhappinesse of the house of Castille, continued the minority of King D. Alphonso, being numbred by some the eleventh, by others the twelfth of that name: for the Infant D. Iohn of Castille, and D. Iohn Nuges de Lara (two firebrands which had often put the Realme into combustion) hearing of the Kings death, were returned, the one from Valencia, the other out of Portugal, whether they were fled, to ruine the Estate, after their accustomed manner; and seeing that the Infant D. Pedro, brother to the deceased King, by the consent of the Queenes, was entred into the manning of the affaires; and the government of the King, who was at Auila, they came to Vailledolit, and told the Queene Donna Maria, that they were well content she should gouerne, but that they would neuer endure that D. Pedro should haue that authority: and from that time they sought all meanes to get the King into their hands, but the Inhabitants of Auila, and D. Sancho, their Bishop elect, gaue him so good guards as they labored in vaine, being resolued not to giue the possession and government of this yong Prince to any one that were not appointed by the assembly of the Estates: imitating therein the fidelity and care of their ancestors towards King Alphonso the ninth, whereof followed great factions, and tyranous ciuil warre throughout the whole realme: the ring-leaders whereof, on the one side, were the Infant D. Pedro, fauored by the Queene Donna Maria: and on the other the Infant D. Iohn, a warlike and fagious Prince, who had ioyned vnto him D. Iohn Nuges, and the fauor of Queene Constance the Kings mother: either of them being followed with a great number of knights: a generall assembly beeing called at Palence, the deputies of the Estates were also diuided, some desyring that the Queene D. Maria and her sonne D. Pedro should haue the gouernment of the King, and others demanding that D. Iohn alone should haue this charge: so as there was nothing done, but to animate them more to ruine the publike, and their priuat enemies. The Inhabitants of Auila, without any further respect, did acknowledge the Queene Donna Maria and D. Pedro for tutors to the King, and Gouernors of the realme, yet would they not suffer them to lead the King out of their towne. D. Pedro with this aduantage made a progresse throughout the Realme, and comming to Toledo, and from thence into Andalusia, hee was receiued, and generally obeyed.

Ismael the fifth King of Granado.

Moors.

Sedition in Granado against
King Mahomet.

IT happened that in the realme of Granado, the citizens of Granado had rebelled against King Mahomet Aben-Azar, the murthrer of his brother: the Author of which rebellion was Ismael, the sonne of Ferrachen, and of the Kings sister, who held Malaga. He with the fauor of his father, and of a mighty Moore, of the lignage of the Merins of Maroc, called Ozmin, pursued King Mahomet in such sort, as he shut him vp, and besieged him in the fort of Granado, called Alhambra, the which notwithstanding was well manned with Moores of his party, and strong both by nature and art. D. Pedro aduerted by this disorder by King Mahomet, who was a friend and ally to Castille, and intreated by him to succor him, went to field with such troupes as he could gather together in so short a time: but before he could come to Granado, hee had newes that the fort was yeilded to Ismael, and that King Mahomet had resigned the realme vnto him, beeing contented to liue in a priuat Estate in the towne of Guadix, without any other title, then Lord of Guadix: wherevpon D. Pedro returned, and came and assaulted the castle of Rute, a verie strong place, and which hee tooke, whilst that the affaires of Granado were yet in disorder. Thus King Mahomet was dispossessed of his crowne, which hee had gotten

A gotten by tyranous cruelty, hauing enioyed it about foure yeeres.

The faction of Castille which followed D. Iohn, assembled in the towne of Sahagun, whereas Queene Constance fell sicke, and died so poore, as shee had bene forced to sell her Jewels to feed her. This death and the prosperities of D. Pedro, made D. Iohn to propound some meanes for an accord, so as he and D. Pedro agreed, that the nourishment of the King should be at the disposition of the Queene Donna Maria his grand-mother, & as for the gouernment, it should be common betwixt them two, as it seemed the Estates of Palence had thought fit: wherewith the Queene D. Maria seemed wel pleased: for at the least shee got by this accord, that the Kings person was deliuered vnto her, whom she led to Toro, in the yeere 1314, where she caused him to be bred vp, vnder the care of

An. 1314.

B a noble Lady, grand-child to Theodore Lasfari, sometimes Emperor of Greece, her name was Vataca. An other assembly of the Estates was called at Burgos, where it was decreed that the gouernment of the King, and the regency of the realme should be reduced al into one body betwixt Queene Mary, D. Pedro and D. Iohn, and if any one of them should die, it should remaine to the two others, that did suruiue, and to one if two died. There was an order set downe for the augmenting of the reuenues of the crowne, with many other decrees, for the good of the King and realme. D. Iohn Nuges de Lara died then being come to the assembly of the Estates, and left no children.

Death of D.
Iohn Nuges
de Lara.

The Estates being ended, D. Pedro came into Andalusia, to assist Mahomet Aben-Azar, who held Guadix, being deprived of the realme of Granado, leauing the Queene D. Maria, and the Infant D. Iohn to gouerne in Castille. D. Pedro had an encounter vpon the frontiers with the Moores, whereas he slue a thousand five hundreth, and did afterwards take from them the castle of Cambil and Ardauidos. Mahomet Aben-Azar, caused himselfe to be still called King of Granado, notwithstanding that hee had promised to leaue this title to Ismael: but this victory of D. Pedros freed him, hauing in his company the maisters of the knights of Saint Iames and Calatrava. They write that among the Moores which were slaine vpon the place, there were about forty captaines, and almost al the floure of Granado, so as King Ismael found himselfe much weakened, wherefore D. Pedro and his captaines, both this yeere, which was in the yeere of our Lord 1315, and the next following, made many courses and enterprises in the territory of Granado,

An. 1315.

D spoiling the vignes and fields, euen vnto the city gate, King Ismael making no resistance in field, nor any pursuite, when as they retired charged with spoiles. After this the King of the Moores hauing tried to besiege Gibraltar, hee was repulst, and forced to retire with shame, by D. Pedros army, the which surprized the towne of Belmes, which was ill garded, and then forced the Moores of the castle to yeeld, at which siege they lay three weekes, and yet no succours came from Granado, (being but eight small leagues from thence) but too late, after the yeelding, which succours returned notwithstanding without fighting. During this warre Ismael laboured to haue a truce, or to make an accord with the Christians, but D. Pedro would not harken to it, desyring to roote that race of Infidels out of Spaine, whereof hee seemed to bee in a good way, and in great hope, wherefore they anoyed one another all they could, but King Ismael seeing that in the end he should not be able to subsist, he sent to sollicite the King of Maroc, for the community that was betwixt them in sect and nation, to aide him to defend the realme of Granado against the Christians, the which beeing lost hee must not thinke that euer the Arabians should haue any access or entry into Europe, for assurance of which African Kings armies, hee not onely offered Algezire, but also al the places which are from Algezire vnto Ronde inclusiuely; Ronde, Castellar, Axuneua, Estepona, Marbella and others.

29 Whilst that Christian Princes made warre against Infidels, the Clergy and pillars of the Romish Church were not well vnited amongst themselves. After the death of Pope Clement the fifth, the Cardinals beeing assembled at Carpentras for the election of a new Pope, they grew into so great a fury, as two of them were murdered in the Conclau, the rest disbanded, and were dispersed throughout France, abandoning all, seeing there was no meanes to accord them.

King Lewis Hutin who liued then, was very carefull to pacesse this scandale, causing Sarragossa and Toloufa, made Archbishop-ricks.

them all to come to Lions where they held their conclaue in the conuent of Iacobins, A where after his death, there was chosen by two and twenty Cardinals, James of Oca, Cardinal of Saint Rufinus, Bishop of Portuense, borne at Cahors, who was called Iohn the two and twentieth. This Pope made Sarragossa an Archbishoprike, and likewise Toloufa, and erected Cahors, the place of his birth, to a Bishoprike.

Philip the long, the second of that name, the seuen and twentieth King of Nauarre.

Nauarre.

30 IT was in the yeere of our Lord 1315. that Philip the long came to the crowne of France and Nauarre, at whose entrance they beganne to dispute of the law Salique: for many Noblemen were of opinion, that Iohn Posthumus, the sonne of King Lewis being dead, the realmes of France and Nauarre did belong by right of succession, to Leanne of France his daughter, by Marguerite of Bourgongne.

Those which held this partie, were Eude Duke of Bourgongne, Lewis Earle of Neuers, Himbert Daulphin of Viennois, and others of their faction: but Philip, who for the diuersity of opinions and interpretations feared that the law Salique did not extend to the succession of Kingdomes, and that possibly his right was not grounded thereon, contrary to the custome receiued in all other nations, and especially in Nauarre, whereof he pretended to dispoine Leanne the heire thereof as well as of the crowne of France, having also many noblemen which fauoured him, hee wonne his cause, by means of greater efficacy then disputes, and allegations of rights: for hee gaue Leanne his eldest daughter in marriage to the Duke of Bourgongne, and for doury the countie of Bourgongne her patrimonie: To the Earle of Neuers his second called Marguerite, and Marie the third to the Daulphin: in this manner hee stoppt their mouthes, and made them content with the rest, recoyling Leanne his Neece not onely from the crowne of France, but also from the Realme of Nauarre, which was not to bee questioned with Force and authority preuailed in this point; besides this Princeesse was not gracious with the French, by reason of her mothers fault. The Nauarrois followed the authority of the French, because they could not withstand it, and receiued Philip the long for their King, that yeere 1315.

castile.

The Kings Tutors, and the Gouvernors of the realme of Castille were required by the Estates in an assembly made at Carrion, to giue caution for their gouernment, and to giue an account what they had done, Don Pedro obtained liberty from the Pope to receiue the tithes, and to proclaime a Croisade against the Moores, against whom hee made violent and succesfull warre, as hath bene sayd, whereof his fellow Tutor was enuious, and gaue him many crosses, to draw him into daunger; of such force is enuie, that to preiudice an other, hee doth often bring ruine vnto himselfe, and to a whole Estate.

Thus the affaires of great Monarkes are often times ill mannaged by them, who haue the most important charges, who being loth to yeeld one vnto an other, in that which concerns the good and profit of the State and the seruice of their Prince, and being alwaies enuious of the honour and glory of their companions, let slippe occasions, dissemble, delay, and had rather incur the perpetuall infamy of traitors, cowards and peruerse emulators, then to aide one an other in a good action.

Thus did D. Iohn against D. Pedro, crossing and hindring his gallant designs and enterprises of warre, vpon the Moores frontiers, whilst that hee gouerned within the heart of the Realme; sometimes staying the Nobility of Castille and Leon from going to D. Pedro, sometimes keeping backe the treasure, and alwaies finding meanes to crosse him, and to make the people lesse obedient vnto him, so as the Queene Donna Maria, who was a verie wise Ladie, and saw cleerely into these troubles and bad affections, had

A had much toyle to keepe them from an open diuision: and did often and wisely call an assembly of the Estates to that effect, sometimes at Vailledolit for the Castilians, and sometimes at Medina del campo for them of Leon and Extremadura.

In their yeare 1317. Don Berenger Arch-bishop of Saint Lames, brought a commandement and censures from the Pope to put Don Alphonso de la Cerde in possession of the lands and goods which were adiudged by the Arbitrators at Tarassone: whereunto the Gouvernours would not obey, but sent their reasons to the Pope, excusing themselves, that the Infant had not for his part kept the conditions set downe in the sentence.

31 Don Pedro notwithstanding the enuie which his vnckle Don Iohn bare vnto him, did still seeke to annoy the Moores all he could, and in the beginning of the yeare, 1319. he resolved to beseege the towne of Tiscar, which was held by a Moore, called Mahumet Andon, and was one of the strongest places in Spaine: yet the happines, iudgement, and good fortune of Don Pedro were such, as (notwithstanding it was with great toyle and danger of the fouldiers) it was taken: whereat euen the Christians themselves wondered, considering the strength of the place. The castell made some resistance after the taking of the towne, but in the end it yeelded by composition: That the Moores which were within it with their Lord Mahumet Andon, should depart with bag and baggage, the which was granted and kept. 4500. soules went out of the place, and were put in safety into Baena. This did increate Don Iohns enuie against the prosperities of Don Pedro: wherefore he approached then vnto the frontiers, being thrust on by ialousie, to attempt something against the Moores for his part: hee came to Baena, euen as Don Pedro prepared to beseege the towne of Belmar, being aduertised of Don Iohns comming, he marched that way, that they might ioine their forces together, and do some notable exploit in the enemies countrie. Having ioyned at Alcaudete with great demonstrations of loue, they led the armie ioynly through the champian countrie towards Granado, whereof Don Iohn led the foreward, and having taken the castell of Yllora, they presented themselves before Granado, standing a whole day in battell in the sight thereof, and yet king Ismael neuer sallied forth, nor sent any one forth to skirmish with them, nor to discover them.

Don Pedro was of opinion to begin the seege, but Don Iohn held it fittest to retire, saying, that they neither had men enough, nor munition sufficient to beseege such a towne: whereas the king was in person, accompanied with all the flower of his knights and fouldiers, and an incredible multitude of people: for at that time they thought there lived within that citie about 200000. persons, although there were scarce 500. heads of families Moores by race, for all the rest were Christians Renegados or their descendants, or Christian slaues.

Vpon these perswasions, the Princes and Captaines began to turne head, hauing changed the order of their march, Don Iohn being in the rereward. When as the Granadins saw them dislodge, king Ismael sent forth his men, commanding them to charge the enemy in the rereward, and to presse them in such sort, as they might put them out of order, if it were possible, and that they should not then forget that which the discipline of warre required: the which they did execute resolutely, so as Don Pedro was forced to turn head with the foreward to succour Don Iohn: but the disorder was such amongst Don Pedros men, as he could not bring them to march in Battaille, nor to keep any good order: where he tormented himselfe in such sort, hauing his sword drawne, crying sometimes to one, sometimes to another, as he was out of breath, and lost his speech, and in an instant by this strange accident he fell downe dead from his horse: the which being reported to D. Iohn who saw himselfe in danger, the contrarie of passions wherewith he was afflicted, were of such force, as it happened to him as to his nephew, so as loosing his speech, he fell amazed from his horse. The armie hauing lost their two Commanders, notwithstanding any indeauour of the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and the Masters of the militarie Orders of S. Lemes and Calatrana, all were put to rout, and were pursued farre by the Moores with great slaughter, who spoyle their campe, and ceased their pursuit: wherefore the Christians which were about Don Pedro that was dead, and Don Iohn drawing towards his end had meanes to escape, laying him that was aliue on an horse, and the dead bodie vpon a moyle: but being surprized by the night, they which conducted Don Iohn marching Moores.

An. 1319.
Tiscar a strong place taken by Don Pedro.

Strange death of D. Pedro of Castile, and D.
John his vnckle

ching more slowly then the rest, saw him expire: wherefore fearing to be pursued, they A left the bodie vpon the field, and saued themselves as they could. Don John left one son of the same name, who for that he had lost an eye, was called the blind, and was his heire and successor in the Segneurie of Biscay. He sent to intreat King Ismael to send him his fathers bodie. The King caused it to be sought for, which being found, hee commanded it should be brought to Granado, where it was layed in a great hall, in the fort of Alhambra, vpon a herse couered with rich cloth of gold, setting a great number of waxe tapers about it; the king commanding the Noblemen, and knights Moores, with all the Christian captiues that were in Granado, to pray about the dead body: doing many other solemnities after their manner, then he sent to D. John, that he should send for his fathers body, the which he gaue him willingly, being sorry for the accident which had happened, for Don John had neuer done him wrong. Don John the blind sent many Knights thither, to whom the bodie was deliuered, and they were accompanied to the first towne of the Christians, then they tooke their way to Cordoua, from thence it was transported to Burgos, whither they had carried D. Pedro, and there they were interred. By this vnexpected victorie the affaires of Ismael king of Granado grew in reputation and force, recovering many places which had bene lost before. Don John Manuel the sonne of D. Manuel of Castile maintaining the warre against the Moores. Towards Murcia Ismael tooke Huescar, Ores, and Galere, places belonging to the Order of Saint James: and returning towards Andalusia, he besieged Martos, and tooke it by force, commanding them to kill all they found aliue in it: yet most of them saued themselves in the fort, and defended it against the Moores, who lost many of their best men: and among others, a Nephew to C Ozmin, the which gaue great occasion of murmure against king Ismael, for that he did so hazard his Nobility in these dangerous assaults. In this estate stood the warre of Granado, the which was ended with them of Andalusia, vpon king Ismaels returne to Granado, vpon condition, that the Castilians, being ready to chuse new tutors for the yong king D. Alphonso, should not receiue nor acknowledge any, but that should confirme this truce.

Castile.

During these alterations, the Q. D. Maria was gone into Portugal, where she had conference with her son-in-law, D. Alphonso Infant of Portugal, at Font d'Aguilero, a Bourg of Cite Roderigo, & frd thence was returned with the yong K. of Castile to Toro, where she had newes of the miserable end of D. Pedro and D. John: whereupon she made present dispatches to all the chiefe townes of the realme, and to the Noblemen, aduertising them of this disaster, and exhorting them to continue faithfull vnto the king her grand-child, and not to receiue commandement from any, but from him or them that should bee appointed by the Estates: for she feared D. John Manuel, who was rich and mighty, and desirous of innovations, would seeke to attaine to the Regencie of the king and Realme: and saw on the other side, that D. John the blind had the like ambition: against whom the Q. opposed D. Philip her son, (but as the most certaine Authors say D. Alphonso) vnle to the king D. Alphonso. All these Noblemen being well followed, and keeping the field with good troupes of soldiers, they were ready to ioyne in battell neere vnto Auila, the which was preuented by D. John Manuel. The Infant D. Fernand de la Cerde, who was Lord Steward to the king, was an actor in these ciuill seditions, so as the realmes of Castile, Leon, and their appurtenances, were full of all excesse, violence, and insolencies, the which continued long: notwithstanding that the Estates had chosen for tutors D. Philip or Don Alphonso, D. John Manuel, and D. John the blind in the yeare 1320. In the meane time the K. D. Alphonso to make his name more reuerent amongst his subiects, granted certaine priuiledges vnto townes, and among others, to wall in a Bourg, called Renteria, the which was named Villanoua of Ojarçum in Guipulcoa, and gaue it the title of a town, & the priuiledges of S. Sebastian from whence it is but a league distant. The Infant D. Philip, or Alphonso sware the truce made betwixt the king of Granado and them of Andalusia, where in the Citie of Cordoua was comprehended, for that they had giuen their voice for the gouernement of the King to Don John Manuel, against whome King Ismael was incensed.

Tumults in Castile for the gouernement.

An. 1320.

This yeare D. John, Infant of Arragon, son to the king D. James the 2. was consecrated Archb. of Toledo, in the towne of Lerida in Cattelogne, in stead of D. Gonçales deceased, many

A many Prelates beeing present, and namely, D. Ximenes de Luna Arch-bishop of Tarragone, and Don Pedro de Luna, first Arch-bishop of Saragossa, erected to that dignitie in the yeare 1318. by Pope John the 22. ouer the Bishops of Pampelona, Calahorra, Calagada, Tarassone, Huesca, Segobia, and Albarazin. These two Arch-bishops of Tarragone and Saragossa did watch if the new Arch-bishop of Toledo, as Primate of Spaine, would march through their Dioceses with his crosse before him, to the end they might oppose themselves by vertue of a certaine Constitution made at the Councell of Tarragone, and so it happened: whereupon the Arch-bishop of Toledo and all his followers were excommunicated by them, for entring into their Iurisdicions: which censure and excommunication was published by him of Saragossa: whereat the King Don James was much offended, and did write vnto the Pope, making great complaints of this manner of proceeding: but being afterwards perswaded that it was done to maintaine the dignity of the Churches of his Realme, he was pacified. The Primate appealed from their sentences and proceeded against them. The Pope calling the deciding of this question to the Apostolicke see, absolved the Arch-bishop of Toledo in the meane time, and gaue him facultie to absolve his followers and seruants. He was the seuen and fiftieth Arch-bishop of this sea, Primate of Spaine.

At the same time, or litle before, the king of Arragon had giuen to the knights of Monteca, the towne and castell of Monteca, wherof this Order carries the name: the first Master was William of Errill, who tooke the white habite of Galatrua, in the yeare 1319. in the Monasterie of Santa Cruz, from the hands of the Commander of Alcaniz. These knights had some yeares after facultie to leaue the habite of Cisteaux, and in stead thereof to carie a redde crosse vpon their brefts granted by Pope Benedict the thirteenth, and confirmed by Pope Martin the fifth. The King D. James by the aduice of his Estates held at Tarragone, did make a perpetuall vnion of the Realmes of Arragon and Valencia, and the principalltie of Cattelogne, the which from that time, should not for any occasion be dis-ynited. In which assembly, the Infant Don James the eldest and heire to the Crown, being readie to marrie D. Leonora of Castile, suddenly, by a strange affection, quitting both his wife, and so goodly a succession as that of the Realme of Arragon, told the king his father, that he had made a vow neither to marrie nor to raigne: so as notwithstanding all the perswasions of the king and Noblemen, he quit his birth-right to his brother D. Alphonso, after the example of Eau. Beeing there set at liberty by the king, he discharged the Estates of the oath they had made vnto him, and presently put on the habite of the Knights of Ierusalem, the which he receiued by the hands of Bernard Solier, in the presence of his brother Don John Arch-bishop of Toledo, Don Symon of Luna, Arch-bishop of Tarragone, Berenger Bishop of Vic, and Raymond of Ampurias, Prior of S. John in Cattelogne, and others. Afterwards this ill aduised Prince, hauing left this Order, became one of Monteca, where he spent his dayes in dissolutenes and filthy pleasures. This age afforded other such like examples in Don James, eldest sonne to the king of Maiorca, and Lewis sonne to Charles the lymping king of Castile, who became Franciscan Friars: but they were moued by zeale of religion, and were not giuen to vices. His second brother D. Alphonso was by the same Estates of Tarragone acknowledged, and sworne heire of those kingdomes after the decease of Don James their father. This Infant had married D. Theresa of Entenza, and had in her right the Countie of Virgel, which came vnto her by succession from her vnle Don Armingol of Cabrera, vpon condition she should marrie the Infant Don Alphonso: of which marriage was borne at that time Don Pedro, who was king of Arragon, the fourth of that name. At the same Estates of Arragon were pacified the quarrels betwixt Don Arial of Alagon, and Don Symon Cornet, who kept the Realme in diuision: and that according to the aduice and order of the Magistrate called the Iustice Maior of Arragon, called Symon Peres of Salanoua, the parties should vndergo the iudgement of the King and his Estates. Doubtlesse the authority of this Magistrate at that time was great, who might both censure the King and the Estates, and appoint them a place, and admit them that did assist, or reiect them.

But returning to the affaires of Castile, the election of Don John of Arragon to the Castile. Arch-bishoppricke of Toledo, did not much please the Queene D. Maria, fearing hee would Arragon. Order of Monteca.

32.

Union perpetua. all in E. Part of Arragon, Valencia, and Cattelogne

33.

James heire of Arragon quits his inheritance

An. 1322.
Death of R.
D. Mary of Ca
stile.

would not greatly fauour D. Alphonso king of Castile, but would alwaies hold the partie A of Don Manuel his brother-in-law, who was a mighty Prince in Castile, and wonderfull factious: but the Pope assured the contrarie, and past his election: and to speake the truth he neuer supported D. Iohn Manuel in any action that was preiudiciall to the King, although that Toledo and the iurisdiction thereof were in his gouernement, by reason of the tutelage: so as they fell to such debate, as Pope Iohn was forced to send a Cardinal Legate into Spaine, to reconcile them, and to bring the Archbishop into his fea, the which he had abandoned. The Queene D. Maria hauing called the Estates at Palence, in the year 1322. as she prepared her selfe to go thither, she fell sicke at Vailledolit, wherof she dyed, to the great griefe of all good men: for by her wisedome and bountie, she had bene the support and onely defence of Spaine, against the rebellious and ambitious desires of Princes and Noblemen, wherein she laboured wonderfully, with great happinesse and commendable successe. The young king and the Realme were deprivied of this support, for the which he soone after smarted. The Queenes bodie was layed in the Monasterie of las Huelgas at Vailledolit, which she had caused to be built, hauing also founded in her time that of Saint Paul in the same towne, and that of the preaching Friars at Toro, with others. We read as a memorable thing, vpon the religious exercises, and concerning the diuine seruice, in the Constitutions of D. Iohn Arch bishop of Toledo then liuing, that the Priests do offer the Hostie at the least foure times in the yere, and that after Morning prayer.

Arragon.

34.

The same yeare the Estates beeing assembled in the towne of Siracusa in Sicile, the king Don Frederick caused his sonne Don Pedro to be crowned king with him, and they raigned together in that Iland. Don Pedro did afterwards marrie Izabel daughter to Iohn King of Bohemia, or of Henry Duke of Carinthia, as some say. It was at such time as the expedition was made for the conquest of Sardinia, wherof D. Alphonso, Infant of Arragon, was Generall by the resolution of the Estates, held at Gyrone, and in consideration of the subuention giuen by them for the charges of that warre. We haue sayd before, that the Ilands of Sardinia and Corfica had bene giuen in fee by Pope Boniface the eight vnto Don Iames King of Arragon, and to his successors males or females paying a certain rent to the Church of Rome, for an acknowledgement of Soueraigntie, and that hee should conquer them at his owne perill. The same donation had bene confirmed by Pope Benedict in the year 1304. to the same king Don Iames, and facultie giuen him to leaue the tythes for this conquest, and a Legate appointed to assist therein: but it was deferred by reason of other lets. The reasons which moued the Popes to make this donation, were their passions and hatred against the common-weales of Genoua and Pisa, who commanded in those Ilands: but the pretext was, that these Ilands lying in the Mediterranean sea, as a barre betwixt Affricke and Italy, diuiding it from the North to the South, they entertained the Potentates of Italy, especially these two common-weales of Genoua and Pisa, who were then very strong at sea, in continuall quarrels and warre, most pernicious for Christendome: fighting for the possession thereof, with great effusion of blood, and wasting of their forces and treasures, the which they should haue employed in better occasions, against the Infidels, vnder this colour, the same of the Castillans and Arragonois and of their Princes being then great, it seemed expedient for the suppressing of all iealousie and quarrell betwixt the Geneuois and Pisans, to take from them the right of these Ilands, and to transerre them to a greater power, which might be able to keep and defend them from the inuasions of Sarraains and Arabians, who still made some breach there. The conquest therefore of the Iland of Sardinia beeing vndertaken in the time of Pope Iohn the 22. sitting in Auignon, by this king D. Iames the 2. there were many ships of warre and burthen prepared, as well in a port called Fangoso, vnder Tortosa, at the mouth of Ebro, as at Barcelona, Tarragone, Valencia & other places of that coast, wher in they spent much time, whilst that the king D. Iames tooke his fourth wife Eclisende sister to Othom of Moncada, a woman of good yeares: and he made D. Pedro his son Earle of Ribagorça and Ampurias, the last Earle Mangolin being dead without children. And for that the enterprise seemed difficult, by reason of the Pisans power, who enioyed the Iland, and had newly made a peace with the Geneuois, the king of Arragon did sollicite Pope

A Pope Iohn the 22. by his Ambassador Vidz of Villanoua, to assist him in this warre with his meanes and fauour, to the Princes of Italy: but this Pope beeing distastied by certaine Cardinals which fauored the Pisans, sought to diuert this enterprise all he could: exhorting the king of Arragon rather to pursue his right by Iustice, then by armes: notwithstanding the fleet beeing in a manner readie to set sayle, and the king persifted in his resolution, and bound himselfe to pay great tributes vnto the Church. At that time the chiefe men in the Iland were Brancalon d'Oría, and Hugues Vicont of Bassi: this last being corrupted by the king of Arragon, shewed himselfe an enemy to the Pisans, and began the war of Sardinia with happie successe. The king drew vnto his partie Guelph Earle of Donoratico, Kinsman to Cardinall Luke Fiesco, and suddenly sent Dalmis Vicount of Rocabertin, and his vnkle Girard, Berrand of Castelet, and Hugh of S. Paix Cattelans, with 200. horse, and 2000. foot, to fortifie his partisans in the Iland. Whilst that the armie assembled in the port of Fangoso, where there met about the end of Iune, in the year 1233. sixty gallies, and 20. ships armed, and aboue twice as many other vessels carrying victuals and baggage. The Infant D. Alphonso parted with his fleet, vnder the conduct of Francisco Carroço Admirall, and came with a good wind to the port of S. Marke, neere vnto the ruines of the ancient cittie of Sulsi, a Colony of the Carthaginians. The souldiers beeing landed, began to presse the towne from the Church, in the which were Barnabas d'Oría sonne to Brancalon and other Captaines, who after long resistance yielded it to the Infant D. Alphonso. The cities of Cailleri, Eglise, Aquafredda, Ioiosafuarda, Orguilos, Oleastro, Quirano, Patra and other places, held good for the Pisans: whilst they battered the towne of Eglise, the Admirall Francisco Carroço, with 20. gallies besieged the port of Cailleri, and Dalmis Vicount of Rocabertin by land, seized vpon an hill which commanded the castell, or fort of that city: but this place was releued by Manfroy sonne to Regnier, one of the Earles of Donoratico, who came to Terranoua with 25. gallies of Pisa, and some number of souldiers, the which hauing landed at Decimo, a Bourg so called, for that it is ten myles from Cailleri: by the fauour of this armie, he gathered together a great number of Sardes, and fortified himselfe in such fort, as hee presumed to offer battaile to the Arragonois. Those that were before the towne of Eglise were wonderfully afflicted with sicknesse, which grew through the bad disposition of the ayre of Sardinia, and euen the Infant D. Alphonso was in danger of death, yet persifting at the seage, the towne beeing prest by force, and want of victuals, it was yielded, hauing held out eight moneths: during the which many dyed through the infection of the pestilent ayre, Don Artal de Luna, and his sonne of the same name, Gambault of Beneuent Dalmis of Chastelnoua, Girard of Rocabertin, Gillebert Centillas, Pedro Querault, Raymond Berenger Ceuillon, Raymond Alleman, Galcerand S. Paix, and Raymond of Cardona, all men of note: so as the taking of the towne of Eglise, cost the Arragonois deare. After this exploit, the Infant D. Alphonso led the armie to the seage of Cailleri, against whome Manfroy aduanced with those Pisans which he had brought, and some Sardes gathered together, where there was a fierce and bloudie battell: but the Arragonois had the victorie, hauing lost D. Allemande Luna, nephew to D. Symon de Luna Arch bishop of Tarragone, who was much lamented: Manfroy being wounded, saued himselfe in the fort of Cailleri: and at that instant there arriued 18. gallies of supplies to the Infant D. Alphonso from Barcelona. Wherefore the towne and fort of Cailleri were more straightly and violently battered then before, so as the besieged beeing reduced to great extremities, following the aduise of Manfroy their Captaine, and by his leading, made a sudden fallie forth with all their horse, (among the which were 500. souldiers, the best and most resolute spirits among all the Pisans) and charged the Arragonois army, with great terrour and amazement: yet through the diligence of the Infant and his Captaines, the enemy was repulled, with the losse of three hundred horse. Here Manfroy was grievously wounded F againe, whereof, and for griefe of this last losse, he died soone after, the which draue the besieged into such despaire, that hauing aduertised the Pisans of their estate, and they sending to demand a peace of the king D. Iames, beeing at Barcelona, by the meanes and negotiation of Brancalon d'Oría, they came to composition vpon these conditions: That the city and castell of Cailleri should bee yielded vp to the Infant, and the prisoners of either

Sardinia inuaded by the Arragonois.

Eglise yielded to the Arragonois.

Defeat of Pisans and Sardes before Cailleri.

either part deliuered; which city and castell should be deliuered againe vnto the Pisans, A vpon condition, that they should hold it, and all they enioyed in Sardinia, in fee and homage of the crowne of Arragon; Yea some Authors among the Arragonois say, that the city it selfe of Pisa, and that it should be lawfull for the Pisans to traffike in Cattelogne and Arragon, and to haue a Confull in the city of Barcelona. These things being accorded and performed, the Infant D. Alphonso gaue many castles, lands and reuenues to Noblemen and Gentlemen which had serued faithfully, and valiantly in this warre, in the which many galleies of Majorca had continued. He left D. Philip de Sales Gouverneur of Sardinia, and Commander of the men of warre, and D. Berenger Carrofo, sonneto Don Francis, to command the galleies which were left there for the guard of the Iland. Hauing thus disposed of the affaires, the army imbarke at Saint Macaire, and sayled with their B Generall D. Alphonso towards Barcelona, where they arriued with a prosperous wind, about the beginning of August, in the year 1324. There were great signes of ioy made at the landing of this victorious armie, and thank-giuing vnto God in the city of Barcelona; but some write, that the king Don James going forth to meet his sonne triumphing and full of glorie, for the warre of Sardinia so happily ended, seeing him attired in the habit of a Sarde, he grew sad, and would not speake vnto him, vntill hee had taken a more seemly garment: wherefore in the midst of this pompe, the Infant put on his coate of armes, and then the king his father embraced him, and honored him much, saying aloud, that he tooke great delight to see him attired like the Commander of a victorious warre, and not in the habite of a slaue. After the conquest of Sardinia, the king D. James was sollicit by Castruccio Castracani, gouerning at that time at Luca, to make the expedition C of Corsica against the Geneuois, promising that he would prouide them such worke in Italy, as the enterprize of that Iland should be easie: but Barnabas d'Oria, who was then in fauour with the King D. James, diuerted him, shewing that it should bee more expedient and profitable, to practise the chiefe Noble men of Corsica, and to draw them to his seruice. The affaires of Sardinia continued not long quiet, as we will shew: but it is necessary to relate first what past in the other parts of Spaine, during these wars and conquests of the Arragonois.

Portugal.
Order of Chris-
tus in Portugal.
An. 1323.
Genealogie of
Portugal.
In Portugal there was then erected the Order of Knights of Christus, by Bulls from Pope John in the year 1320, by the which it was receiued into the protection of the Apostolike sea of Rome, and the towne of Castro Marin assigned for the chiefe of this Order, being neere vnto the Moors, and since the conuent was transported to Tour. The knights of this Order carry a red crosse split and opened by the foure branches, with a white line, so as one crosse makes two, the one red, the other white. The election of the Master belongs to 13. persons: that is, the Prior, the Commander maior, the Treasurer, the Secretary, and nine Commanders. The election was made, euery one of these 13. gi-uing his voyces; the which being publickly pronounced, he that had most voyces was chosen Master. The first was D. Gil Martines, who had bene Master of the militarie Order of Auis. The elect is bound (swearing in the Priors hands) to promise to bee in fauour with the Pope, and the Church of Rome, and to present himselfe vnto the King, to do him the homage of fealty. The Commanders of this Order, are, the Prior, the great Commamder, the Treasurer, Secretary, Commander of Arquin, of Rodano, Proença, Olallas, Castilejo, Sanacheyra, Prucos, Segura, Lardoça, and Deroimanichal. Since there hath bene added the Commanderies of S. Michel, and S. Mary in the Ilands, by the king Don Manuel. In the year 1323, the king D. Denis endowed this Order with priuiledges fit for the dignity thereof, and the ornament of his religion. The same year D. Beatrice wife to the Infant D. Alphonso, was brought in bed of a son in the city of Coimbra, who was named Peter, and reigned after his Grandfather and father: This king Denis was in so great esteem among the Portugals, as they haue a Prouerbe in vse at this day: El Rey D. Denis, que fiz quanto quiz, that is to say, The king D. Denis who did all he would. It is as well by reason of the institution of these militarie Orders, as of many foundations and remembrances he left of him: as the Monasterie of S. Francis of Portalegre, and the Monasterie of Nuns of the Order of Cisteaux, or S. Bernard: of S. Denis, of Odiuela a league and a half from Lisbon, where he appointed his body should be interred: and other publike workes,

A workes, as causeys, towers, castles, walles, fortifications, and reparations of townes with our number. By him the new street of Lisbon, so much esteemed in Portugall, was made, as also the castles of Serpa, Moura, Oliuencia, Campo maior, Argela and the fortresse: that of Portalegre, Odiana, Marban, the castell of Abibe, Alegrete, Monches, Monfort, Beyros, Arroyolos, Heborra monte, Bosba, Villauiciosa, Montcarraz, Redondo, Model, Beja, Geromena, Sabugal, Alfayates, Castlerubio, Villamaior, Castel-lobon, Castellomejor, Almeida, Castelmendo, and Pinel, most of the which were walled in by this king. He did also wall in Braga, Guimaranes, Miranda of Duero, with the Castell of Monçon, and Carastolo. He built new Múja, Salutieterre, Montargel, Atalaya, Acerceyra, and many others, which we will omit for breuities sake. The king Don Denis spent his time, and employed his treasure in such things. He had some warre against Castile in fauour of the rebels and otherwise; as we haue formerly related: and moreover, against his owne brother, whom he spoiled of his lands, forcing him to retire into Castile to his wiues kindred. Towards the end of his dayes, there was no good agreement betwixt him and his sonne Don Alphonso: for the sonne bred such a reuolt and sedition throughout the whole Realme, as he was often in armes against the father, and readie to giue battell, neere to Coimbra, Saint Iren, Albaran and elie where, being thrust on by flatterers and counsellors of iniquity: which disorders Queene Izabel, a Princesse full of piety, did happily repaire, and preuented the effusion of blood, praying continually vnto God for concord betwixt the father and sonne, the which shee obtayned before the decease of the king her husband, which was in the year 1325. hauing reigned 45. yeares, nine moneths, and 5. dayes, and the 64. of his age. He dyed at S. Iren, and was interred in the Monasterie of S. Denis of Odiuela, as hee had ordained by his testament, by the which he gaue 140000. liures of money then currant in Portugall, to be distributed to poore hospitals, monasteries, widows, orphelins, marrying of maydens, redemption of prisoners, and such like, at the discretion of the Queene his wife, and the Executors of his testament. Besides, his lawfull children, he had by one, or by diuers concubines, Don Alphonso, the beginner of the family of Albuquerque, Don Pedro, who gaue himselfe to studie, and hath compiled a Volume of the great Houses of Spayne, D. John, and D.
Fernand, one daughter that was married to D. John de la Cerde, and one daughter a Nun:
D This holy Queene Izabel, daughter to Don Pedro the third king of Arragon, and of Donna Constance daughter to Marfroy king of Naples, was married being but eleuen yeares old, and carried her selfe so wisely and religiously, as she was admired and honoured of all men: she shewed in her royall estate a wonderfull humilitie and modestie: shee laboured with her hands to auoyde idleness, and what shee made shee gaue away for Gods sake, wherein shee did not spare her meanes which were otherwise great: fasting and prayer were her delights, and she was in continuall anguish for her sins, and for her peoples: she serued God as she had bene instructed, by gifts, offerings, Masses, and suffrages without measure. Finally, she was so giuen to contemplation, and to the spirit, as she tooke no delight in any thing that pleased the senses: shee fledde and forsooke (as much E as possibly shee could) all royall Pallaces, being the Magazine of delights, and of per-uerse affections, so as the king Don Denis who was of a contrarie disposition, made small account of her; giuing himselfe often to vnlawfull and lustfull loues, by whom hee had children, the which this good and vertuous Queene caused to bee bredde vp as her owne, although shee were wonderfully afflicted to see this bad course of the King her husband, fearing, and rightly, that God would punish him: for this consideration shee did pray continually for his amendment, which happened in the end. The K. D. Denis did oft vie her roughly, wherein she shewed such patience, as she neuer vsed any word of complaint, but only prayed to God to let him vnderstand the truth: yea when she was in a maner chased from his presence, and retired to her house at Alenguer, by reason of the quarrels betwixt the father and the son, whereof the minions of the Court layd all the blame vpon her, perswading her, that shee intertayned them, against all likelihood of truth. Shee did wonderfully esteem the Orders of begging Friars, thinking that their estate was the most perfect among the Christians, and therefore shee gaue as well to them within the realme as without. Shee built the monastery of S. Claire the royal of Coimbra, she finished the house of the Innocents at S. Iren, the which was begunne by D. Martin Bishop of la Garde: and did the like to the Monasterie of Almofter of Nunnes, the which was begun by a Lady called D. Berenguela Ayres: and after the decease of the King her husband, shee gaue herselfe wholly to a religious life, and tooke vpon her the habit of S. Claire, which she vsed euer after: she sould her Jewels, and conuerted them into Ornaments and vessels to serue churches, the which she gaue to many Monasteries. Shee went vnknowne on foot to visit the Sepulcher of S. James, asking almes, and past her dayes in like workes with great zeale: she dyed in the towne of Estremos, whether she went to mediate a peace betwixt her sonne and the king of Castile her grand-child, borne of her daughter. Besides these aboue-named workes, she had built at Torrefnouas a Monasterie of repentants, and at Leyra an hospitall of poore bashfull men. Her body was carried to Coimbra, and layd in the Monasterie of Santa Cruz. The apparitions which the Spaniards write happened vnto her in her life time, and at her death, with such like things, are the impostures of Monkes of those times.
S f the

Castile.

36 As for the affaires of Castile, wee find, that after the decease of the Queene D. Maria, (who by her wisdome preuented many mischiefs) the troubles grew greater then euer: all Iustice ceased, and the most insolent were most in credit. King Don Alphonso, although he were young, was much discontented at these disorders, and sought to redresse them, but he was not obeyed: so as by reason of the violences, tyrannies, ruine of places, murthers, and other such wickednesse, which then raigned, he saw his subiects abandon their houses, and retire into Arragon, Nauarre, Portugall and else-where, there to seeke peace and rest: the Gouvernours were the cause of all these miseries, vsing the people of their Iurisdiccions tyrannously, beeing in perpetuall discord among themselves. Those that were of the priuie Councell aduised him to leaze vpon the places belonging to D. Blanche his Cousin, daughter to the deceased Don Pedro, the which were in the hands of Garçilaso de la Vega, in the name of Donna Maria of Arragon her mother: for that (sayd they) it was not fit the King of Arragon should meddle much in the affaires of Castile, nor that he should know all the vices of that kingdome, the which hee did, more then was conuenient, by the meanes of these places, and vnder colour to procure the good of Donna Blanche his Grand-child, watching in the meane time to make his profit with the preiudice of Castile.

See taken from the Act of the Lishop of Toledo.

He which was most vehement in this Councell, was Don Garçilaso himselfe, beeing Marin Maior of Castile. Don Iohn of Arragon Arch-bishop of Toledo, was by that reason suspected of them, hauing for his chiefe aduersarie Don Iohn Manuel, one of the Kings tutors, who had his gouernement in the Country of Toledo, and against whose disordinate desires, the Arch bishop of Toledo, (a better seruant to the King then they esteemed him) had alwaies opposed himselfe. So as they treated secretly with the king to take the royall seales from him, for they held it dangerous, that an Arragonois should be Chancellor of the Realme; who by reason of that dignity was priuie to all that was treated and resolved in the kings Councell.

According to this resolution, there was an occasion offered: The Arch-bishop beeing in the Kings Pallace, and beeing demanded of the affaires of the Bishoppricke, touching the Estate, and the kings reuenues, hee excused himselfe vpon the actions of Don Iohn Manuel his brother-in-law, who was there present, who answered very pe-remptorily for himselfe, so as there were bitter words betwixt them in the Kings presence. For this cause soone after the seales were taken away, and giuen to Don Garçilaso de la Vega: whereat the Arch-bishop Don Iohn beeing much discontented, hee neuer ceased vntill hee had exchanged his Arch-bishoppricke of Toledo, with that of Tarragone, causing Don Iohn de Luna, to be aduanced to the Archiepiscopall dignitie of Toledo, and Primacie of Spaine by Pope Iohn.

1326.

37 In the meane time came the yeare 1326. when as the King tooke vpon him the gouernement of his Realme, at a Parliament held at Vailledolit, whereas D. Philip or Alphonso, Don Iohn Manuel, and Don Iohn the Blind were discharged of their administration, which they had managed with great scandall. There did the king sweare to obserue the fundamentall Lawes of the Realme, and to administer Iustice, maintaining euery

A euery one in his estate, goods, and honour. To whome also the Deputies of the Estates did sweare fidelitie, and offered the rights and ordinarie seruices due vnto the Crowne. This done, the King did choose two wife Knights to bee of his Councell of State, Don Garçilaso de la Vega, aboue-named, and Aluar Nugnes Oserio: and for his treasure a few called Iosiph of Ecchia, to whome he gaue the Superintendencie of the Customes, Imposts, Kents and Reuenues of the Realme.

Old ree'procal betwixt the K.
and his subiects

In the disposition whereof, hee did not gouerne himselfe by the aduice of Don Iohn Manuel, nor Don Iohn the Blind, nor did much esteeme them: whereat beeing ialous and discontented, they parted from Vailledolit without taking any leaue of the King, and made a league together at Cigales. The king was soone aduertised hereof, and did in few dayes breake this plot, making himselfe sure to Donna Constance Manuel, daughter to Don Iohn Manuel at Vailledolit: but this marriage tooke no effect: and he gaue vnto Don Iohn Manuel, (to draw him vnto him) the gouernement of the frontier. Thus was Don Iohn the Blind abandoned, so as hee was more incensed then before: this Prince enterrayned such bad desseignes, as his end was miserable. Hee sought to marrie Donna Blanche daughter to Don Pedro of Castile, to the end hee might enioy the places which shee held vpon the frontier of Arragon, and from thence make warre against the King Don Alphonso: Hee made a league with the new King of Portugall against him, and attempted all meanes to annoy his Prince, notwithstanding that the king Don Alphonso tryed al waies to pacifie him, so as he was forced to vse more violent remedies.

38 During these home-bred troubles of Castile, Ismael king of Granado was slaine by his subiects, vpon this occasion. Among the prisoners which the Moores had brought from Martos, there was a Christian woman, exceeding fayre, who fell into the hands of the kings Cousin, sonne to the Gouvernour of Algezire, who was called Mahumet. This prisoner beeing seene by king Ismael, he grew so in loue with her, as he demanded her of Mahumet: who yeelding more vnto his desires, then to the respect hee ought vnto his Prince, refused him plainely: whereupon the king gaue him many bitter and threatening words: Mahumet either for feare or disdain, to haue beene threatened with iniurious words, layed a plot with Ozmin, who was already much discontented for the death of his sonne, whome they had so little spared at the assault of the rocke of Martos, and resolved together to kill king Ismael, and to place in the royall Seate of Granado, a Moore called Mahumet Aben Alhamar, or the Vermeil, who descended from the first king of Granado, and carried the same name, saying, that the Crowne belonged more rightly to him, then to Ismael, who was allyed to these kings onely by the Mothers side. This king was called to this Councell, and they made a new confederacie with Ozmin, who should bee readie in Armes with his friends and seruants, whilest that Mahumet, sonne to the Gouvernour of Algezire, with his father, and another brother, should execute the murther vpon the person of king Ismael. These things beeing concluded, the Conspirators entred into Alhambra of Granado, and addressing themselves vnto the king, they told him, that they had some matters of great importance to impart vnto him, desiring him to giue them audience in some retired place: the which the king willingly graunted, who beeing entred into a gallerie, the father and the sonne marching before the king, and his brother after, with the great Prouost, or Constable of Granado, whom they called Alguazil Maior, the two foremost turned suddenly vpon the king, and gaue him two wounds vpon the head. The Alguazil seeing this disloyaltie, drew his sword to defend his king, and fought so valiantly against these two traitors, father and sonne, as hee made them giue backe vnto the end of the gallerie, and to enter into a chamber, into the which hee shut them, notwithstanding that the brother, who was the third murderer, had wounded him behind in foure places, who returning afterwards against the king, gaue him a mortall wound in the shoulder. The Alguazil hauing shut vp the two first, came against the third, and forced him to enter into an old cabinet, into the which he also shut him. Beeing thus freed of the traitors, this faithfull seruant came vnto the king, whom he found grievously wounded, and almost fainting, hauing taken him in his armes, and carried him into a chamber, in the which were his mother, widow to Ferrachen and his wiues, where leauing the cure and care of him to them, hee went into the pallace

Ismael king of Granado slain
by his subiects

Court of Alhambra, where as he found many, as well of the conspirators, as of others A which might haue heard the noyse, and vnderstood something of the fact, to whom hee sayd, there was no great danger, and that the kings wounds were light: and hauing called some vnto him, whom he knew faithfull vnto the king, he entred with them into those places where as the traytors were shut, and cut off their heads: then he returned into the chamber where as the king was in the Philitions and Surgeons hands, but there was no more hope of life: wherefore going out of Alhambra, he met with Ozmin, who came running at this noyse well accompanied, and asked him of the kings life. The Alguazil dissembling the truth, answered, that all was well, intreating him to accompany him to seaze vpon those that were suspected to be of this conspiracie, the which Ozmin durst not refuse: thus of a traytor he became faithfull by constraint, and running through the city B of Granado, they seazed vpon all the friends and seruants of the murderer Mahumet, and brought them into Alhambra, where in the heate they were put to death. In the meane time king Ismael breathed his last, hauing reigned by force about nine yeares: this was in the yeare 1322. and the 705. of the Arabians.

Mahumet the sixt K. of Granado.

TO him succeeded his sonne Mahomet the sixt, by the meanes and dexteritie of the Prouost or Alguazil, who hauing scene the kings death, and keeping it as secret as he could, he gaue the Noblemen and Knights Granadins to vnderstand, that they should C shew themselues in armes before the castell, to receiue the Kings commandements, and namely Ozmin, who was not well assured in his conscience, but studied what hee should do: yet he came well followed. The Nobility being assembled, the Alguazil being faithfull to the king, euen after his death, taking the eldest of three sons (which he had left) in full to the king, he went out of Alhambra, and declared the truth vnto the assembly, how the king had benne slaine by the treason of Mahumet, and what had followed, and presenting the child, who was but twelue yeares old, vnto the knights, hee recommended him vnto them, and perswaded them to acknowledge him for their lawfull king. Ozmin who was of greatest authority among them, was wonderfully perplexed, and wauering in his discour- D ses, yet thinking that he should rule this Infant better then any other, he was the first that gaue his consent, saying, Mahumet is our king. His voyce was allowed by all that were present, and the brute both of Ismaels death, and of the election of Mahumet his sonne, was disperfed through the town: and soone after the new king was led through the streets and shewed vnto the Granadins, who were discontented at this sudden change, as wel by reason of the King murdered, as of the hasty election of his sonne, beeing so young, yet it held good: but notwithstanding that this yong Mahumet obtained the Realme by a law full meanes, yet his end was miserable, being a familiar thing among the Arabians, one to spoyle and dispossesse an other by wicked and cruell treasons, as a people alwaies void of all good gouernement. Such of the conspirators as were not taken, fled: among the which was Mahumet Aben Athamar, who in time returned to Granado, and reigned, as E we shall hereafter shew.

Nauarre.

What past in Nauarre during the raigne of Philip the Long, who dyed about the time of these reuolutions in Granado, we find not any thing worth the relating: only mention is made of a Gouernor for the king in that Realme, called Ponce of Morentain, whome some terme Lord of Rossillon: others, Vicont of Anay, of Arnau of Barbastian Bishop of Pampelona, D. Martin of Ayuar Standard-bearer of the Realme, D. Anigo Peres de Rada a Knight, D. John Arnau of Espeleta, of the Abbot of Lerin, of D. Martin Iuanes of Vrris, D. Pedro Ximenes of Mirafuentes, D. Garcia Martines of Ollaogui, Diego Martines of Vrris, and Michel Martines of Arletta, knights, who made the Councell of state of that Realme.

The end of the thirteenth Booke.

THE

THE FOURTEENTH BOOKE
of the Historie of Spaine.

The Contents.

- C 1 Charles the Faire, first of that name, the 28. king of Nauarre: troubles in the Realm vnder the Gouernors: his marriages.
2 Excesse, massacres, and spoyleing of the Iewes in Nauarre.
3 Ieanne daughter to Lewis Hutin, Queene of Nauarre, and in her right Philip of Ewreux, accounted for the 29. King of Nauarre, and the third of that name: Articles accorded at his coming to the Estates.
4 Bry and Champagne hereditarie to the House of Nauarre.
5 The family of Beaumonts in Nauarre.
6 D. Alphonso the fourth of that name, King of Portugall.
7 Mariber of D. Iohn the Blind, Prince of Castile, by the commandement of King Don Alphonso the 12. King of Castile.
D 8 D. Alphonso the 4. of that name, King of Portugal.
9 Disordered affections of Don Alphonso King of Castile: the Kings trecheries, enuie of Courtiers, murders and massacres.
10 Loue of the king D. Alphonso with D. Leonora of Guzman.
11 Ancient custome in choosing the Lords of Alaua, to gouerne the country, vnder the Soueraignie of Castile, abolished, and the union of that Prouince.
12 Order of the Knights of the band instituted by the king D. Alphonso, their lawes and orders.
13 Continuance of the kings of Maroc in Affricke: exploits of warre betwixt the Christians and the Moores.
E 14 The children of D. Alphonso King of Castile of diuerse conditions. Troubles, and pursuits of Rebels.
15 Estate of Nauarre, warre betwixt the Castillans and Nauarrois.
16 Estate of Arragon, warre against the Sardes, and the Gencuois their allies.
17 D. Pedro the fourth of that name, and 13. King of Arragon.
18 Troubles in Castile: cruelties of King D. Alphonso the twelfth.
19 Warre of the Moores against Castile, wherof followed the famous battell of Salado.
20 Disposition of D. Pedro king of Arragon, his hatred against Don Iames king of Maiorca his kinsman.
21 Continuance of the warre betwixt Castile and Arragon.
F 22 Estate of Nauarre: the voyage of King Philip of Ewreux into Andalusie and his death.
23 Siege of Algezire, and the taking thereof.
24 Vniust persecution of D. Iames king of Maiorca, by D. Pedro king of Arragon.
25 Donation of the Islands of the Canaries to Don Lewis de la Cerde, by Pope Clement the sixth.

- 26 Marriages of Don Pedro the fourth king of Arragon: Seditions and rebellions of his subjects for the succession, and how he subdued Saryagossa and Valencia.
 27 Politicke acts of Don Alphonso king of Castile: Elapheth in Castile.

Continuance of the royall Families of Spayne, whereof mention is made in this 14. Booke.

| NAVARRÉ.  |   | ARRAGON.          | PORTUGAL.         |
|---|---|-------------------|-------------------|
| 28 Charles the Faire  | 1 | 12 D. Alphonso 4. | 7. D. Alphonso 4. |
| 29 Philip of Eureux, by reason of Jeanne his wife, daughter to Lewis Hutin. | 3 | 13 D. Pedro 4.    |                   |

Charles

Charles the Faire, the first of that name, and eighth and twentieth King of Navarre.

TO King Philip, being dead at Fontainebleau without heires male, succeeded in the yeere of our Lord 1321. his brother Charles the Faire, in the two Realmes of France and Navarre, to the prejudice of his Neece Jeanne, the lawfull heire of Navarre. Charles when hee was farre from these successions, had put away Blanche his wife, being convicted of adultery, as hath beene sayd, whose life was saved, for that the marriage might bee dissolved without death, by the Popes authority, for that there was betwixt the husband and the wife a spiritual alliance, which had made the marriage unlawfull, so as by consequent there was no adultery, but simple fornication, for that Charles the Faire was Godfather to Blanche. Wherefore hee tooke to his second wife the daughter of Henry of Luxembourg Emperor, and sister to John King of Bohemia, having first demanded in marriage Donna Violant of Arragon, daughter to the King D. James the second, but could not obtaine her, for some reasons. In the beginning of King Charles his raigne, Ponce Morantin being Governor and Viceroy of the country, the castle of Gorriti was surprized by them of Guipuscoa from the Navarrois: for this and other considerations, the Governor having raised an army of Navarrois and French, entred into Guipuscoa, being resolved to put the country to fire and sword: and beginning by Toloufa in Guipuscoa, he burned Berastegui, and did incredible harm, sparing neither holy nor prophane. Marching towards Beotiba, the Navarrois army was stayed at the foot of the mountaines by the Guipuscoans, who were gathered together to the number of eight hundred (some say eight thousand) in armes, vnder the conduct of Gil Lopes of Ognes, Lord of Larrea, and were seized vpon the Straights and places of aduantage, where the army should passe, having planted some peasants vpon the tops of the rocks and precipices, who when the body of the army being advanced in these difficult passages, should march, they should roule downe pipes full of stones, which they had prepared, the which ouerthrew many, and besides put such a disorder in the army, as that eight hundred armed men which were vpon the passages, presented themselves, and put all their enemies to rout, with a wonderfull slaughter, and tooke all their baggage: the which was esteemed worth a hundred thousand liuers, a matter almost incredible, considering the inequality of their forces, but it is witnessed, not onely by the records of Guipuscoa, but also of Navarre, so dangerous is the hazard of warre, and so great an aduantage doth the situation of a country giue, when it is well chosen by a wife and expert capitaine.

Amongst the men of marke that were slaine in the Navarrois army, were found the Viceroy's brother, and D. Michel Sanches Alauas, D. Martin of Roncal, Martin Vrtiz, the Lord of Rosobel, John Corboran of Leer, John Martines of Medrano, John Henriquez, D. Martin de la Pegna, Pero Sotes, John Lopes of Vtros Merin Major of the Mountaine, Peter of Ayuar, Martin of Vrfa sonne to Martin of Ayuar, who carried the Standard royal, and others to the number of fiftie and fifty knights. Amongst the prisoners was Martin of Ayuar and an other sonne of his. The number of souldiars that were slaine, was very great: and of this incounter they doe at this day sing songs, both in Castille and Guipuscoa, in their country language. Here of grew other warres betwixt Castille and Navarre.

In the yeere of our Lord 1324. Queene Mary being dead, King Charles married the third time with Jeanne daughter to Lewis of France, Earle of Eureux, and sister to Philip of Eureux, who was King of Navarre soone after, by reason of his wife Jeanne, daughter to King Lewis Hutin, heire of Navarre. The same yeere Navarette of Pampelone, by the permission of Charles, was begunne to be re-edified, having beene ruined eight and forty Marriage of King Charles the first.

Defeat of Navarrois in Guipuscoa.

Men of account slaine.

Third marriage of King Charles.

Princes also sente cause of liberty and disorder.

forty yeeres before by Robert Earle of Arthois. This King Charles the Faire, nor his brother Philip the Long, neuer came into Nauarre, by reason whereof many grew insolent, especially vpon the frontiers, against the will of their Prince, the Gouernors, and Viceroyes winking at them, who regarded more their owne priuat profit and passions then the honour and seruice of their Maister; wherefore betwixt the Nauarrois and Arragonois, of the frontiers of Sanguessa Real, and other bordering places, notwithstanding any accord the Kings had made, there was stil roades and spoyling one of another, so as the Arragonois were forced to keepe great garrisons in those parts, whereof the King of Arragon complaind to King Charles, who commanded still that they should liue like neighbours and friends, but he was not obeyed.

In the yeere of our Lord 1328. King Charles died at Bois de Vincennes, hauing reigned seuen yeeres and some daies, leauing Queene Jeane his wife with child, who was deliuered of a daughter, called Blanche, married afterwards to Philip Duke of Orleance, hee was buried at Saint Denis in France. After the death of this King, there were great quarrels and diuisions both in France and Nauarre. In France, for that during the Queenes being with child Edward King of England, sonne to Isabel of France, sister to the deceased King, maintained that the Gouernment did belong to him: On the other side Philip sonne to Charles Earle of Valois, cousin germaine to the three last Kings, said that the regency did belong to him, as next heire to the crowne of France, which did not belong but to males descended of males, and was regent. The Queene being deliuered at Bois de Vincennes of a daughter, Philip, of Regent was proclaymed King, against the pretensions of Edward King of England, who was put by, vnder collour of the Salique law. Herevpon followed great and continuall warres, which had in a manner ruined France, if God had not releueed it. These contended a doubtfull title, which belonged to neither of them, if the crowne had fallne to the femal: for Jeane daughter to King Lewis Hutin, did precede them al.

Mistake of lawes in Na-
uarre.

2 The death of King Charles beeing knowne in Nauarre, this nation, which was accustomed to liue licentiously, for that they had not a long time seene the face of their Kings, thought now they had gotten liberty to doe what they pleased; so as they beganne to mutine and to raise seditions in all the townes of the realme. In the end they discharged their choller vpon the Lewes who were dispersed throughout the townes in great numbers, and very odious to the Christians, as well by reason of the diuersity of religion, as for their excessive vsury, whereby they did exhaust al their substance: wherefore they beganne to spoile them in all places as enemies, at Estella, Viana, Funes, Marzilla and many other places, with so great cruelty, and greedinesse to get, as it is sayd they slue aboute tenne thousand persons of that sect, men, women and little children. To redresse which excessse, and to take away the cause, the Estates of Nauarre assembled at Puerta la Reyna, to resolute without any respect, to whom the realme of Nauarre belonged, whether to Edward King of England or to D. Jeane Countesse of Eureux. The Estates were referred to Pampelone, the chiefe towne of the Realme, whereas their opinions were diuers, many holding that King Edward should haue the Realme of Nauarre, as grandchild (borne of the daughter) to Queene Jeane, daughter to King Henry, rather then the Countesse of Eureux, in regard of the sex: others, and with more reason, held for the Countesse, who was in the same degree, but daughter to a sonne, and heire to Queene Jeane, and preuailed, drawing the rest to their opinion.

D. Jeane
Queene of Nauarre.
An. 1328.

3 Thus was Jeane Countesse of Eureux declared the true and lawfull Queene of Nauarre, in the yeere of our Lord 1328. the realme hauing bene vacant aboute foure monethes. And vntill that she and Cont Philip her husband, should come and take possession of the Realm, they declared Regent and Viceroy D. Iohn Corboran of Lect, Standard-bearer of the realme, and Iohn Martines of Medrano.

Philip

Philip the third of that name, the nine and twentieth King of Nauarre.

Philip Earle of Eureux, sonne to Lewis of France, who was sonne to Philip the third, sonne to the King Saint Lewis, is counted by vs for the nine and twentieth King of Nauarre, the third of that name, and was surnamed the noble. As soone as the Election was made by the Estates of Nauarre, they sent Ambassadors to Ph. of Valois the French King, to let him vnderstand the reasons that the King elected had vnto the realme, which had mooued the Estates to make this election; and by the same Ambassadors they aduertised Philip of Eureux and Jeane his wife thereof, summoning them to come and take possession of the realme, and to gouerne it. The French King did no way hinder it, wherefore the Kings of Nauarre elect prepared for their voiage, and arriued there about the beginning of the yeere of our Lord 1329. hauing not seene a King in their country a long time. The Prelats, Knights and wise men of the realme before their comming, had set downe in writing the conditions wherevnto they would receiue them in the succession of the realme, the which before the solemnities of the coronation and soth, they presented vnto Philip and to Jeane his wife, the which they yielded willingly vnto. The Estates beeing assembled at Pampelone, these conditions were sworne by them, whereof the principal Articles were.

An. 1329.

1 First to the Estates to maintaine and keepe the rights, lawes, customes, liberties and preuiledges of the Realme, both written and not written, and whereof they were in possession, to them and their successors for euer, and not to diminish, but rather augment them.

Articles sworn by the Kings
of Nauarre.

2 That they should disanull all that had beene done to the preiudice thereof by the Kings their Predecessours, and by their Ministers, without delay, notwithstanding any let.

3 That for the terme of twelue yeeres to come, they should not coine any money, but such as was then currant within the Realme, and that during their liues they should not coine aboute one sort of new money, and that they should distribute part of the reuenues, profits and commodities of the realme vnto the subiects.

4 That they should not receiue into their seruice aboute foure strangers, but should employ them of the country.

5 That the forts and garrisons of the realme, should bee giuen to gentlemen borne and dwelling in the Country, and not to any stranger: who should doe homage to the Queene, and promise for to hold them for her, and for the lawfull heire of the countrie.

6 That they should not exchange nor ingage the realme for any other Estat whatsoever.

7 That they should not sell nor ingage any of the reuenues of the crowne, neither should make any law nor statute against the realme, nor against them that should lawfully succede therein.

8 That to the first sonne which God should giue them, comming to the age of twenty yeeres, they should leaue the Kingdome free and without factions, vpon condition that the Estates should pay vnto them for their expences a hundred thousand Sanchers (which was a peece of gold then currant) or in other French money euivalent.

9 That if God gaue them no children, in that case they should leaue the realme after them free, with the forts, in the hands of the Estates, to inuest them to whom by right it should belong.

10 That if they infriny any of these Articles, or any part of them, the subiects should be quit of their oath of subiection which they ought them.

These Articles being promised and sworne by the King and Queene, they were solemnly crowned, and the Deputies of the Estates, Noblemen and Officers of the crowne tooke

Coronation of Philip II. Em-perour.

4

Genealogy of Nauarre.

5

Beginning of the house of Beaumont in Nauarre.

Donation
made by the Infant D. Alphonso de la Cera to the Kings of Na-
uarre.

Ambassadors sent from Na-uarre to Cas-telle.

tooke their oth of obedience, in the Cathedral church of Pampelone. And afterwards there were orders set downe by the King and Queene for the Government of the Realme: the which being written were sent into France, and confirmed by King Philip of Valois at Paris the same yeere of our Lord 1329. After that time the French Kings had no command in Nauarre, hauing held that realme eight and fifty yeeres vnto the crowne of France: yet King Philip of Valois retained of the inheritance of his cousin, the Countesse of Bry, and a while after hee gaue them other lands in exchange, yet not of that value.

Philip and Jeanne King of Nauarre had these children following, Charles who succeeded in the realme, Philip Earle of Longueville, Lewis Earle of Beaumont le Royer, and afterwards Duke of Duras, Jeanne married to the vicont of Rohan, Mary Queene of Arragon, wife to D. Pedro the ceremonious, Blanche Queene of France, last wife to Philip of Valois, and Agnes Countesse of Foix married to Gaston Phebus: some of which were borne before their Election, and some after. Lewis the third sonne of this marriage was Earle of Beaumont in Normandie, for that he married the heire of that house, by whom he had one sonne called Charles of Beaumont, who married the daughter of the Vicont of Maulcon in Nauar, and was the first Standard-bearer of the realm, through the fauour of King Charles his vncl. Of this Charles of Beaumont is descended the house of Beaumont in Nauarre. After the death of the Countesse of Beaumont, Lewis married Jeanne daughter and heire to the Duke of Duras, vpon the coast of Macedonia, towards the Adriaticke sea, and was intituled Duke.

These things being done in Nauarre, King Philip being aduertised that the French King marched with a mighty army against the Flemings rebelled, who had chased away Lewis their Earle, and committed many insolencies against the Kings Officers, both in words and deeds: he parted out of Nauarre, being loath to faile him at need who had so kindly suffered him to take possession of the Realme, leauing the Queene D. Jeanne to gouerne Nauarre. He was present at the battraile which King Philip of Valois gaue the Flemings at Cassel, whereas twenty thousand were slaine vpon the place: by means whereof Count Lewis was restored to his Estate, and the Flemings subdued. This waere being ended, the King of Nauarre returned into his realme: It was then that the Infant D. Alphonso de la Cera, sonne to D. Fernand, eldest sonne to King D. Alphonso the Astrologuer, being ill intreated in Castille, where he pretended the crowne, made a donation vnto the crowne of Nauarre, of the rights which he pretended in Guipuscoa, Alaua, Rioja and other lands, the which had in former times belonged to Nauarre, and were usurped and retained by the Kings of Castille. Some affirme that this donation was made in the yere of our Lord 1330. But howsoever, King Philip desirous to do Iustice, & to gouerne his Realme wel, which had great need, and therefore was necessary to entertaine peace with his neighbours, made no great account thereof at that time, but sent Ambassadors to D. Alphonso then reigning in Castile, to seeke his friendship. The Ambassadors found the King at Talauera la Reyna, who entertained them well. Their Ambassage was, that the Realme hauing many yeeres wanted the Soueraigne Magistrate, and in a manner abandoned by their Kings, it was no wonder if many things had happened contrarie to the ancient alliances betwixt the houses of Castille and Nauarre, for what did the Viceroys and Gouernors care, being strangers (hauing no resemblance of manners, nor other bond of friendship with the Spaniards) how all things went, so as they were obeyed in the country, and that they might vaunt they had rather done wrong, then receiued any, keeping continuall garrisons of strangers, ready to commit any insolencies: whereof God had some times shewed his Iudgement, euen in the last incounter neere vnto Beotibar: where by an extraordinary and miraculous punishment, God had chastised the negligence of the foure last Kings, which had held the realme of Nauarre, who had respected it so little as they had scarce looked towards it, yea the two last neuer came nere it, which had made the bad to grow more insolent, and so to continue, vntill that the lawfull heires of the crowne of Nauarre were come to their possession, by the decease of King Charles the Faire, Philip Earle of Eueux, husband

A husband to their true Queene D. Jeanne, being called to raigne, who had sent this Ambassage vnto him, to let him vnderstand these things, as a neighbour Prince and friend, with whom they desired to entertaine peace and friendship, by all good offices which Princes and neighbour Estates may receiue one from another.

The King D. Alphonso hauing heard this Ambassage, fitted vnto the desseignes of the new Kings of Nauarre, moderating the things which had past betwixt these two realms, before their Election, answered, that hee was glad the Nauarrois had had means to recouer them for their Kings, to whom the crowne did by right belong, and that for his part he desired to entertaine a perpetuall friendship with King Philip and Queene Jeanne, and to shew it by the effects in any occasion that should be offered, wherewith he would acquaint his subiects, to the end their Kings vassals, both Nauarrois and French, should be well intreated in Castille, and if any wrong were done them, it should be repaired: and that they should aduertise their Kings on his behalfe, to doe the like in their countries. The Ambassadors returning with this answer, gaue great contentment to King Philip, who to administer Iustice, erected a new Court of Parliament in Nauarre, the which was called New to distinguish it from the Old, hee and the three Estates of the realme naming men, worthy of that charge. The like Ambassage was sent by him into Arragon and Portugal, who were returned with pleasing answers. Matters beeing thus settled in a better Estate then before, the King and Queene returned into France, leauing for Gouernor a French gentleman, called Henry of Guliac, or of Solibert; but with a more limited power then former Viceroys and Gouernors. Such was the Estate of Nauarre vnto the yeere 1331.

Let vs now returne to the History of Arragon, the which we haue left at the new conquest of Sardinia, in the which soone after the departure of the Infant D. Alphonso they fel to rebellion, beginning in the towne of Sassari, the which is one of the greatest of the Island, by the faction of them of the house and family of Oria, great and mighty Lords, especially in that towne, whereof the chiefe were Francesquin, Martin, Branca, and Vinciguerra, all of the family of Oria. These with their partisans hauing sought many means to expell the garrison of Arragonois which was at Sassari, in the end they rebelled openly, and by their example, and vpon the first oportunity, the Pisans holding the city and castle of Cagliari, seemed to haue a desire to doe the like: whereof the King of Arragon being aduertised, he neglected all other desseignes, and thought of the preferuation of this Island, which hee had subdued with great charge and losse: and for the which and for that of Corsica, hee was bound to pay vnto the Pope and to the Sea of Rome, an excessiue tribute of two thousand markes of siluer, and to entertaine a certaine number of souldiers for the defence of the church.

The decease of D. Sancho King of Majorca without children, had made him desirous to ioyne the Islands and the Siegneuries which he had enioyed vpon the firme land to his crowne of Arragon, wherefore he had sent the Infant D. Alphonso into the counties of Rossillon and Cerdagne, with forces to seize thereon, but he was so careful of the affaires of Sardinia, as he did easily incline to the request which D. Philip, brother to the deceased King of Majorca, made in fauour of his Nephew D. James, sonne to the Infant D. Fernand their brother, who as wee haue sayd died Prince of Morea: wherefore the realme of Majorca, and the succession of the King D. Sancho was left vnto this D. James being yet very young, except the right of Soueraignty. Being now forced to send an army into Sardinia, to his great charge, the Pope was intreated by the Infant D. Pedro (who was sent Ambassador expressly to that end by the king his father) being at Auignon, to share this tribute to five hundred markes, and to exempt him from the moiety of the souldiers pay, wherevnto he was liable by reason of the same contract, and for the sayd Islands, for the defence of the territories of the church. The Infant D. Pedro was courteously receiued by the Pope, and fauourably heard in the consistory, where he obtained abatement of halfe the tribute and of the souldiers pay for tenne yeeres, and moreouer to receiue the tithes for two yeeres.

In the meane time the King D. James armed twelue gallies in Cattelogne, and sent the before to Sardinia, vnder the charge of Bernard Celspuade, to assist the Arragonois, and

Ambassadors
sent from Nauarre to Arragon and Portugal.

Arragon.

Sardinia rebels against the Arragonois.

D. James King of Majorca, second of that name.

and others that held for him in the Island: Barnabo who had beene faithfull to the King A of Arragon, was now dead, whose children Cassan, Galeor, Geoffroy and Brancalon, shewed themselves enemies vnto him, and so in like manner did Federic, Azon and Iohn Alaispina, Marquises, who were rich and of great power in Sardinia: Notwithstanding that their vncles Christian Spinola, entertained the friendship of the King D. James, and was acceptable vnto him. These men by a general conspiracy, had taken armes, in fauour of an army which the Pisan and the Gibiline faction of Genoa did raise to send into Sardinia, the which was newly increased by two and twenty Genoua gallies, which had beene first entertained by Frederic King of Sicile, making warre against Robert King of Naples, of the which Gaspar d'Oria was General, who afterwards leaving the party of the Arragonois and Sicilians, and carrying away the King D. Fredericks money, hee ioyned with the Pisans, who made him Admiral of all the fleet. Then beganne there cruel warres betwixt the Cattelans and Genuois, whom Francisco Carrofo, Generall of the Gallies of Arragon, and a sworne enemy to that nation, did punish seuerly when as he tooke any one of their Pirats. Hauing imbarcked certaine troupes of old souldiers, Arragonois and Cattelans, he came and presented himselfe before the port of Caillieri, about the end of August, in the yeere 1325. and held the city and fort as it were besieged.

Estates of Arragon.

This yeere the Estates were called at Sarragossa in Arragon, where were present D. Pedro de Luna, Archbishop of Sarragossa, D. Sancho de Arragon the Kings brother: Don James of Arragon of Xerica, D. Symon Cornel, D. Pero Martines de Luna, D. Blasco Mazade Verga, D. Iohn Ximenes of Virea, Don Symon de Fosses, Don Raymond of Perault, Don Martin Gil of Atrofil, Don Gombald Tramasser, Don William Entenza, Don Michel Peres Gotorio, Don Gil Gayces of Atrofil, Don Michel Gurrea, Don Blasco Mazade Celles, Don Symon Peres de Punia, Don Symon de Fosses, Don Garcia Peres pegna acuta, D. Pedro Ruis de Sagra, D. Ponce Ignés Entenza, D. Lope Ximenes de Luna, D. Pedro de Laino, D. Michel Peres Zapata, with other Noblemen and Knights that were present, and the Deputies of D. Blasco de Alagon, of D. Lopes de Luna, of D. Alphonso Fernand of Lxar, and others absent, and the Deputies of the townes and commonalties hauing any place in the sayd Estates. There D. Pedro, sonne to the Infant D. Alphonso, was sworne presumptiue heire, and successor to the crowne, after the decease of the Grandfather and father: the which was then decreed and practised, for that Don Pedro Earle of Ribagorça and Ampurias did maintaine that if his brother D. Alphonso should die before their father, the realme did belong to him by right of Proximity, wherefore he refused then to sweare vnto his Nephew, but hee did afterwards. There the Articles of the generall priuiledges were confirmed, the which had beene accorded and sworne by the deceased King Don Pedro, and it was ordained for a law, that no free man should be put to the racke, and that confiscations should not bee allowed, but in cases of coyning, and high treason.

Right of representation.

The young King of Majorca beeing vnder the Gouernment of his vncke D. Philip, E was there made sure to Don Constance of Arragon, daughter to the Infant Don Alphonso, hee beeing eleuen yeeres old, and she but siue: these were the chiefe actes of this assembly.

Battle at Caillieri before Caillieri.

The Pisans army, led by Gaspar d'Oria, approaching neere vnto the Gulph of Caillieri, whereas Francisco Carrofo laie with the army of Arragon, there was a cruel and dangerous battaile for the looser, for their rests were vp: but the Arragonois were victors, who by this memorable victory, tooke a part of the towne of Caillieri, called Stampaces; beeing assaulted at sea by Francisco Carrofo, and at Land by Raymond of Peralta. Soone after there fell so daungerous a sedition betwixt the Land and Sea forces of the Arragonois, as both captaines and souldiers ranne like madde men one vpon another with greater obstinacy then against their enemies, and many were cruelly slaine: so as this rage had in a manner ruined the Arragonois Estate in that Island, but God had otherwile decreed: for the Pisans beeing very weake, and brought low with the long precedent warres, which they had sustained both against the Genuois and Arragonois, did quit the Island of Sardinia, by an agreement made betwixt the King

Pisans quit the Island of Sardinia.

A King of Arragon, and their Senat, in the yeere of our Lord 1326: so as the towne of Saffari was yielded to the Arragonois, the Marquis of Malespina surceasing, and promising to be obedient to the King and his Lieutenants. Thus the Kings of Arragon became Lords of Sardinia without contradiction, for a time: but in their owne country of Cattelogne, and Valencia, there was continual trouble and quarrels, which grew amongst the Noblemen of the country, beeing in ordinary things, that whereas there is great store of idle Nobilitie; there is alwaies warre and contention; to the oppression of the people.

Pisans quit the Island of Sardinia.

Troubles and quarrels where is much idle Nobilitie.

B D. Arnaud Roger Earle of Palliars, and Raymond Folch Vicout of Cardona, were then in armes one against another, by reason of a murder committed on the person of D. William Queralt, whereof the Earle of Palliars was accused, and either of them hauing a great troupe of friends and Partisans, held all Cattelogne in confusion; with their horrible insolencies. In the county of Valencia, D. James Lord of Xerica, was in quarrell with his owne mother; D. Beatrice of Loria, and would haue put her out of her lands and possessions, so as this quarrel did in a manner diuide the King and his sonne D. Alphonso, the one supporting the mother, and the other the sonne. These quarrels were reconciled with much paine: for when as the Soueraigne Magistrate doth meddle in his subjects quarrels, and of a Iudge becomes a Partisan, his authority leanes to the one side, and the remedies are more difficult, and lesse effectually. D. James of Xerica, during these troubles, married the widowe Queene of D. Sancho of Majorca, whose name was Mary, sister to Robert King of Naples; a woman of an vncast life.

The soueraigne should meddle in his subjects quarrels, and should make a large and not a Partisan in his subjects quarrels.

C In the yeere of our Lord 1327. Don James the Young of Majorca did homage for the Islands, and Land which hee held, as well in Cattelogne, as on this side the mountaines to the King of Arragon, as to his soueraigne, in the presence of Don Philip his vncke and Tutor, Don Pedro and Don Raymond Berenger, the Kings children, Caston of Moncade, Bishoppe of Huesca, and many others: and within few daies after Don James King of Arragon died in the towne of Barcelona, hauing reigned fixe and thirty yeeres, foure monthes and a halfe. A Prince rather inclined to good then bad, to whom learning and learned men owe the foundation of the Vniuersitie of Lerida, in Cattelogne, seuen and twenty yeeres before his death, which hee endowed with many preuiledges, and would haue that alone throughout all his dominions, forbidding all other schooles but for Grammer and Logicke. His bodie lies buried in the Monastery of Santa Cruz.

D. Alphonso the fourth of that name, the twelfth King of Arragon.

E DON Alphonso his sonne, succeeded him, to whom was giuen the surname of pittifull. Hee was not the eldest, but that Don James his eldest brother, quitting in his fathers life time, the succession of the crowne of Arragon, as wee haue said, entered and inuested himselfe into that Order of Knights of Saint Iohn of Ierusalem: Hee was King.

6

This was his issue; During his fathers life, hee married first Donna Theresa of Entenza, Countesse heire of Vrgell, by whom hee had the Infant Don Pedro, borrie at seuen monthes end, who was King, and the Infant Don James Earle of Vrgell and Vicount of Ajar, and moreover foure other sonnes and one daughter, who died verie yong, and are interred at Sarragossa in Saint Francis Church with their mother Donna Constance, who was wife vnto Don James the last King of Majorca. Donna Theresa had not the title of a Queene, for that shee died foure daies before the King Don James her father in lawe. Beeing King, hee tooke to his second wife, Donna Leonora of Castille, daughter to the King Don Fernand the fourth, who was mother to Don Fernand Marquisse of Tortosa, who married at Ebor, Donna Maria of Portugal, daughter Genealogy of Arragon.

Tt

Don Iohn Manuel reuolted against his King and country, by reason of the disloyalty A vsed to D. Iohn the blinde, and allied himselfe with the Kings of Arragon and Granado, being the more incensed with the newes hee had, that the King treated a marriage with the Infanta of Portugal, leauing his daughter D. Constance Manuel, to whom hee was made siure, as we haue sayd. The Infanta was called Mary, and was daughter to King D. Alphonso, who had in the yeere of our Lord 1325, succceeded King Dennis his father in the realme of Castille, and of D. Beatrix of Castille, sister to the King D. Fernand the fourth, so as she was cousin Germaine to his future Spouse.

D. Alphonso the fourth of that name, the seuenth King of Portugal.

Portugal.

Genealogy of Portugal.

Dukes, Marquises and Earles not hereditary in Spaine.

Murder of Garcilaso de la Vega.

8 This D. Alphonso of Portugall was surnamed the braue, for that he was valiant and generous. He was about fife and thirty yeeres old, when hee beganne to raigne, and had beene made siure to D. Beatrix, beeing but eight yeeres old, and was married at the age of sixteene. They had many children, whereof Alphonso, Dennis and Iohn died young: then they had D. Pedro, who was King after his father, Donna Maria, of whose marriage with King D. Alphonso of Castille, we haue begunne to speake, and D. Leonora or Eluira, who was wife to D. Pedro the Ceremonious, King of Arragon. This King D. Alphonso had beene very turbulent in his fathers life time, maintayning certaine rebels against him: yet beeing come vnto the crowne, hee became vertuous, and a great fauor of Iustice, making many good lawes, and governing his realme wisely: yet hee had great quarrels with D. Alphonso Sanches his bastard brother, to the great oppression of his subiects: for Don Alphonso Sanches was a braue knight, and could well defend himselfe, hauing the fauour of the Castilians, and of the King of Arragon, who sought many meanes to reconcile them, but in vaine: The subiect of their quarrels was onely ielousie, conceiued in the heart of King D. Alphonso, for that King Dennis their father had loued this bastard exceedingly. But in the end the King was Maister, neuer ceasing vntill he had chased him into Castile, after which he confiscated his goods, and proceeded against him by course of Iustice.

9 During the treaty of marriage betwixt D. Maria of Portugal and D. Alphonso King of Castille, D. Iohn Manuel, with the helpe of the Arragonois and Granadins, beganne to ouerrunne the territories of Castille, from Almança vnto Pegnasil, ruining, burning and spoyling all they incournt: Then did the King make his well-beloued fauorite and counsellor, D. Aluar Nugnes Oforio, Earle of Transamara, Lemos and Sarria, and Lord of Riuiere and Cabrera, for in those daies there was no Earledome hereditary in Castille nor Leon, and hereof Spaine doth yet retaine those maiesties of antiquity, that the children of Noblemen carrying the titles of Dukes, Marquises or Earles (which were all personall and temporall dignities) dare not take them after the decease of their fathers, without a new permission from the King, except some which haue that right by preuiledge.

Hee did this to oppose him to D. Iohn Manuel, against whom hee sent D. Garcilaso de la Vega, whilst that hee remained at Cordoua, and prepared for his future marriage with the Infanta of Portugall: Don Garcilaso comming to Soria, was ill receiued, for the Nobility hauing had a false aduertisment that hee was come thither to carrie many Knights prisoners, they murdered him in Saint Francis Church, beeing at Masse with his people. They were the fruites of the Infidelity which the King had vsed against Don Iohn the Blinde, a Prince of his owne bloud, by reason whereof euerie one grewe very ielous both of him, and of his priuate seruants. This murder did much displease the King, and incensed him against Don Iohn Manuel more then before.

Hee

A Hee came to Toledo, where hauing assembled great forces, hee went and beleaged Eicalona. D. Iohn Manuel on the other side laid siege to Huete, but neither of them preuailed. The marriage with the Infanta of Portugall was in the end concluded, and moreover D. Blanche, daughter to the deceased D. Pedro of Castille, the Kings vnicle, was accorded to the Infante D. Pedro of Portugall. Pope Iohn beeing aduertised of the reuolt of Castille, gaue charge to Don Pedro of Toledo, Bishop of Carthagena, newly made Cardinal, to mediate a peace in the realme, interposing his Apostolike authority: but hee labored in vaine; for hee found the King so incensed, as hee would not heare of any composition with his subiects, giuing the Cardinal probable reasons: wherefore hee made his report vnto the Pope, and discharged himselfe of his commission.

B During these troubles, D. Fernand Rodriguez of Bilbao, Prior of Saint Iohn, a great friend to Don Iohn Manuel, caused the cities of Toro and Zamora to rebell against the King, saying that it was by reason hee had aduanced D. Aluar Nugnes Oforio to the dignity of an Earle: the towne of Vaileddolit did the like, whereas Ioseph of Eccia a Jew, Intendant generall of the imposts, had like to haue beene slaine. Herevpon the King left the siege of Eicalona, and came to Vaileddolit: where the inhabitants, beeing animated by the Prior of Saint Iohn, shut the gates against him: yet beeing come to a parle with Don Iohn Martines de Leyua, Iohn Veles of Gueuara, Fernand Lador of Rioja, and Ruis Diaz his brother, Pero Rodriguez of Villega, and Garcilaso de la Vega, sonne to him that had beene slaine at Soria: these knights and others wrought so, as the King dismissed the Earle Don Aluar Nugnes, and so was receiued into the towne, and by the same meanes hee made a composition with Toro and Zamora, from thence hee went to Ciudad Roderigo, to celebrate his marriage.

C Seeking for to retire out of Don Aluar's hands, the fortes which hee had giuen vnto him in charge, hee could not recouer them all, and moreover Don Aluar, beeing discontented with this disgrace, hee presently went and ioyned with Don Iohn Manuel: wherevpon the King was aduised to kill him: And seeking a murtherer, and a fit occasion, hee found a man furnished with the qualities of a disloyall Courtiars: this was Raymyr Flores de Guzman, who notwithstanding that hee had beene a verie great friend to the Earle, offered to dispatch him, vpon the great promises which the King made him: wherefore sayning to bee in disgrace with him hee went vnto the Earle, by whom beeing well entertained, lyuing and lying together, hee had meanes and opportunity to kill him whilst that the King did celebrate his marriage in Alfayates, and did capitulate with D. Alphonso King of Portugal, who came in person to Font Grimald.

D The Court beeing come neere to Medina del Campo, the King was aduertised of the death of Count Aluar, to iustifie the which hee caused his processe to bee made, and condemned him himselfe sitting in the seat of Iustice at Tordehumos: hee caused his body to be burned, and his goods to bee confiscated as a traitor, whereof Ramir Flores de Guzman, had for his reward, and the price of his friends bloud, which he had shed, the castle of Beluer, and the towne of Cabreros. These are commonly the fauours of the best beloued Courtiars, which abuse the familiarity of their Kings, or relie to much thereon. King Don Alphonso perceiuing the misery whereinto hee did runne, desired to make a peace with Don Iohn Manuel, but hee laboured in vaine, for the Prior of Saint Iohn vndid all that hee could doe.

E The same yeere, beeing the yeere of our Lord 1329, the marriage which had beene treated some months before, betwixt Don Alphonso King of Arragon and D. Leonora of Castille, sister to this King Don Alphonso of Castille, was celebrated at Tarassone, whereas both Kings met, beeing accompanied by many Princes, Princesses, Prelates and Knights, and the Ambassadors of Don Alphonso King of Portugal. There was the league renewed betwixt the three Estates of Castille, Arragon and Portugal, and decreed not to receiue one an others Rebels, promising withall to assist the King of Castille in his warres against the Moores, with the forces of Arragon and Portugall.

Tt 3

what

Arragon.
An. 1329.

what issue came of this marriage wee haue before related, when as D. Leonora saw her A selfe mother to Don Fernand her first sonne, which was at the end of the yeere, bee-ing desirous hee should succeed the King his father, shee fought by all meanes to shewe her selfe a stepmother to Don Pedro, her husbands sonne by his first wife, but hee finding it, hee kept himselfe farre off during his fathers life. Don Pedro for his part was of a rough and sower disposition.

As soone as the Infant D. Fernand was borne, the King his father gaue him the Marquifate of Tortose and Albarrazin, contrary to the Edict and law of Daroca, whereof wee haue made mention, whereat the Estates were much discontented, and with them the Infant D. Pedro, Don Pedro de Luna, Archbishop of Saragossa, Don Michel Gurrea, who was at it were Gouvernor of the Realme, a dignity which they were wont B to giue to the eldest Princes of Arragon, Don Pedro and Synon Gurrea brethren:
this last was Abbot of Montarragon, Vidal of Villanoua, Garcia de Loris, Michel Zapate, and other Noblemen: yet they were forced to haue patience, for D. Alphonso King of Arragon suffered himselfe to bee wholly gouerned by D. Leonora: this was the first subiect of hatred betwixt D. Pedro and her.

Castille.

The King of Castille being much discontented for the death of D. Garcilaso de la Vega, came presently after his marriage to his aunt being at Soria, where causing informations to bee made against the murderers hee condemned the guiltie to death, and did confiscate their goods. Hee assembled the Estates of all his realmes at Madrid, of whom hee obtained a gift of great summes of Marauidis of gold, to make C warre against the Moores, who that yeere had sodainly taken the towne of Priego.
D. John Manuel, as well for the marriage betwixt the King of Arragon, and the Infanta of Castille, as for that his wife, sister to the King of Arragon, was newly dead, lost his support on that side: yet hee married againe with D. Bianche, daughter to the Infant D. Fernand de la Cerde, younger brother to D. Alphonso de la Cerde, cousin to D. John the blinde, the heire of Biscay, who was yet at Bayone, whether shee had beene conuaid, when her father was slaine, her name was Mary.

The King being prest to resist the Inuasions of the Moores, hee found meanes to make a peace with Don John Manuel, to whom he restored Donna Constance his daugh- D ter, whom hee had kept in the castle of Toro, and graunted vnto him certaine other conditions, whereby hee pacified the intestine troubles of the realme. Being at Vailledolir, hee caused Ioseph of Eccia, the Iew, to yeeld an account of the reuenues of his customs, and for that there had beene great complaints made of him, hee tooke that charge from him, ordaining that from thenceforth it should bee discharged by Christians, with the title of Treasurers, and not of Customers.

An. 1330.

In the yeere of our Lord 1330. the Kings of Castille and Portugal, meeting at Font Grimald, renued their alliances and leagues, and did capitulate a new, that the King of Portugal should assist him of Castille, with fise hundred horse for the Moores warre: and then was a marriage celebrated betwixt Don Pedro the Infant of Portugal, and Donna Bianche daughter to Don Pedro of Castille. The Rendezuous for the E Christians army was appointed at Cordoua, whether the King came with his fise hundred horse Portugois: led by the maister of the troupees of the Order of Christus: so as all things being ready they laied siege to Thiebe Hardales:

Moores.

Alhamet King of Granada, who kept himselfe in a manner alwaies in the castle of Alhambra, gaue the whole conduct of the warre to Ozmin, who hauing taken Pruna by treason came and lodged with six thousand horse, and good troupees of foote at Tu-by, three leagues from Thiebe, seeking by his continuall alarmes to diuert the Christians seege, making daylie skirmishes about the riuier of Guadathiebe, which was the common watering of both armies: notwithstanding all this, the Christians continued their battery, and the towne was valiantly defended by the Inhabitants, who burned F the Engines of battery with wilde fire, and did frustrate many of the assaylants attempts.
In the end Ozmin desirous to raise the seege, he resolved to charge the campe with this pollicie. He diuided his army into two, and sent three thousand horses farre about, and by

Str. 1330
Ozmin.

A by couered places, to charge the Christian army behind, or in flanke, vpon signe giuen, whilst that he with the other three thousand, and his footmen did set vpon them in front, thinking that the whole armie would make head against him, and that whilst they were in fight, the rest falling vpon them with great cries, should amaze them, and easily disorder them: but he fayled in this disseigne: for the king of Castille being aduertised by his spies, that part of the Moores army was disbanded, and that the rest came against him, hee appointed a good Squadron of horse to defend the rere, and he with the rest went to incounter Ozmin, whom he fought withall and repulsed, and had defeated him, if the three thousand horse, which he had sent to charge the armie behind, had not turned head, (finding all things in good order) and come in time to succour Ozmin, which was the B cause he was not wholly defeated. Whilst they were in fight, the king sent two thousand horse to assaile the Moores campe, and to spoyle their baggage, the which they effected, bringing away many prisoners.

This ill-succeeding enterprife was poorly repayed the next day by the Moores, who sue about fifty souldiers whom they found disbanded about the riuier, and this was all:
wherefore they retired, and the seege was continued: and then the Moores being out of hope of succors, yeelded to haue their liues saued. Afterwards Priego and Lagnetta were yeelded, and the forts of Cuenas and Ortexica recouered, which had beene abandoned by the Moores.

With these victories king D. Alphonso returned to Seuille, being much incensed against C Don John Manuel, who had still secret intelligence with the king of Granada, and being ill affected to D. Alphonso, had not stirred during the seege, notwithstanding that hee had promised to assaile the Moores towards Murcia, neither was hee much contented with the Portugois, who left him almost at the beginning of the seege of Thiebe, and returned to their houses. By reason of these infidelities, he resolved to haue peace with the king of Granada, who sought it and accepted what he offered to his Ambassadors at Seuille, that he should pay him twelve thousand doubions of yearly tribute, and do him homage for his Realme of Granada, so as he might be allowed to draw victuals out of the Christians country, paying the twentieth penny.

10 The king D. Alphonso being at Seuille without any cares of warre, he gaue him-D selfe to the long-sought loue of Donna Leonora of Guzman, daughter to Don Pero Nug- nes de Guzman, who had beene wife to Don John de Velasco, whom he enioyed. This Lady (who had not her like for beautie in all Spaine) did so gouerne him, as hee did not any thing but by her will, excusing himselfe that the Queene Donna Maria, whom hee had married but two yeares before, had no children. Being come from Seuille to Xeres of Ba-dajos, to visit Queene Elizabeth his Grand-mother, Dowager of Portugall, being yet aliue, he found there by chance the Infant D. Alphonso de la Cerde, that came out of France, who kist his hand and yeelded vnto him the right which he pretended to the Realmes of Castille and Leon, the which he had long disputed but in vaine. He had the same yeare (as some hold) yeelded to Philip king of Nauarre, the interest which he had or might pretend E as king of Castille, to Alaua, Rioja, Guipuscoa, and other lands adjacent, of the auncient patrimony of Nauarre. The king of Nauarre in recompence gaue him certaine places and pensions, to entertayne his estate, and so they continued good friends. This D. Alphonso de la Cerde had married a Lady in France of the bloud Royall, named Malfade, by whom he had two sonnes, Don Lewis and Don John: this last was Earle of Angoulesme, and Constable of France, during the raigne of King John, whom the Histories of France, cal
Don John of Spaine. Thus Don Alphonso was provided for, being issued from the eldest sonne of D. Alphonso the Learned. Don John Manuel the king, seeing that it was now time to liue in peace, employed Donna Leonora of Guzman, to bring him into fauour, the which she obtayned, yet was it not wholly to his content. This Lady was deliuered in F the yeare 1331. of a sonne by the king, who was named Don Pedro, and to whome the king assigned for a perpetuall inheritance, Aguilar del campo, and many other reue-nues.

11 In those times they of the Prouince of Alaua, had a custome to choose a Lord, vnder the souerainty of Castille, who did gouerne, and enioyed the reuenues which were

D. Alphonso
de la Cerde quits his interest to Cast.

An. 1331.

custome of Alaua.

were appointed for the Lords of the Countrey: sometimes they were Princes of the house of Castile, the kings children, and sometimes the Lords of Biscay, or of the house of Lara, or others, as they thought good: for the doing whereof, they were accustomed to assemble in the field of Arriaga, neere to Victoria, and there made their election: and those of this election were called brethren, and the assemblee a Brotherhood. Thither came the chiefe families of Alaua, with the Bishop of Calaurra, and the deputies for the Labourers: the towne of Victoria, and that of Treuigno were not of this assembly, but had bin alwaies vnited to the Crowne. This yeare the Brotherhood sent deputies vnto the king, beeing at Burgos, desiring him to incorporate them vnto the crowne, and that they might no more choose any Lord, or subalternall gouernour, for that in the factions and seditions past, they had bene distracted from the kings obedience, by the Gouer. B. nors, whereby the countrey had suffered much. The King desirous to giue them contentment, assuring his estate the more thereby, and increasing his demeynes, came to Victoria, and from thence to the assembly of the Brotherhood, beeing in the field of Arriaga, whereas pibblikely, and in all their names, there was a petition presented vnto him by these Knights hereafter named: D. Lopes of Mendoza, D. Bertrand Iuanes of Gueuara, Lord of Oña, and Ladron of Gueuara his son, Iuan Hurtado of Mendoza, Fernand Ruiz of Mendoza, Arch-deacon of Calaurra, Luis Lopes of Mendoza, sons to D. Lopes Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, Fernand Peres of Ayala, Fernand Sanches of Velasco, Gonçalo Iuanes of Mendoza, and Hurtado Diaz his brother, Lopes Garcia of Salazar, and Luis Diaz of Torres. These beeing followed by many other gentlemen, and the deputies of the Clergie, and third Estate, presented many Articles vnto the King, beseeching him to grant them, promising for their part, that this should bee their last assembly, and that the name and effect of their Brotherhood should remaine for euer extinct. The King hauing heard them, and giuen the Articles to his Councell to peruse, receiued them, and vnited the Prouince of Alaua for euer vnto the crowne of Castile; whereof letters were afterward dispatht at Victoria, in the yeare 1332. And these were the Articles.

Alaua vnited
to the Crowne
of Castile.

- 1 That the King nor his successors should not alienate any place of his demeynes.
- 2 That the gentlemen and their goods should bee free and exempt from all subsidies, as they had bin heretofore.
- 3 That the Monasteriall Churches and Collations which belonged to Noblemen, should be preferred for them as before, and whereas the Incumbents were not resident, the gentlemen should receiue the reuenues.
- 4 That all Labourers dwelling vpon gentlemens land, should be subiect vnto them, the Seignurie, and Iustice soueraigne referred to the King, and the Oxe of March, but all amercements should be the Lords.
- 5 That the Gentlemen and others of the countrey should gouerne themselves according to the customes and rights of Soportilla, and in all offences their causes should be judged according to the lawes of the Siere partidas.
- 6 That the Iudges royall, and Captaines of castles should be borne and resident in the country, who could not proceed against any one but vpon complaint, vnlesse they were condemned or banished, and that all prisoners should be deliuered vpon caution, vnlesse they were subiect to a corporall punishment.
- 7 That all Labourers dwelling vnder Monasteriall Churches, and Collations of Gentlemen, should bee free and exempted from all tribute and subiection, except the Oxe of March.
- 8 That Labourers dwelling in Pallaces and Castles of Gentlemen, should haue the same exemptions, so as there were but one at once, and those which nurse Gentlemens lawfull children, should enioy the like priuiledges, during the time of their nourishment.
- 9 The Gentlemen which dwell in villages vnder the Iurisdiction of Victoria, should enioy the same rights with them of the Prouince of Alaua: wherein should bee obserued the sentence giuen betwixt the towne of Victoria, and the villages thereunto belonging.
- 10 Whosoever should kill a Gentleman, should pay 500. solz for a fyne, and whosoever should hurt or dishonor a gentleman, should pay the like summe vnto the party.
- 11 That

- A 11 That there should be no forges of Iron set vp in the territorie of Alaua, to the end the mountaines should not be consumed.
- 12 That no man might build a house without the barre.
- 13 That all sales, donations, answers, assignations and pleas, should be iudged where they had bene begun.
- 14 That a Subsidie being demanded of him, who should tearme himselfe a Gentleman, enioyng the rights of Castile, he should be exempt.
- 15 That the king should make no new building, or towne in Alaua.
- 16 That the villages of Mendoza and Mendeuil should be free from all tributes and Impositions, and enioy the ancient rights, yet their Seignurie should belong vnto the Crowne.

17 That the Bourg of Guenara should be free from all tribute, as it had bene before ordayned by the assembly of Alaua, and likewise of the Oxe of March, the Soueraigntie notwithstanding belonging to the king.

These were the exemptions and chiefe priuiledges granted to the Gentlemen of Alaua, in the yeare 1331. In former times all sures were decided and iudged without any Lawes or Statutes, but onely by naturall reason, and by Arbitrators, but then they were reduced into a frame according vnto certaine Lawes, and they had a certaine seate of Iustice appointed. During the kings aboad at Victoria, he did institute (as some affirme) the Order of the Knights of the Band, to maintaine souldiers in Spaine, the which went to decay: yet some hold it was some yeares before. But this yeare returning to Burgos, hee set downe the Orders, whereof the chiefe Articles are these:

An. 1331.

Order of the Knights of the band.

They carried a red band foure fingers broade, in manner of a scarfe, which came from the left shoulder vnder the right arme, the which the king gaue onely to Gentlemen which had followed the Court tenne yeares, or bene in the warre against the Moors: and by their Orders it was not to be giuen but to younger brothers, who had no great shares in their fathers inheritances. These Knights beeing receiued, tooke an oath to obserue the rules of the Order which follow:

- 1 That the knight of the band should be bound to speake vnto the king for the common good and defence of them of his countrey, beeing required by them.
- D 2 That he should speake the truth vnto the King, and should be bound to reucale vnto the King what he should knowe or heare spoken against him.
- 3 The Knight convicted of a lie, should not carrie a sword for one whole moneth.
- 4 He should conuerse with souldiers and other men of qualitie, and not with men of base conditions.
- 5 They should keepe their promise to all men, of what estate and condition soeuer.
- 6 They should be prouided of armes and horses, vpon paine to loofe the title of Knight-hood.
- E 7 The Knight should not be seene mounted vpon a Moile, nor without band, nor sword.
- 8 He should be no Iester, but his discourse should be graue and honest.
- 9 He should not complaine of his wounds, nor vaunt of his valour.
- 10 He should not play at cardes nor dice, nor ingage his armes, nor apparell.
- 11 He should honour and serue Ladies and Gentlewomen.
- 12 If two Knights of the band had a quarrell, the rest should bee bound to seeke all meanes to reconcile them.
- 13 The Knight which did vsurpe the band, and had not receiued it from the kings hands, should be bound to defend it against two knights of the Order of the band, and if he did vanquish them, he might then carry it without contradiction, but if he were vanquished, he should be banished from the Court.
- F 14 Any knight winning the prize at the lusts of armes of the knights of the band, should be receiued into their Order.
- 15 That the knight of the band which should draw his sword against another knight of the same Order, should forbear the Court for two moneths: and for two moneths after

Articles of the Order.

after should weare but halfe a band, and if he should wound his companion, hee should be fixe moneths in prison, and banished the Court for fixe moneths more.

16 The king should bee sole Iudge of all matters concerning the knights of the Band.

17 All the knights of the Band should bee bound to accompany the king vnto the warre.

18 They might not go to the war with the Band, but against Infidels, and in all other they should lay aside the Band.

19 The knights of the Band should assemble thrice a yeare, to treat of the affaires of their Order, where the king should appoint it, beeing mounted and armed, and the sayd assemblies should be in April, September, and at Christmas.

20 They should exercise themselves in Iousts, Ioco de canna, tossing the pike, and managing of horses, at a certaine time appointed.

21 No knight should liue in Court, without ferding a Ladie or Gentlewoman to haue her in marriage, or otherwise with honour.

22 The knights of the Band should be bound to be at all tourneys within ten leagues of the Court.

23 If any of them did marrie within twenty leagues of the Court, the other knights should be bound to beare him companie, and to honour him and his spouse, making some exercises of armes, and giuing him presents.

24 The first Sunday of every moneth they should come into the great hall of the Pallace, and there exercise all sorts of armes before the king, without offending one another either maliciously, or in choller.

25 A knight beeing ready to dye, he should be visited, comforted, and exhorted by his companions, and after his death they should be bound to assist at his funerals, and should mourne a moneth, all Iousts and exercises of armes ceasing.

26 His Band that was dead should be restored to the king by the other knights, who should be tutors to haue some one of his children receiued into the Order, or to obtaine some preferment for the widow to honour her, and entertaine her estate of Nobility, or to marry some of her daughters.

The first knights of this Order, yet not all at once were chosen, without respect to the elder, to honour him, and not to draw it into consequence.

The king Alphonse.

The Infant D. Pedro.

D. Henry.

D. Fernand.

D. Tello.

D. John Nugnes.

D. Henriques.

D. Alphonso Fernand Cornel.

D. Lope Diaz d'Almaçan.

D. Fernand Perez Portocarrero.

D. Charles of Gueuara.

D. Fernand Henriques.

D. Aluar Garcia of Albornex.

D. Pero Fernandez.

D. Guye Ieffrey Tenorio.

D. Iuan Estuanes.

D. Diego Garcia of Toledo.

D. Martin Alphonso of Cardona.

D. Gonçal Ruiz de la Vega.

D. Iohn Alphonso of Benauides.

D. Garcilaso de la Vega.

D. Fernand Garcia Duque.

D. Garcia Fernandes Tello.

D. Pero Gonçal of Agüero.

D. Iohn Alphonso Carriello.

D. Inigo Lopes Horozco.

D. Garcia Guttiere of Caruajal.

D. Guttiere Fernandes of Toledo.

D. Diego Fernandes of Castiello.

D. Pero Ruiz of Villegas.

D. Alphonso Fernandes Inge.

D. Ruy Gonçales of Castagneda.

D. Ruy Ramires of Guzman.

D. Sancho Martines de Leyna.

D. Iohn Gonçales of Baçan.

D. Pero Trillo.

D. Suero Perez of Quinones.

D. Gonçal Mexia.

D. Fernand Carriello.

D. Iohn de Rojas.

D. Pero Aluarez Ozorio.

D. Pero Perez of Padilla.

D. Gil Quintagna.

D. Iohn Rodrigues of Villegas.

D. Diego

A D. Diego Perez Sarmiento.

D. Menao Rodrigues of Viczma.

D. Iohn Fernandes Cornel.

D. Iohn of Ceruejule.

D. Iohn Rodrigues of Cizuceros.

D. Orion of Liebana.

D. Iohn Fernandes Delgadillo.

D. Gomez Capiello.

These were at this time the most renowned families of Spaine, whereof some are wholly extinct. Other houses are since growne great, as the Velasques, Manriques, Pimentel,

B Mendoça, Cordoua, Pacheco, Estunica, Fajardos, Arellanos, Tendillas, Cueuas, Andradas, Fonçecas, Luna, Villandrado, Sotomaiors.

This Order of Knight-hood did flourish for a time, but for that it was not religious as therest, it was neglected and came to nothing.

At the same time Henry of Solibert Gouvernor of Nauarre, by the perswasion, as it is Nauarre likely, of D. Iohn Manuel, and of Don Iohn Nugnes de Lara, entred into quarrell with the king of Castile: and for that he knew the forces of Nauarre were not sufficient to annoy the King of Castile, and that those of France, were both farre off, and in warre with the English, he insinuated himselfe with the king of Arragon, vnder hope of a marriage betwixt D. Ieanne eldest daughter to Philip king of Nauarre, and Don Pedro Infant of Arragon, and heire to the Crowne: for this effect D. Pero Gonçales of Morentin, was sent to

C Tortosa in Castelogne, where he was well receiued by the king, who hauing appointed D. Pedro de Luna, Arch-bishop of Saragossa, to treat with him of this marriage, they concluded it, as we shall shew, and agreed, that it should be accomplished within a certaine time, and that in the meane time D. Pedro should ayde the Gouvernors of Nauarre, both present and to come, in all the wars they should haue for the realme of Nauarre. The chiefe motiue of this marriage, was D. Iohn Alonso de Hara, Seigneur de las Cameros, who was very inward with D. Iohn Manuel, and sought al occasions to annoy king D. Alphonso.

D. Ieanne Queene of Nauarre being in France, was that yeare deliuered of the Infant D. Charles, heire of the Realme of Nauarre, and the Countie of Eux.

D Another marriage was treated of in Portugal, to the preiudice of king D. Alphonso of Castile: for D. Fernand Rodrigues of Bilbao, Prior of S. Iohn, Chancellor to Queene Mary, wifeto king D. Alphonso, a great friend to D. Iohn Manuel, and to whome the reuenges which the king did vsually take of his Nobility were not pleasing: beeing also incensed at the familiarity which the king had with D. Leonora of Guzman, and at the authority shee had within the Realme, being also much deuoted to the king of Portugall, he preuailed so with him by his practises, as he caused a diuorce betwixt the Infant D. Pedro of Portugall, and his wife D. Blanche of Castile, who was very sickly, and made him to marrie D. Constance daughter to D. Iohn Manuel, who thought to haue bin Queene of Castile. The king of Castile, who dreamed not of these things, thought himselfe assured of the Christians, and was wholly attentue to the actions of the Moores of Granado, with whom he sought

E means to breake the truce, by stopping of their victuals: but beeing better aduised, hee sent to demand the tribute for that yere of king Mahumet, the which was paid, so as he suffered the Moores to haue passage for their victuals out of Andalusia, and other places therabouts: yet king Mahumet vnderstanding what small assurance there was in this truce, and watching all occasions, either how to free himselfe from the subiection of the Christians, or to annoy them: he past soone after into Affricke, to sollicite king Alboacen Miralumin of Maroc, to make some great enterprife with him in Spaine.

13 And for that the Moores of Spaine haue alwaies had great affinity and intelligence

F with these Miralumin of Affricke, it shall be fit to relate the continuance, since Ioseph Aben Iacob, the second king of the race of Merins, whom we left vpon the banks of Affricke trying to passe into Spaine in the yere 1291. when as the king of Castile tooke Tariffe from him: but being stoppt by Benedict Zachary Admirall of Castile, he conuerted his designs against Alboacen king of Tremessen, and his successor Boham.

This Miralumin beeing at the sege of Tremessen, a familiar friend of his called

Alfiterian,

Bucalc 3. king of the race of the Merins in Affricke.

Botebid 4. king of Maroc.

Abortabe 5.
king.

Aben Joseph 6
King of Maroc

Alboali 7. king of the race of Merins.

Alboacen 8.
King of the Merins.

Alfetrion, flue him in his bed: whereupon his son Bucalc tooke vpon him the scepter of the Arabian Mores, and was the 3. king of the race of Merins. Being yet in the campe before Tremessen, Albohaya his vncle being inuested by the Maroquins to take the Realme from Bucalc, he refused it for himselfe, but he aduanced another King of the same family of Merins, called Botebid, son to a brother of this Bucalc, who seduced him to fly: finding himselfe too weake to make head against him. Bucalc thinking to saue himselfe in Affricke was slaine by them that pursued him, neere vnto Mont Atlas. Thus Botebid reigned the 4. of the familie of Merins, who at the end of the yeare, ended both raigne and life in whole place Abortabe his Brother was the fifth king of Maroc, by the helpe of certaine Christian souldiers, who were then in Affricke, led by a knight called Gonsalo Santhes of Tronconies, who notwithstanding had like to haue bene slaine by this ingratefull barbarian, being forced to saue his life by flight, and so retired into Spaine. Abortabe reigned onely 2. yeares, and died in the city of Ribate, leauing the Realme of Maroc to his great Vncle Aben Joseph, sonne to king Jacob Aben Joseph, the first of the familie of the Merins which had reigned in Maroc, and brother to Aben Jacob. This Aben Joseph had one son called Alboali, whome he sought to make king of Fez in his life time, but as he had indiscreetly, and too ambitiously cherished this son, he was forced to repent him, for such was the sons hatred, as he deprived his father of the Realme of Maroc, and appointed him (by the intercession of the Almodes then reigning at Tunis, who had there erected a kingdome of the reliques of their families and forces chased from Maroc) Bolahu for his aboade and entertainment: and Alboali reigned in the 7. place: but he enioyed it not long for it was the wil of God, that this wicked sonne fell grievously sicke in the towne of Fez, neere vnto Tremessen (not that Fez which is the chiefe of a kingdome) his father Aben Joseph came thither to beseege him, and prest him in such sort, as he was forced to leaue the realm of Maroc and Fez, and to content himselfe with that of Sojumenca. By this meanes Aben Joseph reconered his Crowne and royall authority in Maroc, who holding Alboali unworthy to succeed him: he appointed Alboacen his younger sonne to be heire of the Crowne. Alboali the elder aduertised of this institution, watched a time when both the father and the sonne were absent out of Maroc, and comming thither on the sudden well accompanied, he seized thereon, thinking by that meanes to haue reconered his realme: but he was beseegeged by king Aben Joseph and Albohacen, vpon whom making a sally, he was defeated, and sore wounded, so as he was forced to yeeld to his fathers will, and to retire himselfe to Sojumenca, the which was granted him againe for his portion: after which Aben Joseph liued 18. yeares quietly king of Maroc, by whose decease succeeded his son Alboacen, the eighth king of the familie of Merins, yet with great contention against his elder brother Alboali, who fought by all practises to cast him from his throne, and being not of strength sufficient himselfe, he begged ayde of other Barbarian Kings, so as with the forces he obtained from king Botexefin sonne to Boham then reigning at Tremessen, he came againe to beseege the capital town of Maroc, where Abderrahamen a braue knight commanded, who defended it so valiantly, as he forced Alboali to retire with shame, who in his retreat was incountred and defeated by the kings army, and soone after beseegeged in his towne of Sojumenca, who seeing himselfe reduced to extremitie, hee took a new composition, promising neuer to pretend any interest to the realm of Maroc, but to content himselfe with that of Sojumenca: for assurance whereof he gaue his sonne called Bozien for hostage. Wee must needs confesse that the humanity both of the father and the sonne to Alboali was exceeding great, hauing so often rebelled, and aspired to the crowne, a crime which doth often cause all respect of bloud and allyance to bee forgotten, euen in Christian Princes. Alboacen rising from Sojumenca, ouer-ranne Pilla, and burnt all the countrie of Tremessen, in reuenge that King Botexefin had given ayde to his brother at the sege of Maroc: It is this Alboacen which had bene solicited by Mahumet king of Granado, to passe into Spaine against Don Alphonso the eleuenth king of Castile: and who afterwards hauing subdued the Realmes of Sojumenca and Tremessen, was the greatest Prince in all Affricke.

Returning then into Spaine, wee say, that Ozmin Generall of the forces of Granado, dyed about the yeare 1332. soone after the truce made betwixt Castile and Granado: 1332.

A leauing two sonnes Abraham and Abuceber, after whose death King Mahumet put himselfe into fauour with King Alboacen, (for Ozmin notwithstanding that he was of the same familie of Merins, had alwaies bene an enemy vnto him) wherefore Mahumet going to Fez, he was courtously entertained by the Miralmumin, to whome hauing made his complaints of the King of Castile, who did alwaies trecherously breake the truce: he perswaded, and incited him, to ioyne with him against Spaine. For (sayd hee) God hauing made you the mightiest Prince of the Religion, published by the Prophet Mahumet, and whome so many Kings and Princes of Affricke obey, thou canst not more religiously, and with greater honour employ thy forces, then against the Christians of Spaine, our persecutors, and the implacable enemies of our law, nor more profitably address thy noble enterprises, not with hope of better successe, then against them, hauing the ports and townes of Spayne at thy command, from the Streight along the coast of the Mediterranean Sea: whereunto the troubled Estate of Castile doth alwaies inuite thee, whereas Don Alphonso, who rearmes himselfe King, through an insatiable desire of rule, hauing spoiled his subjects of their lawfull inheritances, and pursued them in their honours and liues by tyrannous cruelty, extending his outrageous disdain euen to women of his owne bloud, and others of noble Families, hee hath so estranged most of the Princes and Noblemen of Spaine, as they now seeke our friendship, and offer to ioyne with vs, to make warre against him. It will be therefore an act worthy of thy wisdom, not to let slippe so great occasions, and besetting the generositie of thy Noble and renowned Family, by this oportunitie to repaire the ruined honour of the Arabians, troden vnder foote in Spayne, for the finnes of our Nation, by the will and pleasure of the great God, who shewes plainly, that hee hath now turned his wrath against the Spaniards, both Princes and people beeing plunged in all impietie, disloyalty, dissimulation, and couetousnesse.

To this effect spake Mahumet to the King of Maroc, who heard him with great attention, and answered by the aduice of his Councell: that hee desired nothing more, then to do what he had propounded, but at that time hee could not wholly attend it as it was fit, beeing ler by the warre which he had against the king of Tremessen, the which being ended, hee would employ himselfe in person with all his forces. In the mean time he offered him good troups of horse, and gaue him great summes of mony. Thus the king of Granado returned well satisfied into his country, where beeing arriued, hee sent presently to Don John Manuel, to conclude a firme League with him, and the other Noblemen his Confederates, and to resolu of the meanes how to beginne the warre against the King of Castile.

In this league ioynd Don John Nuges de Lara, Don John Martinez de Leyua, and many others: and there was sent from them vnto Granado with the messengers Moores, Don Pero Martinez Clauijo, to haue the king confirme their accord. Wherefore the same yeare 1332. Rodenan Captaine of the Lymits of Granado towards Murcia, Abuceber sonne to Ozmin deceased, and Machilif Gouvernour of Antequera, entred the Realme of Murcia in armes, vnto the territorie of Valencia, spoyling, killing, and burning all about Orihuela and Guardamar: from whence they returned laden with spoyle to Granado, whereby king Don Alphonso knew that hee mist of force go to armes: for before hee had a conceit that Mahumets practises would prooue vaine, and hoped to reclaime his Rebels, by promises and other practises, but he was deceiued. Wherefore to beginne a warre of so great waight and difficultie, hee went in pilgrimage to Saint James, and there was made Knight, being in compleat armour, ordaining that from thence forth whoeuer should desire to be made a knight, should present himselfe armed at all peeces. Returning to Burgos, he caused himselfe to be crowned king, to giue more authoritie to his royall Maiestie: he also caused Queene Mary his wife to be crowned with great pompe and charge to the Inhabitants. The next day the king did arme and make about an hundred Noble men and Gentlemen Knights, in the Monasterie of Huelgas, being all covered with white. The ceremonie being ended, he gaue to the Cittie of Burgos, the place of Nague, with the iurisdiction for euer, to recompence the expences they had bene at in his Coronation.

V v

During

At Saint Care, John Renant le Chat.
 At the castell of Murillo, Diego Peres of Esperun.
 At S. Martin of Vnx, Garcí Ximenes of S. Martin.
 At Vxue, D. Alphonso of Spaine.
 At Gallipienço, Pedro Arnaud of Vrtuua.
 At Casteda, Stephen of Cormelles.
 At Pegna, Peter of Cuyuero.
 At the old castell of Sanguessa, Garcí Arnaldes of Espeleta.
 At Petiella in Arragon, D. Martin Fernandes de Sazaça.
 At Pintano, D. Simon de Sotes.
 At Ongaçaria, Helias Martines of Irurozgui.
 At Leguin, John Martines of Eufa.
 At Yrurtegui, Martin Garcia of Ollaogui.
 At Valcarlos, Martin Ynigues of Vrça.
 At Rochfort, Lobet of Narbays.
 At Monteyran, Pedro Sanches of Olicaratea.
 At Rochbrun, Willam Arnaud Durdes.
 At Guerga, John de Sauain.
 At Thiebes, Garcí Michel of Escayren.
 At Castell-nouo, Roderigo of Ayuar.
 At Burgui, Pedro Azmar of Ezcura.
 At Yfaba, Martin Garcia of Leyun.
 In the Merindad or Iurisdiction of Pampelone, Fernand Diaz de villa alta, held the castell of Toloyna.
John of Rouceray, that of Aza.
John of Bulli, Labraca.
John Fernandes of Baguedan, the castell of Oro.
Bernard of S. Pelage, that of Falces.
Pedro Garcia of Ciragueui, Carfar.
John Betayroa, and Martin Sanches of Villamera, the castle of Lana.
Roger of Alamaia, Andofilla.
Corbaran of Lect, Reça.
Romieu Martines of Arrornis, Afagra.
Alphonso Diaz of Morentiu, Peralta.
Diego Sanches of Eulate, Artazona.
John Velez of Medrano, the tower of Viana.
Diego Lopes of Alfafua, the castell of Toro.
Martin Sanches of Azedo, Maragnon.
John Moreusnt, the castell of la Garde.
Renauld of Bourray, the castell of Milagro.
Alphonso Perez of Morantiu, the castell of Montjordan.
Garcí Sanches of Espeleta, Lerin.
Ordoniz of Blandiaco, Funes.
D. Pedro Ximenes of Mirafuentes, Arcos.
Lope Perez of Agnoa, the castell of Miranda.
Philip of Coynon, the castell of Belmarques.
Sancho Perez of Lodoga, the tower of Mendauiia.
Michel Ramires of Cufia, the castell of Celatambor.
Sancho of Licaracu, the castell of Larraga.

Which Captaines of Forts were all enterdayned by the King, and enjoyed many privileges, according to the lawes and customes of Nauarre. The treatie of marriage continued still, betwixt the Infant of Nauarre, and D. Pedro heire of Arragon, by D. Pedro de Luna, Arch-bishop of Saragossa, D. Pedro Gonçales of Morentiu, and other Deputies, who hauing beene long together in the towne of Cortez, concluded it in the yeare 1334.

The

A The conditions were, that King Philip of Nauarre, should giue in dowry with his daughter D. Jeanne, a 100000. Sanchots, which were worth so many Liuers turnois, and for assurance of a future marriage, there were giuen in pawne for Nauarre, Lescar, Arguedas, Saint Care, Murillo, Gallipenço and Murgui; and for the King of Arragon, Fayos, Boria, Malona, Campdalijub, Sos and Sauueterre, & the Articles were signed by the parties with many knights at Daroca. The King of Castille hearing of this alliance, being ialous and foreseeing that they fought but an occasion of warre, he wrote vnto the Gouernor, that hee could neuer vnderstand that his subiects had wronged the Nauarrois, and that if any thing had beene committed which required reparation, hee was readie to see it done: but the Gouernor giuing a deafe care to that which hee had written, persisted in his resolution and seized vpon the Monastery of Hitero by force.

B being then in the possession of Castille, and had before beene of Nauarre. The King of Castille seeing the warre to be ineuitable, sent to the King of Arragon, to intreat him to be a meanes, that his sonne D. Pedro, might not ioine with the Nauarrois, nor aide them to annoy Castille. The King of Arragon, beeing verie sicke answered that his indisposition would not suffer him to thinke of such affaires, and that if his sonne had a will to fauor the Nauarrois, he could not hinder him, being in that Estate. This answer beeing made knowne to the Arragonois, they grewe more desirous to ioine with the Nauarrois, wherevpon D. Lope de Luna, one of the greatest Noblemen of the Realme, D. Michel Perez Zapata and Lopes Garcia, accompanied with many other knights, whom the Infant D. Pedro gaue them, to the number of fise hundred horse, came to the Gouernor to Tudele, from whence enting into Castille with the forces of Nauarre, they made a great spoile, and brought away a great booty, finding not any one to make head against them: whereof the King of Castille beeing aduertised, hee was much grieved, giuing the speediest order hee could to man the frontiers: hee sent D. Alphonso Ortiz Prior of Saint Iohn, to D. John Nugnes de Lara, to the end hee should take vpon him the charge to defend the country, with such troups as hee should giue him: but D. John notwithstanding his reconciliation with the King, would not trust him, keeping himselfe still in Biscay, and yet the King promised to giue him Maralles and Villalon, with many other things: wherefore King D. Alphonso made Martin Fernandes Puerto Carrero General of this warre, and sent with him vnto the frontier D. Diego Lopes de Haro, sonne to D. Lopes the little, D. Fernand Rodrigues of Villalobos, D. John Garcia Manriques, D. Rodrigo of Cisneros, D. Pero Nugnes de Guzman, and his brother, Ramir Flores, D. Lopes Diaz of Almalan, D. Gonçalo Ruis Giron, D. Gonçalo Ruis Diaça, D. Aluar Rodrigues Daza, Alphonso Fernandes Cornel, Garsilaso de la Vega, and his brother Gonçalo Ruis de la Vega, Pero Ruis Cavilli, John Alphonso of Benauides, D. Rodrigues of Sandoual, Sancho Sanches de Roias, and many other knights of marke, which did not refuse to march vnder Martin Fernandes, although there were many amongst them of greater houses, in regard that hee did represent the person of the Infant D. Pedro of Castille, and had displayed the standard royall, and was appointed by the King to be his Lieutenant generall; and as the King sought to make his excuse, saying, that hee would gladly his sonne had beene of age to goe to horse, and that hee would willingly haue made him their leader and general, they answered, that they would not onely obey Martin Fernandes Puerto Carrero, whom they knew to bee a worthy knight, seeing hee gaue him them for their Leader, but any one of lesse qualitie, yea a groom of his stable, if he commaunded it.

The Gouernor of Nauarre beeing aduertised of this army of Castillans, fortified the Monastery of Hitero, and sent thether D. Michel Perez Zapata, thinking they would come and assaile it. The Castillans being all assembled at Alfaro, leauing the Monastery, marched directly towards Tudele; being discouered, the Arragonois and Nauarrois sallied forth to incounter them, not caring to attend the returne of Michel Perez, who had led part of their forces to Hitero.

F The Castillans were stronger in horse, and the place fit to vse them: wherefore beeing ioyned, although the Nauarrois made great resistance, yet they were put to rout, and repulst towards the towne, with great slaughter, and the losse of many that were taken prisoners. And you must vnderstand that neither the Gouernor, nor D. Lope

Ten thousand pound.

Warre betwixt Nauarre and Castille.

Obedience of the Noblemen of Castille to their King and Lord.

Defeat of the Arragonois and Nauarrois by the Castillans.

de

de Luna, were at this charge, but kept themselves in Tudela, so as the army of Arragonis and Nauarrois were without a head, and were chased euen to the towne gates. The victorious Castillans returning towards Alfaro, incountred Michel Perez Zapata, with his troupes, comming from Hitero, who put his men in batteille, by the fauor of a Dich, the which he defended against his enemies, who were full of fury, after their late victory, and fought to force it, but many miscarried: yet the multitude of the Castillans prevailed, and Michel Perez was ouerthrowne, and taken prisoner with many others: if night had not approcht without doubt (as the Histories say) the Nauarrois and Arragonis, in this last incounter, had bene all put to the sword.

Thus the Castillans after two victories, returned with many prisoners, and great spoiles to Alfaro, forbearing for a time to returne into Nauarre, hauing not gotten these victories without losse. Those that were in the Monastery of Saint Mary of Hitero, notwithstanding that they were well fortified, and furnished with victuals, durst not abide there, so as the Castillans seized thereon, from whence they went to beleage the Castille of Tudeguen, in the which there was a garrison of Gascons and Nauarrois, who yeelded the place; being perswaded by the faire speeches of a Castilian monke, who was in the castle with them. The Castillans taking heart by this happy successe returned afterwards thrice into Nauarre, and spoiled the country, carrying away many prisoners, and great store of catteille.

Guipuscoa
enemies to the Nauarrois.

On the other side the people of Guipuscoa, hearing of the warre, vpon the frontiers of Castille, Nauarre and Arragon, hauing no commaundement, entred in armes into Nauarre, vnder the conduct of Lopes Garcia of Lazcano, whom they made their captaine, spoyling a great part of the country of the iurisdiction of Pampelone; and in the end they laied sege to the castle of Vnfa, which they tooke. The King of Castille aduertised of these happy exploits, was desirous to stay the course of their victories, fearing lest hee should kindle a warre betwixt France and Spaine, which should not bee easily quenched: wherefore he commaunded them to containe themselves, and onely to defend the frontiers of his Kingdome, yea hee called home most of the captaines and knights, which were vnder the Infant D. Pedro's Banner, being led by Martin Fernandes Puerto Carrero. Hee and some others did instantly obey, but Garcilaso de la Vega, and Gonsalo Ruiz his brother, made an other roade, with certaine troupes, into Nauarre, about Soliere, where they left lamentable markes, burning and spoyling all they found. The newes of these outrages came into France, which did moue many kinsmen, friends and subiects of King Philip to apprehend the spoiles which the Castillans had made in Nauarre, among the which Gaston Lord of Bearn, and Earle of Foix made hast to passe the mountaines, with many souldiers, Bernois and Gascons, and hauing taken view of his troupes at Viane, which is a league from Logroño, he entred into Castille, where hee made the like spoile as the Castillans had done in Nauarre, and then came and camped before Logroño, the Inhabitants whereof sallied forth vpon them, being led by a gentleman of the country called Ruis Diaz of Gaona, but they were repulst into the towne, and pursued so neere, as without the valour of Ruis Diaz of Gaona (who with three companions made head against the enemies, at the entry of the bridge, whilst the rest had recovered the towne, and assured the Ports) they had entred Pel-mel with them, and taken Logroño. This Esquier imploied his life for the preservation of his country, imitating (but with lesse happinesse) the example of the Romaine Horatius Coclès, for hee was slaine vpon the bridge. The Earle of Foix sayling of his hope to take Logroño by this meanes, returned with his men to Viana.

Defeat of the garrison of Logroño by the Earle of Foix.

The King of Castille being in the meane time aduertised of his comming, had commaunded many companies of foote and horse to march towards the frontiers, meaning that when they had raised a great army, they should enter into Nauarre, if it were conuenient, so as it was likely there would bee a dangerous warre betwixt these two mighty Kingdomes: for it is to bee presumed the French King would haue bene engaged, in fauour of his cousin Philip King of Nauarre, and nor to giue occasion to the Spaniards to presume to passe so easily ouer the limits wherewith nature had diuided those two nations. But it was the will of God, that in this heat of their courages of either side, Arch-

A Archbishop of Rheims came into Nauar, going in pilgrimage to Saint James of Galicia, who seeing this warre begunne betwixt the Nauarrois and the Castillans, for eight occasions; wrote a letter to the King of Castille, admonishing him to harken vnto a peace. The King who was no lesse desirous then the Archbishop, embraced this occasion; and shewing that the reuerence of so great a prelat, made him willing to obey his holy aduertisements, he sent vnto him Martin Fernandes Puerto Carrero, D. Gil Carillo of Albornoz, Archdeacon of Calatrava in the church of Toledo, who was afterwards Cardinal. By the aduice and resolution of which three, with whom was ioyned Fernand Sanches of Vailledolit, notarie Maior, or Secretary of Castille, who concluded a peace vpon these conditions.

B That there should be peace betwixt Philip King of Nauarre and D. Alphonso King of Castille, their vassals and subiects, and a cessation of armes for a certaine time. That foure commissioners should bee named, two for Nauarre, and two for Castille, for the establishment and restitution of what had bene taken of either part, and for the reparation of any thing that should bee committed to the prejudice of this accord. That the Monastery of Santa Maria of Hitero, should be restored to the Monkes, who should remaine Neuters, vntill it were decided to what iurisdiction it did belong: to the end the diuine seruice should not be interrupted, nor they any waies molested by the Nauarrois or Castillans. That the castles of Tudeguen and Vrta should remaine in the possession of the King of Castille, vntill their differences were decided, and a definitiue sentence giuen. That in regard of the propriety of the Monastery of Hitero, there should bee arbitrators chosen, a Nauarrois, a Castilian and a Cardinal of Rome, who should bee agreeable to both parties, to iudge thereof, and in the meane time all quarrels should cease betwixt the two realmes, Kings and subiects. These Articles being concluded, they were afterwards confirmed by the two Kings.

Peace betwixt Nauarre and
Castille.

16 During these warres of the King of Castille against the Moores and his Rebels, Arragon, and against Nauarre, the realme of Arragon was troubled with the quarrels and harred of the Queene D. Leonor against the Infant D. Pedro her sonne in law, shewing herselfe in all shee could, a right mother in law. Wherein shee was the more to bee feared, for that shee did governe the King D. Alphonso her husband at her pleasure, and did worke in him what impressions she would, so as many times the Infant was in great danger, which hee did afterwards reuenge. Besides these intestine iarrs, the King of Arragon was much troubled which the continual rebellions of the Sardinians, and their Lords, who were for the most part Geneuois, but hee wrought so by his wisdom, and diligence, as without vsing any force, but in extremity, he reduced most of them to his deuotion. Francis a Oria sonne to Leonard, as well in his owne name, as of Alion, Marian Fabian Dignamin, and Nicholas of Oria, came and did homage to the King, and obtained pardon, and confirmation of all the Lands which they did hold in Sardinia; vpon condition that they should not giue any aide nor fauour to the rebels and banished men of the towne of Sassari, where notwithstanding the King granted a repeale for such as had bene condemned for light crimes, but those of the families of the Cathons, Pali and d'Oria, who had bene condemned of high treason, by D. Berenger of Carosso, were banished the Island for euer. This nation of the Sardes was so prompt to reuolt, as notwithstanding any prouision the King of Arragon could make, and all accords and treaties, hee was constrained to be watchful, with care, and exceeding great charge. Ayton of Oria hauing rigged out nine gallies, and some other Genouay ships of the Ghibeline faction, remaining at Sauonne, hovering about the Island of Sardinia, surprized neere vnto Cap de Terre, nine ships of Cattelogna, and sunke them, and so passing on he terrified all the Arragonis in the Island, and held the fort of Cailleri as it were beleegged for a time, which made all the Sardinians in a manner to rebel: wherevpon D. Alphonso King of Arragon sent D. Raymond of Cardona thither, a captaine of great experience, and made him Lieutenant general of that Island.

Sard'nien. turn
vnto us.

Geneuiois of the Ghibeline faction against the Arragonis
in Sardinia.

These things past in the yeere of our Lord 1330. about the time that the Moores did invade the realme of Murcia, of the which wee haue treated, at which time the Infant D. Pedro Earle of Ribagorça and Ampurias, the Kings brother married Leanne sister to Gaston Earle

Earle of Foix, the first of that name, and daughter to Roger Bernard.

The Cattelans enemies irreconcilable to the Geneuiois, and newly incensed by the losses which they had received by the army of Aysen d'Oris, who after that he had spoiled all that he found of the Arragonois faction vpon the banks of Sardinia, retired into Corsica, to the Port of Boniface; they drew out of their Ports and Hauens of Cattelogne about forty Gallies, and thirty Poists and Brigantins, and directing their course towards the riuer of Genoa, they burnt al the Geneuiois houses of pleasure, without respect of friend or foe: for the common weale of Genoa being then diuided, by reason of the faction of Guelphes and Ghibelins; the Ghibelins open enemies to the King of Arragon did for the most reside at Sauonne, and from thence made their sallies and enterprises; sometimes drawing some priuate men of the Guelphes faction, to runne vpon the Cattelans, by reason whereof this Cattelans army intreated them all after one manner.

During these wrackes, Luke of Fiesco one of the chiefe of the Guelphes faction, had begunne to treat with King D. Alphonso, by the meanes of Francis of Saint Eulalia, that if he would harken to a good accord with the Geneuiois, holding the city of Genoa for friend, and forget al wrongs done, they would furnish him with fiftene gallies, and follow his standard against the Geneuiois Ghibelins remayning at Sauonne, who had caused all the reuolts and troubles in Sardinia, wherewith the King was very well pleased: but the spoiles which the Cattelans army had made during the treaty in the riuer of Genoa intercepted all; so as these two factions of Genoa, being equally assisted by a forraigne enemy, were the more willing to giue credit to the perswasions of Robert King of Naples, who reconciled them, and then they ioyned against the King of Arragon, to dispossesse him of the Island of Sardinia. The heads of the two factions, were the families of Oria for the Guelphes, and Spinola for the Ghibelins. Becing thus incensed they runne along the coast of Cattelogne, with three score saile, where they tooke many ships and other spoiles, leauing lamentable spectacles in all places where they had landed. Thirtene of their gallies passing from thence into Sardinia, attempted the fort and Port of Caillerij in vaine, from whence they were repulst with losse. These warres at sea, betwixt the Cattelans and Geneuiois might bee held equall, for they were the mightiest nations at sea in that age. All was full of difficultie, and ialousie in the Island, notwithstanding that King Don Alphonso, by his bountie, aduancements, alliances and marriages contracted in his fauour, and at his instance betwixt the Noblemen Cattelans, and Sardinians, or Geneuiois (having charges or lands in the Island) had sought to draw them vnto him, and to make them friends, and affected to his party: yet he was in continuall warre, and was forced to keepe great garrisons in the Island, and many gallies at sea with so great charge, as all the reuenues of the Island of Sardinia did auail him little: beeing often constayned to importune the Pope, to discharge him of the tribute, which hee ought vnto the church of Rome, by reason of this chargeable conquest.

Thus King Don Alphonso past his raigne in these home-bred and forraigne troubles, beeing but short. A little before hee died Don James of Arragon, Lord of Xerica, who had married Queene Marie, which had beene left by D. Sancho King of Majorca, who liuing dissolutly & vnchastly, was by this king sent home to the king of Naples her father.

The peace betwixt Arragon and Granado was sworne by him and confirmed at the castle of Valence, with Albuhacen, Abencomixe and Pascal Citera, Ambassadors for King Joseph Abenamet, vpon the like conditions, as with Castille. A little before his death, D. Leonor seeing herselfe mother of two sonnes, D. Fernand and D. John, who was yet in his swathing clothes, to be much hated (and not without cause) of the Infant D. Pedro, who should succede to the crowne, shee sought to put into the hands of the King of Castille, her brother (whose fauour shee affected) the castles of Verdegio and Sometio frontier places; but Don Pedro hauing alwaies an eye to his mother in lawes actions, especially at that time, the King beeing very ill disposed, prevented her, and put lodged from Barcelona, and seized vpon Fraga, from whence shee sent garrisons

Cattelans
burne and spoil the riuer
of Genoa.

Geneuiois
spoil the coast
of Cattelogne.

Mary of Naples Queene of Majorca vn-chast.

to places belonging to her children: In the meane time the King died in the city of Barcelona in the yeare of our Lord 1336. hauing reigned eight yeeres, and about three monethes: Being ready to die, he made the marriage of D. James his second sonne with Cecile daughter to the Earle of Cominiges: his body lies in the town of Lerida.

Death of D.
Alphonso the fourth King
of Arragon.

D. Pedro the fourth of that name, and the thirteenth of Arragon.

Don Pedro his sonne, whom he had by D. Theresa of Entenza Countesse of Vrgel, before that he assembled the Estates, or performed any ceremony, tooke vpon him the royal title, against all custome, affecting nothing more then to bee first reuenged of the Queene Donna Leonor his mother in law, whose places he seized on; and sent Ferry of Apilla, Governour to the Infant D. James after her, to bring her to Sarraçossa: but hearing of the Kings death, she tooke the way to Castile, by great iournies, and past Ebro at Fortose, then going by Turol and Albarasin, she came into her brothers country, being accompanied by the Bishop of Burgos, & D. Pedro of Xerica, carrying great store of treasure and iewels with her, which bread a warre betwixt these two Realmes of Castille and Arragon: D. Alphonso King of Castille, in fauour of his sister, deliuered Michel Perez Zapate, and other Arragonois out of prison, whom shee employed against the King D. Pedro, with other noblemen, whom shee had wonne.

D. Pedro the fourth of that name, was surnamed the ceremonious, for that in all his actions he was very slow, and spent the time in superfluous ceremonies. He was crowned at Sarraçossa, not without emulation of the Cattelans; but custome hath giuen this right to the city of Sarraçossa, that the Kings are crowned there, and no where else. Thither came not any Noblemen of Cattelogne, except D. Orthon of Moncade, and D. Raymond of Peralte. The King hauing taken and received the oth after the accustomed manner, retired to Lerida, to the Estates of Cattelogne: where hee disannulled all the donations made by the King his father, and the alienation of the reuenues, and despoiled D. Pedro of Xerica (who had accompanied the Queene Donna Leonor into Castille) of all his goods.

In the beginning of his raigne, died D. Frederic King of Sicile, beeing very old and consumed with the gout, who had held the realme with great troubles and warre the space of one and forty yeers, and six monethes, leauing his sonne D. Pedro to succede him, who was the fourth King of the race of Arragon, which heid Sicile. The King his father leauing many children, sonnes and daughters, by Queene Leonor his wife, by his will excluded the daughters from the succession of Sicile, ordaining that if in his posterity the males should faile, the Realme should bee vnitd to that of Arragon. Wee haue sayd before that D. Pedro King of Arragon, had promised to marry D. Jeanne the eldest daughter of Nauarre, but this marriage tooke no effect: for hee did more affect Mary the second daughter of King Philip, procuring him and Queene Jeanne to yeld therevnto: wherefore he sent for his Ambassadors into France, John Sanchez of Marojal, Chamberlaine of the great church of Sarraçossa, and Garcia Loris, a knight, who in his name concluded a marriage at Anet, with the Infant Mary, who was not yet twelue yeeres old: and it was accorded by the matrimoniall contract, that for want of heires male of King Philip, and Queene Jeanne his wife, Mary the second daughter should inherit the realme of Nauarre, and not the elder. The King and Queene of Nauarre, did binde themselves to giue her in dowry three score thousand Sanchots; and for assurance of this marriage, there were giuen in deposito by King Philip the castles of Arguedas, Saint Cara, Estacha, Murillo, Gallipenco, and Burgui; and for the King of Arragon, Sos, Jos Fayos, Borja, Saluatierra, Malon and Campdalijub, which places were put into the hands of certaine gentlemen, to be deliuered to any of these Princes, to whose preiudice the accord had beene broken. The King of Arragon assigned Tarracone, Iacca and Teruel, for his wiues ioynter: and it was agreed that the Princeesse should bee deliuered

Disposition of
the King D.
Frederics will.

Treaty of marriage betwixt
D. Pedro
King of Arra-
gon, and D.
Maria of Na-
uarre.

vnto

Cattelans
burne and spoil the river
of Genoa.

Earle of Foix, the first of that name, and daughter to Roger Bernard.

The Cattelans enemies irreconcilable to the Geneuois, and newly incensed by the losses which they had received by the army of Ayten d'Oris, who after that he had spoiled all that he found of the Arragonois faction upon the banks of Sardinia, retired into Corfica, to the Port of Boniface; they drew out of their Ports and Hauens of Cattelogne about forty Gallies, and thirty Foists and Brigantins, and directing their course towards the riuer of Genoa, they burnt all the Geneuois houles of pleasure, without respect of friend or foe: for the common weale of Genoa being then diuided, by reason of the faction of Guelphes and Ghibelins; the Ghibilins open enemies to the King of Arragon did for the most reside at Sauonne, and from thence made their sallies and enterprises; sometimes drawing some priuate men of the Guelphes faction, to runne vp on the Cattelans, by reason whereof this Cattelans army intreated them all after one manner.

Geneuois
spoil the coast
of Cattelogne.

During these wrackes, Luke of Fiesco one of the chiefe of the Guelphes faction, had begunne to treat with King D. Alphonso, by the meanes of Francis of Saint Eulalia, that if he would harken to a good accord with the Geneuois, holding the city of Genoa for friend, and forget all wrongs done, they would furnish him with fiftene gallies, and follow his standard against the Geneuois Ghibelins remayning at Sauonne, who had caused all the reuolts and troubles in Sardinia, wherewith the King was very well pleased; but the spoiles which the Cattelans army had made during the treaty in the riuer of Genoa intercepted all; so as these two factions of Genoa, being equally afflicted by a forraigne enemy, were the more willing to giue credit to the perswasions of Robert King of Naples, who reconciled them, and then they ioyned against the King of Arragon, to dispossesse him of the Island of Sardinia. The heads of the two factions, were the families of Oria for the Guelphes, and Spinola for the Ghibelins. Being thus incensed they runne along the coast of Cattelogne, with three score saile, where they tooke many ships and other spoiles, leauing lamentable spectacles in all places where they had landed. Thirteen of their gallies passing from thence into Sardinia, attempted the fort and Port of Caillerij in vaine, from whence they were repulst with losse. These warres at sea, betwixt the Cattelans and Geneuois might bee held equall, for they were the mightiest nations at sea in that age. All was full of difficultie, and ieaousie in the Island, notwithstanding that King Don Alphonso, by his bountie, aduancements, alliances and marriages contracted in his fauour, and at his instance betwixt the Noblemen and Cattelans, and Sardinians, or Geneuois (having charges or lands in the Island) had sought to draw them vnto him, and to make them friends, and affected to his party: yet he was in continuall warre, and was forced to keepe great garrisons in the Island, and many gallies at sea with so great charge, as all the reuenues of the Island of Sardinia did auail him little: being often constrained to importune the Pope, to discharge him of the tribute, which hee ought vnto the church of Rome, by reason of this chargeable conquest.

Mary of Naples Queen of Sicily and Aragon.

Thus King Don Alphonso past his raigne in these home-bred and forraigne troubles, being but short. A little before hee died Don James of Arragon, Lord of Xerica, who had married Queene Marie, which had bene left by D. Sancho King of Majorca, who liuing dissolutely & vnchastly, was by this king sent home to the king of Naples her father, using dissolutly & vnchastly, was by this king sent home to the king of Naples her father. The peace betwixt Arragon and Granado was tworne by him and confirmed at the castle of Valence, with Aluacen, Abencomix and Pascal Cirera, Ambassadors for King Joseph Abenamet, vpon the like conditions, as with Castille. A little before his death, D. Leonor seeing herselfe mother of two sonnes, D. Fernand and D. John, who was yet in his swathing clothes, to be much hated (and not without cause) of the Infant D. Pedro, who should succeed to the crowne, shee sought to put into the hands of the King of Castille, her brother (whose fauour shee affected) the castles of Verdegio and Somerio frontier places; but Don Pedro hauing alwaies an eye to his mother in lawes actions, especially at that time, the King being very ill disposed, preuented her, and put garrisons therein. The Queene without attending the King her husbands death, dislodged from Barcelona, and seized vpon Fraga, from whence shee sent garrisons to places belonging to her children. In the meane time the King died in the city of Barcelona in the yeere of our Lord 1336. hauing raigned eight yeeres, and about three monethes: Being ready to die, he made the marriage of D. James his second sonne with Cecile daughter to the Earle of Commaings: his body lies in the town of Lerida.

Death of
D. Alphonso the fourth King
of Arragon.

D. Pedro the fourth of that name, and the thirteenth of Arragon.

Don Pedro his sonne, whom he had by D. Theresa of Entenza Countesse of Vrgel, before that he assembled the Estates, or performed any ceremony, tooke vpon him the royal title, against all custome, affecting nothing more then to bee first reuenged of the Queene Donna Leonor his mother in law, whose places he seized on; and sent Ferry of Apilla, Godenot to the Infant D. James after her, to bring her to Sarragossa: but hearing of the Kings death, she tooke the way to Castile, by great iourneys, and past Ebro at Tortose, then going by Turol and Albarasin, she came into her brothers country, being accompanied by the Bishop of Burgos, & D. Pedro of Xerica, carrying great store of treasure and iewels with her, which bread a warre betwixt these two Realmes of Castille and Arragon. D. Alphonso King of Castille, in fauour of his sister, deliuered Michel Perez Zapate, and other Arragonois out of prison, whom she employed against the King D. Pedro, with other noblemen, whom she had wonne.

D. Pedro the fourth of that name; was surnamed the ceremonious, for that in all his actions he was very slow, and spent the time in superfluous ceremonies. He was crowned at Sarragossa, not without emulation of the Cattelans; but custome hath giuen this right to the city of Sarragossa, that the Kings are crowned there, and no where else. Thither came not any Noblemen of Cattelogne, except D. Orthon of Moncade, and D. Raymond of Peralte. The King hauing taken and receiued the oth after the accustomed manner, retired to Lerida, to the Estates of Cattelogne: where hee disannulled all the donations made by the King his father, and the alienation of the reuenues, and despoiled D. Pedro of Xerica (who had accompanied the Queene Donna Leonor into Castille) of all his goods.

Disposition of the King
D. Frederic
will.

In the beginning of his raigne, died D. Frederic King of Sicile, being very old and consumed with the goutte, who had held the realme with great troubles and warre the space of one and forty yeeres, and six monethes, leauing his sonne D. Pedro to succeed him, who was the fourth King of the race of Arragon, which he'd Sicile. The King his father leauing many children, sonnes and daughters, by Queene Leonor his wife, by his will excluded the daughters from the succession of Sicile, ordaining that if in his posterity the males should faile, the Realme should bee vnto that of Arragon. Wee haue sayd before that D. Pedro King of Arragon, had promised to marry D. Jeanne the eldest daughter of Nauarre, but this marriage tooke no effect: for hee did more affect Mary the second daughter of King Philip, procuring him and Queene Jeanne to yeeld therevnto: wherefore he sent for his Ambassadors into France, John Sanches of Marojal, Chamberlaine of the great church of Sarragossa, and Garcia Loris, a knight, who in his name concluded a marriage at Anet, with the Infant Mary, who was not yet twelue yeeres old: and it was accorded by the matrimonial contract, that for want of heires male of King Philip, and Queene Jeanne his wife, Mary the second daughter should inherit the realme of Nauarre, and not the elder. The King and Queene of Nauarre, did binde themselves to giue her in dowry three score thousand Sanchors; and for assurance of this marriage, there were giuen in deposito by King Philip the castles of Arguedas, Saint Cara, Estacha, Murillo, Gallipengo, and Burgui; and for the King of Arragon, Sos, los Fayos, Borja, Saluatierra, Malon and Campdalijub, which places were put into the hands of certaine gentlemen to be deliuered to any of these Princes, to whose preiudice the accord had bene broken. The King of Arragon assigned Tarracone, Iacca and Teruel, for his wiues ioynter: and it was agreed that the Princeesse should bee deliuered

Treaty of marriage
betwixt
D. Pedro
King of Arragon
and D.
Maria of Nauarre.

vnto

vnto the Inhabitants of Tudele, within a certaine time, and there kept by them; to bee A deliuered vnto her spouse, being full twelue yeeres old: and moreover, as at the reception of King Philip, it had bene capitulated that the first sonne borne of Queene Jeanne his wife, being come to the age of twenty yeeres, they should deliuer him the realme to gouerne, and that the Estates should bee bound to pay him a hundred thousand Sanchots; in like manner, if Donna Maria, the future Queene of Arragon, should come to the succession of the Realme of Nauarre, the Estates should bee bound to pay him the like sum of money: These were the principal Articles of this marriage, which was soone after accomplished.

An. 1337.

In the yeere of our Lord 1337, the King D. Pedro being come to Valence, he sent B Bernard of Villaragut, Arnaud Morra, and Azbert Caliana Ambassadors to the Pope, to doe him homage for the Islands of Corsica, and Sardinia: In this last the Estate was then somewhat quiet: for Arcon and John, Marquisses of Malespine, sonnes to Opis, Damian Barnabas, and Brancalon d'Orta, Earles of Donoratico, the townes left vnto the Pisans, demanteled, and without any munition, Peter Iuge of Arborea, with Marian and John his brethren, all holding lands, and being subiects in the Island, contended themselves in the friendship of the new King of Arragon, and did willingly acknowledge him for their superior. The rest of the family of Orta, for a wrong newly receiued from Raymond of Cardona, had bene forcibly drawne vnto it: who, notwithstanding by the intercession of the Pope, and the Kings of France, and Sicile, had bene receiued into fauour, and restored to their goods. Such was the Estate of Arragon, at D. Pedro coming to the crowne.

Castille.

Cruelly makes Kings to be feared, but without they lose the love of their subjects.

A Tyrant offended is neuer truly reconciled.

18 D. Alphonso King of Castille hauing made a peace with the Nauarrois, found himselfe freed of a great care, being ready to fall into new broiles by the praides of his owne subiects. This Prince thinking to raigne more securely, had taken a course of extreme severity, shewing himselfe cruel and treacherous to his Nobility, whereby hee was feared, but withall he lost the love and respect of his subiects: so as he was no longer freed from one danger, but hee fell into another, worse then the first: wherefore this distrust lying smothered in the heart of D. John Manuel, D. John Nuges de Lara, D. Pero Fernandes de Castro, D. John Alphonso of Albuquerque, and others, reconciled heretofore vnto the King by necessity, rather then of their owne free will, they held a Maxime, That a tyrant being offended, will at some time reuenge himselfe; and therefore they must not trust him, vpon any reconciliation, who to pacifie the troubles which had growne by his owne error, had made no difficulty to sacrifice (vpon the peoples spleene) his owne Mignons: degrading, and in the end murdering, and condemning them as traitors, after their death, yea the Princes of his owne blood, rapturing their goods and Estates, and depriving the lawfull heires: seeking to raigne ouer free men, and of generous spirits, as ouer beasts, intreating them as base and effeminate slaues, who might not speake their opinions freely, in matters of state and gouernment; of the which they were held dead members, and without feeling: wherefore if they were men, hauing understanding and reason, they should neuer forget the nature of D. Alphonso, who was proud, a contemner of all law, and treacherous: yea they proceeded so farre, as Don John Manuel withdrew himselfe from the subiection of King D. Alphonso, by protestation and publike act.

VVarre in Castile made by the rebels.

The Noblemen being thus ill affected to their King, they made a league (during the warre of Nauarre) with D. Alphonso King of Portugall, and did incense him to take armes for their defence, but their attempts had no better successfe then the precedent, for D. Alphonso King of Castille, meaning to preuent these disorders, gaue commandement throughout all the Prouinces of his Realme, to suppress all those that should take armes without his priuie and warrant, seeking by all meanes to keepe the Rebels diuided one from another. Moreover hauing some fealing, that cruelty was to violent a remedie for men that were nobly borne, hee sought by all milde and courteous meanes to diuide them, and to draw some of them vnto his seruice; the which he effected with D. Pero Fernandes de Castro, and D. John Alphonso of Albuquerque, who abandoned their companions.

And

A And not able to doe the like with the rest, he went in person to beseege D. John Nuges de Lara, being in Lerma, and gaue order that in other parts of the Realme they should leize vpon the houses and persons of other rebels, beseegeing and forcing them if they made resistance: and about al he sent against D. John Manuel, the orders of holy knights. The seege being before Lerma, there were many skirmishes and furious encounters: wherevpon the King of Portugall tooke occasion to declare himselfe, sending word vnto the King of Castile, that he should leaue D. John Nuges de Lara in peace, who (he sayd) was his vassall, whereof the King of Castile made no great esteeme, but continued his seege more violent then before: some authors say that the King of Castile, had a desire to repudiat his lawful wife Donna Maria, who was daughter to D. Alphonso King of Portugall, and to marry D. Leonora de Guzman, his concubine, and that it was the true cause of their hatred. D. John Manuel going secretly out of the castle of Garci Nuges, he came to Pegnafiell to fauor them that were beseeged within Lerma. In the meane time the tower of Lobaron and Soro were taken by the Kings men, where some Knights being taken, they were condemned and put to death.

VVarre made by Portugall against Castile.

B The King of Portugall thinking hee had iust cause to enter in hostil manner into Castile, hee beseeged Badajos: which seege continued, vntill that D. Pero Alphonso de Sosa a Portugall, was defeated, with his troupes, by the garrisons and people of Andalusie and Extremadura, neere vnto Villanoua of Barca Rotta, where many Portugals of account being slaine, the King was forced to raise his seege. They of Lerma seeing themselves batted with great obstinacy, beganne to distrust their owne strength, and were out of hope of any succours, wherefore they sought meanes how to let D. John Nuges de Lara escape by night; least hee should fall into the King of Castiles hands, who was much incensed, but all passages were so stoppt as hee could not possibly get out, so as in the end hee was forced to compound, yeelding himselfe, with the forts of Biscay, vpon condition that hee should haue his life saued, the which was promised him and kept. The townes of Lerma, Busto and Villafraanca in the mountaines of Oca, were demanteled, and the forts of Biscay deliuered into the Kings hands, for an assurance of Don John Nuges faith, hauing promised and sworne neuer to leaue his seruice, who followed the court at Vailledolit, and was afterwards much honored by the King, who besides other dignities made him chiefe standard-bearer of the Realme, and in the end he recovered al that had bene taken from him.

D D. John Manuel seeing this, retired himselfe into Arragon, where there were great broiles betwixt the King D. Pedro, and D. Leonora his mother in law, and her partisans: for D. Pedro of Xerica, whose lands the King had taken away, was in armes, with Diego Lopes of Haro, John Martin of Leua, Lope Diaz Rogio and other Commanders, being sent by the King of Castile, who assisted them with men, money and counsell: and to confesse of these quarrels, hee and his sister Donna Leonora met at Ayllon, whereas shee made great complaints of the King D. Pedro, who had chafed her out of Arragon, and spoiled both her and her children.

Arragon.

E The King of Castile desiring to bee reuenged of the King of Portugall, hee marched towards Badajos, where vpon the way hee was aduertised that Donna Leonora de Guzman was deliuered of a sonne, the which hee caused to bee named Don Tello, this was in the yeere of our Lord 1337. Donna Beatrix his aunte, Queene of Portugall, came vnto him at Badajos, intreating him for to pardon the Portugalles, and not to enter in hostile manner into the countrie, promising to finde meanes to reconcile all quarrels betwixt her sonne and him, and that all reasonable satisfaction should bee made.

Castile and Portugall.

An. 1337.

F Her prayers were reiected, and hee marched with his army towards the towne of Yelbes, where hee cut vp the Vignes and Oliue trees, and spoiled all there abouts, then hee past by Ronches and Beros, and returned to Chelles and Oliuencia, desiring much to encounter the Portugall army, the which hee knew to bee in field, but it marched another way. Don Alphonso Ioffres Tenorio, Admirall of Castile, defeated the Portugall army at sea, being commanded by Manuel Pecagno a Geneuois, and carried away the Admirall prisoner, yet not without losse of some of his ships and men.

King of Castile inuades Portugall with an army.

Xx

This

This was the first attempt of Castile against Portugal, the which was staied by the Kings sicknesse, whereupon he caused himself to be carried to Seuille, and put his army into garrisons: but being soone recovered, he gathered his forces againe together, and entred into the country of Algarbe (notwithstanding that the great master of Rhodes, by commission from Pope Benedict the eleventh, had exhorted him to desist from this war; and in like manner the Archbishop of Rheims, who was then Ambassador in Castile for the French King) he past the river of Guadiana, and came to Ayamont, which finding abandoned, he repast at Castromarin, the which was well fortified, so as he would not stay, but marcht towards Tabira, where he burnt the trees, and razed the farme houses thereabouts, and then he returned into Castile by Alcautín. Whilest he wasted the country of Algarbe in Portugal, the King of Portugal did the like in Galicia, and besieged Salutar. B ra, who although he tooke it not, yet hee spoiled a great country, and left it desolate, by reason of the cowardize of Don Pero Fernandes, who was Gouvernor in these parts, who would neuer shew himselfe to make head against the King of Portugall, for that hee had bene bread up a Page in his court: wherefore the Portugall army hauing spoiled the countrie of Galicia at their pleasures, they returned without any counter.

The Moores were ioyfull spectators of these warres betwixt the father in law and son, so as they did strictly entertaine the truce which they had made with the King of Castile: and for the better confirmation thereof, there came a great Ambassage into Castile, from Albohacen the Miralumin of Maroc, the chiefe whereof were two Alfaquins or Doctors of Mahumets sect, of great reputation, who presented vnto King D. Alphonso Barbery horses, rich swords, cloath of gold and of precious silke, Ostriges, Falcons and other beasts, who hauing receiued an honourable reward, and obtained confirmation of the truce, with reparation of some excess which had bene committed amongst the garrisons of the frontiers, they returned well satisfied, but soone after the Moore changed aduice and counsell, hearing (to their great grieve) that there had bene a truce concluded betwixt the two Kings of Castile and Portugal. This truce was treated and made by the dilligence of the great Maister of Rhodes, and the Archbishop of Rheims Ambassador for France, it was concluded with the King of Castile in the towne of Merida, about the end of the yeere 1337. or in the beginning of the next.

Death of Ximenes de Luna Archbishop of Toledo.

College of Clement at Bologna.

During this war betwixt Castile and Portugal, D. Ximenes de Luna Archbishop of Toledo died, in whose place the Chapter did choosethrough the Kings fauour, who had written D. Gil Aluares of Cuenca, otherwise called D. Gil Carrillo of Albornoza counsellor of Estaté to King D. Alphonso, and Archdeacon of Calatraua, in the same church, a man of great vertue amongst the Spaniards, who for his wisdom and iudgement, did in time merit to be a Cardinal of Rome, with the title of Saint Clement, Bishop of Sabina, and Apostolike Legat in Italy, the Romaine Sea being then resident in Auignon. During which dignity he did many things for the good of the church: and amongst other monuments and testimonies which remaine of him at this day, there is the Colledge of Saint Clement in the city of Bologna, the which they commonly call the Colledge of Spaine, the which was built by the executors of this Prelat, who did so appoint it. It hath about three thousand ducats of rent, with the which there are thirty students entertained, whereof twenty be Lawiers, six Diuins and foure Phisitions, besides foure Chaplains, all Spaniards, except one who may be a Portugal. The Rector of this Colledge hath ciuill and criminal iurisdiction, and is not subiect to the Legat, nor to any other Magistrat of the city, the Colledge enioying as ample preuiledges as any knights or gentlemen there. About the end of the yeere 1337. was founded the towne of Alegria of Dulanci, two Leagues from Victoria, in the Prouince of Alaua, of many villages, thereabout, the which obtained from the King the preuiledges, and lawes of the Realme, whereby the Inhabitants should gouerne themselves, and market euery Monday, with liberty to chooseth their owne Iudges.

In the yeere of our Lord 1338. D. Pedro King of Arragon, married D. Maria, second daughter to King Philip, and to Queene lean of Nauar, in the towne of Alagon, the Bishop of Chalons doing the ceremony, hauing accompanied the Queen-mother to the

A Bride, who came alone to this marriage, without her husband Philip, being ingaged in those cruel and bloody warres betwixt the French and English, contending for the crowne of France. Pope Benedict the eleventh, then reigning, dispensed with the married couple, for the bond of consanguinity, which was betwixt them, at the request of Philip of Valois, the French King: from Alagon the new Queene was conducted to Sarraçossa, whereas the feast and pompe was ended, for the which they had prepared long before in that citie, being chosen for the celebration of this marriage: but the indisposition of D. Jeanne Queene of Nauarre, was the cause that they were married at Alagon.

Marriage betwixt D. Pedro King of Arragon and D. Mary the younger of Nauar.

19. The newes of a truce betwixt the Kings of Castile and Portugal, being vnder-

B stood at Granada, and from thence sent to Maroc, at such time as King Albohacen had surmounted all warres and difficulties in Affrike, these Moorish Kings had a desire to fill Spaine with fire and murder, being thrust on by two contrary passions, the one of feare, to be first set vpon by the King of Castile, who was now freed from his intestine wars: the other of hope, that their armes should be as successful against the Christians of Europe, as they had bene against the barbarous Affricans: for King Albohacen hauing not long before called troupes out of Spaine, which had followed Abomelic his sonne, lying then idle on this side the seas, whereas all was quiet: and being assisted by the forces of Granada, sent into Affrike by King Ioseph, hee had lately depriued Boraxen, who reigned in Tremessen, both of Kingdome and life, and had vnited vnto his crowne

C the Realme of Sojumenca: so as being growne as haughty in courage, as powerful in Siegneuries and subiects, he had no lesse conceptions, then to restore the ancient glorie of the Miraluminis his Predecessors in Spaine, and wholly to expell the Christians. Besides the respect of religion did much incourage him, holding it not onely honourable, but also conscientious, to aduance Mahumets sect by armes, according to his Doctrine: wherefore hauing by the aduice of his Alfaquins and Alcaides concluded this warre, hee beganne to giue order that his troupes should march towards the Straight, and passe by little and little to Algezire, and other places of Granada, making a Magazin for victuals, armes, engins and other munition for the warre, at Tanger; whereof the Christians Princes were presently aduertised by their Gouvernors of forts vpon that frontier, Expedition of Moores into Spaine.

D and of King Abomelic passage and returne into Spaine, and of the preparations which both he and Ioseph King of Granada made: infallible arguments that they would soone make open warres, as it happened in the beginning of the yeere 1338. D. Alphonso King of Castile seeing this burthen ready to fall vpon him, fore cast all meanes how to beare it: hee made Orders and taxes vpon victuals, and cut off the Spaniards superfluities in apparels and other pompes: hee sent his sea-army into the Straights, to stop the Moores passage: hee obtained from Pope Benedict pardons and Indulgences for all those that should contribute to this warre: hee assigned places for the souldiers Rendez vous: hee leauied footmen, artisans and pioners: and in generall hee provided for

E all things which hee thought necessarie for the warres: but about all hee pacified the troubles growne betwixt D. Pedro King of Arragon, and Donna Leonora his Mother in law. In all which busineses, the Archbishop of Rheims, Ambassador for France in Castile, laboured with great affection, and to the end there should be nothing defectiue for the wel gouerning of the common weale, the Prelats and Masters of the Orders made diligent search among them that were their suffragans and dependants: so as D. Ruiz Perez Maister of the Order of Alcantara was depoled by D. John Nugnes maister of Calatraua, who had iurisdiction ouer him, and power to doe it. Yet amidst all these Cares, the King did not forget the loue of D. Leonora of Guzman, whose brother called Don Alphonso Melendez of Guzman, was by him made maister of the Order of the holy knights of Saint Iames. The yeere 1339. being come, hee went towards Seuille, where

An. 1339.

F was the Rendez vous, for all his troupes, both horse and foote, so as hauing in few daies gathered together a great and well ordred army, hee entred the territories of Antequera & Archidona, the which he spoiled, running vp to Ronda, from whence he was forced to retire to Seuille for want of victuals, where he spent the rest of the spring to distribute the forts & places vpon the frontiers vnto capitaines, making D. Gonzales Nagne, or as others say,

Moors raised from the siege of Silos.

Moors defeated.

Abomelic a Moorish King
slaine.

Castile.

Troubles by the report of a woman.

say, Martinez Maister of Alcantara (newly elect) Gouvernor and his Lieutenant generall there, and hee himselfe came to Madrid. The Moores incensed at this entry which the Christian army had made into their country, went to field by two seuerall waies, the Infant Abomelic (who had great numbers of light horse) by Medina Sidonia, whose territory he spoiled, and Joseph King of Granado entred by Silos, which place belonging vnto the knights of Saint Iames and well manned, hee beseegeed, and batted furiously, but it was not onely brauely defended by the garrison but their campe was assaulted by the Castilian army, and they forced to dislodge by D. Alphonso Melendez de Guzman who was the Leader, not without great dishonor and losse to the King of the Moores: who at the same time was stript of the victuals of his army, which he caused to bee conducted to Priegos, by the Gouvernor D. Gonzalo Martinez, who carried the prey to Alcaudene.
The gallies of Castille being ioyned to them of Arragon, held King Abomelic as it were beseegeed in Algezire, lying in the straight; taking from him all hope of succours, either of men or victuals from Affrike: whereupon the Moores being aduertised that in Le-puxa was one of the store-houses for the Christian army, thought they might well surprise it: whereupon they sent about one thousand five hundred horse among the Olive trees of Xeres (where they tooke a great booty) but they found that D. Fernand Puerto Cartero, gouernor of Tariffe, was entred a little before with a good number of souldiers; wherefore their desaigne being disappointed, they turned towards Arcos, where they spoiled, and carried away great store of cattaile, whereof the Inhabitants within Seulle being aduertised, they went with their city standard to field, and being ioyned to the Maister of Alcantara, to D. Aluar Perez of Guzman, to D. Pero Ponce of Leon (who went out of Arcos) and others, they came and incourted these forragers vnlooked for, whom they charged so furiously, as they put them to rout, and recouered all the prey.
King Abomelic continuing the spoile about Xeres, marcht with three thousand and five hundred horse which he had reserved, and a great number of foot towards Alcala de los Ganzules, and beseegeed it, being ignorant of the defeat of his men. The victorious Christians, hauing ioyned with Fernand Gonzales d' Aguilar, who had some horse, and being also fortified by them of Eccia, marcht that way, and charged this army of Moores with such fury, as they put them to flight, and chasing and killing them they pursued them far, his campe remayning in great confusion and disorder. King Abomelic being hastely pursued, had no meanes to get to horse, but fell amongst the footmen, who fled and were hardly followed: so as in the end, not to be knowne, hee cast himselfe amongst those which lay vpon the ground slaine or wounded, where a Christian souldiar passing by and not knowing him thrust him through with his sword, whereof hee died soone after. The Christians (as some write were not above 2000. horse, and two thousand five hundred foote; who without any great losse, slue ten thousand Moores in this surprize and pursute: they spoiled their campe, and tooke their baggage which was great, and so returned ioyfully to Xeres. The Kings body was afterwards found, neere vnto a brooke whether he had crept (as it was likely) to quench the burning thirst, which doth commonly afflicke such as are wounded, hauing lost much blood. King Albohacen his father being aduertised of this pittifull accident, was inflamed with wrath, and desire of reueng, make-ing al possible speed to passe into Spaine.

Whilest that hee prepares himselfe, there fell out a great disorder in Andalusia, by the meanes of D. Leonora of Guzman. This woman who gouerned the King, made reports & accused D. Gonzal Nugnes Maister of Alcantara, of certaine matters, the which did much incense the King; wherefore being come to Madrid, hee sent to the Maister to come presently vnto him. D. Gonzal who was fully aduertised why hee was sent for, and knowing how dangerous the King was to them hee did not like, obeyed not: but thrust on by distrust, hee left his seruice, and debauching many of his knights, hee acquainted himselfe with the Moores, and beganne to make practises in Granado. The King bee-ing aduertised of his reuolt, returned sodainely, and had meanes (before hee could dislodge) to beseege him in a towne called Valence, belonging to the Order of Alcantara, whereas D. Gonzale defended himselfe vnto the end, and would neuer harken to any words or promises whatsoever.

In

A In the end, not able to hold it any longer, hee offered to yeeld vnto the Kings mercy, but it was too late: for the place was forced, and he taken and put to death and his body condemned and burnt as a Traitor by the Kings sentence. Such as had followed his party, and held other places yeelded. A man in truth worthy of a more honorable death, who besides many generous acts, and worthy seruices done vnto the crowne of Castille, had bene in the two aboue mentioned victories and adorned the Temples of the towne where he was forced, with the standards and ensignes hee had taken from the Moores. D. Nugno Chamigo was chosen in his place.

Jeffrey Giralbert Admiral of Arragon, who kept the Straight with the gallies of Arra-gon, being landed vpon the shoare nere to Algezire, had an encounter with the Moores, by whom he was vanquished, and slaine with an arrow, whereupon the army returned into Arragon, that of Castille remayning at the passage, the which consisted onely of three and thirtie gallies, and some few ships, to weake a force to stoppe the Moores passage out of Affrike: so as about three thousand Genets past presently into Algezire, without any let, and beganne to ouerrunne the country about Arcos, Xeres and Medina Sidonia, gathering together a great prey: but thinking to put it into Algezire, they were forced to leaue it by the way, being charged by the horsemen which went out of Xeres, who slue many vpon the place, amongst which was Bontai, a famous captain of the Moores.

King Albohacen had caused a great number of vessels of all sorts to be made ready, both in the ports of Spaine and Affrike, meaning to carry into Spaine one of the greatest armies that euer went out of Affrike, to stop whose passage, King Alphonso was ill provided:
and as he was distrustfull, and of a strange humour, and many times vniust vnto his best seruants, hee complained of Don Alphonso Ioffrey Tenorio his Admiral, saying that hee slept, and suffered the Moores to passe and repasse at their pleasure, the which was not true: for the Admirall did his duty with those few Gallies hee had, and did often rake foists and other vessels which did houer about those coastes, and ships laden with victuals which came out of Affrike into Spaine: namely from Centa to Al-gezire, the which notwithstanding did not satisfie the King, who would exact some great effect of necessity: wherefore hee thrust the Admirall into despair, the which was verie preiudiciall to that warre.

King Albohacen being come to Ceuta in the beginning of the yeere of our Lord 1340. and hauing there gathered together to the number of three score and ten Gallies, and other vessels to passe his horsemen, victuals, armes, engines and other equipage of warre, neere to a hundred and foure score sailes, as wel of his owne, as of the Kings of Granado, hee went with this mighty army towards Spaine, where it was easie to land, finding no resistance, whereat King D. Alphonso, who was at Seulle was much incensed, blaming his Admiral incessantly of cowardise and treachery, the which hee tooke so greuously, as hee resolved rashly to goe and charge the Moores at what price soeuer, and hauing drawne those few Gallies and Ships hee had out of Saint Lucar, into the open sea, hee presented himselfe before Algezire, prouoking the enemy to batraile, who going out of Algezire and Gibraltar, farre more in number then the Christian Gallies, there was a fierce and cruel batraile, the end whereof was the whole losse of the Castillan army, whereof there were but five gallies saued, the which recouered the neere port of Tariffe, and some few ships, which escaped by fauour of the winde and current, sailing towards Carthagea. The Admirall was slaine in this conflict, saying, that the King should know he was neither Coward nor Traitor: but it was a rash attempt in him, to hazard so small a flete against so great an armie, who should haue considered, that by the losse of a battaile hee gaue the whole commande of the sea vnto the enemy.
Thus this Admirall thinking to preserve his honor, which hee might well haue warranted by the reasons of warre, which disallow all great hazards, but in extremity, hee did more blemish it. This losse which happened to Don Alphonso King of Castille, partly by his owne bitternesse, and vniust rigour to his faithfull seruant, did much afflicke him; so as hee was forced to seeke speedie meanes to repaire so great a ruine: for the Moores army insolent of this victory, and knowing that there were no fortres at sea able to

Moores:

Loyalty ill rewarded makes a good seruant despise.

Defeat of the Castilian army and death of the Admirall.

X x 3

make

make head against them, vaunted that they would beseege Seuille: wherefore the King A of Castile was forced to conuert the truce which hee had made with the King of Portugall to a peace, and to consent that D. Constance Manuel should marry with Don Pedro Infant of Portugall, whose wife D. Blanche beeing fallne into a Palsey, was put away by him. By meanes of this peace, and at the instance of the Queene Donna Maria, daughter to the King of Portugal, hee promised to lend all his shippes of warre to the King of Castile, the which stayied not long before they arriued at Seuille, when as the King gaue order to rigge out fifteene gallies of his owne, and twelue ships, of the which hee gaue the charge vnto Don Alphonso Ortiz Calderon, Prior of Saint Iohn.

Great preparation of war made by King Alboacen against Spaine.

In the meane time King Alboacen army past, the Moores Gallies and Ships neuer ceasing for a long time, to transport horse and foote, victualles and munition for B the warre, which they had prepared, the which was as great and fearefull as any had beene seene, for they write in their Histories that this Arabian King had gathered together all the forces hee could from the shoare of the Westerne Atlantike sea, vnto Egypt, hauing by the conquest of the Realmes of Tremessen and Sojumen, so extended the bounds of his Empire as there was not any King or Potentat in all the length of Affrike, which was not his subiect, or strictly allied vnto him: so as the Spanish authors say, that hee brought into Spaine aboute seuen thousand horse; and foure hundred thousand foote, the Arabians and Affricans comming from all part vpon the newes of this great expedition, by the preachings and perswasions of the Alfas, Doctors and Priests of their law, who were sent through out all the regions of Affrike, by King Alboacen, to the end that such, as spoile and gaine (the common end C of warre) could not moue, might bee perswaded to take armes for religious cause. This great multitude of Infidels, were neere fise monthes in passing, hauing at this passage, besides the Gallies of Maroc and Granado, shofe of the Kings of Tunes and Bugie, whereof hee of Tunes was father in law to Alboacen, and their common landings were Algezire and Gibraltar.

It behooued King D. Alphonso to studie how hee should resist so great a power, the which did wonderfully trouble him: yet beeing a Prince of a great courage, hee provided for many things speedely; which were of great importance for the warre. And doubting that the Moores first attempt would bee against Tariffe, hee manned it with a good garrison of old souldiars, and gaue the charge thereof to John Alphonso of Benauides, furnishing the place with all things necessarie to maintaine a seege: where- in hee was not deceiued, for it was presently inuested by the enemy, King Alboacen beeing in person in the armie. Experience hath often taught, that multitudes giue no victory; for besides that God will therein shew a testimony, that it is hee alone, without the force of mans arme, which rayseth and pulles downe Kingdomes and states; there are so many naturall and humaine reasons, which doe concurre with this point of religion, as there is no cause to call it in question. The confusion, disorder, disobedience, mutinies, hunger, diseases, the infinit carriages and lets of baggage, iealousies betwix commanders, and diuersity of nations, the negligence and rash confidence which Kings ground vpon their great numbers of men, are inseparable mischeefes to great armies, the which haue most commonly ruined them, but haue alwaies made them vnprofitable and a burthen, to them that haue lead them. So it happened to King Alboacen in this voiage: for as soone as hee had landed this infinite multitude of Arabians and other Nations, presuming that there was not any Christian in Spaine, that would dare to present himselfe before so great a power, and that hee should presently see himselfe Maister of all the townes of Andalusia: besides hee thought hee had no cause to feare any impeachment at sea, the two armies of Castile and Arragon hauing beene defeated: so as all small vessels of burthen might passe safely from Spaine to Affrike, and furnish his campe with victuals, if hee should haue any neede, wherevpon hee presently disarmed all his Gallies, and drew them into the Ports, hauing no other thought but to make warre by land, but it fell out otherwise: for there was not any pettie place vpon the frontiers of Andalusia but held good: so as being forced to attend his provisions for so great an army from Affrike, for that the countrie of Granado could

Armies vnprofitable by their too great multitudes.

A could not supply it, he found himselfe (being at the seege of Tariffe) in great want of victuals, being caue for the gallies of Castile and Portugal, to spoile all passengers which brought munition from the ports of Affricke into Spaine: wherefore he repented himself much of this enterprife, and would gladly haue found some meanes to haue retired honorably.

At that time Don John Martinez de Leyua arriued at Seuille, returning from Pope Benedict who kept at Auignon: from whom he brought pardons and full indulgences, to such as should crosse themselves for this warre against the Infidels, or otherwise employ them selves or their goods for the aduancement thereof, with an especiall charge and commission to Don Gil Carillo of Alborno, Arch-bishop of Toledo, to publish this Croisado,

B making him to that end Legate of the Apostolike sea. The army before Tariffe being oppressed with famine, King Alboacen gaue Don John Alphonso of Benauides, the Gouvernor, to vnderstand, that he had some matters to treat of with him for the good of the king his master, and therefore he should send some vnto him, to conferre with him. The Gouverneur hauing receiued hostages, sent two Gentlemen vnto him: but beeing aduertised at the same instant that the gallies of Castile and Portugal had beene all cait away by tempest vpon the coast, so as the sea beeing free, victuals began to come abundantly from Affricke vnto the campe: when as these Knights came vnto King Alboacen, hee sayd nothing of consequence vnto them, but was desirous againe to continue the warre, sending backe these messengers, and retiring his hostages. Then did they make a furious batterie, with all kinds of engines vsuall in those times, against the which the beseegeed rampared themselves, and made a gallant defence. King D. Alphonso hauing called to Seuille, the Noblemen of his Councell, and the chiefe men among his subiects, sitting in his royall throne with great maiestie, holding in his right hand the sword, wherewith hee had beene girt in Saint James Church of Galicia, when he was made Knight, and in his left hand the Crowne, wherewith he had beene crowned in the cittie of Bourgos: he spake grauely vnto them of the present estate of his affaires, and the danger wherein the Christian realms of Spaine then were, by the importune malice, and impiety of the Arabians, their ancient enemies, coniuied together at that time from the East vnto the West, to glut their implacable thirst with the blood of Spaniards: against whole forces, without all doubt, in

C time, Spaine should not be able to resist, many of their best men hauing beene consumed by the factions and diuisions which had raigned among them, whereby Spaine had wasted her selfe by her owne armes, and withall the ill successe of his armies at sea, brought twice to nothing: so as for so dangerous a mischiefe, there was need of an extraordinarie remedie, the honour of the name of Christians, the Crowne of Castile, and their liberties, liues, and goods, beeing then in question: wherein he had need of good and faithfull Councell, and for that cause had called them together, praying God to put into their hearts and vnderstandings, what was fit for the honor and increase of his Crowne, and the Common-weale. Wherevpon many different opinions hauing beene propounded, all in the end concluded, that they must rayse the seege from before Tariffe: for the effecting whereof they must find meanes to ioine the forces of Portugall, Arragon and Castile together, for the which they began presently to giue order. The Queene of Castile got a promise from Don Alphonso King of Portugall her father, to ayde the king her husband with all his forces, wherevpon there was an interview of the two kings, at Iruemegna, a towne in Portugall.

The king of Castile sent to encourage them of Tariffe, giuing them hope of speedie succours: forbidding them exprefly not to fall forth vpon the enemy, for that the losse of one man did more import them, then an hundred to King Alboacen: he obtained a new army at sea from the king of Arragon, (the which was commanded by the Prior of Saint John, who had escaped in the tempest) to ioine with those few gallies which he had yet left: and presently after the king of Portugall came in person to Seuille, beeing accompanied with all the flower of his Nobility, and the best souldiers of his country. They leaued men in all parts of Spaine both foot and horse, which enrolled themselves for this religious warre, but especially out of Biscay, Alaua, and Guipuscoa, which bee the best footmen of Spaine, the which were commanded by Don Pero Nunez de Guzman, their Lord

D. Alphonso speech to his Councell.

See in the passage of the river of Salado

Don John Nuygues de Lara, being employed in the conduct of the horse. To conclude, A their indeavours were such, as within few dayes there were mustred about Seuille 25000. foote, and 14000. horse, with which forces the two kings of Castile and Portugal, resolved to offer battell vnto the enemy which was before Tariffe, being farre more mighty then they, hauing besides the great number of horse and foote which he brought out of Affricke, ioyned vnto him the forces of Granado, the which consisted of 7000. horse, and a great multitude of foot. Assoone as the Christian army began to march, Alboacen king of Maroc, and Joseph king of Granado, sent Albohamar Infant of Maroc with 2000. horse to keepe the passage of the riuer of Salado, which runnes betwixt Pegna du Cerf, and Tariffe, the which were defeated by a thousand horse and 4000. foot, which the King of Castile had sent to put themselves into Tariffe, the which they effected happily, after this exploit, through fauour of the night, the Moorish kings hauing already raised their siege, burnt their engines of batterie, and retired their army into a place of aduantage, called Al-faneque. These troupes were the bands of D. Henry and D. Tello, children aduowed of Castile, the which were led by wife and expert Captaines.

The day after this defeat the two armies presented themselves vpon the bankes of the riuer of Salado, which the Christians meant to passe, and so they did, but with great resistance and difficultie: yet Gonsalo Ruis de la Vega, and his brother Garcilaso, who marched in the head of the army, assured the passage for the rest, repulsing the Moors, who defended it valiantly, when as the Christians were all past without breaking, they found the great squadrons of the Moores in Order, ready to fight, so as in an instant they ioyned, and were so mingled, as the kings themselves on either side, sparing not their owne persons, and performing the duties as well of souldiers, as of Generals of armies, were many times found in danger: and their obstinacie was so great in the fight, as the Arch-bishop of Toledo was faine (partly by intreaties, and partly by force) to draw the king of Castile out of the presse, where he had the fore-part of his saddle shot through with an arrow: a dangerous blow, if it had lighted a little higher, the which might haue made the kingdomes of Spaine a prey vnto the Moors, by the losse of a battell, which doth commonly follow the death of the Generall. But God disposed otherwise, according to his mercy to the Christians: for the Moores being rather hindered then helped by their multitudes, gaue way and fled, where as the slaughter was so great, as the number of the dead (as Authors write) is not credible, but howsoeuer, the Christians had an absolute victorie, who might haue slaine more, and it may be haue extinguished the name of Moores in Spaine, if they had pursued the disordered enemies, who fled one ouer another, and not busied themselves at the spoyle, especially the footmen. The camp remayning free to the Christians, as they gathered the spoyle together, there were found among the dead, one of the king of Marocs wiues, called Fatima, daughter to the king of Tunes, of the race of the Almohades, and three other Ladies. Among the prisoners Albohamar sonne to king Alboacen, and his nephewes Aboham and Alboali, it may be children to Alboali, who had beene king of Sojumenca, two of the kings daughters, and other Moores of noate. The Kings of Maroc and Granado escaped by flight, and retired to diuers places. Alboacen apprehending, that by this defeat his reputation and honour would bee much blemished, and thereby the fidelitie of his subiects shaken, fearing least a sonne of his called Abderamen, whom he had left at Maroc, should seaze vpon the kingdome, he past the same night to Ceuta.

This battell wonne by the Christians the eight and twentieth of October, in the yeare 1340. is rightly paralleled to that of Muradal or Tholoufa, by the which the Moores lost the command of Spaine, some 128. yeares before: for thereby the great desires of the king of Maroc were disappointed, hauing promised vnto himselfe the conquest of all Spaine, so as after that time the warre grew more easie and light. This victorie was honoured and renowned by many religious and ciuill acts among the Spaniards: for besides that during the conflict, the name of Saint James, (who was held Patron and Protektor of Spaine) did sound (as they say) in the ayre, and that Don Alphonso Gonsales Perreyra, Prior of S. John, or of Crato in Portugal, had carried with him a peece or fragment of the true Crosse, and many other such perswasions and inducements put

Superstitious
acknowledgements of great a victory

A put in practise (according to the doctrine of those times) in the campe, and in all other places whether that newes came, thanks were giuen vnto God for so great a grace, and great demonstrations of ioy made throughout all the townes. D. Alphonso King of Castile, the day after the battell entred into Tariffe, and caused the breaches to bee repayed, commending and rewarding the Captaines and souldiers which had carried themselves valiantly in the siege. Hauing afterwards viewed the enemies spoiles, the king of Castile did distribute it, according to euery mans merits.

The king of Portugal would not haue any thing, but certaine furnitures and caparasons for horses, and swords richly wrought after the Moreisco fashion: but the King of Castile his sonne-in-law gaue him a prisoner, a Moore of the bloud royall, one of the B sonnes of Alboali, who had beene king of Sojumenca. Thus the two kings, father-in-law, and sonne-in-law, parted, very well satisfied one of another. To acknowledge the grace which God had done vnto the Christians, by so great a victorie, the king of Castile took this course, he sent John Martines de Leyua, to Pope Benedict, then residing at Auignon, with his royall Standard, which had beene carried in the battell, accompanied with foure and twenty of the chiefe Ensignes which he had taken from the Moores, the which were borne by so many Moores. Moreouer, he sent him an hundred horse richly appointed, euery one hauing a sword and a target hanging at his saddle pommel, and were led by so many Moores. With these horses he sent his owne, on the which hee was mounted the day of the battell, couered with the royall armes of Castile and Leon: and moreouer, many rich Jewels, and other singularities, which things were presented vnto the Pope with great ceremony and pompe, and receiued with no lesse honour and solemnity by the Pope and Cardinals. And the more to honour this act, the Pope the same day did sing a pontificall Masse, and did preach, much commending the king of Castile, and to reward him, he powred forth his spirituall treasures, granting him store of Indulgences, with the which John Martines de Leyua returned, being well recompenced.

Some Authors write, that the victuallers, carters, pioners, merchants, Lackies, and others of base quality in the Christians campe, falling vpon the baggage, whilst the souldiers were in fight, had taken great spoiles of gold, siluer, and other riches, and that the king being aduertised thereof, was perswaded not to suffer men, which had not beene in the battell, nor aduentured their liues, to enioy the booties which were due vnto souldiers: wherefore meaning to follow this aduice, he forced many to bring backe that which they had taken: but the greater number escaped, who fearing to be disposed of that which they had gotten, being all their fortunes, left Castile, and went into Nauarre, Arragon, France and other countries, with such store of double duckets, as the price of gold was fallen a sixt part, and all merchandize much risen.

20 In this warre were furnished twenty gallies of Cattelogne, by Don Pedro king of Arragon, and eight by him of Majorca. The King Don Pedro was not there in person, neither did he send any forces by land, by reason of his owne affaires and domestick desires, which he did plot to the preiudice of his subiect. A violent Prince, proud, disdainfull, and full of reuenge. Don James King of Majorca his cousin and brother-in-law, was forced in the city of Barcelona, the yeare before the defeat of the Moores at Salado, to do him homage for the Ilands and other Segneuries which he held vpon the Mayne, as to his Soueraigne, causing him to kneele before him, whereupon this Prince retired him selfe in a great rage to Perpignan: from whence soone after he was forced to returne to Court, and to accompany the king Don Pedro vnto Auignon, whither he went to visit the Pope, where it happened that these Kings walking through the towne together, a seruant of the King of Majorcas, doing some seruice vnto his master indifferently, hee did so moue the King Don Pedro, as he was ready to draw his sword, and to strike the king of Majorca himselfe, which was the beginning of their quarrels, the which continued long and violent.

The arriuall and entrie of the king Don Pedro into Auignon, was very honorable, for at the passage of the riuer of Durance, he was met and receiued by two and twenty Cardinals, and entred with the king of Majorca into the towne, betwixt Cardinall Neapoleon of Vrsins, and he of Cominges: but the next day (after he had shewed his spleene against his

Qualities of
the King D.
Pedro.

his brother in law, it may be moued with some sower answer which the Pope had giuen him he retired to Villa-noua discontented. The chiefe man which then serued him in his most important affaires, was Nicholas of Ionuille; a French man, who was Earle of Terra-noua in the Kingdome of Naples, and had married Marguerite daughter to the Admirall Roger of Loria. This man was advanced in the place of D. Pedro Earle of Ribagorça, the Kings vnkle, who was giuen more to a contemplatiue life, then to worldly affaires: for the which notwithstanding he had had long and bitter iarres with D. Pedro de Luna, Archbishop of Sarraçossa, who was desirous to gouerne, and to mannage the affaires of the Realme: but their contention had bene ended by the aduancement of this third, and they were reconciled at the marriage of D. Lope de Luna, the sonne of Artail, and nephew to the Archbishop, and D. Violant the Kings aunt, and sister to the Earle of Ribagorça, who was widow to Philip Despote of Romania, and sonne to Philip Prince of Tarrenum, the which were celebrated at Lerida, and from whence they went to Auignon. The King D. Pedro being returned from this voyage, hee commenced a criminall Proceesse against the King of Maiorca, for that he caused money to be coyned in the Towne of Perpignan, and he caused him to bee cited to appeare before the Estates then assembled at Barcelona, not much troubling himselfe that the French king (carrying himselfe as Soueraigne of Montpellier, and other lands belonging to the King of Maiorca, on this side the Pyrennees, had seized vpon the forts and castles of all these places. The King of Maiorca not appearing, his totall ruine was resolved by the King, the which followed as we shall hereafter shew.

State of Sardinia.

At that time such was the Estate of Sardinia: Caillery, Aquafredda, Iosofaguarda, Quirro, Castelorgueilleux, Gallicelli, Castel Pedresio, Faba Ofolia, Sasserri, and la Ballide of Sorria, were held by Arragon garrisons: Marian Iudge of Arborea, had bene newly made Earle of Gothian by the king, John Marquis of Malepine, and the Earles of Donoratico were friends to the kings of Arragon: but in Italy the Pisans, the Genouois, and with them Luguin Vicount, (who then ruled at Milan) had made a league, and conspired to chase the Arragonois out of Sardinia: where they also had their partisans and intelligences: for besides other factions, the family of Doria was then divided into foure factions. These things did trouble the king D. Pedro amidst his enterprises, at such time as hee sought the ruine of D. James King of Maiorca, and when hee was solicited by Hugh Corting, Petra Allerata, and Loupe Cimerca, chiefe men of the Iland of Corsica, to vndertake the conquest thereof, whereof the Bishop of Aleria was the minister and ambassadour: and euen then when it was most needful to haue sent his gallies to the Streight, in fauor of the k. of Castile, and for the common interest of all the Christian Princes of Spaine.

Portugal.

Before the yeare 1340. past, the Infant D. Pedro of Portugall had a sonne by his new spouse D. Constance Manuel, whome he had married at Eboræ, with a dowrie of 300000. dublons, and many rich iewels, and this Infant was named D. Fernand or Ferdinand, who was king of Portugall after the Grandfather and father.

Castile.

21 In the yeare 1341. D. Alphonso king of Castile hauing called a Parliament of all his Realmes at Herrena in Extremadura, there were great summes of mony giuen him, his subiects seeing that he employed it profitably, for the defence and increase of the crowne: from thence he came to Madrid, where he gaue Order for all that was necessarie for the warre, and appointed the Rendez-vous for his troupes at Cordoua, from whence he sent them of Seuille and Cordoua to make incursions, attending the rest of his forces. he made a shew to go to Malaga, the which put the Moores into great feare: but hee marched to Alcala of Bencayde, vpon the arriual of those troupes which he expected, the which he found vnfurnished, for the king of Granada did confidently beleue, that he would haue led his armie to Malaga: This place after some weake resistance yielded, vpon condition that the Inhabitants should haue their liues saued: Moslin was taken by the diligence of D. Alphonso Fernandez Cornet. There was some ouerture of a truce made in the behalfe of the king of Granada, but without any conclusion, for that the king of Castile would not haue king Abouac comprehended: Priegos was also taken by composition: the like happened to Sarraçubey, being prest by Martin Fernandez Puerto Carrero. D. Alphonso Melendez de Guzman, master of S. James, did also win the cattell of Benamexir: other places, as Rute, and

A and the tower of Matrera were also forced: then winter approaching, the king left good garrisons in his townes, and the gard of the sea to Giles Bocanegra, a Genouois with fortie gallies, and other ships, and then he came to Vailledolir, where he assigned the Estates at Burgos, at the which the sege of Algezire being propounded, there was granted vnto him an Imposition, called Alcauala, which was the twentieth part of all merchandize, that should be sold within the Realme. This as the king desseigned the sege of Algezire, his Admirall Giles Bocanegra hauing surprized twelue gallies of Granada in the port of Buillon, he burnt foure, sunke two, and carried away the other fixe. The king of Portugall sent ten of his gallies to ioyne with them of Castile, which were in the port of Xatares, being commanded by Charles Pegano or Pecagno. In the meane time many of the Moores gallies assembled at Ceuta, the which they layd, exceeded the number of 80. which threatened to passe into Spaine with great forces to reuenge their former losses. The king of Castile aduertised herof, came to Seuille, where by the way he vnderstood that the Moores army was come out of Affricke into Spaine, and that they were entred into the mouth of the riuer of Guadamecil with great numbers of souldiers, victuals, and other prouisions, the which they had landed, but it was suddenly beseege by the gallies of Castile and Portugall, to whose succor came 13. gallies of Algezire, the which were fought with all by part of the Christian army, who sunke foure of them, two were taken, and the rest ran on ground. Being returned to their companions, who had shut vp the Moores army in the mouth of the riuer, there was a furious battell giuen, where as the Christians had the better, and the Moores lost 25. of their gallies. This done, the Portugall Admirall returned being sent for by the king his master: he came to kisse the king of Castiles hands at Xeres, who did him great honour, and gaue him letters in testimony of his vertue to the King of Portugall his master, intreating him to send him backe againe with his gallies. But the army at sea was nothing weakened hereby, for at the same time that the gallies of Portugall departed there arriued 20. from Arragon, of the which D. Pedro of Moncada was General, who in their way had incountred and vanquished 13. gallies of the Moores, whereof they carried away foure, two were broken against the shore, and the rest saued themselves at Velez in Affricke. The king came to Xatares, and being himselfe desirous to discouer the country of Algezire, and the situation of the towne, he went aboard a gally, and hooured along the coast, and by the gulph, finding the country very pleasant: wherefore hee grew more desirous to beseege that fort: and being returned to Seuille, and giuen order for all things necessarie for such an enterprise, he came and inuested it both by sea and land, in the month of August 1342. hauing not yet all his forces together, but onely 4000. foot: and 2600. horse, with his sea army of Castile and Arragon. In Algezire they made accompt, that there were at the least 800. horse, and 12000. foote Moores, all archers, and Crosse-bow men, who did much annoy the Christians, by their continuall sallies and skir-mishes, but as soone as the king of Castile had taken a fort, called Carthagena, lying betwixt Algezire and Gibraltar, they presented themselves more warily. A Moore taken in this castell, being brought vnto the king to discouer the state of the towne, was so transported with a desperate furie, as had not his Guard beene, and others that were nere vnto the Kings person, he had slaine him. Matters standing on these tearmes, the king of Arragon reuoked his army, for that he had need thereof again: st the king of Maiorca, the which did somewhat incommode the sege: and at the same time the king had another cause of grieve, for the death of D. Alphonso Melendez de Guzman, master of S. James: in whose place D. Frederic the kings base sonne was chosen in the campe. There arriued daily at the campe great numbers of men from diuers forrain countries, to serue against the Infidels: by reason whereof, and fore-seeing that this sege would bee difficult and long, King D. Alphonso intreated the Christian Princes of France and Portugall, and the Pope himselfe to lend him mony. The French king assisted him with 50000. Crownes, which were made ouer to Genoa, Whilst they lye before Algezire, Ioseph King of Granada hauing gathered together 6000. horse, which he had in his country, with 2000. Affricans, being in garrison at Ronda, hee ouer-ran the country as far as Eccia, where hauing spoyled all, he came to Palma, which he entred without any great difficulty, putting all the Christians hee found in it to the sword, then packing vppe his baggage, hee returned with all speed speed to Granado, fearing to be charged by the Garrisons and Commons thereabouts, A who began to make a head. There was a More with one eye taken in the camp, who came from Castellar, and was sent to kill the king of Castile, as hee himselfe confessed, for the which he was executed. This year about Nouember, there arriued ten gallies, sent by the king of Arragon, and commanded by Mathew Mercier of Valence: the like number came from Portugal, and ioyned with the army, but within three weekes they returned, and no man knew the reason, yet the seege was not stayed, nor the batterie discontinued before Algezire: Inigo Lopes of Ozorco, who had charge of the Engines, vsing great diligence.

Villories at sea of the Christians against the Moores.

An. 1342.

An. 1343. This was one of the longest sieges we read of in Spaine, without any intermission of Winter or other season. The year 1343. beeing come, the king of Granado entred a B the gaine into Andalusia, hee recovered and razed the Castle of Benamexir, and spoiled the Towne of Estepa, but hee could not stay there: for that the Castle held good, and yet during all these incursions, this Moorish king did sollicite King Don Alphonso to come to some truce, offering the like conditions, whereunto he and his Predecessors had bene formerly bound, but for that he would not leaue the league and friendship of the King of Maroc, the King of Castile would not hearken to any treatie: although hee vnderstood, that king Albosen was at Ceuta, and that he made great preparation to come and raise the seege of Algezire, wherein he was stayed by the ielousie hee had of his sonne Abderramen, least hee should make himselfe King of Maroc in his absence, whose head hee was in the end forced to cut off, hauing to that end sent Hafcar his Alguazil, or Prouost to Maroc, who by promises and good words, lulled this sonne asleepe, beeing impatient C in his ambition, and so executed his charge. The Moores of Ronda and Malaga, beeing two thousand horse, and as many foot, came running towards Ecceia, not knowing that the king had sent a great troupe of horse into those marches, to hinder their courses: yet they foraged the countie, and tooke their way home-wards, but Fernand Gonzales of Aguilar cut off their passage in the night, at a riuer called de las Yeguas, and charged them so furiously at the breake of day, as notwithstanding any resistance, they abandoned their prey, and were put to route, leauing about fixe hundred of their men slaine and taken, and three hundred horse, which the Christians caried away. There were a good number of horse past already out of Affricke, so as the king of Granado ioyning them to the forces of his countie, hee might put an army to field, able to present battell to them that were at the seege before Algezire, their forces being then some-what diuided, for that king Don Alphonso had (as we haue sayd) sent a good part of his horse-men towards Ecceia, Carmona, Marchena, Vtrera, Aguilar, and other places: but beeing either scarcefull, by reason of former losses, or he expected greater succours from Affricke, hee deferred it very happily for the king of Castile, and beganne to practise a truce, whereunto King Don Alphonso made shew to incline, protracting the time, vntill the coming of his horse, whome hee had sent for with all speed vnto the campe, the which beeing come, there were so many difficulties propounded by him, as nothing was concluded.

The King of Maroc beeing vpon the Affricke shoare with a great army, hee sollicited him of Granado to giue battaile, offering to send him part of his troupes, if he were not of sufficient strength. The King of Granado excused himselfe, for that both their forces vnited together, were not able to resist the fury of the Christians before Tariffe: wherefore he aduised & intreated him to passe in person, and to bring with him all the forces he had, but there was no meanes to perswade the king of Maroc to passe the streight: so as the seege continued, where there daily arriued Princes and Knights from France, England & other places: there is speciall mention made of a Duke of Lancaster, and an Earle of Salisbury English men, of Gaston Earle of Foix, and his brother Roger Regnaud, whom some call Bernard Vicount of Castellbon, and especially of Philip King of Nauarre, whose history we haue need to returne vnto.

Nauarre

22 This Prince hauing his residence for the most part in France, employing himself F vertuously for the defence of that realm against the English, who contended for it against Philip of Valois then reigning: his country of Nauar being gouerned in the meane time by Lieutenants, or Viceroyes French-men, whereof wee haue named some. And in these times

A times mention is made of one Regnaud Pons, and of one William Brahe, Gouvernors, in whose times the lawes of Duel were much practised in Nauarre, as well among the Nobility, as others, who decided their controuersies and quarrels by combat. The wars betwixt the French and English beeing somewhat appeased about the year 1343, more for want of meanes to make warre, and for need of rest then otherwise: Philip king of Nauarre obtayned leaue to come and visit his countie, and if it were conuenient to see the seege of Algezire, whereof there was so great brute throughout all Christendome. This desire increased in him, beeing in Nauarre, and the rather for that hee vnderstood there should be a battaile, as it was likely, and that the king of Castile did resolutely attend it. Wherefore king Philip inuited many of his friends, and leauied men as well in Nauarre, E as in France, giuing order for the shipping of munition and victuals in the ports of Guipulcoa, and so marched on, hauing giuen aduice of all vnto king D. Alphonso, leading with him only an hundred horse, and three hundred foot, which were ready about him, giuing order for the rest to follow. There was great honor done him in all the townes of Castile, where he past, the king hauing so commanded, and he arriued at Seuille about the Spring, whither the king of Castile sent Ambassadors to welcome him, and conduct him to Xeres vpon the frontier, whether many Noblemen, and souldiers should come to accompanie him, as well to do him honour, as for the safetie of his person, for that the Moores Armie lay incamped vpon the Riuer of Guadiana.

C Thus the king of Nauarre was conducted vnto Xeres, and from thence to the campe, with all the shewes of friendship and amity that could bee desired: The king went forth to meete him, beeing attended on by many great and worthie personages Castillians and strangers, French, English, Germanes, and other Nations. The King of Castile did such honour to the King of Nauarre, as hee would not determine of any matter of consequence, without calling him to counsell, neither heare nor answer any Ambassadors but in his presence. The King of Nauarre likewise for his part shewed himselfe very desirous to please him.

There were many skirmishes at that time, in the which the Nauarrois and Gascons carried themselves very valiantly: notwithstanding mention is made by the Histories of Spayne, of a great opportunitie lost of giuing the Moores a notable route, by the default of Gaston Earle of Foix, who that day had the leading of the Nauarrois and Gascons, but they speake of it doubtfully, as a thing vncertaine, and it may be without any iust ground, adding withall, that the Earle for shame demanded his conge, pretending certaine reasons that hee could not stay, as well for that his souldiers were vn timer, as for the neede they might haue of him in France, neither could the king of Nauarre, or hee of Castile (who offered him all contentment) stay him by any intreaties or perswasions. Finally, (according to the Spanish Authors) hee departed with a good troupe of Knights and souldiers, leading his brother with him: but being at Seuille, hee died, which shewes that sicknesse was the cause of his retreat, or rather the wounds which hee had receiued in a furious skirmish, which he maintained against the Moores which sallied out of Algezire, in the which our French Histories affirme that he was slaine. He was father to Gaston Phebus, of whom mention shall be made hereafter. Philip king of Nauarre fell also sicke, with other Noblemen, which grew by the intemperature of the ayre of Andalusia, beeing too violent for the French, who changed nothing of their accustomed manner of luying, being in a different climate. The king of Nauarres sicknesse was such, as hee was aduised to cause himselfe to be transported into France, so as he was forced to take leaue of the king of Castile, who neglected no good office to comfort him: but beeing come to Xeres, his sicknesse so increased, as he was forced to stay, and dyed there in September 1343. He had reigned about 15. yeares and five months in Nauarre. His body was carried to Pamplona, and there interred in the Cathedrall church: wherefoeuer his body past through the F Realme of Castile, there were great ceremonies done, and shewes of mourning, by commandement from king D. Alphonso. The Spanish Authors (who flatter not the French) write, that this infirmity increased by griefe, for some errors which the French (which followed him) had committed in an ambush which had bin layd for the Moore, where by their too great hast they lost a goodly opportunity to defeat a great number.

Y y

The

Death of Don Philip king of Nauarre.

The English Noble-men being also called home by their king left the campe: and so as Authors report, king D. Alphonso remained alone with his owne subiects, and such of Portugal and Arragon, as hee had entertayned: the which may well seeme to bee written by Spaniards, that they alone might haue the honour of the taking and winning of Algezire.

Castile.

23 After the retreat of these strangers, the king was much troubled for many respects: for besides that he was left weake, his treasures were spent, by reason of his exceeding charge, and the rewards hee was forced to giue to such as came to serue him from forraigne countries: for besides his land army which he must furnish with all things necessarie, he was forced to entertaine the galleies of Genoa, Portugal and Arragon, that hee might be master of the sea: the which they could hardly do, for that the enemy was strong who soone after past out of Affricke, with sixty galleies Moores, and many other vessels, landing many horse and foot, with great store of victuals at Estepona, whom they might easily haue put into Algezire, where they began to want, if they had bene men of resolution: for besides that the king of Castiles army was not equal in strength, it was then dispersed in diuers parts. With this new supply the Moores might muster 12000. horse, an infinit number of foote. King D. Alphonso got succours and money from the French king, the Pope, and other Princes his friends, and from the Prelates, townes, and private men of his realme, who lent him willingly what they could spare: so as hee stayed the Genouois, who would haue bene gone, and contented both them and others, with great wisdom and good husbandry.

Portugal.

The king of Castile, notwithstanding his affaires of war, did not forget any thing that might serue to better the Estate of his Provinces, building and peopling new townes, as Monreal vpon Deua: a riuer in Guipulcoa, and Playfance, vpon the same riuer, the which he peopled with men out of the valley of Marquina, granting them the rights and priuiledges of Logroño, and assigning their bounds and limits.

These things past in the yeare 1343. in the which there hapned at Lisbon, the chiefe city of Portugall, great earth-quakes which ruined many goodly buildings, to the great terror of the inhabitants: and in this accident dyed the Admirall of Portugall.

Castile.

The aduerser armies in Andalusia, were continually in skirmish and light encounters, but Ioseph King of Granada would by no means yeeld to a battell, notwithstanding the great supplies he had from Ceuta, and that he had with him a son of king Alboacens, called Hali, with many other great personages Moores, but desired rather to trie if he could get king Alphonso to yeeld vnto a truce: wherefore he sent two Ambassadors vnto him, who had bene formerly employed, to whom the king of Castile seemed to giue a willing care: by whome there was added vnto the conditions of the former accords, that king Alboacen should pay him for the charge of this seege, 300000. doubloons of gold. These conditions being imparted vnto king Ioseph, with a suspension of armes, he presently past ouer to Ceuta, to conferre with Alboacen. But in his return, he was set vpon (notwithstanding the assurance giuen him by king Alphonso) by a gally of Genoa, thinking to take the 300000. doubloons with the king, but the kings gally being well armed, defended it selfe, and so escaped, whereof king Ioseph made great complaints vnto the king of Castile, who without doubt would haue sunke the Genouois gally with the Captaine, if he could haue taken it, but he had gotten to sea, fearing to be punished, and so retired to Genoa. The treaties of truce being troubled by reason of this infidelity of the Genouois, the Moores army which was at Gibraltar, aduanced vnto the riuer of Palmons, halfe a league from the Christians campe: where their fore-runners incountring the two armies which followed, had like to haue come to a generall battell, but the Moores retired first, hauing lost some men. Their whole desire was to victuall Algezire, where they vnderstood, that all things wanted, and that many small vessels, laden with victuals, had bene taken at sea, seeking by day or night to enter into it, through fauour of the wind or current: for the Christians galleies were exceeding watchfull. But they presented themselves so often by land, making shew that they would fight, and watched their opportunitie so by sea, as fine Vessels of Ceuta had meanes to enter, and to refresh the besieged with some victuals, and other necessarie prouisions, whereof the Captaine was a Moore, called Musca, who being discharged, returned

A returned to Ceuta without losse, reporting vnto King Alboacen the great necessitie of the besieged: King Alphonso, was much troubled hereat, but the estate of the besieged being hereby a little eased, was not much bettered: for these victuals lasted not long, considering their multitude of people, and their great extremitie, and the Princes of the Moores seeing, that in the end they must either hazard a battaile, which they did much feare, hauing so often (to their cost) tryed the Christians valour, or loose the place, which had bene long and obstinately besieged.

The king of Granada, with the aduice of Alboacen, did reuieue the treatie of truce, and the conditions of former accords: which were, that he should be vassal to the king of Castile, and should pay him tribute: and moreover, that obtrayning a truce for fiftene B yeares, (wherein king Alboacen should be comprehended) the towne of Algezire should be yeelded vnto him, and that the Moores which were within it, should haue liberty to depart with their goods whither they pleased: the which after long deliberation, was concluded. But they cut off fiftie yeares of the time of the truce, the which was made but for ten yeares. King Alphonso had a desire to see a young Prince a Moore, that was within it, he was sonne to Abomelic, but his Gouvernour would not suffer him, saying, as hee caried him away, that the King of Castile had no reason to see an Infant, whome hee depriued of his Inheritance.

Thus ended this seege, hauing continued nineteene moneths, during the which there were many sharpe and furious incounters, whereof some might be accompted batailles: they within the towne made fiftene great sallies the twelue first moneths, where as many valiant men of either side were slaine. About the end of this seege, there had bene sent out of Arragon James Esgrima, and Mathew Mercer Captaines, with twenty galleies, who wonne great honour there. The king entred into Algezire in great pompe, where hauing planted many of his Ensignes vpon the towers, the great Mesgide was purified and halowed with great ceremonies, the which was named Saint Maries of the Palme. The wals and rampiers being repayred, and the houses and land distributed to new dwellers, the king came to Seulle, from whence hee sent two daughters of King Alboacen, which had bene taken at the battaile of Tariffe, causing them to be honourably conducted into Affricke, and richly attired: wherewith the Moorish king was so pleased, as he could not sufficiently commend his bountie and courtesie, who hauing royally rewarded the Ambassadors, which did accompany these Princesses, hee sent vnto the King of Castile a rich present of pretious stones, silkes, armes, horses, lyons, and other beasts, infinite perfitures, and whatsoeuer hee thought rare, the which did much confirme the league of friendship betwixt them: but it happened that Alboacen within few dayes after, being seruypon and incountred by one of his sonnes called Alboanen, who had rebelled against him, and abandoning the duty of a sonne, depriued him of the kingdom of Fez, whereby the king of Castile entred into a new iealousie of warre, this vsurping sonne not respecting the truce made with his father.

Alboacen king of Maroc d'fe, possist by his sonne.

E This Alboanen did not onely take from his father the Realme of Fez, but also all that hee held in Spaine, as Ronde, Zachara, Gibraltar, Ximena, Marbella, Estepona, Castillar and others. But whilest the Moores molested one another, the King of Castile and his subiects had some rest, whereof they had great need, by reason of their continuall toyle, and great expences at the seege of Algezire.

In the meane time the king of Castile seeing that the quarrels betwixt Don Pedro king of Arragon, and his brethren D. Fernand and D. Iohn, borne of D. Leonora of Castile his sister, continued still, he sought to reconcile them, sending Diego Garcia of Toledo to that end, who laboured much, but in vaine. Being there, there was a marriage treated of, betwixt D. Fernand Manuel, sonne to D. Iohn Manuel, and D. Ieanne of Arragon, daughter to Don Raymond Berenger, Earle of Prages, Vncle to the King Don Pedro. The allyance and amitie of Arragon had bene very auayleable to Don Iohn Manuel, the which hee could not forget, although the King of Castile were not much pleased therewith.

24 During the seege of Algezire, the king Don Pedro sought to ruine D. James king of Majorca, his cousin and brother-in-lawe, by force and all other vnworthie meanes, seeking seeking to make him odious by false accusations, where as force could not preuaile. Ha-A uing drawne him to Barcelona, vpon hope of a reconciliation, hee charged him in open assembly, that he had fraudulently sought to carrie him, with his brother Don James Earle of Vrgel, and their Vncle Don Pedro Earle of Ribagorça, into Majorca, and there to detayne them prisoners, vntill that he were released from the oath of fidelitie, and acknowledgement of Soueraigntie, which hee and his Predecessors had made vnto the Kings of Arragon: and in this discontent and feare, he sent him away, retayning norwithstanding his wife Donna Constance, who was his sister: and without any long delay, the King Don Pedro sent Arnould Erillo, and William Bellera to ouer-runne the Countie of Rossillon, and other lands belonging to the King of Majorca, lying neere vnto Cate-logne, and to seaze vpon the places of strength, the Princes and Princeesses of his bloud B and his allies employing themselves in vaine to pacifie them. But such was his hatred and insatiable desire of greatnesse, as hee proclaimed open warre against this poore king of Majorca, weake in meanes, and it may be, in courage, to make head against so mighty a king, and so obstinate an enemy.

Minorca conquered by the king of Arra-
 gon.

And at that time Don Pedro of Moncado was recalled with his Gallies from the Streights, as wee haue sayd, who hauing increased his army with many other vessels rigged out vpon the coasts of Cattelogne and Valence, hee came to Palomera, a hauen in the Iland of Majorca, with an hundred and sixe sayles, where hee landed many horse and foote, the king beeing there in person, who before his departure, had coloured this enterprise with a pretext of Fellonie and Rebellion, pronouncing a sentence against C the King Don James, in an assembly of Noblemen and Princes at Barcelona, and confiscating his goods. In this army was Don Pedro of Arragon, Earle of Ampurias and Ribagorça, the kings Vncle, holding the place of Seneschall and chiefe of Armes: Don Pedro of Arragon Lord of Xerica newly reconciled, Don Blasco of Alagon, who carried the Standard royall: Don John Ximenes of Vreç, Don Philip of Castro, D. Alphonso Roger of Loria, brother to Don Pedro of Xerica, Galuan and Raymond Anglegole, Acar Mario, Arnould Erillo, Gonçal Diaz of Arenos, John Fernandes of Luna, Artal of Fosles, Michel
Perez Zapate, Jourdain Vries, Sancho Peres Pomar, with other Noblemen and Captaines. Against these forces the king of Majorca had leauied three hundred horse and fiftene thousand foote, but he was betrayed and abandoned, and forced to flie, and quire D the Iland: so as the king Don Pedro seazed thereon without fighting, and was receiued into the city of Majorca, whereof Don Arnould Erillo was made Gouvernour, and Gille- bert Centilla Captaine of the souldiers that were there left in garrison. The Iland of Minorca made no greater resistance, and that of Yuica lesse. Minorca was giuen in government to Gillebert Ceruera, and Yuica to Martin Arbes. These Ilands subdued, the king returned to Barcelona, from whence he presently marched into the Countie of Rossillon, with his whole army, whither the Cardinall of Rhodex, the Popes Legat, came vnto him, to aduise him to desist from armes: who could get no other answer, but that the king of Majorca should come and yeeld himselfe to his will. During this warre, there was borne E at Ceruera, in the territorie of Lerida in Cattelogne, a monstrous child, hauing two heads and foure legges, whose father and mother seeking to conceale it, buried it aliue, but beeing discouered in this attempt, they were punished, as murderers of their child.
 There were great tumults and seditions at that time in Arragon, betwixt many Noblemen, contending by armes for their possessions, so as the king commanded that D. A-thon of Fosles should be apprehended and punished, to terrifie others, he also caused his reuenues and lands to be seazed on, from the which he did appeale vnto the Magistrate of the Iustice of Arragon, which was then in the hands of Garci Fernandes of Castro, wherupon there grew great contention: for the kings learned Council pretended that the authority of the Iustice of Arragon did not extend out of the assembly of the Estates, and that this Magistrate was there onely a Iudge of controuersies, which did rise against the king, being not lawfull for him out of the Estates, to make himselfe Iudge of any controuersie against his royall Maiesty, but in sutes of itate, and condition of persons, or in causes whereas the king is called for a warrant, or in complaints which the people may make against the kings Officers.

Monster borne in Cattelogne slaine by the parents, and they punished.

The

A The king therefore commanded, (for that Garci Fernandes of Castro, Iustice of Arra-gon, was allyed to Athon of Fosles) that Michel Perez Zapate, Lieutenant general of Arra-gon in the kings absence, should put Athon in prison, but finding himselfe too weake, for that Athon was supported by many seditious persons, and had the countenance of di-uers great men his kinsmen and friends, he had recourse vnto the Iurates of Sarragossa, according to the custome of his ancestors, enioyning them to fore-see, that the Estate re-ceiyed no preiudice, and that Iustice should not be forced.

Submission of the king of Majorca dispossest

The warre of Rossillon continued, neither would the king D. Pedro yeeld for any intercession the Pope could make, persisting still, that the king Don James (who was dispossest of Majorca) should come and submit himselfe vnto him, without any condition. The B rowne of Elne yeelded vnto him. In the end Arnould Bishop of Aux, the Popes Nuncio, did mediate, that the King of Majorca should come and yeeld himselfe into the hands of the king D. Pedro, and deliuer him his forts, vpon assurance that they should not attempt any thing against his person, nor put him in prison: the which beeing granted, D. James king of Majorca, vpon the assurance of D. Pedro of Xerica, came to Elne, and casting himselfe at the kings of Arragons feet, he submitted himselfe to his clemencie, beseeching him to haue regard vnto his ranke and dignity, to suffer him to iustifie himselfe, and that he would be pleased to sue ciuilly against him: and howsoeuer, at the least, prelerue vnto his Nephewes, children to his brother D. Fernand, their right vnto the realme of Majorca, and other lands, and cause the towne of Perpignan to be deliuered vnto him. The king C D. Pedro blinded with hatred and choller, reiected all these requests after a strange and insolent manner, and being entred into Perpignan, he caused a Decree to be published, by the which he did confiscate the Iland of Majorca, and all the lands of the king Don James, vnting them inseparably to the Crowne of Arragon: which decree he caused to be set vp at euery corner. This poore Prince being thus intreated, he left the country of Rossillon, and retired himselfe to Berga, a place assigned him for his aboad, vntill that his aduersary should giue order for his entertainment. The king D. Pedro (after these seuer and vniust proceedings) returned to Barcelona, where he entred armed, as triumphing for a victory gotten of some great enemy. Beeing there in counsell, he assigned 10000. liuers of D penion for the king D. James dispossest, vntill he had giuen him lands and reuenues out of Spaine: remitting vnto him his rights of Montpellier, and other places on this side the Pyrenees, already in his possession.

Decree against the king D. M.
 James.

A thousand pound sterling.

These things beeing signified vnto him by Don Pedro of Moncado, Philip Boillo, and Garcia of Loris, hee reiected them all, saying: That he had rather lye banished in a strange Country, and suffer all the miseries in the world, then to yeeld to so great an iniu-stice, or allow of so unworthie conditions, imposed vpon him by a King which was his kinsman. Whereupon the King Don Pedro renewed the warre, that hee might either take him, or chase him out of the Kingdome.

This miserable Prince destitute and quite stript of all meanes, and abandoned of his friends, had the courage to desie Don Pedro of Xerica, accusing him of disloyaltie, for E that hee had promised him many things (perswading him to come to Elne) which had not bene kept: but Don Pedro was aboliued by the king, who declared that hee had not sayled in any thing he had promised: so as Don James sometimes King of Majorca, frustrate of all hope, was forced to retire into the Countie of Cerdagne, hoping to hold those Lands by the fauour and support of Geoffrey Estandart a French-man, Gouvernour of Puicerdan, and other Segneuries on this side the mountaines: but beeing deceiued and forsaken of all, hee was forced to flie, and to passe the mountaines in Nouember, the Winter beeing exceeding sharpe: so as vpon mount Pimorent, which diuides the Con-tie of Cerdagne from Galconie, hee was like to haue dyed with the extremitie of cold, where hee fell into such a passion of griefe, as he was readie to haue slaine himselfe. This F vltage did D. James the king of Majorca receiue of his brother-in-law, Don Pedro king of Arragon, who was at that time againe sollicitated to attempt the conquest of Corsica, wherunto he yeelded, and sent some gallies to the port of Boniface, this year 1344. hauing intelligence, and a secret league with William Roncaul, Rowland Ornan, Henry Cortingo, and others of the chiefe of the Iland.

Y y 3

In

Castile.

1345.

In the yeare 1345. D. Alphonso King of Castile, gaue order for the building of the new A towne of S. Ander, called Heybar, and a league from thence of the towne of Marquene, called also Helgoybar, which he peopled with the inhabitants of the villages of that countrie, giuing them lawes and priuiledges according to the iurisdiction of Logrogne.

An. 1346.

25 The yeare following 1346. a donation was made by Pope Clement the 6. resident in Auignon, to D. Lewis de la Cerde, sonne to the Infant D. Alphonso, of the fortunatellands or Canaries, vpon condition that he should conquer them, and cause the Gospell to be preached there: to this end he came into Arragon, and there began to prepare an army at sea, wherein he was much assisted and fauoured by the king D. Pedro: but we find not that he past into the Ilands, and to speake truly, it would haue bene distastfull vnto the king of Castile, in whose Streight these Ilands are situated: yet this D. Lewis held the title of Prince of the fortunatellands. D. John Manuel (who had neuer loued the king of Castile from his heart) was glad of these petty discontentments, by fauour whereof hee spread abroad false reports and aduertisements, to draw the two kings of Castile and Arragon into warre, but what he could not do by his practises, occasion wrought, at the treaty of marriage which the king of Castile would make betwixt D. Fernand of Arragon his nephew, sonne to his sister D. Leonora, and D. Eluira Infanta of Portugal, who is by some called also Leonora, by reason whereof king D. Alphonso, and D. Leonora his sister had an interview at Tordelaguna: which put the king D. Pedro into such a ielousie, being then a widower, (which was in the yeare 1347.) as hauing done what hee could to diuert 1347. he sent his ambassadors. The king of Castile beeing much moued, that hee of Arragon did thus seeke to crosse him, sent Don John Alphonso of Albuquerque into Portugal, to hinder the conclusion of this marriage, but hee arriued too late, for the ambassadour of Arragon had so negotiated, as all was concluded: whereat the king Don Alphonso was much offended.

Arragon.

26 This D. Pedro king of Arragon had in his time many wiues, the first was D. Maria Infanta of Nauarre, daughter to king Philip of Eureux, by whom he had D. Constance Queene of Sicily, wife to D. Frederic the second. D. Jeanne married afterwards to D. John Earle of Ampurias, and one sonne, who died as soone as he was borne, and the mother D. Constance died sixe dayes after, in the yere 1347. To his 2. wife he had this Infant of Portugall: his third he tooke D. Leonora, some call her D. Constance, daughter to Frederick the 2. King of Sicily, by whom he had D. John his successor in the Realme: D. Martin Earle of Xerica and Luna, and Duke of Momblanc, and first Constable of Arragon, (who by the death of his elder brother, was also King of Arragon) and D. Leonora, which was wife to D. John Infanta of Castile, afterwards king, the first of that name of Castile and Leon. Besides these great Princesses, the King Don Pedro, being old and a widower, fell in loue with a subiect of his owne of a meane family called Sibile, a widow, borne at Forcia in the territorie of Ampurias, and married her, of whom he had D. Isabella, who was Countesse of Vrgel, and wife to Don James. These were the marriages of the king Don Pedro, who raigning E cruelly and couetously, incensed the Estates and Nobilitie of his Realmes of Arragon and Valence against him, whereas the subiects made Leagues against their Prince, which did in a manner ruine and confound that Estate, King Don Alphonso not forgetting to make vse of that occasion, to be reuenged of the wrong and iniurie which hee pretended had bene done him, in disappointing the mariage of his Nephew Don Fernand with the Infanta of Portugall.

The King Don Pedro hauing no sonnes at the consummation of this second marriage, sought to haue an oath taken to D. Constance, his eldest daughter, heire to the Realme of Arragon, and other lands depending and annexed after his decesse, the which was cause of great seditions: for Don John, Earle of Vrgel, the kings brother, gouerning the Realme then as Gouvernour, or Lieutenant generall, opposed himselfe violently: by reason whereof the King (who was violent and rough in all his actions) chafed him away, and tooke from him his publike charge: then hauing emancipated Donna Constance from his daughter, hee made and instituted her Gouvernesse, or Regent of the Realme, to make her way to the succession, there beeing present at this act, and his principall Coun-

A counsellors, D. Huges Bishop of Vic, D. Pedro Thousio maister of Montefa, D. Pedro of Xerica viceroy of Valence, Pedro Fenouillet, Audemar Mouffet, Goncaluo Diaz of Arenos, & Gisierand Belpuccio. D. Pedro the Kings vncl, Earle of Ampurias, tooke that oth to his Princess in the name of the Estates, vpon condition, that if it were found the hereditarie right did belong vnto D. James, the oth should be voided. D. James seeing himselfe disappointed, stirred vp troubles in the country of Valence: hee had recourse to the vnion of Arragon, to retaine his dignity of Gouvernor of the Realme: hee made a league with his brethren D. Fernand and D. John sonnes to D. Leonora of Castile, and with the King of Castile himselfe, and disquieted all Arragon.

The dispossest King of Majorca hearing of these tumults, would bee an actor, and B came neere vnto Majorca, with certaine gallies of France and Genoa, whereof Charles Grimaldi was General, but as misfortune did still accompany him hee effected nothing of worth in those Ilands nor vpon the coast of Cattelogne, whether hee afterwards came, and was repulst by the King himselfe. By the aduice of Bernard of Cabrera, who was then held a man of great wiidome and iudgement, he made his vncl D. Pedro, Earle of Ampurias, chiefe of his counsel, and seeking by all meanes to catch his rebels, or to diuide their league, hee wrought so as the Earle of Vrgel his brother came vnto him, whom hee restored to his dignity of Gouvernor of the realme, but it continued not many daies, for he died presently, not without suspition to haue bene poysoned. Beeing C at an assemble of the Estates at Saragossa, he granted them all they demanded, and renewed the contract made by King Alphonso the third, with the vnion of Arragon, by the which sixteene castles were put into the power of the vnion, with liberty to deliuer them to whom they would, if the King should infringe the accord.

This yeere of our Lord 1347. during these troubles the Kings marriage was conformed with the Infanta of Portugal, the which were very mournful, for that in a short space the Kings men receiued two notable routs by the rebels, the one neere vnto Xatua, where there died on the Kings part Andrew William the Secretarie, Lieutenant to the Viceroy of Valence, and his sonne: the other neere vnto Valence, in the which Goncal Diaz of Arnos, and Pedro Mugnon captaines of the Kings men lost their liues. So as the King, who in the meane time kept at Moruiedro, in a manner beseegeed, was much D perplexed, and not knowing what to resolue, he suffred himselfe to bee perswaded to enter into the city of Valence, where hee found himselfe entangled in the mutinies of the citizens, who respected and honoured him so little, as notwithstanding his presence, they spoiled and murdered one another, after a pitifull manner. The Noble men and captaines holding his party, were then fortified in Daroca, whereof the chiefe were D. Pedro of Xerica, D. Lope of Luna, D. Blasco of Alagon, D. Pedro Fernandes of Ixar, D. Thomas Cornet, D. John Ximenes of Vrrica, and D. John Martines of Luna.

The Rebels were fauored and assisted vnder hand, by D. Alphonso King of Castile, who suffred them to make great leauies of souldiars in his countries, for the loue hee bare vnto the sonnes of his sister D. Leonora, Douager of Arragon: and D. Fernand the eldest E had already lead many bands of Castillans to Valence, and D. John his brother prepared to passe into Arragon with other troupes, to be the generall of that warre, the which the Arragonois demanded: yet by reason of the complaints made by the King D. Pedro, who said that the league betwixt Castile and Arragon, was broken by King D. Alphonso, solliciting all his friends and priuat counsellors, especially Queene Mary his wife, and D. Leonora of Guzman, his best beloued, to dissuade the King from this enterprise, laying before him the consequence of this rebellion, there were sent by the King of Castile, and by his sister the Queene D. Leonora, into Arragon D. Fernando Perez Puerto Carrero, and to Valence Lope Perez of Fonseca, to treat of the meanes to pacifie these troubles.

F The King D. Pedro promised great matters to his brethren, and desired nothing more then to haue the Castilian troupes called home by their King: but notwithstanding any likelihood of an accord, they drew what succors they would from Castile: wherefore King D. Alphonso beeing importuned by the King D. Pedro, and discontented with these seditions, beeing also moued with a desire he had to see the Queene D. Leonora his

An. 1347.
Marriage of
the King D.
Pedro with the Infanta of Portugal.

Defeat of the Kings men

Valencians
seditions.

King of Castile fauors the rebels against the King of
Arragon.

27 Comming to the affairs which past at that time in Castile, after the pacification A of the troubles of Arragon, we finde that King D. Alphonso spent his time in peopling of his townes and country: amongst others he peopled the towne of Sumaya in Guipuscoa otherwise called Villa Grana of Sumaya, and gave it the preiudges of Saint Sebastian, whether there appellations goe, and from thence to the court. And his realm of Castile being in reasonable good quiet, seeing such as professed armes (whereof Castile and his other countries did abound) seeke all occasions to imploy their armes, meddling, more then hee desired, with the factions and mutinies of his Neighbors: being also duly aduertised of that which had past in Affrike, and of the little loue which the new King of Fez bare him, who held many places of importance in Spaine, he held it necessary to make an expedition against the Infidels: for it is a difficult thing to keepe B great Kingdomes full of people in peace, especially after long pacifice of warre, but they will disquiet both spirituall and temporall at home, if they bee not employed abroad: so as armes hath this unhappinesse, that after they are once taken, they cannot be laied downe without great and difficult labour, and that many times succedes ill.

Schisme betwixt the Knights of Ca-
latriana.

About this time, which was in the yeere of our Lord 1348. Don Garcia Lope Maister of the Calatraua, being accused of many disorders, retired into Arragon. Being cited to appeere personally before the King of Castile, and absent, hee was condemned and degraded for his contumacy, and so died; in whose place the Knights of Calatraua in Arragon, proceeded in Arragon, contrary to the lawes and rules of their Order. The Castilians of Calatraua, did also choose one; so as this Schisme was like to haue bread some great disorder, if by the mediation of the Pope, and the Kings of Castile C and Arragon, the parties had not referred it to Don Pedro King of Arragon who decreed; That the Maister chosen at Calatraua should stand, and that any one which held that dignity dying, the election of his successor should not bee made any where else, but in the couent of Calatraua.

This Maister confirmed, was called Don John Nugnes of Prado, who they sayd was Bastard vnto D. Blanche, the King of Portugals aunte, and Abbess of Huelgas nere Burgos. To Don John Fernandes his competitor, was left the Commanderie of Alcaniz, with the title of great Commander, yet subiect to the Maister of Calatraua. The approbation of these Maisters, being chosen, belongs to the Abbots of the Order of Cisteraux. Amidst these tumults King Don Alphonso resolved for to raise an armie D to beseege Gibraltar, thinking that during the seditions betwixt the Arabian Kings, father and sonne in Affrike, it could not bee releued: and therefore hauing so fit an occasion offered him, hee made no difficulty to bee the first in armes, pretending that hee did not breake the truce, seeing that this place and others in Spaine, were held by Alboanen, with whom hee had not any treaty: For the manning and conduct of this warre, which was of no small consequence, hee assembled the generall Estates of all his realmes in the towne of Alcalá de Henares, where (besides the Noblemen and Deputies accustomed to come in former assemblies) many Townes and Commonalties were newly called, and receiued to giue their voices, and to haue a place in such assemblies. For vntil that time, the people and townes, which are called by the Toledans, beiond the mountaines, as Castile the old, Galicia, Asturia and the neighbour countries, were those which did commonly assist, and did contribute and beare the charges, as being most retired from the discomodities of the warre: but now at this time, they of Toledo, Andalusia and such like, were also called by the King, for his intent was, to demand the subsidie called Alcauala throughout his whole Realme. This assembly and many others which were made in after times, did for the most part consist of good townes, who sent their Deputies: but since they found that multitude bred confusion, and therefore there were eightene principall places chosen, which should haue voices, and places in assemblies, that is, sixtene cities and two townes. Spaine, as we haue said in the description thereof, is in a manner diuided in the midst by the mountaine called in old time Idubeda the which at this present hath diuerse names. By reason whereof they distinguish the people at this day to those of this side and the other side the mountaines. On this side, wee will call the Toledans, and the neighbour Prouinces: on the other

Places in the
realme of Castile hauing
voice: in the Estates.

A other side, shall bee those of Burgos. Therefore on this side the mountaines, they call at this day, to the Estates of Spaine, for the Prouince of Toledo, the city of Toledo, Cuenca, Guadalajara, and Madrid: and for the other Prouinces, Seuile, Granada, Murcia, Cordoua and Iuen. Beyond the mountaines for the Straight of Castile, Burgos, Soria, Segobia, Auila and Vailledolit: and for that of Leon, the city of Leon, Salamanca, Zamora, and Toro. These are the eightene places which send their Deputies to the Estates, among the which Burgos, Leon, Granada, Seuile, Cordoua, Murcia, Iuen and Toledo (townes which haue beene seates of Kingdomes) haue their places assigned, and hold rank: the rest take their places, as it happens, and their Deputies speake as they sit: as for the city of Toledo in this assembly at Alcalá de Henares, it contended for precedence with that of Burgos, alleading many reasons, not altogether friuolous. First the greatness of the city, and great numbers of people and Nobility inhabiting there, next the seat of the Archbishop and Primate, the stateliness of the Church, the Prelate whereof was high Chancellor of all the Realmes subiect to Castile: and moreover offering to their consideration, the antiquity of the foundation of that city, which had beene the head during the Gothes raigne, not onely of all that is contained within the two seas; and the Pyrenees, but also of Gotike Gaule, which at this day wee call Languedoc, so many counsels celebrated there, and that since the Arabians had become Maisters of Spaine, it had beene a royal seat, hauing had many Kings, which did exceed all the Potentates Moores of Spaine, in power and riches except him of Cordoua. God hauing C since of his grace suffred Christian Princes to conquer it, the alone amongst all the cities of Spaine, had beene honoured with an Imperiall title, by reason whereof; and many other preiudges there produced, they maintained the precedence to belong vnto her: Burgos on the other side maintained that she was the capitall city, & the ancient seat of the Princes of Castile, which was the title their Kings carried: that from Castile & Leon did grow the conquests of the rest of the Realmes of Spaine, and that shee was called the royal city; but their chiefe ground was, that time out of minde, shee had had the first place and voice in such assemblies. Vpon these differences, the Noblemen fell into factions, as their passions did transport them, or as they had their Siegneuries and houses lying in the territory and iurisdiction of the one or the other citie. King D. Alphonso D vnto therein wise aduise, hauing taken the knowledge of this cause vnto himselfe, he pronounced thus: I speake (sayd he) for them of Toledo, and say, the city of Toledo will doe as it shall please the King. Let Burgos speake now. This manner of decreeing contented both parties, for it seemed to them of Toledo, that the King hauing made himselfe, as it were, their Attorney, had spoken first in the behalfe of their city. And they of Burgos holding that the Kings words did nothing preiudice their pretensions, seeing they spake before the other Deputies, they surceased for the voice. Concerning their ranke and precedence, the King desyring to preferue the seate to Burgos, and Toledo refusing to sit vnder her, the King ordained, that from thenceforth the Deputie of Toledo should not sit vpon the same banke with the other Deputies, but opposite vnto them, yet not in the same ranke: which order is obserued at this day in the generall assemblies of the Estates of Castile. The first voice kept for the city of Burgos, was the cause the King obtained the subsidie of Alcauala, which hee required of all his subiects: for Burgos paid it already, and therefore did not contradict it: whereas if Toledo (which had not borne this imposition) had spoken first, shee had opposed herselfe; as shee did, and encouraged other townes to doe the like by her example. All in the end yielded vnto it, hauing heard the reasons which moued the King to demand it, and the neede hee had for the good of the Realme, and the maintenance of the warre against the Moores.

Order betwixt Toledo and Burgos for precedence.

Alcauala an imposition.

The assembly at Alcalá de Henares being dissolved, and the King hauing gathered together great store of treasure, by the speedie obedience of his subiects, hee beganne to discharge some of his debts, and to retire many precious iewels which had beene pawned, hee ordered iustice, and in the end applied his minde wholly to this seege, which hee ment to lay to Gibraltar, and to provide for all things necessary both by sea and land, seeing that the time and the opportunity of the Moores seditions in Affrike, did inuite him:

him. The towne of Gibraltar had beene greatly fortified by the Moores, since the time A they had taken it from the Christians: so as the enterprise was no lesse difficulte then that of Algezire. But there was this aduantage, they did not so much feare any succors from Affrike, as if the affaires of the Arabian Moores had beene quiet: notwithstanding to provide for all euents, he sent Velasco Martinez Alcaide or Prouost of the court, to the King of Arragon in Ambassage, and with him Alphonso Gonzales of Gallego: to confirme the alliance and friendship betwixt them, and to reuiue the treaty of marriage betwixt his sonne D. Henry, and one of the Infants of Arragon: but his chiefe designe was, to demaund ten gallies to keepe the straight. The King D. Pedro answered the Ambassadors, that he would send an Ambassador expressly vnto the King of Castile their maister, the which he did.

Arragon.

King D. Alphonso was already before Gibraltar, when as the Ambassador came to him from Arragon. There was an end made of the differences of the Queene D. Leonora, and the Infants D. Fernand and D. John whom the King Don Pedro should suffer peaceably to enioy that which had beene assigned him by the deceased King, as well in dowry, as in portion: and if it should happen that after that time they should moue any troubles in Arragon, that King D. Alphonso should not giue them, nor suffer to bee giuen them any aide or succors. Nothing was concluded in regard of the marriage, for that the King Don Pedro required, that Don Henry should bee inuested in many Townes and Prouinces, which was not conuenient for the King of Castile to giue. For C the King D. Pedro sent foure of his gallies, to ioyne with them that were in the Straight, whereof Raymond of Villanoua was captaine, being manned with foure hundred crosbow men.

Castile.

The towne of Gibraltar was furiously battred, with all sorts of Engins, and defended very valiantly, the garrison being very strong, and consisting of the best souldiers that were amongst the Moores, who made many sallies vpon the Christians, in the which were slaine their best men of either side; and moreover King D. Alphonso's campe was much annoyed by the courses of the Neighbour garrisons, and by the King of Granada horse men, who had the gard of those places which the Moores held in Spaine. This D seige hauing continued some monthes, the plague fell into the Christians campe, yet the King being obstinate in his resolution, would not dislodge: for hee knew that the Moores, being destitute of succors could not long resist, but must bee either forced, or yeeld. Being in this resolution, it pleased God that hee himselfe was strooken with the plague whereof hee died in the campe, in the yeere of our Lord 1350. the nine and thirtieth yeere of his age, and the eight and thirtieth of his raigne. Some haue written that hee died not of the plague, but of poyson, the which was giuen him by the Moores practises. This accident was the cause of remouing the seige of Gibraltar.

Death of King D. Alphonso.

Nauarre.

Death of Ieanne Queene of Nauarre.

A little before D. Ieanne Queene of Nauarre, widow to King Philip of Eureux, died at Conflans in France, who had gouerned her Realme, whereof shee was proprietary, after the decease of her husband, with good discretion, and yet shee had some subiects E not very tractable, who fought nothing but quarrels. There were still riots committed by them vpon the frontiers of Nauarre, namely by the Inhabitants of Sanguesse and the Arragonois, notwithstanding all which, yet could shee wisely entertaine the alliance and peace with D. Pedro King of Arragon her sonne in law, yea after the death of Queene Donna Maria, her daughter: so as during her life, the King D. Pedro endured all the Insolencies of the Nauarrois, who some times made roades farre into his countrie, not seeming to take knowledge thereof, for the honour and respect hee bare vnto his mother in law, neither did hee make any complaints, nor was moued, as hee ought to haue beene, for that the Estates of Arragon, and others being rebelled against him for the causes aboue mentioned, many made their retreat into Nauarre, F from whence they drew assistance of armes, victuals and other things, to make warre against him.

It is credible that the King of Arragon shewed himselfe patient in these things, that he might not disapoint other desseignes of greater importance: for knowing that Ieanne Queene of Nauarre was much honoured in France, hee entertained her friendship, 10

A to the end that by her means he might haue King Philip of Valois more fauourable vnto him, who was incensed against him for D. James of Majorca. This Lady laboured so, as shee entertained peace betwixt them, and confirmed againe the alliance, past, by a treatie of marriage, which shee propounded, betwixt Charles, Grand-child to King Philip, and one of the daughters of the King Don Pedro; and of her daughter Donna Maria.

This Princeesse being come into France with Charles and Philip her sonnes, to dispose of her lands and estates which shee had there, hauing left John of Conflans, Lord of Dampierre, Marshal of Champagne, for Gouverneur in Nuarre, shee died at the end of the yeere 1349. five yeeres after the decease of her husband, hauing held the Realme of Nuarre about two and twenty yeeres, counting since the death of King Charles the Fairer: to whom succeeded her sonne Charles, who was surnamed the Bad.

The end of the foureteenth Booke.

Zz

THE

THE FIFTEENTH BOOKE of the Historie of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 D On Pedro first of that name, the foureteenth King of Castile and five and thirty of Leon, and his seuerer beginning to raigne.
- 2 House of Lara Lords of Biscay, and the Siegneuries held by them.
- 3 Vnfortunate marriage of D. Pedro King of Castile, with Blanche of Bourbon. Vnlawfull loue of this King with Donna Maria of Padilla, persecutions and murders of the Noblemen of Castile, his second vnlawfull marriage, and other excesse done by him.
- 4 Refuge into France of D. Henry Earle of Trastamare, bastard brother to the King of Castile.
- 5 D. Charles called the bad, the thirtieth King of Nauarre, and second of that name, his sower disposition and rough proceedings, in the pursuite of his pretended right to Brie and Champagne.
- 6 Abolition of Cæsars Aera in Arragon: Girone made a Principality for the elder of Arragon: warre of Sardinia.
- 7 Cruel warre betwixt Castile and Arragon. Cruelties of D. Pedro King of Castile against his subjects, and against his owne blood.
- 8 D. Pedro the eight King of Portugal, sole of that name.
- 9 Vnfortunate loues of D. Pedro King of Portugal, with D. Agnes Castro.
- 10 Disposition of D. Pedro King of Portugal, his equity and diligence.
- 11 Imprisonment of the King of Nauarre, his escape, and their proceeding against him in France.
- 12 Proceedings of the warre of Castile and Arragon: cruelties, murders and spoiles of D. Pedro King of Castile.
- 13 Turbulent Estate of Granada: treacheries and cruelties of D. Pedro of Castile, against the Princes Moores.
- 14 Praëtises betwixt the Kings of Castile and Nauarre, and continuation of the warre betwixt Castile and Arragon.
- 15 Disloyaltie of D. Pedro King of Arragon, to D. Henry Earle of Trastamare.
- 16 New accords betwixt D. Pedro King of Arragon and D. Henry Earle of Trastamare: continuation of the warre against Castile.
- 17 Accords betwixt Nauarre and Arragon, against Castile. Vnworthy death of D. Bernard of Cabrera.
- 18 Returne of the Popes Sea, from Auignon to Rome.
- 19 Expedition made by D. Henry Earle of Trastamare into Castile against the King D. Pedro, his brother and the Earles victory.

20 Returne

- A 20 Returne of the King D. Pedro: defeat of D. Henry: cruelties against the vanquished, policies of the King of Nauarre during these quarrels.
- 21 Ingratitude of the King D. Pedro to the English, who had restored him: his impieties, tyrannies and cruelties.
- 22 Second expedition of Count Henry into Castile, conquest of that Realme with the helpe of the French, death of the King D. Pedro the cruel.
- 23 D. Fernand sole of that name, and ninth King of Portugal.

Kings of Spaine mentioned in this fifteenth Booke.

CASTILE and LEON.

NAUARRE

PORTVGAL.

14. D. Pedro. 1. — 35.

30. D. Charles. 2.

8. D. Pedro. 1.

9. D. Fernand. 1.

- D D. Pedro the first and sole of that name, surnamed the cruel, the foureteenth King of Castile, and five and thirtieth of Leon.

THe beginning of the raigne of D. Pedro, sonne to D. Alphonso of Castile, was in the yeere 1350. in the which Pope Clement the sixth ordained that the Iubile which they had beene accustomed to celebrate (yet without any ground) euery hundred yeere amongst Christians, should from that time be kept from fifty, to fifty yeeres, after the manner of the Iewes. D. Pedro was at Senile with the Queene his mother, when the King his father died, where his obsequies being made, they consulted for the ording the Estate of the new Kings house, and the affaires of the Kingdome. D. Leonora of Guzman, her children, kinsfolkes and friends being in great perplexity, at the death of King D. Alphonso, retired themselves into diuers parts of the realme.

This yong King being but fiftene yeeres old began his raigne. with cruelty, in which vicche continued his whole life, but to his cost. D. Leonora being sollicit by some Knights to come to Senile, she came, vpon their faith, but she was presently apprehended and put in prison, to satisfie the rage of ieaousie of Queene Mary the Kings mother, wherevpon D. Henry Earle of Trastamare, and some of his brethren, children to this Lady, thought to fortifie themselves in Algezire, but they were set vpon, and forced to flie, some into Portugal, some else where: against whom the King was more incenled then before, for the marriage which followed betwixt D. Henry Earle of Trastamare, and D. Ieanne Manuel, daughter to D. Iohn Manuel one of the mightiest Princes in Spaine, next vnto the King, to which marriage the King D. Pedro himselfe aspired.

Zz 2

This

i
An. 1350.

D. Pedro King of Castile cruel.
Leonora
Guzman the deceased King's mother in the year 1350
was Queen.

Aquilar taken and the unworthy death of D. Alphonso Fernandez Cornel.

An. 1353.

place was taken, and Alphonso being retired into a tower, he yielded to D. Diego Gomes of A Toledo, whose great friend he had beene, hoping that by his meanes he should obtaine his life, or that his goods should be preferred for his children. As they led him prisoner, he met with D. John Alphonso of Albuquerque, who said vnto him, that he wondered how he, who had shewed himselfe so brave a knight, had undertaken so foolish an enterprise. To whom he answered, That it was the custome of Castile, to make men and to vndoe them suddenly. D. Alphonso had beene at the taking and death of D. Gonzalo Martines of Onie, and do, maister of Alcantara. During the raigne of King D. Alphonso: at the same day and month that he was slaine by the father, this man was put to death by the commandment of the son, and with him were also executed D. Pedro Cornel, his cousin, John Alphonso Carrillo, Juanes of Biedma, John Gonzales of Ala, and Ponce Diaz of Quefada. The wals of Aquilar were ruined, & the goods of D. Alphonso Cornel confisked, & given by the King to diuers: among other D. Maria of Padilla, the Kings mistres, being deliuered in the city of Cordoua of a daughter, whom they named D. Beatrice, the King gaue her the townes of Montalban, Capilla, Burguillos, Mondejar and Ioncos: of this confiscation Pedro Suan of Toledo had Bolano. To his brother Diego Gomes was giuen Casarrubios of the mountaine, and to Inigo Lopes of Orosco, Torija.

These things happened in the 1353. to the great discontentment of many, who did much esteeme the vertue of D. Alphonso Fernandes Cornel. The King came afterwards to Torrijos in the country of Toledo, where running at a Tourney, he was hurt in the right hand, by the which he lost such abundance of bloud as he was in danger of his life, for they could finde no meanes to stanch it. Being in this cure, he was aduertised of the arriue of Blanch of Bourbon his spowle at Vailledolit, being accompanied by the Vicont of Narbonne, and many other Noblemen and Knights of France, who had beene received with great shewes of ioy by D. Maria the Queene mother: but the King was wonderfully troubled, for he was so transported with the allurements of D. Maria of Padilla, as hee was amazed at these newes, as if hee had beene strooke with a flash of lightning, and would gladly that they had neuer spoake of marrying him; yet he must of force goe to Vailledolit, to celebrate the marriage, and to perswade him thereto, D. John Alphonso of Albuquerque returned happely out of Portugal, whether he had beene sent, and with him from Portugal, D. John de la Cerde, sonne to D. Lewis, who was sonne in law to D. Alphonso Fernandes Cornel, and came out of Affrike, whether he had retired himselfe, during the dissentions and ciuil warres of Castile, and had conducted some enterprises happening for King Alboanen against Albohacen his father. Bringing letters of fauour and re- commendation from the King of Portugal, this Prince was receiued into grace, by the King, but he gaue him not any part of his father in lawes goods. In Spaine they report a strange case of D. Maria Cornel his wife. That hauing some prouocations of desire in her husbands absence, she quencht her lust by death, thrusting vp burning fire brands into her body. Before the Kings going to Vailledolit, he made an accord with his bre- thren D. Henry and D. Tello, who were come in armes, and wel accompanied to Cigales, and then he went to celebrate his marriage much against his will, but perswaded there- vnto by D. John Alphonso of Albuquerque, who desired to see the King to haue a lawfull heire, and was in some ialousie of his owne authority, fearing least the kinsmen of D. Maria of Padilla, whom he himselfe had giuen vnto the King, should get before him in the government of the affaires, as it was likely.

The King D. Pedro quits his new spowle three dayes after his marriage.

The third day after the marriage, notwithstanding any perswasions or intreaties, which D. Maria the Queene mother, and D. Leonora Queene Dowager of Arragon, his aunt, he left his new bride, a young Princeesse of 18. yeeres of age, and went with all speed to Montalban, nere vnto Toledo, to visit Donna Maria of Padilla, by whom he was in- charmed. This vnworthy part of the Kings, did much trouble the whole court, especial- ly D. John Alphonso of Albuquerque, who finding by some signes that the King was not pleased with him by reason of this marriage, hee durst not to follow him, but retired to his houses. Don Fernand and D. John Infants of Arragon, with many other knights followed him. He tooke D. Maria of Padilla from Montalban, & brought her to Toledo. Those

A These that were about him preuayled so by their intreaties, as he returned to Vailledolit to his wife, but he stayed but two dayes, and went away againe leauing the Lady much perplexed at these strange courses.

The Queene D. Blanche retired with the Queene mother to Tordessillas, and the king returned to D. Mary of Padilla, who entertained the hatred and dislike which the king had of his wife, that shee alone might enjoy him. It is written by Diego of Valera, that among all the precious jewels which the Queene had brought out of France, there was a rich girdle, which she presented to the king her husband, the which D. Mary of Padilla hauing in her power, she found out a Jew, a Magitian, which did inchant it, so as when the king would put it on, beeing amazed, and demanding what Prodigie it might be, his mi- nions (who were allyed to his concubine) answered, that they were the goodly presents which this French Gentlewoman had brought him. Whereupon he was much incensed against this poore Lady. In the meane time D. Tello, the kings bafe brother, married D. Jeanne, the eldest daughter of D. John Nugnes de Lara deceased: whereupon by this marriage he became Lord of Biscay, and of the other places and lands aboue-mentioned, the which did much offend the king, causing him to grow into a greater furie and rage against him and the rest then before, whereof the sharpest effects were against them that reproo- ued his leud life, and the indignities he did vnto the Queene his wife: whom for spite, hee caused to be led to Arcualo with a guard, and vnder the custodie of Don Pedro Gudiel, Bishop of Segobia, and a Bourgesse of Toledo, in whome he trusted (his name was Tello Palomochio) as a prisoner, and began to displace all the Officers of her house, and al others which had beene aduanced by the fauor of D. John Alphonso of Albuquerque: hee tooke away the Office of Chamberlaine from Gutierre Fernandes of Toledo, and gaue it to Diego Garcia of Padilla, brother to his Mistres: that of Cup-bearer, which John Rodrigues of Viedma held, was giuen to Aluar Garcia of Albornoz: the allowance of diet was taken from Gutierre Gomes of Toledo, and giuen to Pero Gonzales of Mendoza, a great Lord in Alaua, from whence are descended the Dukes of Infantazgo. In Seule the king did also change many of the chiefe Officers of the Realme, which had beene aduanced by the fauour and counsell of Don John Alphonso of Albuquerque, giuing them to others that were recommended by Diego Garcia of Padilla, and John Fernandes of Hincestroça: name- ly, he tooke the government of the frontier from Don Garcia Fernandes Manriquez, and aduanced Fernand Perez of Puerto Carrevo.

Thus the king altered things within his Realme, & forced the greatest to humble them- selues, and to sue vnto the kinsfolkes and fauorites of Donna Maria of Padilla, hating all them deadly that did but tell him, that he ought to loue Donna Blanche the Queene his wife, and liue Christian-like and honestly with her: as Don Gil Carrillo of Albornoz, Arch- bishop of Toledo, had sought to do, who beeing of his counsell, and a Prelate of great dignitie in Spaine, had presumed to reprehend his disordered life in that behalfe: but hee rooke it in so ill part, as this reuerent man was forced to abandon all the liuing hee had in Spaine, and retire to Auignon to Pope Clement, by whose successor Innocent the sixth, who came to the Popedome that yeare 1353. he was made Cardinall, and in his life-time they proceeded to a new election in the Arch-bishoppricke of Toledo, and Primacie of Spaine, putting in his place one Don Blaise.

This King made himselfe to be feared, and so much hated of all the Noblemen of his Realme, as euery man made choice of a party, and fought how to assure himselfe from his fury and violence. Don John Nugnes of Prado, Master of Calatraua, a friend to Don John Alphonso of Albuquerque, retired into Arragon, to the Commanderie of Alcaniz: but the king who had a desire to haue him in his power, sought all meanes, lawfull and vn- lawfull to assure him, so as he made him come vpon his faith and promise, that he should haue no harme. This good Knight, who found himselfe guiltlesse of any crime, but that he had beene a friend to the Lord of Albuquerque, came into Castile, to the towne of Al- magro, but he was presently besegged by the kings commandement, by Don John de la Cerde, and by Peter Nugnes of Godoy, who notwithstanding did secretly aduice him to returne into Arragon, before that the king (who was gone out of Seule to come thither) were arriued: the which he would not do, saying, That he found his conscience free from Cardinal inter- ted.

Arch-bishop of Toledo forced to leave Spaine

all

*Imprisonment
and murder of D. Iohn Nu-gues of Prado, master of Calatrava.*

all rebellion, and that he had no cause to feare to put himselfe into the kings mercy: but it succeeded ill for him. The king beeing come the master came vnto him, and cast himselfe at his feet, intreating him to receiue him in his iustifications: but this cruell Prince refusing to heare him him, depriued him instantly of the Master-ship of Calatrava, the which he gaue to Diego Garcia of Padilla, and commaunded that he should bee carried prisoner to the castell of Maqueda, whereas Stephen Domingo of Auila commaunded: and there within few dayes after he was murdered by Diego Lopes of Portas, seruant to Diego Garcia of Padilla; whereof the king would haue excused himselfe, saying, That it was done without his commandement: but it appeared sufficiently that he was not discontented there-with. Going from Almagro the king came before the towne of Medellin, belonging to the Lord of Albuquerque, whereas Diego Gomes of Silua, a Knight of Galicia, commaunded the towne yielded, fearing the kings furie, and soone after the castile, the which the king in disdain of the Lord of Albuquerque, caused to be instantly razed: after which he led his army before Albuquerque, the which was held in the name of their Lord, by Martin Alphonso Botello, a Gentleman of Portugall, and vnder him commaunded Peter Escunaz Carpintero, Commander maior of Calatrava. The King hauing summoned them to yield the place, vpon refusall, he proclaymed them Rebels, whereof the Portugall, (who was not his subiect) made no accompt. The Commander excused himselfe, saying, That the place was not in his power. Wherefore he past on towards Cobdefera, another place belonging to Don Iohn Alphonso, the which he could not take, so as after some skirmishes he left Don Henry Earle of Transmare, and Don Frederic Master of S. James, his brethren, who followed him against their wils, and he came to Caceres. Afterwards he resolved to send ambassadors into Portugall, whither the Lord of Albuquerque was retired, to demand him of the king of Portugall as his subiect and a rebell: but the king of red, to demand him of the king of Portugall as his subiect and a rebell: but the king of Portugall excused himselfe, and sought to bring D. Iohn Alphonso of Albuquerque again into fauour: but it tooke no effect: for D. Iohn Alphonso entred into league with the Earle of Transmare, who was one of these Ambassadors, and with Don Frederic Master of Saint James, and they proceeded so farre, as beeing thrust on with hatred and disdain of their king, they fought to perswade D. Pedro, Infant of Portugall, to ioyne with them, promising to make him king of Castile, shewing him that hee had a title; beeing Nephew or Grand-child to King Sancho the Braue, sonne to his daughter Donna Beatrice. But the king Don Alphonso his father crost this proiect, and would not suffer his sonne to engage himselfe in this enterprife.

1354.

Second marriage of King D. Pedro his first wife yet living

The more to haue modestie in contempt, and to ouerthrow all diuine and humane lawes, the king Don Pedro, in the yeare 1354. without any dispensation from the Pope, but onely assisted by two bishops his owne creatures, Sancho of Auila, and Iohn of Salamanca, caused himselfe by their sentence to bee separated from the Queen Donna Blanche, and in the towne of Cuellar, hee married a Ladie, widow to Don Diego of Haro, called Donna Leanne of Castro, daughter to Don Pedro of Castro, of whose exquisite beauty hee was much enamoured: hauing married her, hee had newes of this league made by his brethren with Don Iohn Alphonso of Albuquerque, wherefore hee went from Cuellar, and gaue this Lady her last adiew, who retired to Duegnas, where shee past her dayes, hauing brought the King a sonne, who was named Iohn, and causing herselfe to be styled Queene of Castile and Leon. To oppose himselfe against this new conspiracie, the king beeing come to Castro Xeris, he made the marriage of the Infant Don Iohn of Arragon his cousin, with Donna Isabella, the second daughter of the deceased Don Iohn Nugnes of Lara. And for that hee vnderstood that Don Tello his brother followed the partie of Don Henry and Don Frederic his other brethren, he would haue Don Iohn of Arragon take vpon him the title of Lord of Biscay. From thence hee past to Toro, leauing Donna Maria of Padilla at Castro Xeris, beeing readie to be deliuered of a daughter which was named Donna Constance, future wife to the Duke of Lancaster an Englishman. The Confederates were fortified by Don Fernand of Castro, brother to Donna Leanne, married, and suddenly abandoned by the King, in hatred of the contempt of his sister.

This king seeing that so many great personages rebelled against him, imputing all the cause

A cause of this mischiefe vnto his wife the Queene Donna Blanche, he caused her to be taken out of the castell of Arcualo, and conducted to Toledo, Don Iohn Fernandes of Hinestroza, Vncle to Donna Maria of Padilla, hauing taken the charge thereof. This pore Princeesse seeing her selfe in her enemies hands, and attending nothing but death from her cruell husband, as soone as she was entred into the cittie of Toledo, shee intreated them to lead her directly vnto the great Church, vnder color of deuotion, the which was granted her: but beeing once entred, she would not go forth, but challenged the priuiledge of the place, so as presently all the cittie of Toledo shewed themselves for her, euery one pitying her vnworthie vsage: wherefore Don Iohn Fernandes of Hinestroza, durst not attempt to force her, but returned vnto the king, beeing at Segure de la Sierre, whither he was come to make warre against Don Frederic Master of Saint James. At this newes the king came in a furie to Ocagne, and there in the place of Don Frederic, Master of S. James, hee created D. Iohn Garcia of Padilla, Lord of Villagera, brother to his mistis D. Maria of Padilla, the first of all the Masters of S. James that was married. In the mean time the Inhabitants of Toledo in generall, resolved to keepe the Queene within their towne, from all violence, and not to receiue the king, vntill he were reconciled, and did promise to lead an honest life with her. As the incensed King thought to be reuenged of all these things, he found himselfe abandoned by many Noblemen of his trayne, among the which were the Infants of Arragon his cousins, and Don Lopes Sanches of Abendagno, great commander of Castile, who beeing discontented with his excesses, as well in the course of his life, as in the gouernement of his Realme, and at his ill vsage of the Nobility, they ioyined with his brethren, and with the city of Toledo, and all those of Andalusia, and other Noblemen and Communalities, who altogether made petition vnto the King, beseeching him, that for his owne honour, and the publike good, he would leaue the company of Donna Maria of Padilla, and liue with the Queene Donna Blanche his wife, as God had commaunded him, and common honestie required: and that he should gouerne his realme by the good and faithfull counsell of good men.

*Master of S.
James married*

Donna Leonora his aunt, Queene Dowager of Arragon, presented this petition vnto him, the reuerence of this Lady gaue the confederates hope to obtayne something, but she laboured in vaine: for the king was so much incensed against the confederates, and on the other side did so doate on D. Maria of Padilla, as he made no accompt of this admonition: so as the whole Realme was in combustion, and the Princes, with others of their faction, came to Medina del campo, whereon they seized. There Don Iohn Alphonso of Albuquerque was poisoned by an Italian Phisition called Paul Romain, beeing hired thereunto by the king. He was Grand-child to Don Denis King of Portugal: within few dayes after there were about seuen thousand horse at Medina del campo, holding the Q. D. Blanches party: and the confederates presented a new petition vnto the king, who had taken his way to Toro, and the chiefe of them spake vnto him about Tejadillo, neere vnto Toro, beeing fifty Knights in field of either side, but they preuayled nothing: for the king leauing all, went to Vruagna, where Donna Maria of Padilla was, to bee merry with her. E Queene Mary the kings mother receiued the Confederates into Toro, and wrought so, as she drew the king thither, where they began to make a kind of accord, and to dispose of the Offices of the kings house, and of Governments and places, displacing some, and aduancing others, as they thought good: and namely, they disappointed all them of Padilla, and their adherents: the which the king ratified, but against his will, as it appeared soone after: for he made a dispatch from Tordeillas, to Don Pedro Infant of Arragon, Earle of Ampurias, who gouerned the country of Arragon, the King his Nephew beeing then in Cattelogne, by the which he complained of that his subiects had forced him vnto: intreating him by the bond of their alliance to be his friend: and thereupon he came to Segobia, in the beginning of the yeare 1355. and from thence to Burgos, where hee called a generall assembly of the Estates, in the which hee complained greatly of the Queene his mother, and of the Princes and Noblemen confederates, saying, that they had detayned him prisoner in the city of Toro, and had forced him to do many things against his will and dignitie: demanding mony from his subiects, that hee might make war against them, and punish them according to their merits, the which he obtained. A fter the 1355.

D. Iohn Alphonso of Albuquerque poisoned.

Murders committed by Don Pedro king of Castile.

Cruel executions in the city of Toledo.

Pity of a son ill rewarded by D. Pedro.

Queen mother embassie.

the end of the Estates he came to Medina del campo, where he caused to be slaine in his owne lodging one day in the holy weeke, Peter Ruis of Villega, Gouvernor generall of the frontier of Castile, and Sancho Ruis of Rojas: and caused many to be put in prison. Returning to Toro, he had an incounter with Don Henries men, who went to ioyne with Don Frederic his brother at Talauera, from whence they after marched to Toledo, and had means to enter, although their comming was not pleasing to all the Citizens, beeing the meanes to draw a warre upon them, as it happened, for that the king followed them soone after, and entered as it were by force, constraining them to depart. This was a meanes for him to haue the Queene his wife in his power, who was poorly defended by the diuided Toledains, so as shee was sent to the castle of Siguença. The king caused about foure and twenty Burgeses to be executed in the citie by lustice, who had taken the Queenes part too openly: among the which a Gold-smith, about 80. yeares old, beeing condemned, and ready to be executed, his sonne, a young man of eighteen yeares of age, presented himselfe, who (moued with pietie and a filiall loue) besought the king to do him the grace, not to suffer his father to end the dayes of his old age after that manner, offering to suffer death for him. The king (who had no royall part in him) accepted the condition, and caused this young innocent man to be executed, who in regard of his pietie did merit to saue his fathers life, and to liue himselfe with honour and reward due to so great vertue: the name of this young man through the negligence of Writers, is suppressed. After these dishonorable exploites, the king went to Cuenca, which held for Queene Blanche, but he could not take it: whereupon he marched against Toro, and brought all the warre into the territories of Leon and Biscay, where his men were twise defeated, by D. Tello, and John of Abendagno, with the death and imprisonment of many. The King being before Toro, he had newes of the death of Don John Garcia of Padilla, brother to Donna Maria, his mistris, being chosen master of S. Iames, against his brother Don Frederic, whereat he was much grieved.

During this heauines, there came vnto the campe, William Bishop of Bolonia, Cardinall of Saint Marie in Cosmedin, Legate to Pope Innocent the sixth, beeing sent to pacifie the troubles of Castile, and to reconcile the King and Queene: but he lost his labor, and obtrayned nothing of him, but that hee procured the deliuerance of Peter Barroja, a Doctor of the Lawes, and bishop of Siguença, who was prisoner, for that he had held the Queenes party. The king wrought so, partly by force, and partly by paroles and promises, as hee was suffered to enter into Toro, vpon condition that hee should not kill any man: the which he promised, and kept according to his faith: for he was no sooner entered but he caused to be slaine within the castell, in the presence of the Queene his mother, Peter Stephen Carpenter, Master of Calatraua, Ruis Gonzales of Castagneda, Martin Alphonso Tello, and Alphonso Telles, the which Queene Mary did so abhorre, as shee (wounded, and was in danger of death: and soone after, not able to endure the sight of her sons cruelties, she demanded leaue to retire into Portugall to her father king D. Alphonso, who caused her to be slayne soone after, for that shee liued vnchast with Don Martin Telles. The King Don Pedro did also cause to be slaine in Toro, Gomes Manriques of Orihuela, Diego Perez of Godoy, Alphonso Games, great Commander of Calatraua, and many others.

The knights which defended the towne of Cuenca hearing of these bloudie executions left Castile, and retired into Arragon: others which held other places, distrusting their strength, abandoned them, and past into France: wherefore the king thinking himselfe now in a manner a conqueror, transported with a tyrannous hatred against the Nobility of his Realme, yea against his owne blood, he resolved to roote them out one after another, not trusting in any one of them. Having besieged Palençuela, he watched an opportunity to kill the two Infants of Arragon his cousins, Don Frederic his brother, who was partly reconciled, and Don John de la Corde: but by reason of the absence of Don Tello, his brother (whom he would catch in the same net) he deferred it: and the better to surprize him, he made shew to pardon him, and Don John of Abendagno also, and to remit all that was past. This Don John of Abendagno was one of the chiefe Knights of Biscay, and without whose aduise Don Tello, Lord of Biscay, did not any thing. Notwithstanding as the fauours of great men are vncertaine and wauering, Don Tello enuying him, for that he was rich, and welbeloued in the countrie, caused him to be slaine awhile after in the towne of Bilboa. Palençuela being taken by composition, the king Don Pedro made a tourney at Tordeillas, where he had resolved to murder Don Frederic his brother, and others: notwithstanding hauing by the same treason, caused two other Knights to be slaine, the one of Toledo, the other of Vailledolit, he thought it sufficient for this time, and deferred this execution vntill another oportunitie.

Don Henry who was in the Asturia's, seeing that all were brought vnder, and reconciled vnto the king, he demanded leaue as farre off, and obtained it (for hee would not trust the king but vpon good termes) and went to serue the French king. Passing by the mountaines of Asturia, he escaped many ambushes which the king had layd for him, notwithstanding his assurance giuen, but he was ordayned to better fortune: wherefore beeing come into Biscay, and hauing there conferred with Don Tello his brother, hee embarked and landed at Rochel, from whence he went to Paris to King John then raigning, who receiued him, and honoured him much. The king of Arragon was aduertised of all these troubles and alterations, beeing then resident at Perpignan, for the which he was not forie. At that time there raigned three bad kings in Spaine, this Don Pedro king of Castile, Don Pedro of Arragon, and Don Charles of Nauarre, violent Princes, who whilest they liued, did continually afflict both themselves and their subiects, by tyrannies: so as they purchased the surnames of Bad and Cruell.

Charles the second of that name, and the thirtieth king of Nauarre.

Leauing the Estate of Castile at this time somewhat quiet, we will returne to the affaires of Nauarre, the which we left at the death of Donna Ieanne, wife to King Philip of Eureux: to whome of three sonnes, Charles, Philip, and Lewis: Charles the eldest succeeded to the Crowne of Nauarre, who was surnamed the bad, by reason of the troubles he caused, as well on this side, as beyond the Pyreneé mountaines, and of his strange disposition. Beeing called by the three Estates of the Realme, hee came in the yeare 1350. and was crowned in the citie of Pampelona, in an assembly made to that end after the manner of his Predecessors, swearing to obserue the lawes and liberties of the country. His coronation was accompanied with some bountie to the Cathedrall church of Pampelona, to the which among other things, he gaue a great crosse of siluer, enameled with Flower de Luces azure.

During his coronation, some of his people mutined, pretending a breach of their priuiledges, whome the king did punish so seuerely, causing many to be hanged, and to be executed by other cruell punishments, as the cure farre exceeded the disease. With the like violence he afflicted the Nobility of Nauarre, so as they decayed greatly: and he shewed himselfe in all his actions inconstant, wauering, and light of beleefe: If hee had any good in him, it was a certaine respect he bare to Clergie men, and to schollers. At his coming the king of Arragon sent a Secretarie of his vnto him, called Peter of Tarrega, to confirme the League which was betwixt these two Realmes: and soone after hee sent him another ambassage, by Don Lope Earle of Luna, and Don John Fernandes of Heredia, Castellan of Amposta, for a more ample confirmation of the league and alliance betwixt them two: propounding vnto the king of Nauarre an alliance by marriage, to the end he might hold the kingdomes of Nauarre and Arragon well vnited, for the king of Arragon feared much, lest Don Pedro king of Castile, (who was a violent, dangerous, and faithlesse Prince) should breake the peace that was betwixt the two Realmes, imbracing the quarrels of the Queene dewager of Arragon and of her children, and should ioyne with Nauarre, by some alliance which might be preiudiciall vnto him: Hereupon the Ambassadors propounded a marriage betwixt Don Charles king of Nauarre, and one of the daughters of the king of Sicily, who was of the house of Arragon. And for that it was

D. Tello Lord of Biscay caused D. John of Abendagno to be murdered.

4.

Nauarre

Manners of K. Charles the 2.

bruted,

Interview of the Kings of Navarre and
Castile.

Interview betwixt the kings
of Arragon
and Castile.

Genealogie of
Navarre.

bruted, that the king of Castile (who had not then concluded a marriage with Blanche of A Bourbon) pretended to marrie Blanche of Navarre, sister to this King Charles, and widow to Philip of Valois the French king, he was intreated to hinder it. King Charles who had a desire, and was counselled to take a wife in France, excused himselfe from marrying with Sicile, assuring the king of Arragon, that the Queen Dowager of France would not marrie any more: for it had beene a custome long obserued in France, that the Queenes remayning widowes, how young soeuer, did not marrie againe: finally, hee concluded with the Ambassadors of an interview betwixt the king of Arragon and him: but before it could be effected, Don Pedro king of Castile (who had beene aduertised of all which had past betwixt the King Don Charles, and the ambassadours of Arragon) wrought so as he drew the King of Navarre to Bourgos, where there was great embracings, and rich presents giuen of either side, in the year 1351. as we haue sayd. At this interview was Philip brother to king Charles. Being returned into Navarre, and hauing many great designs in his head, hee made preparation to passe into France: Whereof the King of Arragon being aduertised, he sent to summon him of his promise, that they should meete together, whereunto he yeelded, assigning the place at Mombanc, where by the same meanes he should visit, passing by Huelca, his Nieces D. Constance and D. Jeane, Infants of Arragon. Then the King Don Charles tooke his way towards France, leading with him his two brethren, Don Philip and Don Lewis. The interview of these Princes at Mombanc, made them no better friends, neither did they conclude that which D. Pedro king of Arragon did expect.

The king of Navarre being come into France, he beganne to make claime to many things, for besides the Earledomes of Champagne and Brie, which he pretended to belong vnto him, hee made a title to the Duchie of Bourgongne, by reason of his mother Queene Jeane, issued from that house of Bourgongne by her mother, with many other claimes, wherein king John had no intent to do him right, finding it so by his Council.

He had for his chief aduersarie another Charles or John, according to the French Histories, who was Constable of France, of the house of Castile, Earle of Angoulesme, sonne to Don Alphonso de la Cerde, of whom wee haue often made mention, whereby there were great insolencies, murders, and rebellions committed throughout the Realme of France, as we will touch briefly in passing, for that these quarrels belong rather to the Historie of France then Spaine.

The king of Navarre being in these poursuites, by the course of Iustice, before the Estates of France, and the Courts of Parliament, King John thinking to pacifie him, and to make him more tractable, gaue him one of his daughters in marriage, and in recompence of his demands, gaue him Mante and Meulan: but this did not abate his pride, but wrought a contrarie effect. This Princeesse called Jeane, was the onely wife of King Charles of Navarre, who had a great and a noble issue by her. Charles was the first borne of this marriage, who was king after his father Philip, who dyed young, Peter who was Earle of Mortaign in Normandie. Moreouer, they had these daughters following, Mary who was Countesse of Denia, married to Don Alphonso of Arragon, Blanche who died at the age of thirteene yeares, and Jeane future Duchesse of Brittain, and after that Queene of England.

Of the Earle of Mortaign, some Histories say, is issued one sonne named Peter of Pe-ralta, who was Constable of Navarre, the stemme of the Marquis of Falces, yet by the feminine line, who are also Earles of Saint Esteuan. Before the marriage of King Charles hee had a bastard sonne, called Don Leon of Navarre, or Lyonel, from whom are descended the Marquises of Cortes, Marshals of Navarre, begotten of a Gentlewoman of the house of Euge. Of him was borne Don Philip, the first of that line, Marshall of Navarre, of Don Philip was borne Don Pedro, of him Don Philip and Don Pedro brethren: of Don Pedro another Don Pedro, all successiue Marshals of Navarre. In this last Don Pedro sayled the Masculine line of D. Lyonel: for hee left onely one daughter, called Donna Hieronyma of Navarre, who was first wife to Don John of Benauides, a Castillian Knight, who was also Marshall of Navarre in regard of her: and to her second

Murder of
the Constable of France by
the king of Navarre.

A cond husband hee had Don Martin of Corduba and Velasco, Earle of Alcaudere, who was in our time Marshall of Navarre. This is the posterity of the blood royall of Navarre, descended of this king Charles, who pursuing with all violence his rights against the French King, who held the Duchie of Bourgongne and other lands, which had beene the patrimony of his Predecessors, he had for aduersary (as we haue sayd) Charles of Spaine: and such was the hatred betwixt them, by reason of these pretensions, as in the end all France was set on fire with ciuill wars, and the English were drawne in by the king of Navarre, who was supported by them: who to be reuenged of his enemy D. Charles of Spaine, Constable and Earle of Angoulesme, both being then in Normandy, he caused him to be surprized in the night in the towne of Aigle, and murdered in his bed, by the hands of D. Rodrigo of Viz, D. John Ramir of Arrellan, D. Corbaran of Leet, the Barrons of Garro and Antiede, and other Knights and souldiers of Navarre. Hee was so farre from dissembling this fact, as he confessed it, and did iustifie it to be done by his commandement, and that he had iustly slaine him: whereat the king, and the whole court were much troubled, seeing the great impudencie of the king of Navarre, the which was enterrayned by many within the Realme which did adhere vnto him, besides the league he had with the English, to the which he also fought to draw D. Pedro king of Arragon, who notwithstanding would not heare of it, for that he was allyed to the French king, whose friendship he resolved to entertaine. To prevent the mischiefs which might grow by such furies, King John was forced to dissemble, and by promise of impunity, gifts, and yeelding of townes and places, according to the demands and pretensions of the King of Navarre, seeke to break the league which he had treated with the English, yea giuing him the Duke of Aniou his son in hostage, to draw him to Court, where being come, the king made a shew that he would arraigne him, but it proued a least: for hauing caused him to come before him on his knees, and to craue pardon, he pardoned him the Constables murder, and all that he had committed against the Crowne of France and his authoritie, Queene Blanche, widow to K. Philip, his sister, and Queene Jeane his wife being intercessors for him: but this reconciliation was soone troubled: for the king of Navarre thinking that the French king had rather dissembled his displeasure, then forgotten it, did not quire the alliances which he had made to the prejudice of France, but did stil intertaine secret practises both within and without the Realme: and as he was turbulent, and cuer full of icalousie and distrust, King John hauing called the Estates of his Realme, and shewed the necessities of war, demanding mony for the leuie of 30000. men, the King of Navarre sought to hinder this subuention, and did contradict it with all his power: notwithstanding it was granted. King John being wonderfully incensed at the King of Navarre's impudency and pride, who in stead of assisting him, like a good son-in-law, who had beene newly absolved by him from so great a crime, shewed himselfe a violent aduersarie to his designs, he sought a fit occasion to punish him, the which fell out opportunely in the city of Rouan, at the reception of the Dauphin Charles in Normandy, who had beene newly aduanced to that Duchie; whither came the Noblemen of the cuntry, namely, the king of Navarre, as Earle of Eureux, a member of the Duchie, where as he with many others were surprized: the King was sent prisoner to the castle of Alleux in Pallueil, and some Noblemen were executed, as you may read at large in the French Historie.

King John had aduertised Don Pedro King of Arragon, of all those proceedings, that he might see he had done nothing lightly, being a reasonable thing, that Kings, how soeueraigne soeuer, should iustifie their actions, and to make them apparent, else they were to be reputed Tyrants, and to be hated of all the world, as violent and vniust. Gaston Phelip then Earle of Foix, who had married Agnes, sister to the king of Navarre, was more discontented then any other at his imprisonment, who passing into Spaine, sought to incense Don Pedro King of Arragon his brother-in-law, and to procure him to declare himselfe enemy to King John, if he did not release the King of Navarre, but the king D. Pedro would not yeeld vnto it: for he held the friendship of France to be a firm support for his Estates: besides he stil feared a war betwixt him and D. Pedro; yet he promised to be an intercessor for him to K. John, and to intreat him to shew his clemency, & to intreat his prisoner without passion, but by the course of Iustice, & moreover not to exact all his right of him,

Interview of
the Kings of Nauarre and
Castile.

Interview betwixt the kings
of Arragon
and Castile.

Genealogie of
Nauarre.

bruted, that the king of Castile (who had not then concluded a marriage with Blanche of A Bourbon) pretended to marrie Blanche of Nauarre, sister to this King Charles, and widow to Philip of Valois the French king, he was intreated to hinder it. King Charles who had a desire, and was counselled to take a wife in France, excused himselfe from marrying with Sicile, assuring the king of Arragon, that the Queen Dowager of France would not marrie any more: for it had beene a custome long obserued in France, that the Queenes remayning widowes, how young soeuer, did not marrie againe: finally, hee concluded with the Ambassadors of an interview betwixt the king of Arragon and him: but before it could be effected, Don Pedro king of Castile (who had beene aduertised of all which had past betwixt the King Don Charles, and the ambassadors of Arragon) wrought so as he drew the King of Nauarre to Bourgos, where there was great embracings, and rich presents giuen of either side, in the yeare 1351. as we haue sayd. At this interview was Philip brother to king Charles. Being returned into Nauarre, and hauing many great desseins in his head, hee made preparation to passe into France: Whereof the King of Arragon being aduertised, he sent to summon him of his promise, that they should meete together, wherunto he yielded, assigning the place at Momblanc, where by the same meanes he should visit, passing by Huesca, his Nieces D. Constance and D. Ieanne, Infants of Arragon. Then the King Don Charles tooke his way towards France, leading with him his two brethren, Don Philip and Don Lewis. The interview of these Princes at Momblanc, made them no better friends, neither did they conclude that which D. Pedro king of Arragon did expect.

The king of Nauarre being come into France, he beganne to make claime to many things, for besides the Earledomes of Champagne and Brie, which he pretended to belong vnto him, hee made a title to the Duchie of Bourgogne, by reason of his mother Queene Ieanne, issued from that house of Bourgogne by her mother, with many other claimes, wherein king John had no intent to do him right, finding it so by his Council.

He had for his chief aduersarie another Charles or John, according to the French Historie, who was Constable of France, of the house of Castile, Earle of Angouleme, sonne to Don Alphonso de la Cerde, of whome wee haue often made mention, whereby there were great insolencies, murders, and rebellions committed throughout the Realme of France, as we will touch briefly in passing, for that these quarrels belong rather to the Historie of France then Spaine.

The king of Nauarre being in these poursuites, by the course of Iustice, before the Estates of France, and the Courts of Parliament, King John thinking to pacifie him, and to make him more tractable, gaue him one of his daughters in marriage, and in recompence of his demands, gaue him Mante and Meulan: but this did not abate his pride, but wrought a contrarie effect. This Princess called Ieanne, was the onely wife of King Charles of Nauarre, who had a great and a noble issue by her. Charles was the first borne of this marriage, who was king after his father Philip, who dyed young, Peter who was Earle of Mortaign in Normandie. Moreouer, they had these daughters following, Mary who was Countesse of Denia, married to Don Alphonso of Arragon, Blanche who died at the age of thirteene yeares, and Ieanne future Duchesse of Brittain, and after that Queene of England.

Of the Earle of Mortaign, some Histories say, is issued one sonne named Peter of Peralra, who was Constable of Nauarre, the stemme of the Marquis of Falces, yet by the feminine line, who are also Earles of Saint Esteuan. Before the marriage of King Charles hee had a bastard sonne, called Don Leon of Nauarre, or Lyonel, from whome are descended the Marquises of Cortes, Marshals of Nauarre, begotten of a Gentlewoman of the house of Euce. Of him was borne Don Philip, the first of that line, Marshall of Nauarre, of Don Philip was borne Don Pedro, of him Don Philip and Don Pedro brethren of Don Pedro another Don Pedro, all successiue Marshals of Nauarre. In this last Don Pedro sayled the Masculine line of D. Lyonel: for hee left onely one daughter, called Donna Hieronyma of Nauarre, who was first wife to Don John of Benauides, a Castilian Knight, who was also Marshall of Nauarre in regard of her: and to her second

Murder of
the Constable
of France by
the king of
Nauarre.

A cond husband hee had Don Martin of Corduba and Velasco, Earle of Alcaudete, who was in our time Marshall of Nauarre. This is the posterity of the blood royall of Nauarre, descended of this king Charles, who pursuing with all violence his rights against the French King, who held the Duchie of Bourgogne and other lands, which had beene the patrimony of his Predecessors, he had for aduersary (as we haue sayd) Charles of Spaine: and such was the hatred betwixt them, by reason of these pretensions, as in the end all France was set on fire with ciuill wars, and the English were drawne in by the king of Nauarre, who was supported by them: who to be reuenged of his enemy D. Charles of Spain, Constable and Earle of Angouleme, both being then in Normandy, he caused him to be surprized in the night in the towne of Aigle, and murdered in his bed, by the hands of D. Rodrigo of Viz, D. John Ramir of Arrellan, D. Corbaran of Leet, the Barrons of Garro and Antiede, and other Knights and souldiers of Nauarre. Hee was so farre from dissembling this fact, as he confessed it, and did iustifie it to be done by his commandement, and that he had iustly slaine him: whereat the king, and the whole court were much troubled, seeing the great impudencie of the king of Nauarre, the which was enteynayed by many within the Realme which did adhere vnto him, besides the league he had with the English, to the which he also fought to draw D. Pedro king of Arragon, who notwithstanding would not heare of it, for that he was allyed to the French king, whose friendship he resolved to entertaine. To preuent the mischiefs which might grow by such furies, King John was forced to dissemble, and by promise of impunity, gifts, and yielding of townes and places, according to the demands and pretensions of the King of Nauarre, seeke to break the league which he had treated with the English, yea giuing him the Duke of Aniou his son in hostage, to draw him to Court, where being come, the king made a shew that he would arraigne him, but it proued a ieast: for hauing caused him to come before him on his knees, and to craue pardon, he pardoned him the Constables murder, and all that he had committed against the Crowne of France and his authoritie, Queene Blanche, widow to K. Philip, his sister, and Queene Ieanne his wife being intercessors for him: but this reconciliation was soone troubled: for the king of Nauarre thinking that the French king had rather dissembled his displeasure, then forgotten it, did not quit the allyances which he had made to the prejudice of France, but did stil intertaine secret practises both within and without the Realme: and as he was turbulent, and euer full of ielousie and distrust, King John hauing called the Estates of his Realme, and shewed the necessities of war, demanding money for the leuie of 30000. men, the King of Nauarre sought to hinder this subuention, and did contradict it with all his power: notwithstanding it was granted. King John being wonderfully incensed at the King of Nauarre's impudency and pride, who in stead of assisting him, like a good son-in-law, who had beene newly absolved by him from so great a crime, shewed himselfe a violent aduersarie to his desseins, he sought a fit occasion to punish him, the which fell out opportunely in the city of Rouan, at the reception of the Dauphin Charles in Normandy, who had beene newly aduanced to that Duchie; whither came the Noblemen of the cuntry, namely, the king of Nauarre, as Earle of Eureux, a member of the Duchie, where as he with many others were surprized: the King was sent prisoner to the castle of Allex in Pallueil, and some Noblemen were executed, as you may read at large in the French Historie.

King John had aduertised Don Pedro King of Arragon, of all those proceedings, that he might see he had done nothing lightly, being a reasonable thing, that Kings, how soeueraigne soeuer, should iustifie their actions, and to make them apparent, else they were to be reputed Tyrants, and to be hated of all the world, as violent and vniust. Gaston Phebur then Earle of Foix, who had married Agnes, sister to the king of Nauarre, was more discontented then any other at his imprisonment, who passing into Spaine, sought to incense Don Pedro King of Arragon his brother-in-law, and to procure him to declare himselfe enemy to King John, if he did not release the King of Nauarre, but the king D. Pedro would not yeeld vnto it: for he held the friendship of France to be a firm support for his Estates: besides he stil feared a war betwixt him and D. Pedro, yet he promised to be an intercessor for him to K. John, and to intreat him to shew his clemency, & to intreat his prisoner without passion, but by the course of Iustice, & moreover not to exact all his right of him, the place of Seneschall; which was that which we call Constable: and hee had in like manner the generall command over the gallies and shippes. The king left his Vncle Don Pedro Earle of Ribagorça and Ampurias, Regent for Gouvernour in his absence, and parting from Roses with twenty great shippes, five Gallies, and many other vessells, hee arrived in a port called Comite, three miles from Alger in Sardynia, but with great difficultie by reason of the torment: There passed in his companie John Graille, Captall of Buch, with many other Noblemen strangers, and of his owne subjects, Don Lope of Luna, whome hee had made Earle of Luna, for his merits and good seruices: Philip of Castro, John Ximenes of Vireza, John Martines of Luna, Fernand Ruis of Thausit, Blasco Fernandes of Hemenes of Vireza, John Martines of Luna, Fernand Ruis of Thausit, Blasco Fernandes of Hemenes of Vireza, Don Stephano of Arragon, sonne to the Duke of Athens, Don Pedro of Xerica, Gilbert Scintilla, Olpho Prochita, Alphonso Roger of Loria, Pedro Maza; Raymond Ruifeco, Gisbert of Castelle, Mathew Mercier, Gouernor of Castelluis, Pedro Lopes of Bracis: moreover, Don Hugues Vicount of Cardona, Bernardin of Cabrera, sonne to Bernard, Andrew Vicount of Canner, Othon of Moncade, Roger Bernard Vicount of Canard, Andrew Vicount of Heredia, Don Arnaud Roger, and Raymond of Palliars, Artal of Istelbon, Don Fernand of Heredia, Don Arnaud Roger, and Raymond of Palliars, Artal of Istelbon, William Bellera, Bernard Cruillia the elder, and Bernard Cruillia the younger, the first famous for the warres of Italy, the other newly come from being a page, Ponce Ferrouillet, Francis Ceruia, Galcerand of Pinos, Galuan Anglesole, with other Noblemen, Arragonais, Cattelans, and Valencians, whereof some had charge of men, the rest followed the kings Cornet.

The generall History of Spain.

Marian (who caused himselfe to be called King of Sardinia)) hearing of this great preparedness, and fearing due punishment, sent vnto the king, as he was ready to imbarke, to offer him all obedience, and to deliuer him the places which hee had taken, with a good summe of money: but the king past on. At his arriuall he found the enemies had taken the towne of Eglish, a strong place, and of importance, but the castell had beene defended by the Safferi, and the castell, with those of Oria and Osoli, were the forts which held forth the Aragonois in the Iland. The seerge was layd to Alguer, and that place was furiously battered and assaulted: to diuert which seerge, there were ten gallies of Genoa, which shewed themselves at sea, and Marian with Matheu D'Oria vpon the land, hauing in his company two thousand horse, and fiftene thousand foote, who striued in vaine: for Alguer yielded, notwithstanding that the king fell sicke, and his armie was grievously afflicted with the plague, and Marian had no other fruites of his paines, but the taking of the castell of Quira. Marian was allyed to Don Pedro of Xerica, the which disappointed many good exploits, many conditions of peace beeing often propounded, whereunto the king was often drawne and inclined. During this seerge there came thirty Venetian Gallies, to ioyn with the army of Arragon: and thither did Abraham King of Tunes and Buliens, send an ambassage to the king D. Pedro to conclude a peace with him, in consideration of a tribute of 2000. doubloons, which he promised to pay him yearly. After the yielding of Alguer, the king of Arragon past to Caillieri, where hauing called the Estates of Sardinia, at the least from those places which held his party, hee condemned Gerard Earle of Donoratico, as the motiue and fauourer of Marians rebellion: so as the famous family of Donoratico was extinct in Sardinia. Those of Malespine were in like manner forced to retire to Nice, and other lands which they had in Prouence, and to leaue the Iland. Marian kept the field for a time, and had many light encounters with the kings menbur in the end by the intreatie of his friends, he obtayned a peace, excusing his rebellion vpon the kings severity, and the vnjust proceedings of his ministers: and for that during these wars of Sardinia, the Pope had reconciled the two common-weales of Venice and Genoa, who had made him vmper of their controuerfies, the king shewed himselfe more playable to treatise of peace with the Genouois, for the which he was wonderfull importuned by the Princes. Matters standing vpon these termes, D. Pedro returned into Spaine, and from thence past to Auignon, where as the Pope propounded, that he should leaue the Iland of Corfica in the Genouois hand, to enioy it quietly, vpon condition they should hold it of the kings of Arragon, and do them homage for it, and paying him rent, the which theking yielded vnto: but he demanded an excessive tribute, that is, 50000. florins of gold euery yeare.

A The Geneuois reflecting this burthen, as too grieuous, did shew, that they had right to that Iland, about two hundred yeares before, by donations made vnto them by the Popes. The Duke of Milan dealt also in these treaties, and pretended the lands of Galluri in Sardinia, by hereditarie right, as descending from the daughter of Nino Iudge of Galluri, of the familie of Viscontez.

All these controuersies were left vndecided, neither could the Pope, nor other Mediators bring the parties to any conclusion: and vpon these occasions the Iland of Sardinia was againe troubled with seditions and reuolts, whereof Matthew D'Oria was the chiefe author, who did also ingage Marian Iudge of Arborea. Whilest the king was in Arragon, he made Denia an Earldome, to the which he did aduance D. Alphonso of Arragon, son to D. Pedro Earle of Ribagorça, and likewise Vich, the which he gaue to Don Bernardin of Cabrera, son to Don Bernard. After his returne into Spaine, the treatie of peace betwixt him and the Common-weale of Genoua was againe debated before the Pope, by the Ambassadors of both parties: but all came to nothing: wherefore the tumults increasing in Sardinia, and Matthew D'Oria hauing forced the castell of Oria, the king sent D. Gilbert Chintilla thither with what forces he could, and entred into a cruell war against Castile in the yeare 1356. the cause whereof was as followeth.

7 Don Pedro king of Castile being at some peace with his subiects, and sojourning in the citie of Seuille, he went one day to Saint Lucar of Barameda, to see the fishing of Thuns, which is very plentifull in those parts: where it happened, that as the army of Arragon (consisting of ten gallies and some other vessells) commanded by Francis Perillos, pait along that Coast, to go into France, in fauour of King Iohn, against the English, they met with two shippes of Genoa laden with oyles, which the gallies had pourfued, and taken in the port of Saint Lucar: whereuppon the king of Castile ( who was vpon the place) gaue the Admirall of Arragon to vnderstand, that that prize was an iniurie done vnto him, and therefore he shold restore the ships, with their ladings and furniture : whereof the Admirall Perillos made no accompt, saying, that they were shippes belonging to the enemies of his king: and the Arragon Authors say, that Perillos entred euén into the mouth of Guadalquibir, and their made prey of all he found: whereat the king of Castile being moued, he caused all the Cartelan shippes and Merchants to bee arrested within his Realme, and seized vpon all their goods and merchandise. And as he was cholericke and furious, not respecting peace, truce, league nor allyance whatsoever, hee sent to denounce warre against the Arragonois, and began to put it in execution. Notwithstanding that he offered to recompence vnto the Merchants, whome his Admirall had spoyled, and to make all other honest satisfactions accustomed betwixt Prince and Prince.

All this prevaileth not: for about the end of the yeare 1356. hee sent troupes of horſe and foote to ſpoyle the territories of Valence, towards Mufcia, and alſo of Molina, thruſt on by ſome about him, who were deſirous of ſtirres, thinking to aſſure and increaſe their Eſtates by the meanes of forraine warres: ſo as the king of Arragon found himſelfe ſuddenly engaged in a dangerous warre againſt a mighty enemy: to prevent the which, hee drew vnto him Lewis brother to the King of Nauarre, Governour of that Countrey, and had from thence ſuch ſuccours, as the Eſtate of their affaires could well beare: wherein Lewis ſhewed himſelfe ſo diſcreet and wiſe, as the King of Caſtile held him a neuter betwixt both parties. Moreover, he called vnto him out of France, Henry Earle of Tranſtamarra, baſe brother to the king of Caſtile, and much hated by him, who made himſelfe Vaſſall to the Crown of Arragon, and had from the King the lands of Villegaffe, Montblanc, and others in Cattelogue, Arragon, and Valence, doing feaſtie and homage: yea in a manner all that had bene held by Donna Leonora the Queene Dowager, and her children Don Fernand, and Don Iohn of Arragon, and was made Commander of the men of warre for the defence of the frontiers againſt Caſtile: which made the king of Caſtile to come into Arragon in perſon, with greater forces, and to make warre with all violence and extremity, where hee tooke Bordalua and Embite, and ſo preſt Taraſſone with the force of armes, as hee forced the Inhabitants to ſurrender and yeeld the place without oppoſition, yppon condition that they might retire to Tudele a towne of Nauarre.

the
of the
in the
in the

Don John de la Corte, slain by the king's men's hands.

Besides this he tooke Alcala of Fitiela, Verrejon, and the castell of los Fajos, hauing in A his armie nine thousand horse, and a great number of foote, against the which forces the Arragonois durst not present themselves: wherefore he marched as farre as hee pleased, and then returned to Tarassone. There by the meanes and industrie of Cardinall William, and the Popes Legate, there was a truce concluded for a yeare: whereuppon he took his way towards Seuille. Beeing yet at Tarassone, he had newes that Don John de la Cerde, and D. Aluar Perez of Guzman were reuolted from him, and had taken the party of Arragon, and that at that instant they had bene charged, and defeated by his men in Andalusia: and Don John de la Cerde taken, whome he commanded to bee slaine before his arrival: then being come to Seuille, he spent the rest of the yeare to prepare an armie at sea for the future warre: for his intent was not to conclude a peace, neither would he yeeld the citie of Tarassone into the Legats hands, according to the capitulations: nor performe any part of that which had bene treated, notwithstanding that the king of Arragon had performed all on his part: whereuppon the Legate beeing at Tudele, in Saint Maries church he propounded a sentence of Excommunication against Don Pedro King of Castile, and he interdixt his Realme, in the presence of the Bishops of Cominges and Tarassone, did interdixt his Realme, in the presence of the Bishops of Cominges and Tarassone, and the Ambassadors of Castile and Arragon, the which put the king of Castile into a greater furie. The Legate beeing at Huesca, published the Decree and Censure against the King of Castile and his Realme, by the which, besides that which hath bene spoken, he was condemned in an hundred Markes of siluer to the Sea of Rome: and defence made C to Lewis brother to the king of Nauarre, to the kings of England and Portugall, to all Christian Princes, yea and to those that did in any sort belong by confanguinitie to this excommunicated king, not to conuerse with him, nor to giue him ayde nor succours. Then was the Infant Don Fernand of Arragon perswaded by some Noblemen of Arragon, to meete with Don Pedro king of Arragon his brother, in a valley, couered with trees, where they had a long and friendly discourse: so as the Infant returned, full of promises and hopes.

The Captaine of Tarassone for the king of Castile, called Goncal Gonçales Luso, was also drawne by the perswasions of Suero Garcia of Toledo, who was fled into Arragon, sonne to Garcia Suero, to yeeld vp that place to the King of Arragon, vpon promise of D fortie thousand Florins, the which he did soone after execute. And for that the effects of the King of Castiles bad inclination appeared daily, there was a League made betwixt the King of Maroc and hee of Arragon to the preiudice of Castile, and Don Tello of Castile, and the Earle of Luna, entred with an armie towards Soria, where they spoiled the Countrie.

Thus these two Kings Don Pedro King of Castile, and Don Pedro king of Arragon, wilfull, cholericke, and madde, fell againe into a cruell and pernicious warre, to the estimable prejudice of their subiects, and shame and dishonor to the name of Christians.

An. 1358.
D. Frederic the king's brother and other Noblemen put to death.

Whilest the King lay idle in Andalusia, beeing too much giuen to women, he courted Donna Aldonça Cornet, daughter to the deceased Don Alphonso Fernandes Cornet, E whom he had cauled to be slaine, and wife to D. Aluar Perez of Guzman, his rebell: but yet he did not forget D. Maria of Padilla. Besides this vice, hee continued his cruelty against the Nobility: for that yeare 1358, he caused his brother D. Frederic Master of S. Iames, to be slaine in the town of Carmona, being newly come out of Murcia, where hee had in his name recovered Iumilla, from the Arragonois who had taken it. There was also slaine by his commandement Sancho Ruiz of Rojas: at Cordoua he also put to death Peter Cabera, Fernand Alphonso of Gates: and at Salamanca Alphonso Geoffrey Tenorio: at Toro Alphonso Perez Fermosino: and in the castell of Moja, Garcia Mendez of Toledo: and moreo- uer he caused Lope Sanchez of Abendagno, great Commander of Castile, to bee put to death, and others in diuers places according to his humour and discontentment: yet seeking to couer these executions with a cloake of Iustice, publishing declarations, containing the crimes of such as he had put to death, although it were apparent that they were but reuenges, for that all, or the most part of them had not approued his excesse, or had in some sort opposed themselves.

In which murders he employed two, who were much fauored by him, who afterwards fell

A fell into the same misfortune, for a recompence of their good seruices, as it happened to his cousin D. Iohn of Arragon, sonne to the Queene D. Leonora, who being an actor in the death of D. Frederic master of Saint Iames, did willingly follow the King in a voiage he made into Biscay, to dispossesse D. Tello, his other brother of that Lordship, and to kill him. The King being suddenly arrived at Aguilar del Campo, he had surprized D. Tello being a hunting, and not dreaming of his coming, had he not bene aduertised by a Squire of his, called Gattiere Garra; but through this aduertisement he escaped and retired to Vermeo, the chiefe towne of Biscay, where getting into a sifter boate, he saued himselfe at Saint Iohn de Luz, and from thence retired to Bayone. He was not farre at sea before the King came to Vermeo, who hearing that he was dislodged, he beganne to pursue him by sea, and went as farre as Legueytio, but descouering nothing, and the sea withall beginning to grow high, hee returned, and carried away prisoner D. Ieanne of Lara, wife to D. Tello, Rhetrix of Biscay. The King being at Vermeo, D. Iohn of Arragon, who had married D. Isabella of Lara the other sister, besought him to grant him that Lordship, seeing that D. Tello had shewed himselfe contumacious, his wife being also prisoner, & that he had married the other sister: to whom the King answered cunningly, that hee would haue the Biscains assemble in the towne of Guernica, according to their ancient priuiledges, and there choose their Lord, and that for his part he would labour to haue him chosen; the which did satisfie D. Iohn for the present.

In the meane time the King did let the chiefe of the assembly vnderstand, that when they were together, and the King should propound vnto them for to choose D. Iohn of Arragon, they should all cry out; that they would haue no other Lord, then the King himselfe, and his successors Kings, the which they did, as they had bene enioyned: so as D. Iohn of Arragon found himselfe frustrate of his hopes. This generall assembly of Biscay, is called in the countrie language, Batcaar, which is as much to say, as an assembly of ancients. The King being come from Guernica to Bilbao, hee sent for D. Iohn of Arragon to his lodging, and there commanded he should be slaine in his presence, and his body to be cast out at the window which looked into the court (the which was full of people) and crying with a loude voice: Behold your Lord of Biscay who demanded you: then he caused him to be carried to Burgos, and there to be cast into the riuer, and would not suffer him to be buried: and for that his mother D. Leonora Dowager of Arragon, and his wife D. Isabella, were greeued for this cruel act he caused them to be shut vp prisoners in the castle of Castro Xeris: This was the reward of Iohn of Arragon, who had, to please a tyrant, consented to the death of many great personages, yea his neere kinsmen.

The King being come to Vailledolit, he had resolved to sacrifice some in that towne: but hearing that D. Henry of castile, Earle of Transimara, and D. Fernand of Arragon, brother to D. Iohn, did ouerrunne the countries of Soria, and Almajan, and that of Murcia, he did forbear, and hauing put great garrisons into the places about Soria, he came to Seuille, being resolved to doe all acts of hostility both by land and sea against the King of Arragon. He had made ready eightene gallies with the which and great forces by land, he came and besieged Guardamar, and tooke it: and for that it did belong to the Infant D. Fernand, he burnt the towne, but he could not take the castle. But suddenly a violent winde tooke his gallies vpon that coast, so as sixteene of them ranne on ground: yet he returned againe into Murcia, and was nothing amazed thereat (for he was of a proude and haughty spirit) but caused many other gallies to be built at Seuille, and commanded that all the ships in Galicia, Biscay and Guipuscoa, should come thither in the beginning of the yeere 1359. to inuade the Realmes of Valence, Cattelogne and Arragon.

During these exploits of warre, D. Pedro King of Arragon charged him of Castile with disloyaltie: and treason before the Pope, and challenged him by Bernard Galleran of Pinos, to whom the King of Arragon would haue giuen the title of King of Majorca, that he might be equal in quality to the King of Castile, but this was a mockery. This yeere was married D. Isabel daughter to the vnfortunate Don Iames King of Majorca, to Iohn Marquis of Montferrat, to whom the King of Arragon gaue fifty thousand florins.

D. Iohn of Arragon slaine
in the Kings lodging and in his presence.

An. 1359.

Marriage of Isabel of Majorca to the Marquis of Montferrat.

florins in dowry, vpon condition that she should renounce all her fathers rights, and so she did. The King of Arragon being then at Saragossa, he renewed and confirmed to the Nobility of that city, whom they call Ermunios, the preiudged they haue got to goe to the warres, but when the King is in person ready to giue bataille, or to assaile some place, and declared that if any one of these preiudged persons had followed him beyond these limitations, that it should be no preiudice to their rights. There he gaue the charge of the warre, for the preservation of the country, to the Archbishop of Saragossa. Whilest that the confederate Noblemen of Castile, together with the Arragonois, did ruine and burne the country of Alaua; the King of Castile led a great power by land against Arragon, by the way of Almasan, where he tooke Negasta and Torrijo. During this warre, D. Henry Earle of Transmarara had a sonne by his wife in the towne of Epila (the which at this daie belongs to the Earle of Arande) who was called Iohn, and raigned in Castile. Cardinal William being no longer fit to make a peace betwixt these two Princes, the Pope sent Cardinal Guy of Bologna, Bishop of Portuense, this yeere of our Lord 1359. who preuailed as little as the other, but by his diligence and importunate pursute he incited the King of Castile more against the house of Arragon, and his rage proceeded so farre, as he condemned all the Knights of Castile that were in Arragon by proclamation: he caused the Queene D. Leonora his aunt to be cruelly murdered, being widow to D. Alphonso King of Arragon: and hauing caused D. Leonne of Lara, the Lady of Biscay, to be transported to the castle of Almodouar del Rio, and from thence to Seuille, he there also caused her to be murdered: such was the diuillish fury of this monster, who being once moued vpon any subiect, discharged his rage vpon al that came into his fantasie: He did the like vnto D. Isabella of Lara, widow to D. Iohn of Aragon, to whom by the death of her elder sister, leauing no children, the Siegneurie of Biscay did belong, but shee died not by the sword, but by poison, which this tyrant caused to be giuen her. In these Ladies was extinct the succession of the ancient Lords of Biscay.

Cruelty more then doubtfull of D. Pedro King of Castile.

The season being fit for navigation, the King of Castile went out of Seuille, or Saint Lucar, with foure score ships, and one and forty gallies, and sailed towards the coast of Valence and Cartelogne; he ruined the towne of Guardamar, and the castle againe, and presented himselfe in view of Barcelona: but the army of Arragon, which was but of forty foists and gallies hindered him from staying at any place vpon the coast, and skirmishing often with him, they forced him to bend towards Luiza, and to way anchor in hast from thence, and to saile towards Alicant and Carthagea, and in the end to retire himselfe, hauing with this great preparation done nothing of import. The King of Arragon was in the meane time in the Island of Majorca, being aduised not to be in his army at sea. The gallies of Castile retired to Seuille, and the ships of Guipuscoa, Biscay and Galicia, returned into their countries: as for the King of Castile, he went to Tordillas to visit Donna Maria of Padilla.

The coast of Cartelogne and Valence was this yeere ill prouided of ships of warre: For that the King of Arragon was forced to entertaine many gallies continually in the Island of Sardynia, being still subiect to reuolts, and moreover he had sent a good number into Sicile, to aide the King D. Frederic his son in law, against whom Leanne Queene of Naples made warre.

D. Pedro alone of that name, the eight King of Portugal.

Portugal.

D On Pedro surnamed the Iusticer raigned in Portugal, who had succeeded his father D. Alphonso the fourth, deceased in the yeere of our Lord 1357. Hee was about seuen and thirtie yeeres old when hee beganne to raigne, and therefore being ripe in yeeres, and of a good Iudgement he gouerned his realme with great equity, so as he purchased the name of Iusticer, and was much vnlike in manners to the other two Kings of

A his time, and of the same name. This King (his father being yet lyuing) was married to Blanch, daughter to D. Pedro King of Castile, sonne to D. Sancho, who falling into a palsey, was left by him, and then he married D. Constance Manuel, daughter to D. Iohn Manuel, by whom he had these children following. D. Lewis, who liued little, D. Fernand, who raigned, Donna Maria, married in the life of D. Alphonso her Grandfather, to D. Fernand Infant of Arragon, sonne to the King D. Alphonso, by his second wife D. Leonora of Castile. D. Constance dying in the yeere of our Lord 1345, he married Donna Agnes of Castile, a gentlewoman which had followed her, and with whom they sayd he had familiar acquaintance during her life, for she was exceeding faire & amiable. The Infant D. Pedro (although she were somewhat allied vnto him, and had christened his son D. Lewis) married her secretly, for feare of his father, in 1354. hauing enioyed her many yeeres, and the witness of this matrimoniall promise, were D. Gil Bishop of Guardia, and Stephen Louat Maister of his Wardrop, whom he commanded to keepe it secret. By her D. Pedro had three sonnes: D. Alphonso, who died in France, D. Iohn and D. Denis, who were afterwards expelled by their brother D. Fernand then rainging, and died in Castile. Of this Lady Donna Agnes, was also borne one daughter, called Donna Beatrice, who was married to D. Sancho Earle of Albuquerque, base sonne to D. Alphonso the thirteenth King of Castile. This clandestine marriage being vnkowne to the King D. Alphonso, father to D. Pedro, and yet his loues knowne and blamed by all men, it was treated of to marry him with some Princesse, but hee would not heare of it: wherefore the King tooke a cruell resolution to kill D. Agnes de Castro, thinking he should not otherwise withdraw his sonnes loue. Being come to this effect to Coimbra where this faire Lady remained, whilest that the Infaut D. Pedro was a hunting, he caused her to be slaine by three of his gard, which were Diego Lopes Pacheco, Peter Cuello, and Aluar Gonçales, who did this execution in the old pallace of Saint Clare. This death being in the yeere of our Lord 1355. made the Infaut rebel against his father, who with the aide of many of his friends, entered the country betwixt Ducro and Minio, where he committed great spoile, and had done more, if many great personages had not labored happely to reconcile them. After that he loued an other Lady, called D. Theresa Gallega, by whom hee had one sonne, called Iohn, in the yeere 1357. He was first Maister of the Knights of Auiz, and afterwards King after D. Fernand his brother, and the same yeere 1357. died king D. Alphonso the braue.

Genealogy of Portugal.

9
D. Pedros priuie marriage with Donna Agnes of Castile.

Cruel massaker of D. Agnes of Castro wife to the Infaut D. Pedro.

to Disposition of D. Pedro King of Portugal.

D. Pedro being come to the crowne, he shewed himselfe a iust Prince, observing aboue all things the lawes and ordinances made by his father, for the ording of his house and traine, the Officers whereof were expressly forbidden not to molest his subiects, especially puruoiers, nor to take any prouision for his house, before they had paid the price which the seller demanded, vpon great penalties, yea death in some cases. Hearing that aduocates did multiply sutes, and that of one they often made many, he discharged them all throughout his realme, and imposed great punishments vpon Iudges that should suffer themselves to be corrupted with money or otherwise, yea losse of life, and confiscation of their goods: he made in any lawes for the shortning of sutes, appointing fit men for Iudges: causing his ordonances to be executed with all rigor. Hee appointed great punishments for light offences, and if any one told him that he was to seuer, he answered, that it was the meanes to reforme vice, and that it was pleasing vnto God, for if the wicked were not kept in awe with the feare of death, they would neuer bee restrained with lesser punishments; Finally to haue the good liue in peace, it was necessary to punish the bad seuerely. As soone as the pleaders had made their demands, and pertinent answers giuen, they were presently dispatched if it might be: If by any trickes and deuises matters were delaied, the offenders were punished, that is, the poore by the whip, and the rich by great fines: by reason whereof his realme flourished in peace and abundance of all things, and he was honoured and beloued of his subiects as much as any Prince lyuing. Hee had often in his mouth the saying of the Emperour Titus. That he held that day lost, wherein hee had not done good to some one. Hee did not greue to be himselfe in person at the deciding of causes, and did often assist at the examination and torturing of criminal persons; he did so hate malefactors, as hee did often times times rise from the table to haue them punished, yea he tooke such pleasure to doe iustice, as he caused to be borne before him, or did carry himselfe, a whip or rod wherewith offenders should be punished, to the end he might cause himselfe to be feared, and iustice more respected, so as to many this severity seemed to approach neere vnto cruelty: Moreouer he was carefull to dispatch all sorts of businesse, with great breuity, especially if a stranger came into his court, he commanded he should be presently dispatched, to the end hee should not consume himselfe in charges. With his royal vertues, hee loued hunting, dauncing and Ladies, and all other sports, but not with such excess as the other Kings of Spaine of his time, neither was he free from desire of reuenge, mixt with some infidelity: for his father being once dead, he affected nothing more then to reuenge the death of his best beloued D. Agnes of Castro, wherefore knowing that Diego Lopes Pacheco, Peter Cuello and Aluar Gonçales, who had slaine her, were in Castile, hee made an accord with his Nephew D. Pedro King of Castile, to deliuer vnto him in exchange, some Castilian Knights, who to flie the fury of this tyrant, were retired into Portugal, vnder his protection, so as they made this dishonorable exchange, when as these three men were brought to Saint Iren, whereas the King was, hee would instantly haue them put to sundry torments, but the Noblemen which were about him dissuaded him: yet could he not forbear to vse outrageous speeches, yea he strooke Peter Cuello on the face, and notwithstanding that they excused themselves vpon the commaundment of the King his father, yet hee condemned them to cruel deaths. Peter Cuello and Aluar Gonçales, were executed first before the court gate, causing the one to be opened by the breist, and the other by the backe, to pul out their hearts. Diego Lopes Pacheco appointed to the same death had the hap to escape, flying in a pilgrimes weed into Castile, where he lay concealed vntil that Don Henry came vnto the crowne, whom hee serued, and was much beloued of him. They say he was the stem of the house of Pacheco in Castile, which gaue beginning to the Marquis of Villena, and Dukes of Escalona.

This cruel example shalbe followed by one more commendable; this King D. Pedro beeing in Lisbon, where they had made him a stately entry, and ordained a Tournay whereas many Knights both Portugals and strangers did runne: hauing beene aduertised that a Knights wife of the city, called Alphonso Andre abandoned her selfe to another, he watched that day (which he held fit to execute such vnlawful loues) these adulterers in such sort, as he surprized them together, the gentlewoman husband being in armes at the lists with the rest in the new street, who without making bruit, or suffering any to aduertise the husband of the wrong his wife had done him, hee caused her to be burnt, and her adulterer to be slaine. If hee descouered any baude, namely of such as vnder collour of deuotion enter into houses, to carry messages, or which vse charmes, or giue loue drinckes, and such like, hee did punish them severely. He was like to haue slaine his Admiral in that towne, for that hee had imploied a woman of that trade, but hee fled and so escaped his fury, but hee caused the woman to be burnt. In the country of Veraguas he caused a married man to be hanged, hauing children by his wife, for that hee had forced her beeing a maide, before hee had married her. If he punished secular men severely, hee did no more spare priests and monkes, yea and prelates if they offended. Wherevpon being giuen to vnderstand, that hee should send them to their superior Iudges, he answered, that so hee did: for hauing once caused them to be hanged, they went directly before God, who was the head Iudge of all, and did the last Iustice. Knowing that the bishop of Porto, where hee then was, liued loosely with a married woman of that towne he sent for him, seeming that he would confer with him of some businesse. The bishop being come, he caused euery one to depart the chamber, & hauing shut the doore, he began to pursue the bishop, & handled him in such sort, as if some which staid in the chamber, had not taken him out of his hands, he had slaine him. He was more seuer to his household seruants then to any other: he caused a Secretary to be slaine, hauing taken money without the priuity of his Tresorer. This we read of the maners and customes of this king, who spared himselfe sometimes: as for the stately buildings which he left, they hold that the bridge and towne of Lima are of his foundation: he caused Santa Adaria of Charneça to be built, he indowed the Monastery of Alcouaga with fixe Chaplains, and

His diligence and equity.

His delights.

Desire of reuenge moues the King of Portugal to betray them that were returned vnto his protection.

Family of Pacheco in Castile.

Adulterers punished.

A appointed ordinary masses: to which monastery his sonne Fernand did afterwards giue the towne of Parades, in the country of Leyra. Hee was bountifull and courteous to them that did him seruice, to whom hee gaue many gifts, and was accustomed euery yeere to put a hundred markes of silver into plate, to giue for new yeeres gifts: he augmented the wages and pensions of the gentlemen of his house, and other seruants; hee honoured the Nobility that liued well, and loued vertue, whereof he gaue good testimony when as hee made his good seruant D. Iohn Alphonso Tello Earle of Barcellos, with such pompe, as the like hath not beene seene in Portugal in any age, for hee had that night from the Monastery of Saint Dominike, which was in the place del Rufio, vnto the place called Limbhero whereas the Kings palace stood, five thousand men hokling five thousand torches, by the light whereof they might see many tables couered with bread, meat and wine, whereas euery man might eate and drinke that list. And the King himselfe laying aside his royal ranke and grauity, led daunces through the city, and by his example the people, both of the city, and strangers, which came thither by water, shewed all signes of ioy, to honour this new Earle. They say that this King taking delight to heare a siluer trumpet found, would then haue a desire to daunce, and oftentimes when he could not slepe, he would goe out of his palace in the night, and haue daunces in the towne; whether his subiects came willingly, and did practise it much for the loue of him. This King hauing held the Realme some space, hee would make a publike declaration, in a great assembly of Noblemen, what Donna Agnes of Castro had beene vnto him, and produced D. Gil Bishop of Guarda, and Stephen Louat Maister of his Wardrop, for witness of their promises of marriage, who being publicly examined, did sweare that D. Agnes had beene lawful wife to D. Pedro then Infant of Portugal, and dispensations were shewed, which D. Pedro had obtained, for affinity, or other lets which might hinder this marriage, whereof a Register was kept in the publike acts: and it was ordained that the children borne of this Lady should be called Infants of Portugal: her body, or bones were transported from Coimbra, where they had beene buried, to the Monastery of Alcouaga, with royal pompe, & laied in a rich tomble of white marbe, whercon her Image was set, carrying a crowne like a Queene.

11 Such was the Estate of Portugal, about the time of the warres betwixt the Kings of Castile and Arragon, and whilest that D. Charles King of Nauarre was held prisoner in France, by the Dauphin his brother in law, in safe keeping, yet hee found meanes to escape, by the helpe of his brother Philip, and of Iohn Pinguignac, Gouvernor of Artois, with other Frenchmen, beeing accompanied by D. Roderike of Vrrix, D. Corbaran of Leer, D. Charles of Artieda, D. Fernando of Ayana, and by the Baron of Garro, who drew him out of the castle of Aleux in Palueil, where hee had beene prisoner eightene monethes, which place they scaled by night, and slue the captaine and gard. This act was much commended, especially in Nauarre: and in memory of this good seruice done vnto the King, the names of those Knights were registred in the chamber of accounts for the Realme of Nauarre. What past afterwards betwixt the Dauphin, and the King of Nauarre in France, I leaue it to the French History, to the which it doth properly belong. After the returne of Iohn the French King from prison in England, Charles King of Nauarre beeing reconciled to him and to the Dauphin his sonne, hee went into his Realme of Nauarre, hauing had by his wife Queene Jeane, one sonne, in the towne of Mante, who was also called Charles, and succeeded him in the Realme.

12 In the meane time the warre continued betwixt Castile and Arragon, and moreouer the King of Castile, as if he would scorne all the world, and shew himselfe an enemy to all he encountered, had broken with the Venetians, and taken one of their ships, when as he was before Barcelona with his sea army: and not content herewith hee had appointed twenty gallies to gard the Straight, and to take twelue other Venerian ships, in their returne, which had past into Flanders, but hee was deceived: for the ships coming in comfort with a good gale, and helpt by the flood, they past almost vndescouered. Soone after the King had newes that his men had beene defeated neere vnto Moncayo, in the fields of Arauiana, by the Arragonois (where as in old time the seuen sonnes of Lara had beene slaine) being led by D. Henry and D. Tello of Castile brethren,

His liberty.

Pompe at the funeral of the Earle of Barcellos.

Declaration of the secret marriage betwixt the King D. Pedro and D. Agnes of Castile.

Nauarre.

Arragon and Castile.

The King of Castile spoues the Venetians at sea.

D. Pedro

Castilians deseated.

D. Pedro of Luna, D. John Martines of Luna, and D. John Fernandes of Heredia, who being accompanied with eight hundred horse Arragonois, defeated one thousand and two hundred Castilians.

In this encounter died D. John Fernandes of Hinestroza, gouernor of that frontier for the King of Castile, vncle to Donna Maria of Padilla, D. Fernand Garces Duxie, D. Pedro Luis Orosio, Gomes Suarez of Figueroa, great Commander of Saint Iames: and there were taken prisoners, D. Inigo Lopes Orosco, D. Fernand Luis of Villaloba, D. John Gomes of Bahabou, D. Hurtado Diaz of Mendoza, and D. Diego Sancho Porras, all renowned Knights of Castile, whereat the King was much moued, but his griefe was moderated by a new sonne, which Donna Maria of Padilla brought him, in the yeere of our Lord 1360. who was named D. Alphonso, by reason whereof he came presently to Tordesillas. Being afterwards returned to Seuille, he caused D. Garci Aluarez of Toledo to be created maister of Saint Iames, a Knight which had done him great seruices, both in the warre against Arragon, and in the seditions of Castile, to whom, besides this dignity, hee gaue the office of Majordomo, or high Steward to his sonne D. Alphonso. This yeere continuing his cruelties, he caused two other of his brethren to be slaine, sonnes to D. Leonora of Guzman, D. John, and D. Pedro, hauing kept them long prisoners in the towne of Cal Guzman, and they say, that hee dispatched them, for that hee doubted they would become more faithfull nor obedient vnto him, then their other three brethren. D. John was scarce thirteene yeeres old, and D. Pedro but foureteene. The victorie which the Arragonois had gotten vnder the conduct of D. Henry Earle of Translamara, made the King of Castile more tractable in the negotiation of a peace, wherein Cardinal Guy of Bologne the Popes Legat laboured, who in the end drew the Deputies of these two Kings to meet in the city of Tudelo, in the realme of Nauarre, wherewith King Charles was very well satisfied.

Thether came for the King of Castile, Gutierrez Fernandes of Toledo, and for the King of Arragon, D. Bernard of Cabrera, chiefe counsellor of State, and Admiral of Arragon; who together with the Legat, did conferre, and dispute long of the meanes to make a peace, but they could not conclude any thing. And there being also assembled by the Legats care, in the towne of Sanguessa, D. John Alphonso of Majorca, Chancellor of the priuy seale for the King of Castile, and the same Admiral of Arragon for the King of Castile, they effected as little as at Tudelo. Wherevpon the King of Castile being aduertised that his brother D. Henry would enter into Castile, seeing they could not conclude a peace, he came to Leon, where hee would haue slaine D. Pedro Nugnes of Guzman, and some other Knights, which had left him, but they escaped: yet hee tooke Pero Aluarez Orosio in Villaniebla, as hee was at the table with Diego Garcia of Padilla, maister of Calatraua. Comming afterwards to Burgos, he caused Diego Arias Maldonado the Archdeacon to be slaine, for that hee had receiued letters from his brother D. Henry of Translamara.

D. Henry with the army of Arragon, entred by Rioja, and tooke great spoiles from the Iewes inhabiting there, but especially at Nagera: he also tooke the towne of Haro, and came as farre as Pancoruo, where he vnderstood that the King of Castile came to encounter him, and was at Birbiesca, so as D. Henry retired to Nagera. The King of Castile passing by Grisalena, Pancoruo, Ameiugo, and Maranda of Ebro, he came to Saint Dominike de la Calçada, and then to Acofra. Here a religious man of the towne of Saint Dominike presented himselfe vnto him, and told him, that Saint Dominike had reuealed vnto him, and enioyned him to tell him, that if hee did not take good heed of D. Henry his brother, hee should die by his hand. The King caused this religious man to be apprehended, and carefully examined, to finde out whether that which hee had said had bene suggested vnto him by some one, or that it were a reuelation. The Monke maintained that Saint Dominike had reuealed it vnto him, and persisted in this answer, being often examined: But the King did not regard it, and for a reward of his prediſtion (the which he found in the end to be true) he caused him to be burned. There were many skirmishes about Nagera, betwixt the Arragonois and Castilians, whereas the Castilians had the better, being still the more in number: but the King of Castile being not committed by

Murthers
the King of Castile without respect of dower quality.

Prediction of a Monke to
the King of Castile, who caused him to be burned for his reward.

come

A come with sufficient prouision to beseege townes, leauing Nagera, and Cont Henry, hee returned to Saint Dominike, and from thence past by Logroño. But the Legat, who alwaies treated a peace, procured a cessation of armes in those quarters, so as D. Henry returned into Arragon by Nauarre: The King also tooke the way to Seuille, where beeing arriued he found that they had taken at sea the General of the gallies which the King of Arragon had sent into Barbary, to aide the King of Tremessen: his name was Mathew Meriter, whose head hee caused to be cut off: there were foure gallies also taken with him. He also put to death there Men Rodrigues Tenorio, Fortun Sanches Calderon, Fernand Gudiel of Toledo: they were those Knights, which being retired into Portugal had bene deliuered to the King of Castile, in exchange, by the king of Portugal, as hath bin mentioned. He also put to death D. Pero Nugnes of Guzman, who could not auoide his owne misfortune, and soone after in the towne of Alfaro, he cut off the head of D. Gutierrez Fernandes of Toledo, for that hee spake his minde too freely in matters which did concerne the good of State, and for the zeale he had to his honour and seruice: he caused as much to be done to Gomes Carillo of Alborno, beeing in a galley. Thus this ill aduised King tooke a delight to shed the blood of his Nobility, neither did hee forbeare prelates, for if hee slue them not, he chased them out of his Realme with ignominy, and losse of their goods: but in the end his excesse procured the iust indignation of his subjects against him, which made him loose both Realme and life. Hauing as wee haue said, put to death D. Gutierrez Fernandes of Toledo, hee bent his fury against his brother D. Blasco Archbishop of Toledo, but hee durst not dip his hands in his blood, for that hee was of the Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction: wherefore hee sent Mathew Fernandes Chancellor of his priuy seale to Toledo, to commaund him in his name to depart his country, and to retire into Portugal: the which this prelat was forced to doe in such hast, as hee had no leasure to take any of his stuffe, but went as hee was appareled, without companie, or any commoditie for his voiage. And the same daie that hee departed, the King came to Toledo, the which did much afflicke all those that had the gouernment of the towne.

Knights of Ca-
stile executed.

The Archbishop came to Coimbra in Portugal, where soone after hee ended his daies in the Monastery of Saint Dominike, with an example of notable patience, from whence his body, by the Kings permission, was carried to Toledo, and there interred. Don Gomes Manrique was chosen Archbishop of Toledo in his place, and Primate of Spaine, being numbred for the three score and one Prelat, or according vnto some three score and two of that Church.

Samuel Luis a Iew, high Treasorer, was committed to prison in Toledo, by the Kings commandement, with all his kindred, who were carried to Seuille, where he caused them to be put to death, after they had bene cruelly tortured, to make them confesse where their goods were; of whose confiscation the King got about foure hundred and three score thousand doubions of gold, and foure thousand markes of siluer, besides many rich iewels and filkes. Beeing in that city in the yeere of our Lord 1361. the King had an intent for to make warre against the Moores, but hee deferred it for a time, beeing prest by that of Arragon: for about that time the treatie was effected, which had bene long before practised with Gonçal Gonzales Lusio, Gouernor of Tarassone, which place hee deliuered to the King of Arragon, and had the florins about mentioned in recompence: And moreover hee married with Violant daughter to Don Ximenes of Vreca, and to Donna Eluira Cornel, with the Lands of Biore, Face and Alsinios in dowrie. Don Pedro Ximenes of Sampero was put in garrison into Tarassone. The warre betwixt these Potentates after some small exploit, was in the end concluded by a peace, which the Cardinall above named did mediate at Deſa. By the which the Castilians which were retired into Arragon, had their Conge, and restitution of places was promised of either part, for the performance whereof hostages were deliuered to the King of Nauarre, or to his brother Lewis then viceroy in Nauarre.

A large spoile
of a Iew com-
demned.

An. 1361.

Tarassone yielded by practise.

This peace lasted not long; for the King of Castile beeing incensed that the Cardinall, by the Apostolike authoritie, had disannulled the sentences which hee had giuen

Bbb

against

against his brother D. Henry, and other Noblemen and Knights of Castile, hee brake it A soone after.

An. 1361.

Murder of Queene
Blanche by the commandement of the King of Castile
her husband.

And this yeere 1361. to the end he might not forget any thing that might proue himself inhumane about all men, he caused his wife D. Blanche of Bourbon to be slaine, being kept in prison at Medina Sidonia, but it was by poison, whose body was afterwards carried away by the French, who vpon this occasion entred into Castile, in fauour of the Earle D. Henry, and she was buried at Tudela in Nauarre. Soone after the death of this miserable Princeesse, Donna Maria of Padilla died at Seuille, by whom the King had one sonne, called D. Alphonso, and three daughters, D. Beatrice, D. Constance, and D. Isabel.
The King did her royall honours, and afterwards declared that hee had married her, producing witnesses of great authority. They say that she by her wisdom and discreet persuasions, did many times diuert the King from great effusions of blood. This King D.
Pedro had by another Lady, called D. Isabel, two other sonnes, D. Sancho and D. Diego.
And who are interred in the Monastery of Saint Dominike the Royall at Toledo. And mo:ouer being fallne in loue with a gentlewoman which did serue Queene Mary his mother, called Donna Theresa of Ayala, being exceeding faire, and not able to winne her but by a promise of marriage, hee plighted his faith vnto her, and had by her one daughter, called Donna Maria: notwithstanding this Donna Theresa became a Nunne, in the Monastery of Saint Dominike: thus did the King D. Pedro in all sorts abuse the lawes. The King of Castile (before he would assaile him of Arragon) had a great desire to fall vpon the Moores of Granado, who were then in great combustion amongst themselves, and who had fauored the Arragon partie, during the last warres.

Moores.

13. To shew their Estate, wee say that after the death of King D. Alphonso before Gibraltar, they had peace with Castile, for that the King D. Pedro following his priuat passions, and thirsting after the blood of his Nobility, yea and his owne, hee was continually busie, killing and murdering men and women of all sorts and degrees throughout his Realme, not regarding the warre against the Moores, but made a truce with Ioseph King of Granado. This King had some time after receiued D. Iohn de la Cerde, sonne to D. Lewis, into Granado, being sonne in law to D. Alphonso Fernandes Cornel, and had giuen him meanes to passe into Affrike, where hee was an actor in the vnnaturall and bloody quarrels betwixt Albohacen King of Maroc, and his sonne Alboacen, raking the sonnes part against the father: where hee made prooue of his vertue and valour, gi-uing a notable defeat vnto King Albohacen, and hee had beene happie if hee had not gone from thence into Spaine, where hee ended his daies miserably. King Ioseph thinking to bee at peace within his Realme, found himselfe plunged in sedition and conspiracies made against him by his owne subiects, whereof an vncke of his called Ma-homad, or Mahumet was the chiefe, who being desirous to raigne, caused him to be slaine, in the yeere of our Lord 1354. the one and twentieth of his reigne, and of the Arabians seuen hundred thirty and seuen.

Mahomad Lagus the eight King of Granado.

This Mahomad or Mahumet, surnamed Lagus, which is as much to say, as the old, succeeded, by this murder, in the Kingdom of Granado: he was brother to King Ismael, of whom wee haue made mention, and sonne to Ferrachen Gouvernor of Malaga, and held his Estate with great trouble and difficulty: for besides that the Arabians are by nature inconstant, and enemies to rest, it was then the custome in Granado, and hath alwaies beene, that the Kings haue beene instituted, maintained, or reiected at the will of the knights Granadins, and of some gouernors of chiefe places, as of Malaga, Almeria, Baza and Guadix, some times raising one, some times an other, and reiecting and killing them according to their passions and priuate interests.

This

A This King Mahomad already old, being in possession of the Realme of Granado, hee entertained the friendship of Don Pedro King of Castile, whom hee furnished with foure gallies well appointed, to ioyne vnto his army, when as he went in person before Barcelona, as we haue said. But it happened, that in the yeere 1360. some Knights and captaines Moores, finding themselves ill intreated and little fauored by King Ma-homad the old, they had intelligence with an other Mahumet, called Vermeil, or Aben Al-hamar, who descended (as hee said) from the first Kings of Granado, and wrought so with the aide of the children of Ozmin, and especially with him who was called Ezdriz Aben Balua, as being seized vpon the fort and castle of Alhambra, they chased away Ma-humet the Old, and raised Vermeil in his place, so called for that his face was very red: and they did not onely dispossesse Lagus of the city of Granado, but of most of the strong places of the country, to the which they were the more imbouldned, seeing D. Pedro King of Castile very busie in the warres Arragon.

The King thus dispossessed retired to Ronda, then held by the King of Maroc, or Fez, and there kept himselfe for a time: so as at that time in the country of Granado, there reigned three Kings Moores: that is this King dispossessed, who held yet some places, King Mahumet Aben Alhamar, and Alboacen King of Fez, who also enioyed some townes in Andalusia. King Vermeil fearing that his aduersary Mahumet the Old, would finde aide in Castile, to be restored, and finding himselfe vnable to resist the King D. Pedro, he ioynd with Arragon, and sought friendship and support there, the which hee obtained: so as when the Arragonois prest their enemies in Castile, the king of the Moores ran into Andalusia, and the country of Murcia. Notwithstanding Mahumet the Vermeil sought afterwards to assure himselfe of the King of Castile, by some accord, from whom he obtained a truce, and they were friends in shew: but the King D. Pedro concealed his spience vntill a fit opportunity, as one that did neuer forget an injury. The Moore (being wel informed of his disposition) did not greatly trust him, and therefore hee sought to draw Alboacen King of Maroc into a league, whereof the Affrican King excused himself, for that hee was in league with the King of Castile, and much bound vnto him, neither could the King of Granados persuasions preuaile, that ioyning with him, and the King of Arragon, they might soone ruine the King of Castile: but nothing could alter the King of Maroc, but he continued firme in the friendship of Castile, from whence he had been aided with some gallies and soldiers in his conquests, and warre against his father: and withall he aduertised the King D. Pedro of all these practises, who for these considerations was the more easily perswaded to make a peace with Arragon, to the end hee might punish him of Granado, against whom he beganne to raise an army in the yeere 1361.
to which end he came to Seuille. King Mahumet Aben Alhamar seeing these preparations, did also prouide for his part, but he was preuented by the King of Castile, who having sent for the dispossessed King, and drawne him to Seuille, made an accord with him, that whatsoeuer either of them should take in the Realme of Granado should re-maine to the taker: These two Princes, D. Pedro of Castile, and Mahumet the Old of Granado came and besieged Antequera, but they could not take it: wherefore they began to ouerrunne the champion country of Granado, thinking that many of the horsemen Moores would come and ioyne with them, and take part with King Mahumet the Old, but it succeeded otherwise: for the army of Granado stood firme at the bridge of Vi-llosos, and came courageously to incounter the Castilians, yet with disadvantage and losse.

The Christians pursuing the victory came to the bridge of Pinos, with the same hope that the Granadins would reuolt, but they made no shew of it: wherefore the King D.
Pedro returned with his army to Alcalá of Benasid. At this retreat the Moores of King Mahumet the Vermeil tooke courage, so as there parted from their campe about fix hundred horse and two thousand foot, who did ouerrunne the gouernment of Caçorla, sackt Peal of Hefero, tooke many prisoners, and brought away a great number of cattell but as they returned with this prey they were incountered about Linuega by Diego Garcia of Padilla, Maister of Calatrava, Don Henry Henriquez Gouvernor of the frontier, and Men Roderiques of Biedma, captaine of the Bishoprike or territory of Iaca, who put them

Bbb 2

The Moores
defeated.

An. 1362.

Christians defeated by the Moors.Rigour of the King D. Pedro.

them to rout, killing and taking many of them, the rest saved themselves in the rocks. A
The yeere following 1362. the Christians, encouraged which this victory, entered the Moors country, and presented themselves before Guadix, where there were six hundred horse Moors, and about foure thousand foot, which King Vermeil had lodged there, being aduertised of the Christians desaigne. These Moors kept themselves close, making no shew, nor offering to fall forth, so as the Christians, thinking the garrison to be weake, diuided their forces, leading a part of them towards the valley of Alhama: which the Moors discovering, they sallied forth vpon the remainder, and defeated them easily, where (among others) D. Diego Garcia of Padilla maister of Calatraua, was taken prisoner, B who being led to Granado, was not onely wel entertained by King Mahumet Aben Alha- mar, but also set at liberty without ransom, and presented with many rich gifts: the King desiring to make him his friend, and by his meanes to purchase some fauor with the King of Castile, and the Noblemen of his court; among the which D. Diego Garcia (as brother to Donna Maria of Padilla, and vncle to the children which the King D. Pedro had had) was in great credit and authority. Being returned into Castile, the King was glad of his liberty, but he did not much esteeme the bounty of the Moorish King: for D. Pedro was cruell and implacable by nature, and reproched the maister, that by his indicretion he had bene the cause of the route of his men, and of his owne imprisonment.
The King entered afterwards in person into the country of Granado, and tooke Alnair, C
Cisnair, Ambra, Benamexir and Zagra, and then returned vnto Seuille: but King Mahu- met the Vermeil brought his army presently to Zagra, and assaulted it in such sort, as Fernand of Gadillo, captaine of the garrison, was forced to leave it: whereat the King
D. Pedro was so moued, as (notwithstanding that he had defended it as much as he could and ought, according to the reasons of warre) he caused his head to be cut off: and to restrain the Moors, he returned instantly into their country, where he tooke Hardeles, Turon, Cueuas and other castles: King Mahumet the old being also in field. As this warre was long, and hard for the Granadins to maintaine, against so great a power as that of Castile: so it began to be troublesome to most of the knights Moors: so as in Granado, and in the court, there was nothing to be heard but murmuring, & words of discontent; wherevpon King Vermeil grew very doubtful of his subiects, who objected continually, D that for the quarrel of two men, the townes and forts of the realme were made a prey vnto the Christians. King Vermeil being in this perplexity, and fearing lest they should re-cal his competitor Mahumet the old, and that he should be ignominiously chased away, or slaine, was aduised by his chiefe and most confident friends (especially by Ezdriz Alen Balsa who had greatly fauored him in getting the crowne) to quit Granado, and to retire himselfe to his enemy the king of Castile, thinking, that hauing shewed himself liberal & courteous vnto Diego Garcia of Padilla, he should also finde some fauor in the court, and (at all euents) that the King of Castile would be glad to be Iudge and arbitrator betwixt him and Mahumet the old; and that this assurance and confidence which he shewed, com-ming to yeeld himselfe vnto him, would auail him something. This was a foolish and E rash resolution of his, knowing what a monster in nature the King D. Pedro was, how greedy he was of reuenge, and how glad to shed blood. This ill-advised king came to present himselfe with foure hundred horse, and about twenty hundred foot, before Baena, where as D. Gutierre Gomes of Toledo Prior of Saint Iohn commanded, who wondering much at this vnexpected chance did accompany him vnto the court at Seuille, where as the king D. Pedro receiued him very graciously at his arriual, and heard the oration that was made vnto him in this kings behalfe quietly, tending that hee would be pleased to take knowledge of the affection which had moued him to come and yeeld himselfe vnto him, grounded vpon the remembrance that his ancestors had bene vassals to the king of Castile, the which he would neuer haue contradicted, had not the fauor which F he had scene done vnto his aduersary Mahumet Lagus, or the old, driven him into distrust: notwithstanding hauing in the end considered that hee should finde equity and iustice in the king D. Pedro, not willing to persuit (for his part) in any rebellion, he had resolved to come and yeeld himselfe vnto him, and to referre vnto his good iudgement, the controuersies which were betwixt him and his aduersary, to the end that hee might determine

A determine them according vnto reason: That as for himselfe, being of the blond of the first Kings of Granado, whose royall seat the race of Farrachem had vsurped, he thought he had done nothing against the duty of a man of honour, to haue fought to recouer his Grand-fathers Kingdome, beseeching him to haue regard thereof: and if he should finde it good to depriue him of his crown (the which he could not beleue) hee besought him to giue him, and his, meanes to passe into Affrike, into the Moors country. The King D. Pedro made shew to heare these reasons without any passion, and assured him that he would reconcile him with his competitor, causing his lodging to be made in the Iewes place of the city of Seuille; but being displeased with the practises which he had made to his prejudice, with the Kings of Arragon and Maroc, hee burnt B with a desire to be reuenged. Being afterwards aduertised that this King Vermeil had brought many iewels, and great store of gold from Granado, he was so farre transported with a desire to spoile him of this treasure, as without any further deliberation, he commanded Martin Lopes of Cordoua, his chamberlaine, to goe and take him prisoner, with all those that were with him, and to put them into the Atarazana, or Argenal: then seeking an occasion to dispatch him, he caused his processe to be made, for that he had bene an actor in the death of King Ismael, brother to King Mahumet the old, and condemned him to die, with seuen and thirty other Knights, which were taken with him; according to which sentence he caused him to be drawne out of the Atarazana, and the C seuen and thirty knights with him, who were led to the field of Tablada, and there execured, in a great assembly and concourse of people from all parts. This miserable King Mahumet Aben Alhamar, being brought vpon an asse, clad in a roabe of scarlet, was the last which suffred: but hee had this consolation, that D. Pedro himselfe, was his executi-oner, who reproching him with the alliance he had had with the King of Arragon, thrust him through with a launce, at which blow Mahumet cried out in his owne language. Ha
Pedro, thou hast done a poore exploit, and purchased a shameful triumph this day: afterwards he made an end of him, and cut off his head: This was the second yeere of the reigne of this Moore, and the 745. of the Arabians. King Mahumet Lagus, or the old, being assured by this death, returned to Granado, ioyful to be thus freed of his enemy, whose head D the King D. Pedro sent vnto him: The Granadins receiued him without contradiction, in the yeere 1362. And he to recompence the King of Castile for the goodly present hee had made him of his Competitors head, deliuered all the Knights and Castilians which had bene taken at the incounter of Guadix, without any ranfome. Ezdriz Aben Balsa chiefe counsellor to King Mahumet Vermeil, remained prisoner with the King of Castile, with many others, whereof some were redeemed for money; others were exchanged for other prisoners in after times, and some died miserably in prison. The truce betwixt Castile and Granado was renewed, and new homage sworne by Mahumet the Old to the King D. Pedro, paying the tribute which had bin paid to the kings his predecessors.
These things thus ended, the king of Castile staid not long to begin war against Arrago.
E 14 For the effecting whereof, with greater aduantage, he sought to ingage the king of Nauar in this war, being newly come out of France, into his owne realme, in 1361. much desired, and well receiued, as one that had bene long absent. He rewarded the Noblemen and knights, which had serued and succored him in his affaires of France, bountifully, among the which the most remarkable were, D. Roderigo of Vrris who had for his good seruices, the government of the iurisdiccions of Sanguessa, Olite and Tudelo: The Baron of Garro was recompenced in another sort, being a wandering knight, and sought imployment in the warres, so as being loath to stay in Nauarre, hee returned into France.
As all things had bene reisonable quiet in Nauarre vntill that time, there was an occasion offered to trouble all, by the comming of Inigo Lopes of Orozco, and Arrias Gon- zales of Valez, Ambassadors for D. Pedro king of Castile, who came in their maisters name, to congratulate king Charles his comming, to seeke his friendship, and a new league, and to procure an interview of these two kings. King Charles was glad of this Ambassage, and as hee had alwaies an intent to haue warre with the French King, vntill that hee had restored him the lands which hee pretended to bee his, hee did much esteeme the friendship of Castile, to make vse thereof at such a neede. Hee
B b b 3 therefore

Crueltie, consciousness a irresistible of Pedro King of Castile.

Nauarre.

Charles King
of Nauarre
practised by him of Castile.

therefore promised the Ambassadors to come to Soria in Castile, and having first concluded with the Ambassadors a kind of peace, he went thither in the yeere 1362. having in his company his brother Lewis, Captal of Buche (a great Nobleman of Guienne) the Abbot of Fescain, and others, as well Nauarrois as French. The King of Castile came to the place assigned, and receiued him with great demonstrations of loue, where for the first act they confirmed the Articles of peace, conteyning an offensive and defensue league against all men. After some daies spent in feasts, sports and exercises of armes, the King of Castile hauing inuited the King of Nauarre to a great banquet, he told him, that he had some thing to say vnto him: wherevpon being retired into a gallery, the King of Castile vsed these words, in the presence of D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo, maister of Saint James, Inigo Lopes of Oroasco, Martinianes of Seuille, high treasurer, Martin Lopes of Cordoua, great Chamberlaine, Mathew Fernandes Chancellor of the priuy seale, all of his priuy counsel, and of the chiefe Noblemen and Knights which had accompanied King Charles; Brother (sayd he) seeing we haue made an oth to aide one another against our enemies, I will let you vnderstand, that the peace I haue with the King of Arragon, was made against my will, and to the preiudice of mine honour: for Aben Alhamar King of Granado, being confederate with him, spoiled my country of Andalusie, which made me yeeld vnto a peace that I might punish this Moore: and now that I haue had my revenge, I am not bound to obserue this peace, vlesse the places which I yeelded vp bee restored me againe, and the charges of the warre, caused by the King of Arragon, paid: wherefore according to the promise which you haue made me, and sworne, I summon you to aide me with your forces, and person, in this warre. The King of Nauarre was much amazed at this speech, being thus surprized, and knew not what to answer: for he presumed the King of Castile had not had any enemies, when he sware this peace and league. In the end he seemed desirous to doe what the King of Castile would haue him, but he demaunded time to conferre priuately with his counsellors which attended him, Al were of opinion he should obay the King D. Pedro, else it would be dangerous, that being in his power he would doe him some affront, being rash, cruel, and without respect: besides, the country of Nauarre being then vnfurnished, and the forces of Castile round about them, it was to be feared, that if he seemed vnwilling to doe that which he required, with his detention, he would cause his men to ouerrunne his country, to the great preiudice both of himselfe, and the Nauarrois his subiects. He beleued them, and made answer to the King of Castile, that both himselfe and his meanes were at his commandment; provided, that he yeelded the like vnto him, if he received any discomfort by making himselfe an enemy to the King of Arragon, his brother in law. The alliance of Castile which he so much sought, to make vse thereof against the French, brought him into this error, that he made no difficulty to put himselfe into the hands of the most disloyall Prince liuing.

Castille.

In the peace made betwixt Castile and Arragon, there had beene propounded, that D. Pedro King of Castile, should marry D. Jeanne second daughter to the King of Arragon: for D. Constance the eldest had beene married to D. Frederic of Sicile; but the Ambassador of Castile by his maisters commandment, made a motion for the marriage betwixt D. Alphonso son to D. Maria of Padilla, and D. Leonora the yongest daughter of Arragon, the which was concluded vpon condition, that the king of Castile should cause his son D. Alphonso to be declared lawful heire of the Realmes of Castile, Leon &c. and that he should giue him presently the Siegneury of Molina, with the towns of Almazan and Medina Celi, whereof D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo, maister of St. James, and his high Steward, should be put in possession, and that the pretended marriage betwixt the king, and D. Maria of Padilla, should be proued by him to haue bin done after the decease of Queen Blanche; the King of Arragon promising for himselfe and his successors, that if after the decease of Don Pedro King of Castile, there should be any question made vnto D. Alphonso his sonne in law, touching the succession, he should aide and assist him with all the forces of Arragon. Don Pedro King of Castile, to haue this declaration made, and his sonne Alphonso acknowledged for lawful heire, had called the Estates to Seuille, and there the fact being propounded by him, it was receiued, & allowed, & future obedience sworn vnto vnto the Infant, by the Estates, as heire after his father: consenting that Donna Maria of Padilla deceased, should be called Queene, and her daughters D. Beatrix, D. Constance, and Donna Isabella, Infants of Castile: but neither of the marriage, nor of any thing thereon depending, was there any accompt made, after the interview of the kings of Nauarre and Castile at Soria: but without all respect of accords, promises or oathes, as soon as these two kings were parted, he of Castile came with a great power into Arragon, and tooke Arica, Ateca, Terrer, Moros, Cerina and Alhama, and layed seege to Calatajub, the which he tooke, and put to route many knights which came to succour it: by reason whereof, Aranda with other townes and castles yeelded. Then hauing left Don Garcia Aluarez of Toledo, Maister of the knights of Saint James, vpon the frontier, he returned to Seuille.

Peace broken by the Castilian with Arragon

On the other part, the King of Nauarre, because hee would not faile of his promise made at Soria, sent to denounce warre against the king of Arragon, his brother-in-law, for that during his affaires and imprisonment in France, he would not succor him: whereunto the king of Arragon offering to satisfie him with good reasons, he would not heare any. Hauing therefore assembled his forces, he came to beseege the towne of Sos, and tooke it; then Saluaterra, running by the vallies of the Pyrenees, vnto the town of Iacca, where as the king of Arragon had placed Peter of Pomar for Gouvernor. The king Don Charles being returned into his countrie, he had soone after a supply of two thousand men at armes sent him out of Castile, which he disposed with his Nauarrois vpon the frontiers of Arragon, whereas they did spoyle, burne, and murder. In the meane time the Infant D. Alphonso of Castile, who should haue beene sonne-in-law to the king of Arragon, dyed. In the yeare 1363. the king of Castile doubting that the French would be reuenged for the death of Queene Blanche of Bourbon, whom he had caused to be poysoned, after that he had intreated her vnworthily many yeares, seeing also a peace made betwixt them and the English, he sent Ambassadors to Edward king of England, and to the Prince of Wales his sonne, to demand their alliance and friendship, the which they willingly granted.

Peter declared by the King of Nauarre against Arragon.

An. 1363.

The king of Arragon vnderstanding well that the warre which the king of Nauarre made against him, was forced, he fought by subtil meanes to diuide him from his alliance with Castile. And knowing that king Charles had alwaies beene in quarrell with the French king, for the Dutchie of Bourgogne and other lands, he sent Don John Fernandes of Heredia, in ambassage to King John, who being come into Auignon, and hauing had many conferences with the Lords of the French kings Councell, he preuailed so much as they were content to referre all controuersies to the arbitrement of the king of Arragon his Master, and to sixe Cardinals: for which cause the kings of Nauarre and Arragon, began from that time to haue secret intelligence one with another, to the preiudice of Castile. Notwithstanding the army of Castile returning into Arragon, the king of Nauarre sent his brother Lewis, with many Nauarrois and Gascons, among others Don Martin Henriques of Lacarra, Standard-bearer of the Realme, and Captal of Buch vnto them. Siege was layed to Tarracone, and the place taken, in the which was Albert a Knight of S. John. Boria was also taken, and John Ximenes of S. Piren, with other Knights which were within it: the castle of Vaguena was burnt, with the Captaine which defended it, called Michel Barnabas, whose sonne, carrying the same name, was for this cause made noble by the king of Arragon, with all his posteritie, by a decree made by the Body of the State. Castellana was also taken, where as Don Pedro King of Castile vsed horrible cruelties vpon the inhabitants; for those that he left aliue, were afflicted with torments more grieuous then death: of some he cut off the hands, of others the feete, and of some the noses and eares. Magallon and the Vicount of Uille which defended it, Teruel, castle Habib, Ademus, Ville, and the towne of Segorue were also made subiect to the king of Castile. Don Pedro Maca was taken in the castle of Segorue, and Ximen Doriz at Xerica. After which the King of Castile tooke Mormedro, Almenara, Bugnot, Maca, Benaguazil, Alpuche, with many other places and forts, euē to the gates of Valence; where as Don Alphonso of Arragon, Earle of Denia commanded. There the king of Castile and Don Lewis camped, and had many skirmishes: but hearing that the king of Arragon, and Don Henry and Don

Tello

Tello brethren to the king of Castile, (being banished) came with three thousand horse, A to fight with them, they dislodged, and retired to Moruedro, refusing a battell, for that the army of Castile was much lessened, hauing left garrisons in as many places, as they had taken. Don Gil Fernandes of Caruallo, Master of Saint James of Portugal, was in that army.

15. The perillie of Don Pedro of Arragon against the earle of Trastamara

After this retreat the Abbot of Fescan, Legate for the Pope, laboured to make a peace betwixt these Princes, and obtained of the king of Castile, that D. Lewis of Nauarre should be employed, who went to conferre with the king of Arragon at Burriana, and brought Don Alphonso of Arragon, Earle of Denia, to the king of Castile, being at Moruedro: he was afterwards made Constable of Castile, and Marquis of Vilena: with him came Don Bernard of Cabrera with others, but all their indeauours were vaine. For the King of Castile would not heare speake of a peace, vnlesse the king of Arragon would promise to kill Don Henry Earle of Transtamara, and Don Tello his brethren, with Don Fernand of Arragon, the which he refused to do in the beginning, seeming to haue horror of so wicked an act, as to betray them which had fledde to him for protection, and had serued him: yet afterwards hee made no conscience thereof, seeing himselfe pressed, and his countrie so spoiled by the King of Castile, but agreed with the king of Nauarre to kill Don Henry, the which God would not permit; for he had appointed him for the Realme of Castile and Leon, and to be an exemplarie scourge for the tyrant Don Pedro, who promised to giue the towne of Logroño to Charles king of Nauarre, if he would assist him in this murder.

For the effecting hereof, the two kings of Nauarre and Arragon concluded an interview at Sos: King Charles pretending that he would quit the alliance of Castile. For assurance and guard of the towne, where these two kings should meete, there was chosen for Gouvernour, Don John Ramires of Arcellan, a knight of Nauarre, Chamberlaine to king Charles, who tooke for his Lieutenant his brother Ramir of Arcellan, with thirtie men at armes, thirtie Lances, twenty Crosse-bowes, and other souldiers. The kings entered into Sos, either of them with two men: whither Don Henry and Don Tello had bene sent for to come: Don Henry came accompanied with eight hundred horse; the which hauing left without the towne, he entred with two more as the kings had done. There entered also the Abbot of Fescan, but ignorant of what was intended against Don Henry. The kings hauing treated long of their affaires in shew, thinking it a fit time to dispatch Don Henry, they talked secretly with Don John Ramires, perswading him with great promises to execute this murder: but this knight who was noble and vertuous, would neuer yeeld vnto it, saying, that he had rather die an hundred times, then to blemish his good name with so execrable a crime.

The kings seeing that their hopes were vaine to make him the minister of their treason, they knew not what to do, but to dissemble their enterprise, and retire into their countreies, imposing silence to D. John Ramires; who merited immortall commendation for this generous act: besides, that God did greatly honour him afterwards, hauing directed him into Castile, at such time as D. Henry reigned, of whom he was beloued and cherished, and obtained from him the Segneurie of los Cameros. From him are descended the Earles of Aguilar of the family of Arcellan. This businesse ill attempted, and not able to be executed, was for that time dissembled. There had past many former treaties and accords betwixt this D. Pedro king of Arragon, and his brother D. Fernand Marquis of Torosa, to the preiudice of D. Henry, for that they found him desirous to raigne in Castile, of which Realme D. Fernand was the lawfull heire, if D. Pedro the cruell died without children begotten in lawfull matrimony: but the king of Arragon had neuer any intent to do good vnto his brother D. Fernand, nor to procure him any honour and advancement: but as he was a man full of disdainfull enuie, and without loue or respect of any that did him seruice: so he spared no man, and dissembled with all men for his present commodity.

Don Henry who knew him well, could also dissemble for his part, and stand vpon his guard: he could handle him so cunningly, as by the meanes and forces of Arragon, hee made himselfe a way to attaine vnto his desires.

A 16 Soone after there was a new and strict League made with him, whereupon Don John Fernandes of Heredia, and Francis of Perillos, Captaines to the king of Arragon, were sent with money into France to leuie men.

During these treaties and practises, there was no cessation of armes, at what time it fell out, that the king tooke foure gallies of Castile, their king being at Moruedro, from whence he parted to come into Castile, at which time there was a sonne borne him at Almagar, of a Lady called Donna Izabella, which sonne he named Don Sancho: soone after returning to the warre, more enraged then euer against the king of Arragon, he marched into the countrie of Valence, hauing alwaies in his company Mahomad the Moore, king of Granado; he tooke Alicant, Xixona, Gandie, Oliue, and other places, but hee was in danger to haue bene suddenly surprized, and defeated in his retreat by Don Henry Earle of Transtamara, had he not bene aduertised by one of Castro of Ordiales. Hauing escaped this danger, this religious king went in pilgrimage in his shirt, with a halter about his necke to a place called our Ladie of Puch.

The king of Castile entred many times into Arragon and Valence: neither could the king of Arragon hinder him from forcing of many places, the which he left manned with good garrisons of Castilians; and at sea he had not alwaies the worst, although the Arragonois were the more expert mariners: from whome the Castilians tooke in the yeare 1364. siue gallies, which were carried to Carthage, and the captaines, mariners, and souldiers (for the most part) put to death by the kings commandement.

C 17 The king of Arragon being desirous to be freed from this war, sought all meanes by the king of Nauarre, to draw the king of Castile to some good accord, but it was labour lost: wherefore the kings of Nauar and Arragon resolved to make a league betwixt them; for confirmation whereof, they concluded a marriage betwixt the Infant Donna Jeanne sister to king Charles, and Don John Duke of Girone, the heire of Arragon, being then foureteene yeares old. And moreouer, the king of Arragon bound himselfe to giue lands and reuenues to Don Lewis brother to king Charles, and to provide him a wife, and to giue fifty thousand florens to vngage certaine townes, which king Charles had pawned to Gaston Phebus Earle of Foix his brother-in law, and to intertaine him a certaine number of men against any enemy whatsoever: namely, sixe hundred horse-men of the country of Nauarre, if it were against Castile; but if it were against France, then to entertaine him a thousand, and to ayde him at need with all his forces both by sea and land: and moreover he quit vnto him for euer, and to remaine to the Crowne of Nauarre, Saluatierra, and the place called the Terme of Real. For assurance of these things which were very honorable for the king of Nauarre, he of Arragon promised to lay in deposito the towne of Iacca, Vncastilla, Sos, Exea, and Thermael, which should be committed to the fidelitie of Rymond Allemand of Ceruillon, a knight of Arragon, who for this effect should be discharged of his oath of homage and vassallage, which he ought vnto the king of Arragon; and should sweare fealty to him of Nauarre, to deliuer him the places put into his hands, if the aboue-mentioned accord should be broken by the king of Arragon. The king of Nauarre promised for his part to quit the alliance of the king of Castile, and to make warre against him and his children: and for his part he layed in pawne the towne and castle of Sanguessa, Gallipienço, Vxué, Aybar, Cafeda, Pitellas and Penna, and moreouer the person of Arnand Lord of Lufe, his Chamberlaine, who was much fauoured by him: which articles were sworne at Vncastillo, in the presence of the Earles of Transtamara, Ribagorça, and others, whome the Kings commanded to keepe this league secret. It was not sufficient for these two Kings to fortifie themselves against the attempts of the king of Castile, for their safeties and defence, but they would also diuide the Beares skin before they had taken him, sharing the Realme of Castile in such sort, as the king of Nauarre should haue the cittie of Burgos, with all old Castile, all the country of the mountaines of Oca vnto the limits of Nauarre, and the Ocean sea: comprehending therein the Prouinces of Guipuscoa, Alan, and Biscay, and moreover the townes of Soria and Agreda: And for the king of Arragon were assigned the Realms of Toledo and Murcia. They did also conspire the death of Don Pedro king of Castile: the king of Arragon offering to him of Nauarre 200000. florens, and the proprietie of the townes and castles of Sos, Vncastel, Exea and and Tiermas, if he slue him, or deliuered him prisoner vnto him, and without it hee offered him presently the citie of Iacca, with the territorie and vallies. The better to dissemble these practises, they ordained that Don Lewis the king of Nauarres brother, should make a roade into Arragon, but he should suffer himselfe to bee taken prisoner by Don Alphonso Earle of Ribagorça; the which was done: but Lewis of Nauarre was soone deliuered, and the king of Nauarre did so dissemble his intentions, as the king of Castile could not discouer any thing.

Division of the Realme of Castile before they had conquered it.

This last desseigne was thus plotted betwixt the two kings without the priuie of any man, in regard of Don Henry Earle of Translamara, with whom the king of Arragon had other practises. For Don Henry affecting openly the Realme of Castile, vpon hope of the fauours which he attended from France, promised vnto the king of Arragon, that if he assisted him, he would giue him to hold in Soueraignie, the sixth part of the lands hee should conquer by his ayde in Castile, whereunto the king of Arragon gaue earc, being alwaies vniust vnto his brother Don Fernand, Marquis of Tortosa, to whom the Realme of Castile did belong by right, if Don Pedro the cruell died without lawfull heires. These bargaines were not so secret, but the Infant Don Fernand had some notice thereof, for the which he was so transported, and made such a stirre, as the king of Arragon, and the Earle of Translamara resolved to dispatch him, of which councill was Don Bernard of Cabrera, the which was soone after executed: for the Infant Don Fernand seeing that himselfe was no more secured in Arragon then in Castile, and therefore desiring to retire himselfe into France, the King of Arragon his brother found meanes to stay him, and to kill him in the castle of Buriane, in the territorie of Valence.

Death of Don Fernand of Ar
ragon.

An. 1363.

In the yere 1363. John the French king died, being returned into England, for to deliuer the hostages which he had giuen, not being able to enduce the States of the kingdom to accomplish the capitulations with the English. Charles King of Nauarre hearing these newes, hee made preparation to passe into France; to which Realme Charles the fit his brother in-law had succeeded, but this warre of Arragon had so intangled him, as hee could not: so as his affaires prospered not well on this side the Pyreneé mountaines.

An. 1364.
King of Nauar
open enemy to the king of Cas
tile.

In the yere 1364. the two kings of Nauarre and Arragon, renewed their league, but with some alteration, the King of Nauarre hauing already discovered himselfe an enemy to the king of Castile. To this end they met at Sos, where they agreed to continue this warre against Castile, and that it should not be lawfull for the one to make any peace or truce without the consent of the other. That the king of Nauarre should make no accord with the French king, but he of Arragon should be comprehended. They gaue hostages one vnto another for assurance of their conuentions. The king of Arragon gaue his sonne D. Martin, and he of Nauarre a son of D. Lewis his brother, and the children of Don John Ramires of Arcellan, of Don Martin Henriques, of the Lord of Grammont, of Don Bertrand of Gueuara, Fernand Gil of Asian, Martin Mayrines of Oriz, and of Michel Sanchez of Vrlua. These articles were sworne by the chiefe knights and townes of either part: and for that the summes of mony promised to the king of Nauarre, at the capitulation of Vncastello, were much augmented, it was sayd, that the K. of Arragon should deliuer him 50000. florens presently in Sos, and for the rest he should haue deliuered him in pawne the citie of Iacca, Sos, Vncastello, Tiermas, and Exea. Another priuat accord was made betwixt the king Don Charles, and Don Henry of Translamara, in whose hands the hostages should remaine. The king of Nauarre promised to enter in person into Castile, and there to make warre, and to be assured of Don Henry, hee would haue in hostage for his part, his daughter Donna Leonora, who was afterwards Queene of Nauarre, and a base sonne of his called Don Alphonso Henriques. The Earle promised, that if at any time he should get the realme of Castile, he would suffer the King of Nauarre to enjoy the lands of the ancient patrimonie of Nauarre, vsurped by the Kings of Castile, with diuers others.

Arragon.

These treaties betwixt the king of Nauarre, and Don Henry Earle of Translamara, were secret and vnkowne to the king of Arragon, who gouerned himselfe for the most part, by the aduice of Don Bernard of Cabrera, a wise Knight, and of great experience, by whom he was often perswaded from that which the other would haue him yeld vnto: for the

A the which he was hated by the king of Nauarre, and Don Henry: besides, being a priuie Councillor, and of greatest authoritie, he was enuied by the other Noblemen of Arragon, who were lesse fauoured: wherefore these Princes being againe assembled at Almu-dear, the king of Nauarre, and the Earles of Translamara and Ribagorça, conspired to deprive the King of Arragon of this Councillor, and wrought so, as they brought him into disgrace with the king. Don Bernard, being aduertised that they meant to apprehend him, sought to retire himselfe, and flying came into Nauarre to Carcastillo, the inhabitants whereof, seeing that he was pursued by Garcii Lopes of Sese, shut their rowne gates: but being summoned by Garcii Lopes in the name of the two kings, to deliuer Don Bernard, they stayed him, attending the kings commandement, who willed them to deliuer him vnto Garcii Lopes, who conuayed him to Murillo, where he remayned some time in hope to be deliuered: by which he was so hated by the king of Nauarre, and Earle of Translamara, as they neuer ceased by importune accusations, vntill they had put him to death.

Don Bernard of Cabrera in disgrace with his
King.

This Bernard of Cabrera had before the yere 1346. being forced to come to Court, and to employ himselfe in great affaires of State, wherein he was very iudicious, when as (wearie of the world) he had resolved to become a Monke. The king had cherished and advanced him, and received many good counsels, and profitable seruices from him, as well in the ciuill wars within his owne Realme, as in that of Sardinia and Castile. But as Courtiers, the more they seeke the greatnesse and honour of their Prince, and are by them the more honoured and beloued, are the more subiect to enuie; so fared it with him; for hauing bene faithfull to the king his master, he purchased the hatred of all the Princes and Noble-men of the Realme: so as when he was taken by the practises of the king of Nauarre and Earle of Translamara, there was not any one that did fauour him: but as it were by a common conspiracie, his processe was made, and the Infant Don John Prince of Girone, whome he had bred vp, made his Iudge, where sitting in Iustice, and hauing for assistant Dominicke of Cerdagne, chiefe Iustice of Arragon, (who by his charge and office should defend the oppressed) pronounced sentence of death against this poore decrepite old man.

D They write, that his sentence being read by Don Berenger Apilia, and James Monelia Vice-chancellor, he complained greatly, that he should be condemned without hearing, or in a manner any forme of processe: but Apilia answered him, that he ought not to hold it strange, seeing that by his owne Councill, that custome had bene brought into Arragon: and that he should remember the processe which was too summarily made against John Ximenes of Vrtrea, and Raymond Marquet, accused to haue slaine Raymond of S. Vincent; who, by the kings commandement, and in a manner without any forme of processe, had bene put to death. He was led vnto the market place of Saragossa, and there beheaded, and his head was carried vnto the king, being at Barcelona. Such rewards many times haue the most faithfull Councillors, of their ill aduised Princes. Thus miserably dyed one of the greatest personages in nobility, iudgement, and vertue, which had bene of long time in Arragon, who without the king his master had executed great matters, and the king without him did neuer any thing of worth. All his goods were confiscate to the king, whereby he purchased great dishonor, and rightly, both for his death, and for that of his brother Don Fernand. Bernardin of Cabrera, son to Bernard, had married Marguerite of Foix, daughter to the Vicount of Castelbon, by Constance of Luna, sister to D. Lope, a Lady of the bloud royall of Arragon: for she was daughter to Artal of Luna, and to D. Constance Perez, who was daughter to Don James Perez, base sonne to the king Don Pedro the third. At that time the Prince Don John did not much exceed fourteen years, yet he was employed in great affaires within the Realme, as well for warre as iustice, with a dispensation for his age, being assisted by Don Pedro Earle of Ribagorça, (who hauing renounced the world in his old age, had taken vpon him the habit of Saint Francis) and moreover, by Don Pedro of Vrgel, sonne to the Infant D. James the Kings brother, and by the Vicount of Cardona for the warre: and for iustice and other affaires of the Realme, he had for his Councillors Berenger Apilia, Bernard Sous, William Guymerand, and Thomas Marzan of Cattelogne.

Bernard beheaded.

During

Reuenues of Churches &c. without the Popes leaue.

During this last warre betwixt Castile and Arragon, D. Pedro king of Arragon, prest by A necessity, took the reuenues of many benefices, without demanding leaue from the Pope, and the more inconsiderately, say they, for that Urban then reigning, had neuer refused him any thing: wherefore he was in great danger to be excommunicated, and deiection from the rights of his Realmes, especially from that of Sardinia, which hee held in fee of the Church: the foueraignty whereof many of the Cardinals were aduise to giue to the Iudge of Arborea. The king for this cause sent his vnkle D. Pedro, sometimes Earle of Ribagorça, and then a Friar, and Gaspar Tregure, Doctor of the lawes, vnto the Pope: who declared in open Consistorie, That in like necessities and miseries, as the Realm of Arragon was then in, it had bin lawfull for kings, not only to use the temporall reuenues, but also to lay hands upon the reliicks, and holy vessel of the Churches: adding, that the Ecclesiasticall Estate was no lesse bound to the preservation of the common-weale, then other Estates: and that kings might freely use their meanes in such extremities, so as he promised to make them restitution in a conuenient time. Whereupon the Pope considering of the cause, did not pronounce any sentence. The Iudge of Arborea, hauing either practised the fauour of the Consistorie, or else moued with a desire to raigne, attempted thereupon to make sharpe warre against the Arragonois in Sardinia, a turbulent Iland, which continually bred new matter of charge and losse to the kings of Arragon, who had a little before ended all quarels with the Genouois, and by the meanes of John Marquis of Montferrat his allye: but to leaue a marke of punishment for the Rebels of Sardinia, he had suppress the name of Cal-luri, the which was wont to be one of the members thereof, with the title of a Iudge, ord- C dayning that from thence-foorth that country should bee confused, betwixt the Cap of Caillieri and of Lugudori.

Nauarre.

Princes in continuall distrust

To returne vnto the promises and capitulations made betwixt the two kings of Nauar and Arragon, there was no due execution thereof, neither were the hostages, which had beene promised, deliuered: for it is no ordinarie thing in such treaties, to haue deedes fol- low words, these Princes being in continuall iealousie and distrust one of another: where- fore the King of Nauar, receiuing no mony from the king of Arragon, he did not furnish him with men to oppose against the army of Castile, which was entred into the terri- tories of Valence, beginning withall to thinke of many desseins, nothing fauourable for the king of Arragon. If the king of Nauar, hauing deceiued the king of Castile, sought to do the like vnto him of Arragon; the king of Arragon for his part did no lesse vnto the king of Nauarre: for he had sent his ambassadours into France, who treated a league at Tho- lousa, with the Deputies of Charles the fifth the French king, and with Lewis D. of Anjou his brother, by the which the French promised to ayde the king of Arragon to conquer the realme of Nauar, and to spoile K. Charles, and hauing conquered it, they bound them- selves to furnish him alwaies with 500. lances, against any one that should seek to dispos- sesse him. The K. of Arragon promised also for his part to ayde the French to conquer Guienna, and to expell the English. These accords were made in the yeare 1364, Charles the fifth the French king, and Charles 2. king of Nauar being enemies. But as they were Frenchmen, and brothers-in-law, they were reconciled afterwards, & concluded a peace: so as the king of Arragon lost his paines, and the allyance which he had sought in France, serued him to no vse, yet the war continued that yeare betwixt the French, and the parti- ans of the K. of Nauar in France: but in the yeare 1365, Queen Jeanne wife to the king of Nauar, made hast to come to the French Court, to treat a peace betwixt the two kings; wherof the one was her husband, and the other her brother: for the K. of Arragon did im- portune the French king, to effect the league concluded the yeare before at Tholousa, es- pecially for the conquest of Nauar; for which reason he had sent new ambassadours vnto him that yeare. The K. of Nauar being aduertised of all these things, prest the Queene his wife to go this iourney, notwithstanding that she was with child. Her voyage for that time did produce nothing but a good truce, but afterward there was a peace made by the great care of the two Queens, Jeanne wife to the K. of Nauar, and Blanche his sister, & by the dex- teritie, iudgement, and wisdom of Captal of Buch, then prisoner to the French, for the factions of Nauar. The Q. of Nauar being at Eureux in the yeare 1366, she was deliuered of a son called Peter, he had the title of Earle of Mortaing: after her vp-rising she returned into

An. 1366.

A into Nauarre, carrying her eldest son Charles who was but foure yeares old with her, and that which was newly borne.

These kings of Nauar and Arragon, being thus busied, and irresolute in their desseines, durst not invade one another, and in the meane time he of Castile pursued the war, with all violence in the country of Valence, and took Orihuela, where there was slaine D. Alphonso Perez of Guzman Lord of S. Lucar, son to D. John Alphonso of Guzman, and grand-child to D. Alphonso Perez of Guzman the good. To him succeeded his brother D. John Alphonso of Guzman. The Arragonois also for their part tooke Moruedro, for want of vi- ctuals, D. Gomes of Porras Prior of S. John the Gouvernor, yeelded it, vpon condition, that he and his should be safely sent into Castile: yet the Earle D. Henry who was at this sege, prevailed so by his honest perswasions and promises, as the Prior was content to stay with him, who by that means retained about 600. men, laying before them the fury of D. Pedro K. of Castile, who excused nothing, and punished as well those which had behaued them- selves valiantly in the yeelding of such places, as those which had shewed themselves base and cowards. These were the last exploits of war betwixt Arragon and Castile.

At that time there was brought into Spain the body of the Cardinal of S. Clement some- times Archb. of Toledo, & Legat à latere in Italy, who died at Viterbo, hauing gouerned the affairs of the Romane sea, to the great content of Pope Urban the 5. who did wonder- fully grieve for him, and made all the shewes of mourning which Popes are accustomed to do at the death of their faithfull friends. This Prelate during his legation, prepared the C Popes access into the city of Rome, and was the means to bring the papall seate thither againe: for hee suppress many tyrants in Italy, and brought them to the obedience of the Roman sea, so as Gregory the 11. successor to Urban, came to Rome in the yeare 1366. This Cardinal had ordained by his testament, that his body should be buried in the city of To- ledo, if it might be suffered by the K. D. Pedro then reigning, or his successor, the which was executed, and his bones which lay in the towne of Assisi, in the monastery of S. Francis, were carried by land to Toledo, many offering to carry the Beere wheron this dead carcas lay, in hope to get pardon of their sins, for that the Pope had granted vnto them, that shold employ themselves in this seruice, the like indulgences as are giuen vnto them that do visit the churches of S. Peter and S. Paul, at Rome in the yeare of Iubile.

The time approched when as the King Don Pedro should be punished for his excesse and serue as a witnes to the world, that the feare of subiects, gotten by the cruelty of Prin- ces, is a bad gard for their maiesty, and a weak assurance of their Crowns. The death of Q. Blanche of Bourbon, whom the king D. Pedro had poisoned, after that he had intreated her along time most barbarously, mimistred the occasion of his ruine: for being for this cause odious to all the French, D. Henry, Earle of Transamara, (who was vigilant to embrace all things that might serue him to reuenge the death of his mother and brethren, & of so many iniuries which hee had receiued of this wretched king) found fauour and helpe in France. And it fell out very fitly, that the wars being ended in France, as well against the English, and King of Nauarre, as betwixt the Earles of Montfort and Blois, contending E for the succession of Britannie: this Realme was then wonderfully ouer-charged with idle souldiers, which kept the fields, and committed many spoyles and insolencies, being gathered together in such great numbers, French, English, Brittons, Flemmings, and of other nations intermingled, as they were fearefull to Princes, yea and to the Pope himselfe residing in Auignon: so as they demanded but an occasion of some long voy- age, to conquer and subdue Countries, or to be there defeated, being impossible with- out great danger and disorder, to be otherwise ridde of them.

Vpon these continuall complaints of the impieties and cruelties which Don Pedro King of Castile committed daily, being already pronounced by the Popes Legate, and confirmed by him, an vtter enemy to God and men: and at the instance and pour- suite of the king of Arragon, and of Henry Earle of Transamara, Bastard of Castile, who (as some write) were come to this effect in person, to Auignon; the French King, Pope Urban, and other Princes, thought good to haue these people dealt withall, (whome they commonly called Malandrins) to go and make warre in Spaine against Don Pedro furnished the Cruell: and Bertrand of Guesclin, a valiant and hardy Knight of C cc Britannie, Malandrins.

18.

Returne of the Popes Court to Rome.

19.

Expedition of
D. Henry of Castile against his brother D.
Pedro, and his victorie.

Brittany, (who was then a prisoner of war; for the factions of Montfort and Blois) was chosen to lead them, who for this cause was put to ranfome, and deliuered. Bertrand wrought so, as these companions were willing to follow him: whereupon some of their Captaines came to Barcelona, did capitulate, receiued mony, and promised to serue Don Henry, wherof Bernard Bastard of Bearn, sonne to Gaston Phebus Earle of Foix, was one of the chiefe: which D. Pedro King of Castile vnderstanding, he retired his troups, and came to Burgos, where he called a generall assembly; whither came the Lord of Albret, a knight of Gasconie well accompanied, who assured him for a certaine number of ducats, to draw away a good part of those soldiers which D. Henry and the king of Arragon had entertayned, and wrought so, as they should abandon them, and come to serue him: but it grieved the king to spend his treasure, which notwithstanding was very great: wherfore reiecting the Lord of Albrets good counsell, he sought other prouisions, which serued him to smale purpose. These men past into Spaine, being esteemed to be 10000. horse, and an infinite number of foot, besides those souldiers which the Earle and the king of Arragon had: to whom were ioyned many great personages, both French and others, among the which the French Historie names John of Bourbon Earle of March, cousin to the deceased queen Blanche of Castile, Anthony Lord of Beauieu, Arnold of Andreghen Marshall of France, Regne of Villenes, Eustace of Aubercourt, Hugh Caurelee, Gualter Huet, Mathew of Gournay, and Pedro of Albret, who with many other famous men, made this voyage: Bertrand of Guesclin being chiefe leader of them all, by reason of his valour and great experience. The King of Arragon with these succors did presently recover all that the king of Castile had taken from him, the Castilians hauing abandoned their garrisons. The bodie of the army which D. Henry should lead, was made at Sarragossa, from whence they marched directly to Calaorra, and entred without resistance, in the month of March, this yere 1366; D. Henry being receiued by D. Fernand bishop of that place, and by D. Fernand Sanchez of Tobar, vpon condition they should be intreated as friends: for the towne was not strong. There he was solicited by D. Alphonso of Arragon Earle of Denia and Ribagorça, and by the Arragonois, to take vpon him the title of King of Castile and Leon, which at the first he did refuse: but being prest and importuned, in the end he yielded, so as from that time he had more need of a bridle to restraine him, then a spur. Being thus proclaimed king, and hauing aduanced his royall Standard, the Knights which were there present, began to demand gifts & recompences in the countrie which they had not yet conquered, but were in good hope, to whome hee gaue contentment with many promises. Passing on, they tried Logroño, which place they found strong, and well manned: wherfore not to lose time, they marched on, and hauing seized vpon Nauarret and Birbiesca, they came to Burgos, whereas the king D. Pedro was, who made all the hast hee could to dislodge. The inhabitants seeing him parting, besought him not to abandon them, offering him all the mony that was in the towne, and their persons with great fidelity; but this king being terrified, there was no meanes to stay him: and in truth we seldome see valour and crueltie lodge together: wherfore the inhabitants of Burgos protested to prouide for the safety & preservation of the city the best they could: so as he was forced to quit them of the oath and homage they ought him, and presently tooke his way to Toledo, where hauing left a good garrison, he went to Seuille. The inhabitants of Burgos seeing themselves abandoned by their Prince, opened the gates to Don Henry, whom, in the capitulation they made, they called Earle, promising to title him king, when he should be entred into the city.

Don Henry parting from Birbiesca, some eight leagues distant from Burgos, hee made his entrie into the city, to the great contentment of many, who hated the violent disposition of the king D. Pedro: where he caused himselfe to be crowned king of Castile and Leon, in the royall Monasterie of Huelgas, this yere 1366; and within five and twentie dayes after his coronation, almost all the townes of Castile and Leon put themselves vnder his obedience and protection: saying, that according to the example and ancient custome of the Gods, they might retire themselves from a tyrant king, and chuse another: without hauing any regard vnto the succession, nor his family whom they should leaue. Then began D. Henry to distribute townes, castles, offices and dignities, vnto the Noblemen

Ma' and in passe into Spaine.

D. Henry took the title of K.
of Castile.

A blemen and Knights which had followed him. He gaue to D. Alphonso Earle of Denia and Ribagorça, the Marquisate of Villena, the patrimonie of D. Ieanne Manuel his wife: to Bertrand of Guesclin the Lordship of Molina; D. Tello brother to the new king, was maintained in the Segneurie of Bilcay, the inheritance of his deceased wife D. Ieanne of Lara, and moreover he gaue him Aquilar del Campo, and to his other brother D. Sancho, the townes of Haro, Briones, Villorado, Cerezo in Rioja, and the towne of Ledesma. To other knights hee gaue gifts, and confirmed and augmented the auncient priuiledges of townes which yielded willingly vnto him. Thinking himselfe now to be in sure possession, he caused his wife D. Ieanne, his son D. John, and D. Leonora his daughter, to come out of Arragon into Castile: and hauing disposed of the affaires of Burgos, of Castile the old, and of Leon, he went to Toledo, where he found some opposition, yet in the end he was receiued and saluted as king: and after the example of this stately citie, many other townes of that Realme yielded vnto him. The King D. Pedro seeing himselfe abandoned, put a great quantitie of money, and other treasure into a gally, and retired into Portugal: but fearing his cousin D. Fernand, Infant of that Realme, who loued him not, he past in great doubt vnto S. James in Gallicia, where he caused D. Suero of Toledo Archb. of that place, and D. Pedro Alvarez of Toledo, Deane of the same church, to be slaine, and adding sacrilege to this murder, he spoiled their houses, and caried away their goods, which was the chiefe cause why he flue them. Being doubtfull what to do, he resolved in the end to go by sea to Bayonne in France: wherfore parting from the Groine with 22. ships and one gally, carrying with him his three daughters, Beatrice, Constance, and Isabel, hee came to S. Sebastians in Guipuscoa, where he had some thousands of double ducats, and other riches, the which he took with him, and set saile towards Bayonne. A gally which followed him, in which was Martin Ianes his Treasurer, with much mony, & other precious things was stayed by the Inhabitants of Seuille, which citie being greatly affected vnto D. Henry, put themselves vnder his obedience, soone after the kings departure; and the citie of Cordoua did the like. So hatefull was the king D. Pedro, and so pleasing was the mild disposition of Don Henry, as in a short time hee found himselfe King of a great and mightie Kingdome, almost without striking stroke, the people struiuing who should bee first receiued.

Don Henry being at Seuille, he confirmed the peace with the Kings of Portugall and Granada: but he was deceiued in this prosperitie, being too confident of his new subjects, so as although he knew well that his enemy was retired to the English, with great store of treasure, and that he might well coniecture, that he would draw succors from thence, to trouble him in the possession of this Realme newly conquered, yet he dismissed his strangers well satisfied which were all his force, and retayned onely Bertrand of Guesclin, and Bernard bastard of Foix with some 1500. horse French and English. The countie of Gallicia opposed it selfe most against D. Henry: that being pacified and subdued, he assembled the Estates at Burgos, the which (besides that they did sweare fidelitie vnto his son D. John as heire vnto the Crowne) did grant vnto him the tenth peny of all the merchandize they should sell within the Realme, and so much the more willingly, when as they vnderstood that the king D. Pedro prepared to returne into Spaine with a great power of English. D. Henry to gratifie the citie of Burgos, gaue vnto it in that assembly, the towne of Miranda of Ebro, the which did belong to the Church of Burgos, it did also serue to recompence the towne of Birbiesca, belonging to the citie, which he had giuen to D. Pedro Fernandes of Velasco his great Chamberlaine. To the Church of Burgos in recompence of Miranda, he gaue a pension of fixtie thousand maraudis, vpon the tenths due from the sea, to bee employed in the ordinary distributions for the seruice which is done there day and night.

Don Dominicke was then Bishop of Burgos, the eight and twentieth Pastor in number, who obtayned this Bishoppricke after a manner worthie to be related: for the Chapter being diuided and at controuersie about the election of a new Bishoppe, after the death of Don Fernand the third, who had newly left and abandoned that seate, and not able to agree and determine vpon two chiefe persons propounded in that assembly,

Beautie of D.
H. myt be new
King.

Flight of the king D. Pedro
out of Spaine.

they concluded to referre the nomination to Dominick, then Chanoine of that Church, beeing held a man of a good and holy life. This good Chanoine hauing accepted the nomination, bethought himselfe of a meanes to displease neither party: saying merily vnto them, that if it were their pleasures hee should name a Bishop, hee was of opinion, that himselfe should be the man, the which he deliuered with so good a grace, as the Chapter could not take it ill: wherefore Dominick the Chanoine became presently Bishop, hauing neuer before once dreamed to aspire to that dignitie: and his election was soon after confirmed by the Pope. This Bishop was a good seruant to D. Henry. At that time D. Tello brother to Don Henry married a Gentle-woman which was called Donna Ieanne of Lara, as his first wife, who was Lady of Biscay: by reason whereof many did beleue it was the same that was daughter to Don John Inignes of Lara, who (they say) had beene slain by the King Don Pedro: and this perswasion continued among the people of Biscay some time, being nourished by Don Tello. Donna Ieanne Manuel, wife to Don Henry, was sent him into Castile by Don Pedro king of Arragon, who would that Donna Leonora, Infanta of Arragon, future wife to Don John the eldest sonne of D. Henry, should accompanie her. But before he dismissed them, he caused Donna Ieanne Manuel (who intitled her selfe Queene of Castile and Leon) to sweare, to do her best to cause Don Henry her husband, to giue him the citties of Soria and Cuenca, the townes of Molina, and Medina Celi and the Realme of Murcia, as they had agreed, and hee had promised before this Conquest. And moreover, he demanded rembursement of certaine summes of mony which hee had lent him: whereunto Don Henry (who had newes of the armie which was preparing by the English, in fauour of Don Pedro his competitor) made an honest answer: for it was reasonable, sayd he, to attend the end of this great preparation, which was made against him.

Bishop of Burgo chosen by himselfe.

Nauarre.

The King of Nauarre in this first warre had not shewed himselfe a fauourer to either of these contending Princes: but knowing that the King Don Pedro was retired to Bayone, dispossessed of his Realme, he came to see him, and was there present at the accord and promises which past betwixt Edward Prince of Wales and him. The Princes supping together, held this order: the King Don Pedro was on the right hand, and next to him the Prince of Wales, and on the other side was the king of Nauar alone: who being returned into Nauar, he was much sollicitud by Don Henry, to be of his partie, but he was already engaged by promise to Don Pedro king of Castile, and to the Prince of Wales, to giue them free passage through his countie. The king of Arragon aduertised of all these things, prest the French king by his ambassadors, to make warre against the English, and also against the king of Nauarre, promising to ioine for his part, to diuert the storme which was comming vpon Don Henry the new king of Castile, whom he ought to haue receiued into this league: and in the meane time there was continuall war vpon the frontiers of Arragon and Nauarre. Notwithstanding these things aboue-mentioned, D. Henry did so labour the king of Nauar, as he made him forget the promises he had made at Bayone, to D. Pedro king of Castile, and to the English, comming to meet with D. Henry at Santa Cruz of Campeço, where hee promised and sware to be of his side, and to do his best to stop the passage of the English army through Nauarre, which would haue auayled him much to breake the desseines of the dispossessed king: for in the passage of the Pyreneé hilles, hee had nothing to fauour him, but the Townes of Saint Sebastian and Guetaria in Guipuscoa.

At these promises solemnly made by the king of Nauarre, vnto Don Henry, there assisted Don Gomes Manrique Arch-bishop of Toledo, D. Lopes Fernandes of Luna, Arch-bishop of Sarragossa, Don Alphonso of Arragon, Earle of Denia, and Marquis of Villena, Bertrand of Guesclin, and many other great personages of Castile, France, and Arragon. And a league was concluded betwixt the kings of Arragon, Nauarre, and Don Henry, for their common defence against all men. And the king promised to be readie with the forces of his countie, and to be in person at the Battaille which they thought would be giuen, for assurance whereof there was deliuered into the Arch-bishops hands of Sarragossa the castle of Garde, and that of S. Vincent to Bertrand of Guesclin, and that of Buradon was giuen in gard to D. John Ramires of Arcellan.

In

A In recompence of the good offices which D. Henry expected from King Charles, he promised to giue him the towne of Logroño, to him and his for euer. It was likely that D. Henries affaires should succeed better then those of Don Pedro, and therefore K. Charles made choice to hold with the stronger, as he thought. The dispossessed king of Castile, and the Prince of Wales vnderstanding of this league, found it very strange: and the English being more familiar with the king of Nauarre, he complained much vnto him, and sought to reduce him to his first promises, the which he did: making him againe, with the note of great inconstancie, to quit the party of Don Henry, and of the king of Arragon, in regard that they had promised to giue him, besides Logroño, the citie of Victoria, which did yet hold for the king Don Pedro: for the which he bound himselfe by oath, to giue them passage, and to be in person with his troupes, in the battell, in their fauor: excusing his lightnesse, for that the Realme of Castile did by right belong vnto the King D. Pedro: and withall he had a desseine to make vse of the friendship and forces of the English in the quarrels and pretensions he had with the French King, who did much trouble his affaires.

The conditions which D. Pedro king of Castile made with the Prince of Wales, were these: He gaue him from that time the Segneurie of Biscay, & Castro of Ordiales, & promised to pay the soldiery which he led into Spaine, leauing his three daughters in hostage with the English: he promised the citie of Soria to John Chandos, Constable in Guienne for the English, and to many other Noblemen and knights other places and townes in Castile. Vpon these accords, being full of good hope, seeing they had the king of Nauar their friend, they marched with a great and mighty armie in the Spring-time 1367. to repossesse the king D. Pedro in his Realme. King Charles whether troubled in conscience for the oaths which he had so often broken, or for some other consideration, would not be in person at this incounter betwixt the king D. Pedro and D. Henry, as hee had promised, but vnder colour of going a hunting, he caused himselfe to be taken prisoner, by a plot and accord made with Olyner of Manny or Maulny a Britton Knight, who held the castle of Borja for Bertrand of Guesclin, who had it by gift from the king of Arragon, in the which he was shut vp: and for that he would not shew himselfe altogether disloyall, hee left Don Martin Henriques of Lacarra, the master of his horse, and his Standard-bearer, at Pampelona with three hundred Lances, commanding him to ioine with the English armie, and to fight in it.

The English armie arriued at Cuenca, or Combe of Pampelona, about the beginning of March this yeare 1367. from whence it past into Alaua: besides, the Prince of Wales, and Don Pedro king of Castile, there were in it John Duke of Lancaster, brother to the Prince; D. James of Maiorca, son to the king Don James, who had come for refuge to this English Prince being at Bordeaux. John Chandos Constable of Guien, Robert Felton great Seneschall, Richard of Angle, and Stephen of Consentone Marshalls of Guien: moreover, the Earle of Armaignac and Albret, who offered and brought to this warre a thousand complet lances of his subiects and friends: but they were reduced (to his great griefe) to two hundred by the Prince, beeing so aduised by some other, or of his own proper motion, and for enuy: which vice some write did often blemish the great vertues that were in him. For euen some affirme, that this voyage which he vndertooke into Spaine, was not for charity, nor any loue he bare to the dispossessed king D. Pedro, but for that the honor and reputation which Bertrand of Guesclin had gotten, to haue made D. Henry K. of Castile, would not let him sleepe. Besides, the aboue named, there did accompanie the Prince of Wales in this expedition, the Earls of Perigott and Cominges, the Vicont of Carmain, Bernard and Perducas of Albret, Captal of Buch, the Lord of Cliffon, the Seneshals of Xaintong, Rochel, Querci, Limosin, Aginois, and Bigorre, with many other Noblemen, and renowned knights of England, Poitou, Brittaine, Gascogne and other countries, and among them some which had a litle before serued D. Henry, vnder the command of Bertrand of Guesclin: which Guesclin did not fayle at need, but came to D. Henries army with a good number of Knights and souldiers, to ayd him to maintaine his conquest. Vpon the newes of this mighty army, D. Henry had gathered together all his good subiects: so as according to the French Authors (it may be exceeding in their computations)

20.
Conditions betwixt D. Pedro and the Prince of Wales

An. 1367.

Castile.

he made accompt to haue 7000. men at arms, 20000. light horse, and 40000. foot, whereof many were armed with slings, much feared in those dayes: with these forces hee came to encounter his enemy, and lodged betwixt S. Dominike of Calçada and Bagnares, the enemy being camped about Saluatierra, who approaching towards Logroño, he came to Calderan. The Captaines were of opinion, that D. Henry should not fight, but only coast the enemy, and keepe him in continuall feare, cutting off their victuals and other commodities, whereby they should be soone forced to breake of themselves: & so had the French king aduised him to do: but hee (who was a Prince of a great spirit, and more resolute in such actions, then was fit for the head of an Estate, and incouraged by some small aduantage gotten of the fore-runners of the English, by D. Tello and D. Sancho his breedren, who had taken Thomas Felton, a knight, and some others) gouerned himselfe after his own humor; who raising his army, came to Nagera, seeing the English approach to Nauarret. From hence the Prince of Wales did write vnto D. Henry, terming him Earle of Transmara, which letter was full of courtesie and good words, perswading him to quit the title of King, and to yeeld vnto his brother D. Pedro, the lawfull K. of Castile, assuring him hee would be a meane that he should haue a good composition: and about all, that he should auoid to come to a battell, the euent whereof must needs be his ruine, seeing they did much exceede them in number, their souldiers in valour, and their Captaines in leading. To the which D. Henry made answer, that he could not hearken to any accord with him, who had against the law of Nature taken delight to murder so many of the blood royal, and other great personages of Castile: who had no respectiue regard of the lawes of the country, and much lesse of God, falsifying his oath and promises, hauing no other rule in his actions, but his tyrannous passions: and with his excuses, hee gaue many good words in regard of the Prince of Wales, protesting that he came with griefe to fight, and that he would willingly haue auoyded the effusion of Christian blood, which he prepared to see.

The Princes being thus disposed, the armies presented themselves one before another betwixt Nagera and Nauarret; where they encountered with such fury about Aleçon, neere to the Bourg of Afofra, as after great effusion of blood, D. Henry's men were put to flight, the disorder beginning on D. Tello's side, and many were taken prisoners by the English, French, and Nauarrois: against some of which the K. D. Pedro being incensed, did execute his rage, causing them to be murdered in his presence: among others, the first master of the Knights of S. Bernard, & the last also, being taken in this defeat, had his head cut off by the kings commandement. It was a military order sprung vp in Biscay, to which knights should be assigned the lands called Beeries, which lay neere: but it was suddenly extinct by reason of these wars, and by this excessse of the King D. Pedro. Many were reconciled by the mediation of the Prince of Wales, of which number was D. Sancho, brother to the Erie D. Henry: others were straightly imprisoned, among which were Bertrand of Guesclin, Arnold of Andreghen, and Begue of Villaines. D. Henry escaped from the battell, and posting towards Nagera, his horse being tyred and out of breath, hee met with a Squire of the Prouince of Alaua, called Ruy Fernandes of Goana, who knowing him, mounted him vpon a good Genet, with the which he came into the K. of Arragons countrie, to whom he would not go, remembreing the miseries which follow afflicted Princes fallen from their fortunes, and the small faith that is in friends in such extremities, euerie one drawing backe, and seeking to excuse himselfe vnto the Victor, to please whom, many times the vnfortunat is deliuered vp to sacrifice. Wherefore hee past the mountaines, and retired into France, leauing the townes and Noblemen of Castile, which had followed his party in great perplexity, with him there retired that D. Pedro of Luna a Cattelán, who of a knight as he was then, carrying armes, became a Clergie man, was a Cardinall, and in the end Pope, during the great Schisme, which did so much trouble the Church of Rome.

After this great victorie which hapned the third day of April 1367. the king D. Pedro entred in great pompe into Burgos, from whence D. Jeanne Manuel, called Queen of Castile, wife to D. Henry, her children, and daughter-in-law, were a little before retired, and fled in all hast into Arragon, where they were receiued, but not so chearefully as before: for the king of Arragon studied how he might recover the fauour of Don Pedro King of Castile,

Prince of Wales writes to D. Henry.

D. Henry's
sister.

D. Henry de-fected in battell.

D. Pedro of Luna, a knight
of Arragon,
future Pope.

A Castile, being therein assisted by the Prince of Wales, and aduised to abandon D. Henry, who was vanquished: D. Romero Bishop of Lerida, D. Pedro Earle of Vrgel, the Vicont of Cardona, D. Iohn Fernandes of Heredia, and others, were of this opinion, who were sent Ambassadors to D. Pedro King of Castile, and Raymond Peguera, and James Elfaro went to the Prince of Wales.

Some say that the Prince of Wales beginning to descourt the ingratitude of D. Pedro King of Castile, there was in this Negotiation a plot laid betwixt him and the king of Arragon to diuide the king of Castile betwixt them; and to giue some part of the booty to the kings of Nauarre and Portugal, and so wholly to reiect the tyrant D. Pedro.

The King of Nauarre hearing of the victory which the King of Castile had obtained, thought it now time to creepe out of his denne, pressing Oliuer of Maulny to set him at liberty: but the difficulty was, this knight would be paid for his good seruice, hauing taken the king prisoner. King Charles gaue him D. Pedro his second sonne in hostage, assuring him that if he would come to Tudelo, he would giue him all that hee had promised, and more. This good knight tooke the Infant D. Pedro, and put him into the castle of Borja, deliuered the king, and soone after, through his great simplicity, followed him to Tudelo: but he was no sooner arrived, but they layed hold of him, and put him in prison, vntil that he had yeelded the hostage. A brother of his should haue bene taken with him by the kings commandement, but seeking to flee away ouer a house, hee was slaine by them that pursued him. King Charles did write presently to the king of Arragon, complayning of the wrong which the Britons (holding the castle of Borja and Magallon) had done him, and that they detained and withheld his sonne, whom hee had bene forced for to giue them in Ostage, heating that they ment to carry him into France, the which hee intreated him to prevent, sending good guards vpon the passages of his country. He sayd moreover, that he threatened to inuade his country of Nauarre, relying vpon the support they had of Arragon: wherefore hee intreated him not to giue them forces, nor any aide in such enterprises, and to take it ill if hee led an army before Borja, to deliuer his sonne from prison. Garsi Sanchez Prior of Ronceual, was sent of this Ambassage into Arragon, who not onely executed his charge, but also entred into a treaty of marriage betwixt Charles the eldest sonne of Nauarre, and D. Leonora daughter to the King of Arragon. The King of Arragon who had no need of any enemies, for that he feared the King of Castile, caused the trouble of Borja so easie, and commanded the Britons to deliuer the Infant D. Pedro, who being carried to Tudelo, Oliuer of Maulny was also deliuered. As for the marriage, although the King of Arragon did much desire it, yet the King of Nauarre, hauing retired his sonne, did not much care for it, meaning first to see what should become of the broiles of Castile.

The King D. Pedro the cruell, victorious, but insolent and treacherous as of custome, could not containe himselfe within the bounds of modesty and reason, neither to his subiects, nor to strangers, English, French and others, who had seated him in his Kingdom: There were great controuersies amongst them for prisoners and ransomes, and the souldiers pay, yet after much disputing there was some kinde of agreement. D. Pedro King of Castile sent D. Pedro Fernandes Peres of Ayala, with the Deputies of the Prince of Wales, to put them in possession of the Lordship of Biscay, and Castro of Ordiales, according vnto their accords: but the Biscains being aduertised that what the King did, was onely to content the Prince of Wales, and to shew that hee had a will to performe his promise, but not that he had any meaning to maintaine it: besides that of their owne dispositions they did abhor the command of strangers, they would neuer receiue these Deputies, nor consent that they should be put in possession of their country, which was the cause of great troubles. The King seeming to bee much discontented at these difficulties, made a sollemne both in the chiefe Church of Burgos, that hee would put the Prince of Wales in possession of the Siegenurites of Biscay. D. Pedro seeing himselfe restored to his Realme, he desired to know what the destinies did promise him, and therefore he demanded aduice of a doctour to the King of Gramado, called Men-Hatin, a great and learned Astrologian and Phylosopher, who sent him a letter full of learning, saying, that hee must looke vnto his owne carriage, and how hee gouerned his subiects,

Nauarre.

Oliuer of Maulny deli-uers the King
of Nauarre,
and remains prisoner himselfe.

Castile.

D. Pedro King of Castile discontented the English and other strangers.

*Holy aduertif-ment to a Physiophier
Master to D.
Pedro.*

for thereon depended the continuance of his raigne, either long or short, and the continuance of the scepter in his family: adding many precepts, the which if hee had duly observed, without doubt he had reigned securely in peace: but hee fell into his frenesies and cruelties, the which did so estrange the hearts of those, which abhorred his forepassed tyrannies, as his fall must needs bee miserable. Hee parted from Burgos, and went to seeke meanes to content the English, commanding that as soone as he should bee out of the city, they should put to death Ruy Ponce Palomeque and some others, whom hee had caused to be put into the castle of Burgos. Being come nere vnto Toledo, he would haue hostages of the Inhabitants for his assurance, and there hee put to death seuentene of the chiefe of the city; then hee went to Cordoua, from which place he sent to Seuille, that they should put to death Gil Bocanegra, D. Iohn Pance of Leon Lord of Marchene, and Alphonso Aluarez of Quadros, with an other called Alphonso Fernandes: Hee caused many to be dispatched at Cordoua before hee came to Seuille, where beeing arriued, hee caused Donna Yrraca Osofo, mother to D. Iohn Alphonso of Guzman, to bee slaine, and Martin James his high treasurer, taking great delight in his murthers, and reuenges vpon these miserable creatures, for that he had not found them ready to follow his fortune, or for some other discontentment; forgetting that for such inhumanities and tyrannies, he had beene once cast out of Spaine. He caused D. Martin Lopes of Cordoua, maister of Calatrava, to be apprehended, and would haue put him to death, but the King of Granada demanded him in giust, and did so much, as he saued his life. He had done more, if time and meanes had permitted, but God preuented him, for D. Henry stayed not long to depriue him both of realme and life.

*A Moore more
kinde then D.
Pedro a Christian King.*

After the losse of the battaile, D. Henry came into the county of Foix, where beeing well entertained by the Earle, and furnished with all things besitting such a knight, hee went to Auignon, whereas Pope Yrbain the fifth did raigne, who did loue, and esteeme him much, and therefore he receiued him courteously, and delt with Lewis Duke of Aniou, brother to the French King, and Gouvernor of Languedoc, to giue him meanes to raise a new army, to returne into Spaine, whether many friends recalled him, assuring him that the cruelties which the King D. Pedro continued, prepared him the way to recouer his good fortune, and that now there was not any difficulty to settle him firmly; neither need they feare that D. Pedro should finde fauour or succors with the English, whom he had defrauded of their pay and recompences promise, and sent home discontented. D. Ieanne wife to D. Henry, and his children, finding themselves not very safe in Arragon by reason of the friendship that was betwixt the King of Arragon, and the Prince of VVales, they had past into France, whereas they remained in the castle of Perapertuse, vnto the end of the warre, such was the diligence of D. Henry, and of his friends, as hee obtained from the King siue thousand pounds sterling in ready money, and liberty to leauy souldiars within his Realme. Hee had also succors both of money and men from the Duke of Aniou, from Guy Cardinal of Bologne, and other Noblemen of France, beeing incensed against the King D. Pedro, the murderer of Queene Blanche of Bourbon his wife: notwithstanding D. Henry found many great difficulties, an ordinary thing for those that are in aduertity: for the French King feared least the English should take it ill that he gaue succors vnto their enemy: and to make such a preparation for warre, as was necessary, hee had neede of a great masse of money, which was the greatest hindrance of his affaires. Some therevpon write that in one day hee caused all the money to be seized on, that was in Auignon, in marchants, and Banquers hands, the Pope giuing his consent, and hee promising vpon the faith of a Prince to restore it. In the end he had meanes to raise a good army, but before he began to march, he had certaine newes that the Prince of VVales was returned into Guienne much discontented with the King D. Pedro: and moreover that all the Province of Guipuscoa, excepte Sain Sebastian and Guetaria, the townes of Biscay, Segobia, Vailledolit, Palence, Auila, Guadalajara, Salamanca, Medina del Campo, Toro, Almedo, Arcualo, Colca, Madrigal, Carrion, Sepulueda, Aillon, Atienza, Illescas with many other forts held his party.

*D. Henry bastard of Castile aide againe
by the French.*

Whilest that D. Henry prepares to passe into Spaine, some of the English and French souldiars,

A souldiars, returning from the seruice of D. Pedro King of Castile, by the pace betwixt Nauarre and Arragon, spoiling the valleies, they attempted to enter into Iacca. Against these men the Inhabitants of the country, both Nobles and Commons armed, so as after diuerse skirmishes, whereas many were slaine of both sides, these strangers beeing aboute fifteene thousand men, past the Pyrenes, and returned into their countries. The King of Arragon, before the Prince of VVales his retreat had sought by his meanes to recouer Sauueterre, and Real of Rueste, which the Nauarrois held since the warre of Castile, but he could not.

B As for the King of Nauarre, hee recouered the places which hee had left in deposito, when as he made a league with the King of Arragon, and D. Henry, wherein hee was assisted by D. Pedro King of Castile, and through fauour of the victory, which hee had obtained: but yet hee could neither get Logroño from him, nor the towne of victoria, which he had promised him; neither could hee retire out of the hands of D. Iohn Ramirez of Arcellan (a Knight of honour) the place of Buradon, whereof he had beene chosen Gardien, saying, That hee did not follow the fortune, and passions of princes, but the equity of the faith, which was promised and sworne. This good Knight had retired himselfe into Arragon after the battaile lost, when as D. Henry saued himselfe in France, to whose seruice he returned soone after.

Nauarre.

*Integrity of
D. Iohn Ramirez of Arcel-lan.*

C The Prince of VVales before he went out of Spaine, had practised a firme league betwixt the Kings raigning then in Spaine, and himself, but with diuerse descignes, wherein he assured himselfe that the King of Nauarre would bee faithfull, and furnish him with a good number of souldiars. As for him of Arragon, he embraced the league as it seemed with great affection, thinking hee could not then doe better, then to ioine with the victorious King of Castile, and the English. To conclude this league, a day was appointed for the Deputies of all these Princes at Tarbes: in the meane time the treacheries of D. Pedro King of Castile, were so hatefull vnto the Prince of VVales, as he returned to Bourdeaux discontented. The Deputies of the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon, and of the Prince of VVales, came to Tarbes, at the day appointed, where there also arriued some from Castile. The dispositions of these Princes were such, as the King of Arragon would willingly haue ioined with D. Henry, if hee had durst, but hee followed fortune: he of Nauarre was more inclyned to the Prince of VVales, but whatsoeuer it were, euery one sought to make his profit of these troubles; and to draw some thing from Castile: the King of Arragon would haue Murcia, and some other townes: hee of Nauarre demanded the prouinces of Guipuscoa, and Alaua, namely Victoria, Sauueterre, Treuigno and many townes in Rioja: the Prince of VVales pretended Biscay, Castro of Ordiales, and many other places, all promising to bandy themselves against D. Henry, and to stop his passage into Spaine, if these things were performed by D. Pedro: if not they were as ready to enter into league with D. Henry, if hee made them the like promises. Thus the Realme of Castile was set to sale. On the other side King Edward, father to the Prince of VVales, and the King of Arragon, had their practises apart, to diuide the realme of Castile and Leon betwixt them, and to giue some part vnto the King of Nauarre. Thus these Princes laboured to diuide that betwixt them, which God had appointed for an other, and their propositions and disputes at Tarbes, were such and of so many things, as not able to conclude any thing, they referred their assembly to Oleron, where they did lesse.

*Leagues full of insidiality of
the Princes
of those times.*

22 During these Negotiations, D. Henry entred with his French army into Arragon, which made euery one to thinke of his affaires, with D. Henry was Bernard bastard to the Earle of Foix, who had beene taken in the battaile of Nagera, and redeemed from the English: and although that the King of Arragon sought to diuert this passage, yet D. Henry went his course, and by Nauarre also, finding not any opposition. Hauing past the riuer of Ebro with his whole army, marching in the country of Castile, hee fell on his knees, and making a crosse vpon the sand, hee sware, that no roile nor misfortune should euer make him goe out of Castile. Hee entred into Calaoorra without contradiction, the eight and twentieth of September, this yeere of our Lord 1367. whether many Knights, Squiers and other men, came vnto him, flying the furie of the King D. Pedro. Being

Nauarre.

*Second Entrise of D. Henry bastard of Castile, into
Spaine.*

Being assured of Calaoorra, hee came to Logroño, where hee found great resistance, A wherefore hee past on by Rioja and Bureba, and came to Burgos, where the Inhabitants receiued him with great affection, and although the castle and the Iewes place made some resistance, yet he brought them to obedience and tooke within the castle D. James of Majorca, who defended it. Hee was sonne to the last King of Majorca, and had escaped from a hard prison, where hee had bene long detained in the new castle at Barcelona, since the yeere of our Lord 1362. then being come to Naples, hee had the happe to marrie Queene Ieanne of Naples, whom they called Duke of Calabria, and not King of Naples.

Many townes yielded vnto Don Henry in fewes daies, and about the beginning of the yeere of our Lord 1368. he got the city of Leon: wherefore hauing much blemished the name and authority of his aduersary in old Castile, hee marched with his army towards Toledo, which city hee besieged making a bridge of wood ouer the riuer of Tayo, to passe and repasse his army, as occasion should serue. The Inhabitants were desirous to receiue D. Henry, but for that Don Pedro held many of their men in hostage, fearing least hee should kill them, they durst not declare themselves. At this sege, the French Kings Ambassadors preuailed so with Don Henry, as hee sware to compromise the controuersies which hee had with the King of Arragon, hauing that charge from their maister, who desired to reconcile these two Princes: at this promise there were present Don Pedro of Arragon, the Kings vncler, the Archbishop of Toledo, Don Pedro Fernandes of Velasco, Fernand Peres of Ayala, Diego Gomes of Toledo, Gonçal Mesia of Pont, and others. Don Pedro King of Castile hauing fortified and walled the towne of Carmona, parted thence, to come to Eccia, hauing in his company Mahumet King of Granada, called the old, with all the forces of his Realme, consisting of seuen thousand horse, and foure score thousand foot, whereof twelue thousand were Crosse-bowes, or as some write thirtie thousand, to whom the King Don Pedro did ioine fifteene hundred horse, and fixe thousand foote, of his subiects and partisans Spaniards; and with this army he came and laied sege to Cordoua which had revolted: but not able to take it, after some sallies and encounters, the Moores returned to Granada, and the King Don Pedro to Seuille. Yet the King of Granada staid not long before hee returned to Iaen, the which hee tooke and burned, and came againe and camped before Cordoua, but hee dislodged soone, and went towards Vbeda, where hee did as hee had done at Iaen, and making his profit of these reuolts, hee tooke many other places, did great spoile in Andalusia, and carried away an infinite number of Christians prisoners. Whilest that Don Henry prest Toledo, the townes of Victoria, Salnatierra, Alaua, and Logroño, which held for the King Don Pedro, being tired with the continuall warre which the Guipulcoans, and others of their Neighbours (which held Don Henries partie) made against them, they yielded to Charles King of Nauarre.

In this reddition the King of Nauarre was much assisted by Don Tello, who held Biscay, and was then in bad termes with his brother Don Henry. They say that the Inhabitants of these townes hauing acquainted the King Don Pedro with their necessities, intreating him that hee would not take it ill, if they put themselves into the hands of the King of Nauarre, who was his friend and allie, hee willed them to hold out as long as they could, and when as they should bee no more able to defend themselves they should rather yeeld to Don Henry his brother, without diuiding themselves from the crowne of Castile, then vnto the King of Nauarre, who would dismember them from that body: moreouer that hee had no reason to gratifie him, for hee had not receiued any assured succors from him. But it fell out otherwise, and the King of Nauarre was seized thereon, who to make money at that time, sold many preiudges to the townes of Nauarre, and among others to the towne of Viana hee sold the duty called Fousadera, and sold them moreouer the place called Agoncillo, and the Borroughs of Villicilla, and Lacagurria, with their appurtenances, for a certaine sum of money, by letters granted at Olite, the seuenth of August, this yeere 1368.

In the meane time D. Henry continued his sege to Toledo, the losse whereof D. Pedro fearing

Army of the King D. Pedro.

Townes in Castile yield to the King
of Nauarre.

A fearing, hee resolved to come and succour it and to raise the sege. Hauing therefore left D. Sancho and D. Diego, his base sonnes in Carmona, with great store of money and precious stones, and a good garrison, hee marched against the besiegers. Being vpon his march, hee receiued letters from Aben-Hatin the Moore, who foretold him of his approaching death: yet for all this he staid not, leading in his army three thousand horse, whereof fifteene hundred were Moores, which the King of Granada had sent him. Being come to Montiel, and there making some stay, hee was abandoned by many of his men; whereof D. Henry being aduertised, hee thought it time to come to his last tryall, which of them two should raighe in Castile: wherefore he left at the sege of Toledo D. Gomes Stauriques, Archbishop of that city, with most of his forces, and he with three thousand horse went to encounter the King D. Pedro, being resolved to giue him battaile. He was ouertaken vpon the way in the towne of Orgaz, by Bertrand of Guefclin, who being newly redeemed from the English, for tenne thousand pounds sterling, which the French King had paid, came to serue him in this conquest with fixe hundred launces. Being fortified with this troupe, D. Henry marched with all speed, and came to Montiel, whereof the King D. Pedro (who had no good spies) did not dreame, where as his men making a shew of fighting, being in tumult and confusion, (as men surprized) they were by the counsell of Bertrand of Guefclin, suddenly charged with such fury, as they were all put to flight, abandoning their King, who seeing himselfe reduced to that extremity, shut himselfe into the castle of Montiel, which stands vpon the side of a hill, C about the towne.

Martin Lopes of Cordoua, captaine of the men which were within Carmona, was vpon the way to come and succor the King D. Pedro; but hearing of the defeat of those that were with him, and that he was shut vp into the castle of Montiel, he returned. The Earle D. Henry did presently cast a ditch about the towne and castle of Montiel, that his prey might not escape; but D. Pedro being besieged, and in want of all things fought to corrupt Bertrand of Guefclin, by the meanes of Men Rodrigues of Sanabria, promising him the townes of Soria, Almacan, Atienza, Montagui, Bega and Seron, and moreouer two hundred thousand doubloons of gold, if hee would undertake to set him in a place of safety: wherevnto Bertrand seeming to consent, he aduertised D. Henry; then hauing giuen an houre and place to Men Rodrigues (who was borne at Trasmamara) to bring forth the King, he came out of the castle in the night, hauing in his company D. Fernand of Castro, and D. Diego Gonçales of Ouiedo, and went all armed towards the lodging of Bertrand of Guefclin, who came to meet him, and said vnto him, that it was time to spur; but as he was ready to goe to horse, hee was staid by some that followed Bertrand, and forced to come into his tent, where hee found D. Henry his brother, armed, who at the first sight did not know him; and being aduertised by them that were about him, that it was the King D. Pedro, his enemy, yet was hee in doubt, for hee had not scene him in many yeeres. The King D. Pedro seeing himselfe betraied, transported with fury, began to cry out aloud, I am, I am in deed D. Pedro. Then D. Henry drawing out his dagger stabbed him in the face, the King grasped with him, and they both fell to the ground, but D. Henry vnderneath; who being helpt by Bertrand of Guefclin, and others, freed himselfe, and got the King D. Pedro vnder him, whom hee slue with his dagger. Thus D. Pedro King of Castile ended his daies miserably, for his excesses and tyrannies; fulfilling the prediction of the Monke of St. Dominike of Calçada, whom hee caused to be burned, and of the Philosopher Aben-Hatin. His death was in the yeere 1368. the two and thirtieth of March, for the which many blame Bertrand of Guefclin, as hauing falsified his faith and promise to set him in a place of safety: others discharge him, saying, that the King D. Pedro despayring, came and put himselfe rashly into his enemies hands. His body was interred in the Monastery of Saint Dominike the Roial at Madrid. Hee had F reigned nineteene yeers, and died beginning the siue and thirtieth of his age.

The King D.
Pedro foretold his death.

Defeat of the King D. Pedro
men.

Bertrand of Guefclin be-traies the King D. Pedro.

D. Henry battled of Castile
kils the King
D. Pedro.

D. Fernand

D. Fernand alone of that name, ninth King of Portugal.

Portugal 23 DVring the warres of the two Princes of Castile, brethren, we doe not read that D. Pedro king of Portugal tooke part with either of them. He died in the yeere 1367. the seuen and forty of his age, hauing reigned almost eleuen yeere. To which Realme succeeded D. Fernand his sonne, being at his coronation fixe and twentie yeere old, and some monthes, in whom the direct and lawfull line of D. Henry of Befançon, or of Lorraine, failed, as shal appeere. He was present in the towne of Estremos, when as his father died, and was there acknowledged, and proclaimed King, taking an oth from such of his subiects as were then present.

Arragon. D. Pedro King of Arragon, hearing the successe of D. Henries victory, began to feare him, sending Francis of Perillos and James Elfaro Ambassadors into France, who procured an offensive and defensive league, the French King promising to aide him of Arragon, in his warres of Sardynia, yea and against D. Henry, if hee did not referre vnto him the question for the realme of Murcia, and other lands promised, as hee had informed him. And for that the warres betwixt the French and English were reuiued, Francis of Perillos being held the best captaine at sea in his time, was granted vnto the French king, who entertained him, notwithstanding that the King of Arragon his maister, had great need of him, for the warres of Sardynia, the which was continually entertained, by Marian a Iudge of Arborea, who this yeere had taken many places from the Arragonois, and defeated in a fallie which he made, being besieged in the castle of Oristagno, the army of Arragon, commanded by D. Pedro of Luna and his sonne, the which did so disquiet the King, as he resolved to go thither in person: but new affaires hindred him, for he was inuaded from the county of Rossillon by some Frenchmen, who notwithstanding were but vagabond troupes, running vp and downe the country without warrant: and he was also kept backe by the controuersies which he had with the new King of Castile: wherefore he sent D. Berenger of Carrozo, Earle of Quirra, thither with an army, yet giuing it still out that he should goe thither himselfe, keeping the Standard royal displayed on the top of the castle of Barcelona; after the accustomed manner, in signe that the King would goe to the warre: the which kept these seditious people somewhat in awe. Hee caused an Ediēt to bee published, by the which hee granted respight to all that were indebted, and repeale for banished men that were of Sardynia. Being come to Valence, he made his sonne D. Martin Seneschall of Cattelogne, who commanded ouer all armes, vniting vnto that dignity that of the Constable of the realme, as well on this side, as beyond the seas: and then it was decreed, that from that time the children of the Kings or Princes of Arragon should be called to that degree.

The end of the fifteenth Booke.

THE

THE SIXTEENTH BOOKE of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 DOn Henry the second of that name the 15. King of Castile, and 36. of Leon. The continuation of his conquest of the Realme of Castile, and the contentions betwixt the Castilians, Portugals, Nauarrois and Moores.
- 2 Peace betwixt Castile and Portugal.
- 3 Parliament at Toro, and the lawes made there.
- 4 Contention betwixt the Kings of Castile and Nauarre, their agreement. Bad offices of Charles King of Nauarre, to the King of Castile, in fauour of the English against the French, and the constancy and fidelity of D. Henry the new King.
- 5 Unfitting and unlawful marriage of D. Fernand King of Portugal, with D. Leonora Telles of Meneses, and the tumults which ensued.
- 6 Warre renewed betwixt Castile and Portugal.
- 7 Order of Monkes of Saint Ierosme in Spaine.
- 8 Preparatiues for warre made by Iohn duke of Lancaster, pretending the Realme of Castile against D. Henry.
- 9 Treaty of peace betwixt Castile and Arragon.
- 10 Affaires of Nauarre: death of D. Roderigo of Yrriz.
- 11 Cession of the rights of Rossillon and Cerdagne, to the house of Anjou.
- 12 Trauels of the King of Nauarre: detention of the Prince his sonne in France. Rash enterprises of the King of Nauarre against him of Castile, warre betwixt these potentats.
- 13 Schisme in the Church of Rome.
- 14 Death of D. Henry King of Castile, and some testamentary lawes made by him.
- 15 D. Iohn first of that name, the 16. King of Castile and 37. of Leon.
- 16 Treaties of marriages ill mannaged, and donations betwixt the Kings of Castile and Portugal.
- 17 Praiises of D. Leonora Telles of Meneses Queene of Portugal against the Nobility, and the troubles and calamities which followed.
- 18 The King of Castile acknowledgeth, in the Schisme of the Romaine Church, the Pope of Auignon.
- 19 Warre betwixt Castile and Portugal, procured by the Earle of Oren pacified, a marriage betwixt D. Iohn King of Castile, and D. Beatrice Infanta of Portugal.
- 20 Rebellion of the Earle of Gijon.
- 21 Regency of D. Leonora Telles of Meneses in Portugal, pursute of Don Iohn King of

D d

of Castile, of the Realme of Portugal, in the hereditary right of D. Beatrix his wife. D. Iohn A Maister of Auiz, called to the Government, and the exploits of warre betwixt the Castilians, and Portugals.

22 Bad designs of Charles King of Nauarre, to free his sonne, being prisoner in France: his liberty, by the bounty of the princes of France.

23 Continuance of the war of Portugal. Election of D. Iohn Maister of Auiz to the crowne of Portugal, battaile of Aljubarrote, and defeat of the Castilians.

In this sixteenth Booke mention is made of the Kings.

15 D. Henry of Castile, 36 of Leon, second of that name.
16 D. Iohn his sonne, 37 of Leon, first of that name.

D. Henry, called de la Merced the fifteenth King of Castile, and sixe and thirty of Leon.

I
Castile.

D. Henry surnamed ib:
Gracious.

After the death of the King D. Pedro, the Realmes of Castile and Leon, remained to D. Henry, without any great difficulty. He got by his vertue and mildnesse, what his brother had lost by his pride and cruelty. Hee was a friend to the vertuous, nobly minded, bountifull, valiant, and strong of his person, although he were but of a small stature: He was turnamed the liberall, or gracious, by reason of the bounty he shewed to them that had serued him. The greatnesse and good fortune of this King was suspected vnto the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon, who made a league this yeere, restoring one vnto another certaine townes and castles, that is, Arragon deliuered to Nauarre, Herrera of Moncayo: and Nauarre to Arragon Saluaterra and Real, they pacted the controuersies which were betwixt them of Sanguesa and Real, by a definitive sentence of Merins and Gouernors of Tudelo and Saragossa: Queene Jeanne gouerning the realme of Nauarre, and dealing in all these affaires, in the absence of King Charles her husband, who was gone into France, vpon the reuiving of the warre betwixt the French and English, that same yeere. Nauarre and Arragon, began then to make many practises with the Kings of Portugal and England to dispossesse the King D. Henry of his new conquest, in the which Carmona in Andalusia, Zamore and Ciudad Roderigo in Castile, with a good part of Galicia, refused to obey him, al the rest acknowledging him for King. For Toledo, as soone as D. Pedros death was knowne yecilded: Seuile opened her gates, the castle of Montiel was deliuered him, where and in other places, hee found great store of treasure, iewels, silks, raptures & other rich mouables of the deceased king. The townes of Logroño, Victoria, Saluatierra of Alaua, and St. Cruz of Campeço, were yecilded to the king of Nauar: & he of Arragon had seized on Molina, Cagnet & Requeña, hauing corrupted Garcia of Vera, and Aluar Russ of Espejo, captains of these places. D. Henry sought to make some accord with the of Carmona, demanding fridship and

A and offering a truce to the King of Granado; the which the King of Castile had neuer done, but he could not effect it. Mahumet the Old, King of Granado, answered, that hee would be a friend to the King D. Pedro dead, as hee had bene in his lifetime: wherefore the King leauing good order vpon that frontier, and appointing D. Gonçalo Mexia, Maister of the Knights of Saint Iames, Gouernor thereof, with other Noblemen and Captaines, he parted from Seuile, to cometo Toledo. Then he caused a certaine coine to bee made, called croysez, of the value of a marauedis, and an other kinde called rials, of the value of foure marauidis. Euery marauidis in those times being worth ten of the lesser at this daie.

Truce offered
by the King
D. Henry, and refused by him.

Merry current in Castile.

The first that began to quarrel with him for the succession of the realme, was D. Fernando King of Portugal, who pretended to be lawful heire, as Grandchild to D. Beatrix of Castile, daughter to D. Sancho the Braue: he was animated, in this ambition, by the Inhabitants of Zamore and Ciudad Roderigo, frontier townes of Portugal, who would not acknowledge D. Henry, but called in D. Fernando to raigne ouer them, as it seemed all the country of Galicia had the like intent, the towne of Corunna (commonly called the Groine) hauing voluntarily subiected it selfe to the king of Portugal. To preuent which inconueniences, the king D. Henry marched with a great army towards Zamore, to beseege it, but finding it strong and wel manned, he past on into Galicia; D. Fernando finding himselfe inferior, both in number of men, in valour, and in experience of warre, vnto D. Henry, would not attend him, but imbarked, and returned into his country by sea, leauing a good garrison in the Groine. The King D. Henry, accompanied by Bertrand of Guesclin, entred into Portugal, betwixt the riuers of Duero and Minio, where he tooke Braga and Bragança, and ouerrun al that country, in view of the enemies, who durst not present themselves in battaile, and had done worse, if he had not bene called backe, by the newes which he receiued of the Moores attempts, and of the taking of Algezire, by the King of Granado, who hauing intelligence with the King of Portugal, had beseeged, taken and razed this place, euen vnto the ground, in hattred of the great losses, which the Moores his predecessors and their confederats had receiued by reason thereof. At that time there reigned at Fez, in Affrike, and in Algarue, or the plaines of Affrike, a prince of the race of the Merins, called Abasser Abdelaziz, to whom the Kings of Arragon and Granado (hauing conspired against D. Henry) sent their Ambassadors, in the yeere 1370. to treat a peace, and league with him, the which they did for fure yeeres: and in the mean time the King of Granado ceased not to annoy the country of Andalusia, and to doe all the spoile he could, giuing it out that it was in fauor and aide of D. Pedros children, who were in Carmona well manned and fortified.

Portugal.

Zamore and Ciudad Rode-rigo contrary to the King D.
Henry.

Portugal
by D. Henry the first
of Portugal.

Moores take Algezire.

An. 1370.

The King D. Henry went to field against this Moore, who in passing attempted Ciudad Roderigo, but he could not take it. Being come to Medina del Campo, where the Estates were assembled, he was assisted with great summes of money, wherewith hee contented strangers which had serued him: and withal hee receiued for the ranfome of D. James of Majorca, who had bene taken in the castle of Burgos, 70000. ducats, paid by Queene Jeanne of Naples his wife. They hold, that Bertrand of Guesclin and others receiued there about fixe score thousand doubloons, besides the townes and places which hee gaue them; as to Guesclin the townies of Soria, Almazan, Atienza, Montague and Seron, and moreouer the Siegneury of Molina, which the King of Arragon held, that hee might breed a iarre betwixt them. There Bertrand of Guesclin tooke his leaue, and returned into France, where he was made Constable, and managed the warre against the English. The King D. Henry being come into Andalusia, hee was to arme himselfe against the Moores, against them of Carmona, & against the gallies of Portugal, who did trouble that coast, stoping the mouth of the riuier of Guadalquivir, so as the towne of Seuile was much anoyed. The King was nothing well provided of gallies & ships of warre, yet he gaue such order, as in a short time he had a good army made ready in Biscay and Guipuscoa, whereby the sea was assured; the Generall of this armie, was called Pero Gonçales of Agüero. During these actions, D. Tello the Kings brother, being reconciled, and left by him in Galicia, to make head against the Portugals, died, and was buried at Saint Francis of Palencia, the Siegneuries of Biscay

Castille.

these places by force: so as Saluaterra of Alaua and Saint Croix were reduced vnder A his obedience: but Victoria and Logroño remained in the custody of D. John Ramires of Arellan. King Charles complained to Pope Gregory the eleventh, at Auignon, of this excess done by the King D. Henry, then he came with all speed into his Realme of Nauarre, to defend it against the army of the King D. Henry, who threatened to enter into his country, if hee did not restore him the townes of Logroño and Victoria. King Charles gaue him to vnderstand, that seeing it had bene agreed to put their controuersies to compromise to the Pope, who had sent a Legat into Spaine, which was Cardinal Guy of Bologno, Bishop of Portuense, that (for his part) hee was well content the Legat being come to Saint Dominike, and hauing bene made acquainted with the rights and pretensions of both Kings, hee made a peace betwixt them, vpon these conditions: That the townes of Logroño and Victoria, should be restored to the King of Castile: That the Infant D. Charles, eldest sonne to the King of Nauarre, should take to wife Donna Leonora Infanta of Castile, daughter to D. Henry, with a dowry of a hundred thousand doubloons at the celebration of the marriage: and moreouer besides the said summe, King Henry should pay at the same time, twenty thousand doubloons to the King of Nauarre, for his charges during the time he had held the said places: That for assurance of the accomplishment of this marriage, the Infant D. Pedro, the younger sonne of Nauarre, should remaine in hostage in Castile, in the hands of the Queene D. Jeanne, vntill that the Infant D. Charles should bee of sufficient age. These things thus determined, the two Kings met at Briona, where they did confirme what had bene formerly concluded; being come into Nauarre, hee presently sent his sonne D. Charles to bee made sure to the Infanta D. Leonora, who came to Briona, well accompanied by the chiefest Noblemen of Nauarre, where this ceremony was done with great pompe: the townes of Victoria and Logroño, were restored, and after the returne of the Infant D. Charles, D. Pedro his brother was sent vnto the Queene of Castile, to remaine there in hostage, according to the accord.

The King of Nauarre hauing giuen order for this businesse, hee examined their actions, which had gouerned his Realme during his absence; and hauing found that some faults had bene committed by the Bishop of Pampelone, and the Deane of Tudelo, whome he had left for counsellors to the Queene his wife, they fearing to bee punished, absented themselves. The Bishop tooke his way to Rome, where hee arrived safely, and there ended the remainder of his daies; but as for the Deane, who sought to saue himself in Castile, he was pursued, and taken nere vnto Logroño, and there slaine by the Kings commandment. Soone after Queen Jean returned into France, where she liued not long.

4 About the end of this yeere 1373 the King D. Charles and his eldest sonne, came to Madrid to see the King D. Henry, whom the King of Nauarre let vnderstand, that to auoide a great trouble in his affaires, which might grow by the meanes of Edward King of England, and Edward Prince of Wales his sonne, he should imbrace their friendship, the which he had charge to offer him, vpon condition he should breake the league he had with the French king, their enemy, in regard whereof they promised to giue no aide vnto the daughters of the deceased King D. Pedro, who were in England, making great sure vnto King Edward, and to the Prince of Wales, to restore them to their fathers Inheritance: and moreouer that John Duke of Lancaster had married D. Constance the one of them, by reason whereof he pretended the Realme of Castile to belong vnto him, as holding the place of the eldest, being declared lawfull, and received in that quality by the Estates of the realme, her sister, D. Beatrix being dead. At which pretensions should be relinquished by the English, if he left the alliance of France, & paid a certaine sum of money vnto the Prince of Wales, the which the D. Pedro his brother did owe him. The King of Nauarre propounded these things, as hauing charge from the English Princes, who were enemies to France, whose party he had alwaies held, for the wrongs which hee pretended had bene done him by the French King his brother in law: giuing many reasons, to induce the King D. Henry to incline to this party; but hee (who held not the crowne of Castile of any other after God, but of the French) would not shew himselfe vnthanke.

A carder
toward Castile and Nauarre.

The King of Nauarre seeks to draw the King of Castile
from the friendship of France to ioint with the English.

A vnthankfull, but answered resolutely, that he would neuer quit the friendship of France: but if the question were to disburse money to content the English, that he was well content to do it: the which the King of Nauarre sayd was not sufficient, and that he must of necessitie breake the League he had with France; but if he held it not fit to do, hee intreated him not to take in ill part what he had sayd vnto him, seeing he had it in charge from the King of England, to whom he was bound to do all good offices. The king Don Henry thanked him for the paines he had taken, to come so farre into Castile, saying, that he could not take that ill which he had spoken, but (for his part) he would persist in his first resolution: so as the King of Nauarre returned into his Realme, and the king Don Henry into Andalusia.

B The king of Nauarre aduertised the English Princes of the answer he had receiued, the which did much discontent them: for the king of Castile did much ballance their affaires, by the succours he gaue by sea vnto the French, hauing sent a good number of ships of warre, vnder the command of Ambrose Bocanegra a Genouois, his Admirall, who stopped the passage in such fort betwixt France and England, as besides many small prizes which he had taken, he defeated a fleet of English, about that time, and tooke fixe and thirty of their vessels neere vnto Rochel; by which victorie Rochel came vnder the obedience of the French king, and the greatest part of the prey and prisoners were carried into Spaine; among the which was the Earle of Pembroke Generall of the army. Besides which success, the king Don Henry being come from Burgos to Saint Ander, he sent Don Ruy Diaz of Rojas into the Prouince of Guipuscoa, to make ready a new army of 40. ships, the which he sent soone after vnder the command of the same Ruy Diaz to the French K. who came to Rochel, and hauing ioyned with a French Captaine called John Calais, who had about twenty Barks, all together came and set vpon another fleet of English, whom they likewise put to rout, and then Don Ruy Diaz returned a victor into Spaine: so as the English had reason to seeke to diuide the king of Castile, from him of France, and to draw him vnto their partie. Pope Gregorie the eleventh presumed to interpose his authoritie in these Princes quarrels, the which did not please them. Hauing made an accord betwixt the Kings of Castile and Nauarre, he would also reconcile the controuersies that were betwixt Castile and Arragon, and to this end hee sent the Cardinall of Cominges into Spaine, who prest the two Kings to send their Deputies to debate their cause before him. Don Henry named for his part the bishop of Burgos, and Don Aluar Garcia of Albornoz Lord Steward of his house: the king of Arragon deputed the bishop of Lerida, and Don Raymond Alam in Cernillon, who agreed that the Colledge of Cardinals should determine this controuersie. But these Princes being better aduised, that it was not fit their quarrels should be decided by the Court of Rome, they tooke a better course to agree betwixt themselves. The towne of Tuy which had for many months refused to obey D. Henry, now submitted about this peace of Arragon.

F But the warre was renewed betwixt Castile and Portugal, by reason of many prizes taken in the port of Lisbon, and at sea, of ships and merchants of Biscay, Guipuscoa and Asturia: and also for that the King Don Fernand gaue a retreat vnto the banished men of Castile, concerning matters of State; and also that hee had contemned the marriage concluded betwixt him and Donna Leonora of Castile, to marrie Donna Leonora Telles of Meneses, Neece to the Earle of Barcelos, a Lady of great beautie, but much inferior in qualitie to the Infanta Donna Leonora of Castile, and Donna Leonora of Arragon, whom he might haue had with great profit to his Realme, and to himselfe honour. Hee contemned these marriages, which had bene very beneficiall to himselfe, and to his Realme of Portugal, to marrie this Ladie, offending God and all good lawes: for he tooke her violently from her husband Laurence Pasques of Acugna, forcing him to flee into Castile, where he past the remainder of his dayes in exile, carrying commonly hornes of siluer on his hat, to witnesse the lust and infamy of his Prince; yet some, to excuse this fact, write, that the king caused this marriage to be dissolved by the Popes authoritie, as vnlawfull, by reason of the nearnesse of consanguinitie: of the which (notwithstanding) there was issued one sonne, called Aluaro of Acugna. The king was made sure vnto her in the presence of the Earle of Barcelos, and a sister of hers, called Don Mary, who had mannaged this

Don Henry K.
of Castile
sits in the ambly of France.

Rochel yielded to the French.

Portugal.

5.
Marriage unlawful of the king of Portugal, taking away his subjects wife.

Tumult at Lisbon for the kings marriage.

this marriage, and to whom the king had imparted his lous. When this marriage was published in Lisbon, the inhabitants incensed (that the king had left so profitable and honorable a marriage, as that of Castile) began to mutine, and having taken Fernand Vasques of Acugna for their Captaine, they sent 300. armed men about the kings pallace, and gaue the king to vnderstand in the behalfe of the city, that hee should leaue this woman, else they would take her, and do vnto her as their Predecessors had done to the king D. Sancho Capello in the like case. The king fearing the furie of this multitude, answered them mildly, that in what they did, they were good subiects, being ialous of his honour, and thanked them for their good will: but he let them vnderstand, that D. Leonora Telles was not his married wife, and intreated them to retire vntill the next day, when he would talke to them more amply of that businesse, in the Monasterie of S. Dominicke. This blast being blowne ouer, the king parted by night out of Lisbon, and carried D. Leonora Telles with him into the countrie betwixt Duero and Minio: and retiring towards Porto, he lodged neere vnto it in the Monasterie of Leza, where he married this Lady publicly, not caring how his subiects tooke it. He commanded that all men should acknowledge her, and call her Queene, and gaue her the townes of Almadra, Sintra, Torresuedras, Atognia, Ouidos, Alanguer, Abrantes, Villa viciosa, and many other places. All in the end yeelded to it without murmuring, seeing it was the kings pleasure, and D. Leonora had the title of Queene giuen her by all men, but by D. Denis the kings brother, who would neuer kisse her hand, saying, That it was her duty to kisse his: whereat the King D. Fernand was so incensed, as if Don Denis had not retired presently by the meanes of those that were then present, he had stab'd him with his dagger: for this cause the Infant retired himselfe for euer after into Castile. When as D. Leonora Telles saw her selfe installed Queene, shee made a diligent search who had bin the chiefe motiues of the mutiny at Lisbon, and vnderstanding that they were of the family of Vasques of Acugna, she ceased not to pursue them with a deadly harred, vntill she had forced many of them to flie into Castile.

Genealogie of Portugal.

Of this marriage betwixt the king D. Fernand and D. Leonora Telles issued D. Beatrix, who was married to D. Iohn the first King of Castile, borne at Coimbra, and afterwards a son and a daughter who died yong: some Authors hold, that they were borne in adulterie, committed by the Queene with D. Iohn Fernandes of Andeiro, a knight of Galicia, borne at Corunna. Moreouer the king before this marriage, had a daughter called D. Izabel. The king D. Henry having these causes of discontent against the king of Portugal, he gaue him to vnderstand by his ambassadors, that he could not take it in good part, that he had retired his rebellious subiects, of which he demanded some: and moreouer, that he should deliuer the ships and merchants of Asturia, Biscay, & Guipuscoa with their goods, which he had taken and stayed: whereof the King D. Fernand made no accompt, wherefore the king of Castile prepared to armes. Diego Lope Pacheco a knight of Portugal, was then in Castile, who was retired thither, by reason of the death of D. Agnes of Castro, flying the fury of the king D. Pedro: and had bin so fauored by the king D. Henry, as he had got great reuenues & honors. This Knight had left many friends in Portugal, by whose means he was aduertised of all that was done in D. Fernands Court: and as he was a most affectionat seruant to the king of Castile, so he sought to draw vnto him all those that were valiant in Portugal: and if any one were persecuted, he perswaded him to come into Castile, declaring vnto them the bountie of the king D. Henry. He had had intelligence of all that had past touching the marriage of D. Leonora Telles, and of the discontent betwixt the King and his brother D. Denis, and them of the house of Acugna, and the city of Lisbon: wherefore imbracing these occasions fit for the war, which was like to grow betwixt these two kings, Diego Lope Pacheco wrought so, as he drew D. Denis to come and put himselfe vnder the protection of the king D. Henry, & enterrayned by all means such Gentlemen as were ill affected to their King, to be reuenged of the wrongs he had done them. Matters being thus prepared, and the ambassador being returned, who had bin sent to summon the king D. Fernand to deliuer the banished men which he had in his Realm, & to make restitution of the prizes which had bin taken by him, the king D. Henry entred into Portugal with an army, and having sent D. Alphonso his son to Coimbra (a castle in Galicia where the banished men had fortified themselves) the place was taken.

War betwixt Castile and Portugal.

The

A The king on his side seized of Almorda, Panel, Cillonico and Linares, and there Don Denis ioyned with him, with other Noblemen of Portugal, who were liberally intreated, and much honoured. Pope Gregorie the eleuenth residing in Auignon, hearing of the troubles betwixt these two kings, was carefull (like a good pastor) to send a Legat, which was Cardinall Guy of Bologna, with full authoritie to reconcile them. But before that hee could draw the parties to any friendly composition, the king Don Henry made a new entrie, tooke Viseo, and ranne vp the countrie as farre as S. Iren, finding no resistance: for Don Fernand was not so able to maintain a quarrell, as he was ready to breed one: wherefore keeping himselfe within Saint Iren, the king Don Henry had the passage free and open to go vnto Lisbon, where he spoyled and burnt the lower part of the towne, as the new street, and some other places, for that he neither found walles, nor any resistance: the quarter called Sus, held good, being walled in, and well manned; for all the inhabitants were retired thither: during the which, the sea-armie of Castile entred into the mouth of the riuier, which is large and spacious, where they did not onely recouer the ships of Biscay, and others which had beene taken; but many vesselles of all sorts, which were fit for seruice, were carried away by the Castillans, and the rest burnt. In the meane time the Legat laboured what he could to end these miseries, wherein he preuailed so much, as hee reduced the two kings to a peace, the which was concluded to the great aduantage of the king of Castile; after which the kings met neere vnto Saint Iren, either of them in a barke vpon the riuier of Tayo, where they finished their accord and capitulations: among the which there was a marriage concluded betwixt Donna Beatrix, sister to the king D. Fernand, and Don Sancho Earle of Albuquerque, brother to the king of Castile, and of Donna Izabella base daughter to the king Don Fernand, and Don Alphonso Earle of Gijon, base sonne to the king Don Henry. The marriage betwixt Don Sancho and Donna Beatrix was celebrated; the places taken were restored, the peace was proclaimed, and the king of Castile returned into his countrie, leading his daughter-in-law Donna Izabella with him, being but eight yeares old, who was afterwards married to the Earle of Gijon, to his great griefe.

Lisbon spoiled and burnt by the King of Castile.

Peace betwixt Castile and Portugal.

The quarrels betwixt Castile and Arragon, being not well ended, they were forced to come to a new compromise, wherein the Duke of Anjou brother to the French king was a dealer, but with so bad successe, as he became enemy to the King of Arragon. At that time were celebrated the marriages of D. Iohn D. of Girone, the heire of Arragon, and Martina daughter to the Earle of Armaignac, who had fiftene thousand pounds sterling in dowrie: and of Don Martin of Arragon, the kings youngest sonne, with Donna Mary, daughter to Don Lopes Earle of Luna, and Lord of Segorbe. The same yeare 1372. Don Pedro king of Arragon finding too late, how easie he had beene to beleue false reports, and repenting himselfe of the vnworthie death of Bernard of Cabrera, hee restored his Grand-child Bernardin, sonne to Bernardin of Cabrera, to all his goods, except the Earldome of Vic, which he kept to himselfe. The father of this young Nobleman dyed in Castile, in the seruice of the king Don Henry, notwithstanding, that hee had sought his fathers death. There were this yeare scene in Arragon horrible Earthquakes, with the ruins of mountaines about Ribagorça, where as many villages were ouerthrowne, and great multitudes of people perished.

Arragon.

In Castile the king Don Henry was prest by Donna Maria of Lara, Countesse of Alençon, to do her right for the Lordships of Biscay and Lara: she had many sons which were all aduanced in France: the first was Earle of Alençon, the second of Estampes, the third of Perch, and two of the Church. The king Don Henry made answer, that he should send him two of her sonnes to remaine in Spaine, and that he would giue the Lordship of Biscay to the one, and that of Lara to the other. He presumed that she could not do it: all her children being so well aduanced in France, and for some other reasons.

Castile.

Biscay belongs to the house of Alençon.

F Edward king of England, and his sonne Iohn Duke of Lancaster, (who intitled himselfe King of Castile and Leon, in the right of his wife Donna Constance, daughter to the king Don Pedro the Cruel) sent Ambassadors to the king of Arragon, in the yeare 1373. to treat a League with him: being refused to send a great army into Castile, to conquer that Realme, whereof the Duke of Lancaster should be Generall, as belonging to his wife: offering offering great conditions to the king of Arragon, if he would adhere to their partie. The A king of Arragon demanded the Realme of Murcia, the townes of Requena, Otiel, Moya, Cagnete, the city of Cuenca, and the Segneurie of Molina, with other places vpon the frontier of Castile, whereof he held some: but hoping he should haue a better composition with the king D. Henry, he kept himselfe betwixt both, being doubtfull what to do, so as nothing was concluded for that time with the ambassadors of England.

1373. Pretensions of Iohn Duke of Lancaster to Castile.

During these reuolutions in Spaine in temporall affaires, religion was managed by diuers sects of Monkes, especially by the begging Friars of Saint Dominick and Saint Francis, who this year incensed the people against a new Order which had risen in Spaine in the time of the king Don Pedro, through the deuout ignorance of certaine Italians of B Sienna, religious Hermits, who had heard one of their companions, called Friar Thomas, say dying, by a Prophetical spirit, sayd they, that within few dayes the holy Ghost should come into Spaine, and that he had this by reuelation: wherefore all these religious men thinking that the holy Ghost did not frequent much in Italy in those times, and that it was something which they must seeke farre off in a strange countrie: they left Italy, and came into the countrie of Toledo, hoping to get the grace of the holy Ghost, and thereby saue their soules.

The fame of these men being spread ouer Spaine, a bishop of Iden called D. Alphonso Pecha, and Don Pero Fernand Pecha his brother, Chamberlaine to the king Don Pedro, Hernando Ianes Chanoine of Toledo, and chiefe Chaplaine of the chappell of the auncient Kings, with many other Christians, commending the resolution of these Friars, and their ignorance, being desirous to liue in that contemplation, ioyned with them, leauing Bishopricks, Chanonries, Benefices and Estates, and chusing their aboads in caves and woods farre from the societie of men, where they began to liue a wonderfull austere life, saying, that it was according to the rule of Saint Paul, that they must suffer many discomforts, to liue like Christians, and that it was the meanes to gaine Paradise. This sect beeing in great esteeme, the begging Friars began to blame the people for following of these men, who had no settled Order nor discipline among them, and (which did more import) had no approbation from the Pope. For these reasons the inconstant multitude began to retire themselves, and to abate much of their deuotion, which these good Hermits finding, to their great griefe, they tooke counsell among themselves to send vnto the Pope, to get authoritie from him for a name, rule, profession, order, and aboad. The messengers were Friar Peter Fernandez of Guadajara, and Friar Peter Romaine of their company: who beeing come before the Pope, exposed their deuotion vnto him, their manner of life, exercises in religion, their means and merits, beseeching him that he would bee pleased to approoue their Order and profession, giuing them for Patron the great Doctor Saint Ierome, to whome all were most addicted.

The Pope made no difficultie to allow of them, hauing had some former information of that which they had sayd, appointing them to liue vnder the rule of S. Augustine, hee prescribed what manner of garment they should weare, and sent backe these Deputies into Spaine, with Bulls, in October, 1373. By this approbation from the Pope, these Monkes crept into credit, and did build their first conuent in a place called Lupiana, in the Archbishopricke of Toledo, two leagues from Guadajara, dedicating it to Saint Basilhelmew, the which was since the chiefe of the Order: the Prior of which Monasterie is General of the Order for three yeares, and is bound to reside in that Monasterie during his charge. Since by the bountie of the Princes of Spaine, these Hermits haue built many Conuents, and haue greatly enlarged their possessions. Their exercise is more in singing then studying, the which they do neglect expressely, to the end they might not be diuerted from their simple contemplation, notwithstanding there haue beene some great Preachers found among them, and men of vnderstanding in great affaires of State.

Returning to politicke worldly affaires, the king D. Henry beeing aduertised of the practises betwixt the English and the king of Arragon, he sought to entertaine the hope of compromise propounded by the Cardinall Guy of Bologne, who by the Popes commandement, was a mediator to make this peace. In the meane time hee had intelligence with Lewis Duke of Aniou, Governor of Languedoc; and concluded, that hee should presse

7.
Order of Saint
Ierome in Spaine

Approbation of the Order of S. Ierome
by the Pope.

A presse the English towards Bayone, and the duke of Aniou vpon the limits of his government, and then hauing ioyned their forces together, they should annoy them all they could in Guienne: for he had intelligence that John Duke of Lancaster had imparted his enterprises, and ioyned his forces with those of John of Montfort Duke of Brittain, making preparation to enter into Castile: the which he thought fit to preuent, and to assaile him in Guienne, whilest that Philip the Hardy, Duke of Bourgogne, and brother to the French king, made warre against the English in Artois and Vermandois: and to this effect the king D. Henry gaue order to rayse an armie in Rioja. Whilest that the troupes were leuying, the Court being at Burgos, there fell a quarrell betwixt the seruants of D. Sancho Earle of Albuquerque, the kings brother, and them of D. Pedro Gonzales of Mendoza for their lodgings, whether the Earle running to pacifie this broyle, (whereof neither hee, nor D. Pedro were guilty) he was thrust through with a lance and slaine, by one that knew him not. The king parting from Burgos, came to Rioja, where hauing mustred his army, he found 6200. horse, whereof 1200. were Genets, with the which he past to Bayone, being assured by the Duke of Aniou, that he would come and ioine with him. And to keepe the king of Arragon in awe, Don James Infant of Majorca, husband to Jeane Queene of Naples, was come to Narbone with good troupes, threatening to enter into Cattellogne.

The K. D. Henry passing by Alaua and Guipuscoa, entered into the territorie of Bayone, where he found no great resistance, for the armie of English, which had beene hotly pursued by the Duke of Bourgogne, beeing come to Bourdeaux, was much diminished. There he stayed some dayes for the Duke of Aniou, hauing sent Pero Fernandes of Velasco, his Lord Chamberlaine, and Don John Ramires of Arellan, to hasten him: but they found him busied in taking of townes and castels from the English, some by force, some by composition, so as the king Don Henry returned with his army into Spaine, hauing done no great exploit.

Passing through Guipuscoa, Don Bertrand of Gueuara, Lord of Ognate, who had done him great seruice, made sute vnto him to giue him the towne of Mondragon, whereof the Inhabitants beeing aduertised, they sent their Deputies to informe the king D. what wrong he should do himselfe, if hee should alienate such a place from the Crown, the which (besides the great commerce, by reason of the forges of Iron and Steele, which were continually set a worke thereabouts) was a fort of great consequence, vpon the which there might be many desseines made: for the Castell (which was then entire) was impregnable: beseeching him to be an eye witnesse, and to passe by the place, remembering that the Inhabitants of Mondragon had beene alwaies faithfull vnto him, and that during the warres betwixt him, and the King Don Pedro, they had alwaies followed his partie. The king promised to passe by their towne, wherefore the Inhabitants thereof, and of the countrie thereabouts beganne to make the lower way, which goes from that towne to Ognate, whereas before they were forced to passe the mountaine called Baque, to the end the King should not be tyred with passing ouer it. This passage is at this day called Euripide, a corrupted word, in sted of Erreguevide, the which in that countrie language signifies a way for the king.

The King Don Henry hauing viewed the situation of the towne and fort, with the commodities thereof, and considered of the Inhabitants reasons, he would not yeeld vnto the petition of Don Bertrand of Gueuara, but he gaue him in recompence the valley of Leniz, with all iurisdiction, both ciuill and criminall. This valley was wont to depend vpon Mondragon, but then it was taken from it, and the sayd Bertrand, and his successors haue enioyed it for the space of an hundred, fourescore, and two yeares, or thereabouts, vnto the year 1556. when it was vnitied vnto the Crowne, by a decree of the Kings Councill of Castile. The king parting from Mondragon, returned to Burgos, from whence he past to Leon, and then to Seuille.

Whilest that the king of Arragon was attentive to the warre against the English, the Infant Don James of Majorca, husband to the Queene of Naples, entered into Cattellogne with fiftene hundred lances, beeing assisted by the Kings of France and Castile, and by the Duke of Aniou, where he did much harme. On the other side Bernard bastard of Foix, 8.

Preparation
John Duke of Lancaster to gainst D. Henry
of Castile.

D. Henry of Castile, who Guienne was an army against the English.

Arragon.

Foix, first Duke of Medina Celi, and Geoffrey Reichen, a Knight of Brittainie, Lord of A. A guilar del campo, allied, and friends to the Infant of Majorca, spoiled the countrie of Arragon, by Medina Celi, the which did wonderfully trouble the King of Arragon, and made him studie how hee might speedily end the controversies which he had with the king Don Henry.

The Infant Don James of Majorca having spoyled Cattelogne, palt into Arragon, to do the like; but he was forced to retire for want of victuals, leading his armie into Cadix, where he fell sicke and dyed in Alman, in the beginning of the year 1375. His troupes returned into Gasconie, with John of Malefit, their chiefe leader. In this armie was Icanne of Majorca, Marquesse of Montferrat, sifter to the deceased Don James, who palt also into Gasconie.

Some were of opinion, that this attempt of the Infant of Majorca, was not without the intelligence of some great men of Arragon, who had drawne him into the countrie, whereof the king made diligent informations. At that time there was so great a dearth in Arragon, as they were forced to begge a passage for come out of Affricke and Mauritania, the which did warrant the country from this inuasion, more then any resistance that the king D. Pedro could make.

An. 1374.
Castille.

This yeare 1374. the King of Castile redeemed from Bertrand of Guesclin, Constable of France, the towne of Soria, and the rights of Molina, which he had giuen him, paying him 240000. doubions, and moreouer he gaue him the Earle of Pembroke, an English man, who was a prisoner, and set at 10000. pounds sterling for his ranfome, and the Lord of Piene for 3400. pounds, with many other knights and Captains English, or their partisans, as well for this redemption, as for the remainder which was due to him & his troups. And holding alwaies good correspondence with the French K. during the war against the English, he sent him a good armie by sea, whereof D. Fernand Sanches of Tour was Admiral, the which beeing ioyned vnto the French, did much annoy the English coasts.

The practises of a peace between Castile and Arragon being continued, the ambassadors of both kings met at Almazan, whether came the Queen of Castile, and her sonne D. John. There were for Castile, the Bishops of Plaisance and Palence, and D. Pedro Gonzales of Mendoga, Lord Steward to the Infant of Castile, with his brother D. John Hurtado of Mendoga Standard-bearer also to the Infant, & Pedro Fernandes of Velasco, Chamberlain to the king. For the king of Arragon came the Archb. of Sarraffossa, and D. Raymond Alaman Ceruillon, who treated of the differences betwixt the two kings, with great eagerneffe, in the presence of the Queen of Castile. The king D. Henry demanded, that the Infanta D. Leonora, daughter to D. Pedro king of Arragon, should be delivered to the Infant D. John his Son, to whom she was made sure. The king of Arragon answered, that the king of Castile must performe that which he had promised and sworn, when he came first out of France into Castile, by Arragon, which was to giue him the lands of ten before mentioned: whereunto he of Castile replied, that he was no more bound, for that the king of Arragon had beene since in League with the Prince of Wales his enemy, and had had many treaties with other Princes to his preiudice: Moreover, that returning the second time out of France he had not giuen him free passage through Arragon. Besides these inaine articles, there were others of lesse consequence, all which were reconciled by these Deputies.

9.
Accord betwixt D. Henry
King of Castile
and D. Pedro
king of Arra-
gon.

The accord was made the twelfth of April 1374. in the Monasterie of Saint Francis of Almazan, as followeth: That the Infanta Donna Leonora of Arragon should be given to the Infant Don John of Castile, as his lawfull wife, with a dowrie of two hundred thousand Florens of the coyne of Arragon, which summe the king Don Henry should hold for receiued, for the charges which the king of Arragon might haue beene at in the first passage which hee made through Arragon into Castile. The King of Arragon should restore Molina, Almazan, and other places which he had gotten during the troubles of Spaine: and to auoyde all future controuerfies betwixt the parties, Don Henry king of Castile should pay vnto him of Arragon an hundred and eighty thousand Florens, at dayes appointed.

For

A For assurance whereof the sorts of Requena, Otiel and Moya should be left in depositon in the hands of the Arch-bishop of Saragossa, and of Don Raymond Alaman of Ceruillon. These things thus concluded, the King D. Henry came to Soria, with the Queene his wife and children, whither the Infanta D. Leonora of Arragon was sent: thither also came Don Charles Infant of Nauarre, so as there were two marriages celebrated in that cittie, betwixt Don John of Castile, and D. Leonora of Arragon, and betwixt Don Charles of Nauarre, and D. Leonora of Castile, but there was a moneths respite betwixt the one and the other. Spaine being at peace within it selfe, by these accords and allyances made betwixt Castile, Arragon, Nauarre, Portugal, and Granado, it was fit to treat of the employments of the Princes and people of those countries, touching arts, sciences, lawes, and ciuill gouernement, but the records of such things are very defectiue. Wee reade briefly, that the King Don Henry appointed companies, which they call Hermandades, which are assemblies of Commonalties in the Prouince of Guipuscoa, where they treat of affaires and negotiations concerning their Princes seruice, and the preseruacion of the countrie.

As for the King of Nauarre, who was turbulent and an enemy to rest, hee forged and inuented a new quarrell against the King Don Henry, vppon the payment of an hundred and fiftie thousand Doublons which hee had promised for the marriage of his daughter Donna Leonora: for the King of Nauarre refused an hundred and fiftie thousand Reals of silver, which was part of this payment, saying, that the king of Castile was bound to pay him the summe in gold. These Reals remayned long in the towne of Logroño, and in the end were lost for the king of Nauarre, by reason of the quarrels and tumults which ensued.

The Infant Don Pedro, the second sonne of Nauar, who had beene in hostage, was deliuered. At that time the king of Nauarre was aduertised, that Don Rodrigo of Vrris, a knight which had done him great seruice in all his affaires both in France and Spaine, had secret intelligence with Don Henry, king of Castile, who had a desire to seaze on Tudela vppon Ebro, and vppon Caparoge, notwithstanding the accords and allyances contracted with him. Of which places Don Rodrigo was Guecnor, who being solicited to this end, had a promise from the king Don Henry of a great recompence in Castile, and to giue him his owne Neece to wife, being daughter to one of his breethren, with other great aduancements: an vsuall thing in Princes, when they seeke to draw any one vnto their seruice. King Charles informed hereof, was much grieved, for hee loued Don Rodrigo: who to diuert him from this trecherous practise, ill besitting a knight of honour, he let him vnderstand, that he had intelligence of the marriage which hee treated in Castile, aduising him not to giue ear to it in any fort, without the consent of his Councell: this message was deliuered vnto him by Martin of Vrris his brother, and Iohn Renaud Captaine of Tudela, and by Don Sancho of Vrris, one of the kings Councell.

Don Rodrigo thinking that the king was ignorant of his other practises, but had only some intelligence of his marriage, neglected what they had sayd vnto him, and went on his way, as it were, to be married: beeing come to Pampelona, hee was stayd by the kings commandements, where beeing examined vpon the treason, and not able to disproue what was auerred against him, hee was condemned to loofe his head, the which was executed, yet secretly, to preferue the honour and estimation of his family and kindred, to whome the bodie was deliuered, and interred by them in the Monasterie of Saint Augustine at Pampelona.

Many other knights of Nauarre were so terrified with this death, to whom the carriage and behaviour of king Charles was neither pleasing nor profitable, as they left their Countie, and retired themselves, some into Castile, some into other places, where they were well receiued and entertained. Such were the effects of the peace and concord between the Princes of Spaine then reigning. This happened in the year 1376. when as D. Bernard Foucault Bishop of Pamplona, dying in Italy there succeeded him D. Martin of Salua, a great Doctor in the ciuill and canon Lawes, equalled in that knowledge, yea preferred by the Spaniards to Baldus, who liued in his time. This bishop was a defender of the ecclesiasticall rights, & did much good to his church, retiring the lands belonging thereto,

IO
Treason of D.
Rodrigo of V vis discovered and punished by the king of Navarre.

out of the hands of many lay-men which had vsurped them: namely, those of Villa Toro, A Villa Major and Montreal, with other tythes. This yeare the townes of Pampelona, Puente la Reyna, Garde, S. Vincent, Arcos, and Saint Iohn of Pic de port, allowed of the marriage betwixt the Infant Don Charles, and D. Leonora of Castile, with the oaths and ceremonies vsed in those times, acknowledging for their Prince, and heire to the Crown, the first borne son of that marriage, the which king Charles did procure, that he might the better confirme the future succession.

II.
Arragon.

The affaires passing after this manner in Spaine, the king of Arragon, who thought himselfe freed from all troubles by the peace made with Castile, and the decess of the Infant D. James of Majorca, found himselfe intangled in new crosses, and of greater consequence then any of the precedent: for D. Jeanne Marquesse of Montserrat, sister and heire to the Infant of Majorca, being past into France, after the decess of her brother, had made cession vnto Lewis Duke of Anjou, the French kings brother, of all the rights which she pretended to the Realme of Majorca, Countie of Rossillon and Cerdagne, Colibre and Valisper, which Segneuries the duke pretended to recouer by armes, seeing that the king Don Pedro would not come to any friendly composition: so as he stayed onely for the conclusion of a peace, which was treated with the English, before he entred in hostile manner into Cattelogne, with the forces which hee had vader his charge and iurisdiction, which were four thousand Lances: wherewith the King of Arragon being much troubled, he called a generall Assembly of the Estates of Arragon, Valence, Cattelogne, C Majorca, and his other Dominions and territories, at Monçon, to preuent this warre, which did threaten him.

Cession of the rights of Rossillon, Cerdagne, &c. to the house of Anjou.

Jewes and Moorees of Spaine bare the extraordinary charges of the warre.

The Estates made answer vnto the King, who demanded money, that the subiect could not contribute any more, being ruined by the great charges which they had borne some years before: and that the ancient custome was, that the Jewes and Moorees which were subiects to the Kings of Arragon, should beare the extraordinarie charges of the warre, if need required: wherfore he should adresse himselfe vnto those men. At the assembly the Vicount of Cardona tooke the title of Earle, by a decree of the Estates. The affaires of the Vicount did augment the king of Arragons cares, for all went from bad to worse, so as Sardinia did augment the king of Arragons cares, for all went from bad to worse, so as the Governour of Caillieri was driuen to that despaire, as hee was readie to set fire of the towne, and to flie away by sea, being vnable to resist Hugh the sonne of Marian, the new Iudge of Arborea, his father being lately deceased: who shewed himselfe a more violent enemie against the Arragonois, then his father had beene: the which was the more to bee feared, for that the Geneuois hauing broken the peace, made and confirmed by Iohn Marquesse of Montserrat, with the king of Arragon, had entred into the Iland of Sardy-nia, and ioyning their forces with them of the Iudge, had attempted Pole neere to Cal-leri, and done many other acts of hostility.

An. 1377.

This yeare 1377. Philip the Hardy, Duke of Bougongne, went in pilgrimage to Saint James of Galicia, passing, he visited the king Don Henry at Segobia, who received him honorably, and gaue him many rich presents. About the same time D. Gomes Manrique E Arch-bishop of Toledo being dead, this great and rich liuing was affected by many, by reason whereof the Court of Castile was diuided into factions, euery one fauouring his kinsman or friend, that aspired to this dignitie, nor to be Ministers of the word of God, and to instruct the people in Christian Religion, but to be worldly great, rich and mighty, companions to Kings, and commanders ouer armies, according to the custome of that age. The King Don Henry did much fauour D. Iohn Garcia Manrique Bishop of Siguen-ça, whose sister D. Iohn Ramires of Arellan had married. Vpon this election, where there were so many pretendants, D. Iohn Ramires thinking he had need of the Popes fauor and authoritie, went to Auignon well accompanied with Noblemen, his friends and kintmen, but he did not obtaine that which he pretended: for Pope Gregorie the eleuenth then reigning, declared Don Pedro Tenorio Bishop of Coimbra, Arch-bishop of Toledo. Thus these Pretendants lost this rich bootie which they expected: much unlike vnto Don Martin Martines of Calaoarra, Arch-deacon of Calatraua, in the church of Toledo, who being chosen some yeares before by the Chapter, and a generall consent, to bee Bishop of Calaoarra, hee excused himselfe, and would not accept of this dignitie, which is

A is one of the richest, and of greatest iurisdiction in Spaine, next to Toledo. Don Iohn Ramires of Arellan returning by Cattelogne, hee was desirous to kisse the king of Arragons hands, being at Barcelona, whither came the Vicount of Rueda, who in the kings presence accused Don Iohn Ramires of certaine crimes, offering him the combate if hee should deny it: Don Iohn Ramires regarding his honour, accepted of this challenge: for the performance whereof, the King of Arragon assigned ninetie dayes, at which time Don Iohn should present himselfe to the combate, or else they would proceede against him, according to the lawes and orders of combats.

Don Iohn Ramires returned in the meane time into Castile, and made relation vnto the King Don Henry how he had beene challenged, and that he must present himselfe in Arragon at the day appointed, whereas his enemy was much fauoured by the king Don Pedro: the which the king of Castile hauing well considered, and fearing that Don Iohn Ramires (whome he loued dearely for his integritie and vertues) should receiue some indignitie, in a countrie where he was not beloved, he resolved to send a gentleman to the King of Arragon, to let him vnderstand, that no man liuing was better acquainted then himselfe, with the qualities and conditions of Don Iohn Ramires of Arellan, and how that he had carried himselfe like a Knight of honour in all his actions, euen when hee was Chamberlaine to the same king of Arragon, and employed by him in the warre against Don Pedro king of Castile: wherfore he intreated him to cause this appeale made by the Vicount to cease: whereof the King seeking to excuse himselfe, the Ambassador replied:

C Sir, seeing it is your pleasure that this combate shall be fought, vnderstand, that the King of Castile my Lord is resolved to send at the time you haue appointed three thousand Lances, to accompanie Don Iohn Ramires, to the end that hee may be no way inferior, neither for the safetie of his person, nor for support, vnto his aduersarie, seeing that the quarrell must be decided in a strange Countrie, where as the Prince shewes himselfe partiall. The King Don Pedro taking these words in ill part, fell into a great dispute with this Gentleman, who made him a discreet answer: wherfore fearing that this might kindle a new fire betwixt Castile and Arragon, after much consultation, hee commanded the Vicount to desist from his challenge, declaring that Don Iohn Ramires was a good Knight. Thus past the D affaires betwixt Castile and Arragon in the yeare 1376.

Ambassadors
speake to the King of Arra-
gon.

At which time Don Charles Infant of Nauarre, being desirous to visite the Court of France, did so importune the King his father, as hee got leaue, from the which hee was much dissuaded by the King of Castile his father-in-law, who assuredly knew what reasons the French King had to hate the King of Nauarre. For besides, that hee had perswaded him to leaue and abandon the league of France, and to adhere vnto the English, as wee haue before shewed, hee had since ingaged and deliuered vnto them the Towne of Cherbourg in Normandy, and entertained many practises, to the preiudice and discommoditie of France, whereof the French King was particularly aduertised.

Nauarre.

12.
Detention of the Prince of
Nauarre.

Notwithstanding all this, the Infant Don Charles went on his intended and determined iourney, presuming that hee had not offended any way the King his Vncle, and that he would not make any question vnto him, concerning the controuersies and oppositions which were betwixt him and his father: and that whatsoever should happen beyond his expectation, hee would retire himselfe to those places which the king his father had in the confines of Normandie, and not approach neere the Court, without promise of assurance.

With this resolution hee left Nauarre, very well attended on with a companie of gentlemen, and men of counsell, among the which were Baldwin Belleferant, Captaine of many places in Normandy belonging to the king of Nauarre, the which he held by homage: Iames of Rue, a knight, and Chamberlaine to the king, the Seigneur of Orubia, F Captaine of the Infants Guard, a Basque by nation, within two leagues of Fontaraby:
Peter of Estampes, a Doctor of Diuinity, and Councillour to the king, with diuers others. The French king being aduertised before-hand of this voyage, as soone as they were entred into France, he caused Iames of Rue to be taken, who was found seized of certaine papers and instructions, which did much augment the iealousie of the French:
being put to the racke, he confessed that the king his master had plotted with the English,

Ecc 1

and

and that he had charge to say vnto the King of England, that if he wold promise the duchy A of Guienne to the king of Nauar, and entertaine him 2000. lances, he would make waite against the French, and employ all his forces of Nauarre, and of his lands in Normandie and other places: whereupon he was put into safe-keeping. The Infant beeing much discontented at the taking of this knight, not knowing what he had confessed, came to the king at Senlis, hauing a safe conduct, and besought him to deliuer this prisoner: to whom sheeking answered, that he wold not deliuer him, but would cause his proceesse to be made and his fathers also, meaning to confiscate all the lands he had within his kingdome: and moreover, he commanded him not to depart from Court without leaue. He also called Baldwin Belloferant before him, and inioyned him to deliuer into his hands, or of his cap- B taines, all the places and forts which he held for the king of Nauarre: the which Baldwin not able to auoid, promised to do, and tooke an oath: notwithstanding the king gaue him a guard, vntill he had performed what he had promised. Fernand of Ayanes, a knight of Nauarre, and Gouvernor for the king of Nauar of his lands in Normandie, was also apprehended, with many others, who were sent to Paris, with James of Rue, and Peter of Estampes. Thereupon the king did write vnto all Princes and Potentates strangers, touching these imprisonmentes, making great complaints of the king of Nauar his brother-in-law: and soone after he began sharpe war against the Nauarrois in Normandie: whereof Philip the Hardy, duke of Bourgongne, the kings brother, Lewis duke of Bourbon, and the Constable Bertrand of Guesclin were the chiefe Commanders, who in a short space tooke most of the townes and forts which the king of Nauarre held in that countrie, there remaining nothing in a manner but Cherbourg; the which beeing held by the English, maintained the seige 7. moneths, and yet the French could not take it. In the mean time the king caused D. Pedro the second son of Nauarre, and his daughter Mary to bee taken at Breteuil, whom notwithstanding he kept in a free prison, and very honorably. At the same time there was a Secretary of the king of Nauars, called Peter of Tertre, taken in the castle of Bernay, of whom by tortures they discovered many practises of the king his masters. He with James of Rue were condemned to die, and their bodies being quartered, were hanging in diuers places entring into the citie of Paris.

These newes heard in Nauarre, the king D. Charles was wonderfully troubled, as well D for the imprisonment of his children, as for the losse of his countrie, and the Infanta D. Leonora his daughter-in-law, was no lesse afflicted: and that which did most disquiet him, was, that the king to iustifie the imprisonment of his children, had informed all Christian Princes of his actions, and had incensed them against him, especially D. Henry king of Castile, against whom he had caried himselfe disdainfully in all his actions, notwithstanding the alliances and accords made newly betwixt them. And as he was of a harsh disposition, rash, and without gouernement, he beganne to contriue many bad desseines, to prevent such as he feared: and now he repented the death of Don Rodrigo of Virris, from whom hee had drawne so many good seruices, and the banishment of many other knights, of whom he had then great need: but he hoped the English would bee a good support for E him at all euents: and vpon this ground he resolved to surprize the towne of Logroño, which was the Rampier of Castile against Nauarre, presuming that he should amaze the king Don Henry by this exploite, if it succeeded, or hinder him greatly, and let others vnderstand that he was not altogether daunted: but seeing that the place was well man- ned, and carefully guarded by Don Pedro Manriques, Gouvernor of that frontier, hee sought to corrupt him with promises of great advancement in Nauarre, and twentie thousand doubloons in hand. Don Pedro who was a faithfull seruant to the king of Castile his master, and withall a Knight of honour, aduertised the king Don Henry, who was then at Seuille, of all this practise: which newes the king receiued at the instant when as the French kings ambassadours came to Seuille, to presse him to make warre against the king F of Nauarre: which made the king Don Henry more tractable to yeeld to that which they demanded: writing to Don Pedro, that he should entertaine this bargain with the king of Nauarre, and that hee should seeke to take him in Logroño, and there to keepe him prisoner.

Don Pedro hauing receiued this answer, made all possible demonstrations, that he de- sired

The Infant of Nauarre said.

Desperate disposition of Charles king of
Castile.

A fired to satisfie the king of Nauarre, and appointed him a conuenient time to deliuer him the towne, receiuing part of the double Ducats. In the meane time he drew secretly into Logroño a good supply of soldiers: and the better to assure the execution of this enter- prize, without hazard, the king D. Henry caused Don Pedro Gonzales of Mendoça, to enter into Nauarret with sixe hundred Lances, who gaue it out, that he had a quarrell with Don Pedro Manriques.

Matters being thus disposed, there remained nothing but for the King of Nauarre to shew his indiscretion, and to enter into Logroño: the which he was resolved to do, so blind he was in his desire, notwithstanding that all his Councell had dissuaded him, assu- ring him that Don Pedro was not a Knight that would commit such a trecherie against his B King and Lord: and that of necessity he must beleue he meant to deceiue him; yea they did wholly oppose themselves against this enterprize, shewing him the mischiefe which would ensue by his breach of peace with the king of Castile. Notwithstanding all this good aduice, King Charles failed not to come at the time appointed to the bridge of Lo- groño with foure hundred lances, Martin Henriques carrying the Standard royall. Don Pedro Manriques came forth to meet him, and drew the kings men into the Town, with- out any brute, where their lodgings were already made, and expecting to bring in the king, he inuited him very courteously: but suddenly bethinking himselfe of the mischiefe whereinto he runne, and repenting that he had drawne so many men into danger, he re- tired from the bridge towards Viane, telling D. Pedro that he wold not enter for that time C in person, but it should be the next day, and that there were ynough to execute that which they had concluded. This was a happy inspiration, for if hee had entred, he had neuer re- turned with libertie nor Crowne. Don Pedro Manriques seeing that the prey was escaped, caused all the Nauarrois that were entred, to be stript, whereof some were slaine, and o- thers prisoners; yet many escaped, leaping ouer the wals and rampiers by the riuier, and other passages which they found: yea Martin Henriques, who carried the Standard, seeing the alarme, and how they were circumvented, keeping his Standard fast, hee recovered the bridge, where he was entuironed round about by the enemy, but he defended himselfe very valiantly. In the end seeing he had no meanes to make his passage, he threw himselfe off the bridge into the riuier, with his Standard, and so escaped by swimming, as the Lord D of Oloagui had also done, who came vnto the king their Lord, and related the enterpry- ment they had found at Logroño: whereat he did not maruaile, as hauing fore-seene, though too late, what would succeed: notwithstanding he was much discontented, for he had lost many good men. By this attempt the peace betwixt Castile and Nauarre was plainly broken.

The king Don Henry being at Seuille, was aduertised of all that had past, and dispatched his sonne Don Iohn, a Prince in the flower of his age, desirous of honour and fame, who raysed an armie, to enter suddenly into Nauarre. King Charles beeing aduertised of these preparations, hauing consulted with his Estates, he passed to Bourdeaux, to craue ayde E of the English, who had then some suspension of armes with the French. Richard the 2. be- ing newly come to the Crowne, (the which fell out happily for him) who returned with 600. lances English and Gascons, vnder the command of Thomas Trent an Englishman, and the Seigneur of Berbecin a Gascon, to employ them in the war against Castile, the which was very violent that yeare 1378. The king of Nauar had placed garrisons in all the fronter townes, the English at Tudela, with their Captain: the Gascons at Estella: the Se- gneur of Seres a Nauarrois at S. Vincent: he put other good Captaines into Viane, Arcos, Lerin, Sanguessa, and other places: the charges of which war were so great, as hee wasted all his treasure, so as his sonne Charles coming to raigne, he found not one ducat in his fa- thers coffers. Thomas Trent the English Captaine, was slaine in the towne of Pucere la Reyna, by the inhabitants, by reason of some insolencies. D. Iohn Infant of Castile, hauing F drawne together about 4000. lances, and a number of foot out of Biscay and Guipuscoa, entred in arms into Nauar, being accompanied by D. Alphonso of Arragon, Marquis of Villena, and earle of Denia, D. Alphonso of Vurgna, D. Pedro Earle of Transamara, Prin- ces of the bloud of Castile, D. Ray Diaz of Rojas, Gouvernor of Guipuscoa, with other No- blemen and Captaines of note.

The Nauarrois
killed in Logroño.

For he mixt Castile and Na-
uarre.

The King of Nauar hath recourse vnto
the English.
An. 1378.

Exploiter of D. John and the Castilians
a myn Nauar

Records of Na-uarre burnt at Thiebes.

Peace betwixt Castile and
Nauarre.

They made a shew to beseege Saint Vincent, but the place being strong both by nature A and art, and well manned, they returned to make a muster at Logroño, where as Don Pedro Henriquez joyned with them, and then all together entred into Nauar, where they found not any one in field to make resistance: for king Charles was retired on this side the mountaines, and attended the successe of the warre at Saint Iohn de Pie de port, standing onely vpon his defence: wherefore the Castilians burnt Larraga, Artaxona, with many other places, euen vnto the ports of Pampelona, before which cittie the Castilian armie stayed a whole moneth, D. Iohn being lodged in the village of Gorraiz: during which abode the castle of Thiebes was yeilded vnto Don Pedro Manriques, who burnt it: It was a castle built by king Thibaud the first, as in a place of strength and great safetie, they had kept the titles and records of the Realme, all which were now burnt, to the great prei-dice of the Common-wealth. Wherefore it is no wonder if many of the antiquities of this Realme be at this day vnkowne. Those which yeilded this fort, were a knight called Berrio, Ruy Diaz of Torres, and Solomon Pronoch, Captaines to King Charles. The Castil-lans finding that they had not forces sufficient to take Pampelona, they dislodged and be-seeged Viane, which place they tooke by composition, after many encounters, vpon condition the defendants should haue their liues and goods saued: Guardie was also taken.
Thus the Castilians hauing done all the spoyle they could in the countrie, Don Iohn refolued to retire with his armie into Castile, before that winter (which approached) should in-commodate him. In a certaine encounter which they had with the Galcons, Ruy Diaz of Royas was slaine, which was the greatest losse the Castilians had in this expedition. Don Iohn went to the King Don Henry his father, being at Toledo, to whom hee gaue an account of that which he had done, and then they came together to Burgos, where there was order giuen for a new army, to returne into Nauarre in the Spring. We find by some remembrances of those times, that the king of Nauar, complained much of many knights which had not shewed themselves faithfull in this war, yea hauing bin called home by him from banishment, graced and restored to their honours and charges: among the which is named Don Ramir Sanches of Asiayn, and Don Iohn Ramir of Arellan the younger: D these with some more retired themselves one after another to the king of Castile, where they found a kind and gracious reception, in stead of the harshnesse and rigour of King Charles: so as in those dayes the Nobility of Nauarre was much decayed, and in a maner extinct. King Charles being on this side the mountaines, his Realme was gouerned by Iohn of Fresnay, a knight of France, and his Chamberlaine, who aduertised him of this new preparation of warre which was made in Castile: whereon hauing duly considered, finding himselfe weake, and without money, and ill serued by his owne subiects, he refolued to pacifie the king Don Henry, lending an Ambassadour vnto him to Burgos, to mooue him to some accord, the which he did not refuse, but answered, that if he feared his Ambassadors and Deputies with sufficient authoritie to treat a peace, that he should not find him vntactable to yeeld to any thing that should be held reasonable. Wherefore the king of Nauarre did againe employ D. Ramir Sanches of Asiayn, and sent him to Burgos, with the Prior of Roncevaux, men of learning and authority. These Ambassa-dours were heard by the king Don Henry, and entertayned with great courtesie: where hauing discoursed, and somewhat debated vpon the articles of the peace, in the end it was concluded, That there should be a perpetuall amitie sworne betwixt the kings and Realmes of Castile and Nauarre, without binding him of Castile to alienate himselfe in any sort from the league which he had with the French King. That the strangers, Galcons, and English, should be sent out of Nauarre: That the townes taken by the King of Castile from him of Nauarre, should be restored: That the king of Castile should presently lend twenty thousand ducats vnto the King of Nauarre, to pay the souldiers which were to be dismissed: for assurance whereof, the King Don Henry should keepe the towne of Guardie in pawne: That the king of Nauarre for assurance of the entertainment of these Articles of peace, and that he should not breake it in any sort, should leaue twenty euerrall places of his Realme of Nauarre in pawne, in the custodie and conseruance of Don Iohn Ramires of the towne of Arellan, namely, the Castle of Estella, the

A the garrison whereof should be paid by the King of Nauarre, and that Tudelo should receiue a garrison of Castilians: that Larraga, Miranda and Saint Vincent should be of the number of those twenty places; the which should be thus held for tenne yeeres, and that expired, without any breach, all should be restored to the King of Nauarre, or his successor. These Articles being concluded, and sworne, the warre ceased, to the general good of both Kingdomes.

During the warre betwixt these two Princes, there grew troubles in the Church, to the scandale of all Christendome, Pope Gregory the eleuenth, had restored the papall seate to Rome, in the yeere 1376. seuentie two yeeres after it had bene distracted by Pope Clement the fifth, who had bene crowned at Lions. About two yeeres and foure
E monthes after this returne, Gregory dying at Rome, hee left the consistory of Cardinals in great combustion, as well among themselves, as with the people of Rome, who would haue a Romaine, or at the least an Italian chosen Pope, whereof there followed a most dangerous Schisme, for all the Estates of Christendome for many yeeres, were transported with passion, and not with any zeale of religion: for euen then, and before, there was such corruption, as in the gouernment of Clergy matters, there was nothing but ambition, couetousnesse, and designs for temporall commodities: Princes cheuishing Popes, and Popes being hirelings to Princes, to draw fauour, authority and support one from another, in their affections. After much contention, Urbain the sixth came out of the Conclau, chosen by sixteene Cardinals, being before Archbishop of Bari, borne C at Naples, his name was Bartlemew Prignan: whose election hauing bene much contradicted by the French Cardinals, then allowed, and soone after reiected, in the end fifteene of them (not able to agree well with the Pope) being retired to Naples, through fauor of Queene Ieanne, they entred into the Conclau, and did choose an other Pope, whom they named Clement the seuenth, called before Robert Cardinal of Geneua, or as some write of Cambray, of the title of the twelue Apostles, who retired to Auignon, and there held his seat, as Urbain did at Rome.

As Princes in acknowledging of these Popes, were diuided and carried away with their priuat passions, Urbain the sixth seeing that his competitor was supported by the French King, sent Ambassadors to D. Henry King of Castile, to seeke his fauor, who D finding him at Cordoua, deliuered vnto him the reasons iustifying the election of Urbain, and condemning that of Clement, intreating him to beleue that Urbain was the true and lawfull Pastor, a friend to peace, and desirous of the good of all Chri-stendome. To these words, they added a present of three peeces of fine scarlet, one for the King, an other for the Queene, and the third for the Infant D. Iohn, gi-uing presents also, in the Popes name, vnto many noblemen of the court, promising the King not to conferre the benefices of Spaine to any other prelates, then to such as were borne in the country. In the end they intreat him to disclaime the Antipope Clement.
The King D. Henry hauing conferred with his counsell, Doctors, Diuines, and other chiefe men of his Realme, vpon the pretensions of Urbain, hee made answer vnto the E Ambassadors, that he would let them vnderstand his minde at Toledo, whether he was then going, where being arriued, there came Ambassadors from the French King, who being heard before he had made answer to them of Pope Urbain, they crost all: for hauing giuen the King of Castile to vnderstand, that the election of Urbain was forced, by the importunity of the Romaines and the partiality of the Cardinals, and that Clement had bene chosen with the better title as they pretended. King Henry resolved not to acknowledge any of them for Pope, sending Doctors into France, to informe themselves of the matter, and to report vnto him what they should finde, being wonderfully perplexed in minde, not knowing how he should gouerne himselfe, with a good conscience, in this Schisme: but he was somewhat pacified, vpon the determination which F should be made by a General council, and in the meane time he commanded that all the money due for Annates, or other profits, belonging, or accustomed to be receiued by the Apostolike see of Rome, in Spaine, should be laied in Deposito, vntill it were declared by the Catholike church, who was lawfull Pope, with this answer the Ambassadors of either part returned: The like resolution was taken in Arragon, touching this Schisme.

13 Schisme in the Church.

Castile.

Castile ac-knowledgeth
no Pope.

Profits of the court of Rome paid in Spaine.

Schisme. From Tolledo the King of Castile came to Burgos, where a peace with Na-uarre was concluded, as we haue said: after which the King of Nauarre came to Alfaro, to visit the Infant D. Iohn of Castile, and there he accomplished some part of the captulation. The King of Castile being come from Burgos to Saint Dominike of Cal-cada, he was also visited by Charles King of Nauarre, with great shewes of loue, of either side, and there they finished that which remained of their accord, the which was very prejudicial for the King of Nauarre, reaping the fruits of his turbulent spirit, as he had done in France. The King D. Henry neuer parted from Saint Dominike, for he was poisoned by the treachery of Alahumet the old, King of Granado. This Moore seeing that the King of Castile was at peace with all other Kings his neighbours, and knowing him to be warlike, and a great undertaker, hee was in feare least he should inuade his country of Granado: wherefore he sent a captaine to his court, saying that he was banished. This Moore seeming to like his Princes wrath, came and presented his seruice vnto the King D. Henry, and offered him in giust many pearles and precious stones, with other goodly presents, amongst the which there was a paire of rich buskins, infected with poison, the which were so pleasing vnto the King, as he would presently put them on: but soone after he beganne to finde himselfe ill, and within few daies died. He commanded his sonne to entertaine the amity of France, whilest he liued, and to follow the French in that which concerned the Schisme of the church. He was interred in the same chappell which he himselfe had caused to be built, in the great church of Toledo, of the which since hath been augmented with reuenues, by the Archbishop D. Alphonso of Fonseca, in the time of our fathers, and they call it the chappell of the last Kings. It is worthy obseruation, that this King having alienated from the crowne, many townes and other places, to recompence the seruices which he had receiued from Noblemen and Knights of Castile, and others, in the conquest of the Realme, he put a clause in his will, which did afterwards breed many complaints and controuersies in Castile: which was, that such donations made by him should goe vnto the eldest, the which is called in Spaine Majorazgos, the which they haue interpreted, as if no collateral heire might inherit them: in the Chancery, and the Kings councell, annexing such lands vnto the crowne. D.
Alphonso bishop of Carthagenas, saith, that this King died of the goutte, making no mention of any poison, whereof it may be that this author was ignorant. Being neere his end, he desired to be attired in the habit of Saint Dominike, and to die in it. He reigned tenne yeeres and two monethes, and was fix and forty yeeres old.

Granado. If this King of Granado practised his death, he did not long enjoy this content, for the same yeere 1379. the same Mahomet called the old, and old in effect, died the nine and twentieth yeere of his raigne, and 762. of the Arabians.

D. Iohn first of that name, the sixteenth King of Castile, and seuen and thirtieth of Leon.

AN. 1379.
Castile.

THE happinesse which did accompany the King D. Henry the second, father to Don John, did not continue in his posterity: for God, to let men vnderstand that it is he which doth raise and put downe at his pleasure, hauing from nothing advanced D. Henry to the Scepter of Leon and Castile, and confounded the forces of that Realme, allied to the English and Moores; he did in a manner ouerthrow this greatnesse in his sonnes time, by the forces of the petty Estate of Portugal, to the which he advanced a bastard, without any humane support; notwithstanding that the armes of France were ioynd with the forces of Castile, as shall appeare by the discourse of the History. By such examples the mighty are admonished not to trust in their forces, and the weak not to despaire, especially if he be vniufully pursued.

15. D. John who succeeded his father D. Henry, descended by the mothers side, from the Genealogie of Infant D. Fernand de la Cerde, eldest sonne to Don Alphonso the Philosopher: for of Castile.

A<sup>o</sup> Don Fernand came D. Alphonse and D. Fernand: Of the younger D. Fernand, and of D. leanne of Lara, his wife, issued D. Blanch, who was married to D. John Manuel (who had had to his first wife a Countesse of Sauoy) sonne to D. Manuel, brother to D. Alphonse the Philosopher, of which marriage was borne D. leanne Manuel, Queene of Castile, wife to the King D. Henry, and mother to this King D. John, the first of that name, who was two and twenty yeres old or thereabouts, when he began to raigne: a Prince of a good disposition, and religious, according to the time, but vnfound of his body, and vnfortunate in warre. of his reigne now was thirty yeres.

He was crowned after the example of his Predecessors, in Burgos, in the Monastery of Santa Maria de las Huélgas, where to solemnize his coronation, did arme above a hundred Knights, which were of Noble families, and gave many gifts and preiudges to commonalties, and to priuat persons, to make his first entrance more remarkable and pleasing: He gaue vnto the city of Burgos the towne of Pancoruo in Bureua: he caused Villa-Real of Saint Nicholas of Oro in Guipuscoa to be called in, giuing it the preiudges of Saint Sebastian; with many others. When he was Infant, being in possession of the Siegneury of Biscay, had vntied it for euer vnto the crowne, at his coming to it.

He remembered his fathers charge, to entertaine a strict league of friendship with the house and crowne of France, the which hee sent to confirme by his Ambassadors : And having sent his gallies this yeere of our Lord, 1379. in favour of the French, commanded by D. Fernand Sanches of Tovar, they tooke from John of Monfort duke of Brittain, the castle of Roche Gaze at Cap de Late, for that hee held the English party, by a decree of the court of parliament at Paris, and his Dutchy with all his goods declared forfeited to the King, vntill that time the Lewes dwelling in Spaine, had the prouidence to take knowledge of crimes committed by them of their sect: but this yeere a Lew, called Joseph Pich, dwelling at Seuille, having beene slaine in the Lewes place at Burgos, being a man of great reputation, for his wealth, and the seruices which hee had done vnto the deceased King D. Henry, as treasurer generally, the new King tooke from them this prerogative, and forbad them to deale in any crime, where there was murther, cutting off any Limbe, or effusion of blood. In the beginning of his raigne, God gaue him a sonne, by his wife D. Leonora of Arragon, who succeeded him.

As soone as the Infant was borne, D. Bernard King of Portugal, who had in the yeere 1378. made his daughter D. Beatrix, fure vnto D. Frederike duke of Benauent, base sonne to the deceased King Henry of Castile, by D. Leonora Ponce, repented himselfe, and sent vnto the King D. John, intreating him to consent vnto a marriage betwixt his sonne newly borne, and his daughter D. Beatrix, with certaine conditions which did nothing displease King John, so as this other marriage was accorded betwixt them, which proued the fire-band of future warre betwixt Castile and Portugal: for among other conditions, these two princes made a mutuall donation of their Realmes vnto the survivor, in case they died without lawfull heires of their bodies, the which was concluded and sworn in the yeere of our Lord 1380. but it was not executed, for God had otherwise decreed. This Infanta D. Beatrix, was daughter to D. Leonora Telles of Meneses, of whose vnfortunate marriage, we haue before treated, and whose proceedings were as vnreasonable: for this woman being exceeding faire, and provided of armes fit to sway a disposition that was faint and weake, could make such vse of her allurements, as she kept the King her husband alwaies subiect, and a slaue to her affections: so as hee refused not any thing that was pleasing vnto her, forgetting often his ranke and royall dignity. All which had disliked of her marriage, or had in any sort displeased her, were by her practise pursued, chased away, or vtterly ruined: her friends and kinsmen were aduanced to the greatest honours and dignities of the Realme: and as she was cunning in all her actions, so she could finde meanes to reconcile vnto her, those who through their greatest wealth, or alliance within the Realme, seemed hard to ruine; binding them vnto her by her bounty and fauours, making them of enemies to become her friends. Shee gaue the government of the castle of Lisbon, to her vnckle D. John Alphonso Tello, Earle of Barcelos, Lord Steward of the Kings house. She also aduanced a brother of his called

Disposition of King John.

16
Portugal.

An. 138c.

17
Art of D.
Leonora Teller
of Meneses.

Don Iohn Alphonso Telles, to be Admirall of the Realme: an other brother called D. A. Gonçalo Telles, was at her request made Earle of Neyua. To the Earle of Barçelos son, she procured the suruiuaunce of his fathers Estate, in the same country or gouernm the of Barçelos: a brother of hers was made Earle or Gouernor of Viane, and D. Henry her brother in law, Earle of Seaa. To D. Lope Diaz de Sosa her Nephew, sonne to Donna Maria Telles her sister, and to Aluar Diaz de Sosa, she caused to bee giuen the dignity of great maister of Christ.

Don Henry of Albuquerque, whose sisters were married to the brethren of this Queene D. Leonora Telles, was by her fauor maister of Saint Iames. She caused D. Ieanne Telles of Meneses her bastard sister, who was commanderesse of Santos, to be married to D. Iohn Alphonso Pimentel, and Bragança to be giuen vnto him: She married D. Agnes Botello, one of her gendewomen, and her kinswoman; being of a Noble family to Pero Rodriguez of Fonseca giuing him the castle of Oliuencia: She also concluded the marriages of D. Mencia Valguoz Contina, with Martin Gonçales of Tuy; and of D. Theresa of Meyra, with Fernand Gonçales of Sosa, giuing vnto the last the castle of Chaves, and to the other that of Portel: She made D. Aluar Peyre of Castro, Castellan, Earle or Gouernor of Aroyolos, and procured many fauours and graces for D. Fernand de Castro his elder brother.

They say, that by her meanes the King on a time sent a present to Iohn Alphonso of Muxica, being in the towne of Eborá, of thirty horse, thirty armors complete, thirty mulets, thirty pounds of gold, a hundred and thirty markes of siluer, and foure mulets laden with tapistry, and other rich furniture, adding thereto, as an hereditarie gift, the towne of Torresuedras. Such also was the fauour shee bare vnto Don Fernand of Andeiro a Knight of Galicia, who was come to serue the King her husband, in his last warres against Castile, as besides that hee was made an Earle, hee had the neerest place next to her selfe, in the Kings fauour: so as by his meanes many Gentlemen were gratified and aduanced in Portugal: and moreover hee liued in such familiarity, as hee lodged in the same lodging with the King and Queene, and did often remaine alone with her a long time, whereat many murmured, and grew ielous: saying that their conuersation was not honest, and the Portugos did beleue, that the children which shee bare, were not the King D. Fernand's (a Prince which was vnfound, and of a weak complexion) but begotten by stealth by this Earle of Oren. Finally she wrought so, as all the dignities, honours and forts of Portugal, were in the hands of her kinsmen, friends and allies.

But to what fury doth the desire of commaund thrust a woman vnto? The Portugall authors write, that the Infant Don Iohn, the Kings brother, being in loue with Donna Maria Telles of Meneses, the Queenes sister, who had managed the loue betwixt the King and her, a widow woman, and mother to Don Lope Diaz of Sosa, but faire, and pleasing, hee serued her and sought her loue, the which shee could not refuse, Don Iohn being a Knight in the floure of his age, goodly also and full of grace: yet shee was thus farre discreet, that before shee would yeeld to that which hee desired, hee promised to marrie her secretly, the which being afterwards made knowne vnto the Queene, shee was much discontented: it may bee desiring that Don Iohn (who was much beloued of the Portugalls) should marrie Donna Beatrice her daughter: fearing that if the King her husband should die, hee should bee chosen King, and her daughter reiected, or that shee her selfe did beare him some good will, and seeing her husband ill disposed, had an intent to marry him, if her husband died, that shee might moue reigne still: wherefore being transported with these passions, she began to practise the death (by a notable cruelty and detestable stratagemme) of her who had raised her vp, conspiring with Don Iohn Alphonso Telles her brother, Admirall of Portugall, to perswade the Infant Don Iohn, that Donna Maria Telles, who said shee was his wife, abandoned her selfe to other men, to his great dishonour, in whom they wrought such an impression, as this simple and ill aduised Knight, transported with extreame ielousie, came in a morning to Coimbra, where this Lady did remaine, where entring furiously into the house after that hee had forced her chamber doore, finding not

Policy cruel
and detestable of the Queene
D. Leonora
Telles.

A not any signes of that which had beene told him, he slue his miserable wife most barbarously, who called to God for aide, but in vaine, holding vp her hands to her iraged husband.

This was the reward which Donna Maria Telles of Meneses had, hauing beene the broker of that vnfortunate marriage, and as it were the Gardien of the Queene Donna Leonora loutes, who not content therewith came to complaine vnto the King of Don Iohn, for the death of her sister, and preuailed so, as he was forced to absent himselfe from court, and to keepe himselfe secret in places of hard acceffe, for his safety, yet finding not himselfe well secured, he retired into Castile: for Gonçal Telles, brother to the deceased, and her sonne D. Lope Diaz de Sosa, the Earle of Barçellos, and his brother the Earle of Viana, with other of her kinsfolkes, sought to kill him, to reuenge the death of Donna Maria. Besides these excesses, the Queene Donna Leonora attempted the death of D. Iohn maister of Auiz, the King her husbands base brother, a Knight of great valour, who had neuer offended her: but only in conceit, that he onely did crosse her desires. To effect her wicked intent, shee caused letters to bee counterfeted in the name of the maister, and of a gentleman called Gonçalo Vasques of Azebedo, his cousin and very familiar, being of the Kings counsell, whom shee would also draw into this danger. These letters were directed to the King of Castile and did treat of matters against the seruice of the King D. Fernand, whom she did aduertise that they had beene surprized vpon the frontiers.

Treachery of the Queene
D. Leonora
against the maister of Auiz.

C The King giuing credit to her malice, after that he had taken counsell of his wife, and of D. Iohn Fernandes of Andeyro, he commanded that the maister of Auiz and Gonçal Vasques should be apprehended, and put into the tower of the castle of Eborá, where they were kept rigorously in chaines, the maister being ignorant of the cause of this his misery. As for D. Gonçal Vasques, he remembered that hee had giuen care vnto his wife, telling him that on a time D. Gonçal Telles the Queenes brother, and D. Iohn Fernand of Andeyro her mignon, entring into her chamber all sweating, shee gaue them a kerchife she had vpon her, to wipe themselves withall; and that D. Iohn Fernandes approaching neere vnto her spake certaine lasciuious words, which being heard by the wife of Don Gonçal Vasques, and reported by her vnto her husband, hee was so indiscreet as to tell the Queene thereof, aduertising the Queene of the Earles final respect vnto her, and of his impudency, whereof she, who wished him well, did not seeme to care: wherefore D. Gonçal doubted that this was the cause of his imprisonment, and that the Queene would dispatch him before the King should be aduertised thereof.

Imprisonment
of the maister of Auiz and of
D. Gonçal
Vasques.

Being thus imprisoned, the Queene did counterfet letters from the King, vnto Vasco Martines of Merlo, captaine of the castle of Eborá, by the which he was commanded to murder these two personages: but being a discreet man, and considering the quality of the prisoners, thinking that he must not proceed so lightly to the execution thereof, hee forbore, vntill he had spoken with the King, to whom he went the day after this charge, to know if it were his pleasure, that the maister of Auiz and Gonçal Vasques should be put to death. The King answered that he knew not of it, commanding him not to touch them, and so he sent him backe, enioyning him to kepe it secret, and soone after he went from Eborá, whereas the Queene remained; who seeing that her desires did not succeed, she tooke a milder course, and sought to bee reconciled to these two personages, who were freed from their irons, and within few daies after set at liberty. Some time after, the Queene being at masse, she caused them to come vnto her, shewing them the best countenance they could desire, and invited them to dinner, the which they did vnwillingly accept, fearing she would cause them to be poisoned: yet they did eate in the Queenes lodging, in the company of the Earle of Oren, to whom after dinner, discouraging of her rings and iewels, she gaue (in their presence) a Ring, set with a rich ruby, pressing him to take it, although he excused himselfe, to the end she might not forget any thing to be held very impudent.

Impudency of the Queene
D. Leonora.

F Amidst these tumults, D. Isabella the Kings bastard daughter, who had beene made sure by the last treaty of peace, to D. Alphonso of Castile, Earle of Gijon, base sonne to King Henry, was married at Burgos, whereat the Earle was much grieved: an vnfortunate marriage, marriage, of which there was one sonne borne, who was called D. Henry. But the marriage which was made betwixt D. Beatrix sister to the King D. Fernand, and D. Sancho Earle of Albuquerque, was blessed of God: so as a daughter which they had, called D. Leonora, the sole heire of her fathers great Estates, was married to D. Fernand Infant of Castile Lord of Lara, and Duke of Pennafiel, sonne to the King D. John the first, then reigning, which D. Fernand came afterwards to be King of Arragon and Sicile. Shee was Queene of these realmes, and mother of siue children, renowned by the Histories of Castile and Arragon, of whom we shall heereafter make mention. This King Fernand of Portugal being in good peace with his neighbours, considering what had happened in the city of Lisbon, in the last warre of Castile, for want of good walles, he caused it to be fortified and walled about from Saint Catherins gate vnto Saint Vincents. And as hee was carefull of this publike worke so hee did gratesie the Franciscan Friars of Saint Iren, causing the quier of their church to be built, with other workes of deuotion. This is all we finde in Histories of the affaires of Portugall, vnto the yeere of our Lord 1380. that the aboue mentioned marriage betwixt Don Henry sonne to King John the first of Castile, and Donna Beatrix the daughter of Portugal, was concluded with the aboue named conditions, for the succession of the two Realmes, by the suruiuaunce of the two Kings.

Buildings
made by D.
Fernand King
of Portugal.

An. 1380.

Castile.

About the end of this yeere, Donna Leonora Queene of Castile was brought in bed, at Medina del Campo, of her sonne D. Fernand aboue named, who came to be King of Arragon, as we will shew.

18.
The King of Castile ac-
knowledgeth
the Pope at Auignon.

At that time Spaine was a Neuter, in regard of the obedience which the two Popes pretended, and did affect in the Christian common weale, continuing some time in this Neutrality, by reason of the disagreement of the Prelats, who were assembled for that cause onely, at the instance of the Ambassadors of the two Popes, Clement and Vrbain: but soone after it was declared by a sentence given by the King of Castile, and his counsell, that his countries should acknowledge Clement the seuenth, for Pope, and Christs Vicar, he being resident at Auignon, the King D. John inclining therein, as in other things to the French. The deuotion of men in Spaine, and other places, in those daies was contrarie to that of more ancient times: for whereas before they thought they could not giue sufficient to the Clergy, to augment their houses and reuenues, now euery one sought to spoile them, and to vsurpe their lands and reuenues: whereof the Abbots and Conuents of the Order of Saint Benet in Spaine, hauing complained, they had a notable sentence by Iudges deputed by the King for that businesse, against many Noblemen and Knights which detained their goods: yet they still inroched vpon them all they could.

An. 1381.

In the yeere of our Lord 1381, died D. Ieanne Queene of Castile, mother to the King D. John, who through great deuotion had in a manner all her life time carried the habit of Saint Claire, and died in it, and appointed she should be buried in it: A great argument of the religion of that time. She lies at Toledo, in the Chappell of the last Kings.

19
Portugal.

The peace betwixt the Kings D. John of Castile, and D. Fernand of Portugal, was broken, by the bad counsell of a Knight, who had bene accustomed to bee often shut vp with the Queene of Portugall, and was her favorite, hee was Earle of Oren. To giue some collour, and beginning to this warre, the King D. Fernand sent to John Duke of Lancaster, perswading him, that as husband to D. Constance, daughter to the deceased King D. Pedro of Castile and Leon, hee should pursue his right which hee pretended to those Realmes. The English Prince relying vpon the fauour of Portugall, with the consent and aide of King Richard his Nephew, raised a thousand men at armes, or Launces, and a good number of foote, whereof he gaue the charge to his brother Edmond of Langley, Earle of Cambridge, who led them into Spaine, for that the Duke could not goe in person to this warre. The English army arrived vpon the coast of Portugall, whereas the warre was already violent; for the King of Castile being aduertised of this practise, had led his army into the country, and taken the towne of Almoeda: And at sea, euen vpon the arriual of the English army, Fernand Sanches of Touar Admirall of Castile had taken twenty gallies of Portugall, with their Admirall D. Alphonso Telles, Earle

Auignon of Queene Leo-nora puts Castile and Portugal in war.

A Earle of Barcellos the Queenes brother, the which fell out vnhappy for the King Don Fernand, who being sodainly transported with hatred against Castile, received this Prince Edmond, with all shewes of loue and royall pompe: and the more to gratesie him, he made a promise of a future marriage, betwixt Donna Beatrix his daughter (who had bene twice before contracted) and Edward his son, a young child, which hee had had of Donna Isabella his wife, the third daughter of the deceased King Don Pedro of Castile, there present; yea he made them to marry and lie together, and to confirme this marriage, they performed at accustomed ceremonies, except the consummation, which could not bee, by reason of the tender age of both parties, the Bridegroom being not full sixe yeeres old. During their stay, the English (before they were led to the warre) spared not the Portugals, but made spoile of their goods, as if they had bene in the country of Castile: So as the Portugals in steed of one warre, found themselves ingaged betwixt two enemies, hauing the Castilians abroad, and the English within their houses.

King of Portugal makes and breakes his daughters marriage at his pleasure.

In the yeere of our Lord 1382, the King D. Fernand went to field, with the Earle of Cambridge, and came and lodged his army at Yelbes: On the other side the army of Castile camped at Badajos, whereas hauing continued some daies without any exploite of armes, a peace was concluded, and Donna Beatrix Infanta of Portugall was the fourth time promised to Don Fernand the younger sonne of Don John King of Castile, the King of Portugall being glad this marriage should take place, to the end his Realme should not bee vnited to the crowne of Castile.

An. 1382.

In the meane time Donna Leonora Queene of Castile died, in the towne of Cuellar, Castile, being brought in bed of a daughter, which died also. The Queenes bodie was carried to Toledo, and interred in the chappell of the last Kings. This Princeesse is honoured for her vpright and good conscience about all the Ladies of her time, whereof some authors bring this example: Certaine Iewes deputed from the Sinagogues faired vnto the court, being moued with good will vnto their Ladie, by reason of her vertues, and good behauiour, came vnto her Confessor being an Arragonois, a verie religious man, of a good life, and tould him, that they vnderstood the Queene had occasion for to vse a certaine summe of money, and knowing how much the Iewes, dwelling in her countrie, did honour her, they intreated him to let her vnderstand that shee should demaunde what money shee pleased of their Sinagogues, being assured it should bee verie willingly furnished; and that withall hee should certifie her, that the Iewes desired to doe her this seruice, for that since the time shee had bene their Ladie shee had neuer employed them. The Confessor thinking to bring pleasing newes vnto the Queene, made report of the Iewes speech, and perswaded her by all meanes for to make vse of their kinde offer, assuring her that shee might take with a good conscience that which they did willingly present vnto her. But the Queene answered him, that shee would neuer doe any such thing, and that God forbidde that shee should exact money, or any other thing of any person, for the which the King, she or their children might be cursed: And notwithstanding any reply the religious man could make shee would not yeeld vnto it, but willed him for to thanke the Iewes.

Integrity of
the Queene
D. Leonora.

Don Fernand King of Portugal, hearing of the death of Donna Leonora Queene of Castile, hee beganne to practise a fifth marriage for his daughter Donna Beatrix, with the King Don John himselfe; sending sodainly vnto him, being then at Pinto, three Leagues from Madrid, to know his minde therein. The King Don John made no delaie, but (with the aduice of his good seruants) entred presently into capitulation with the Ambassadors of Portugal, who were therein duelic instructed: Amongst other Articles it was agreed that the children issuing of this marriage, should bee Kings of Portugal.

And some daies after hee married Donna Beatrix Infanta of Portugall, hauing escaped many other parties of lesse preferment. The marriage was celebrated, at Badajos, or at Yelbes, according vnto some, in the yeere of the Incarnation 1383.

D. John King of Castile marries the Infanta of Portugal.

Fff

'Deat' o' D.
Fernand King
o' Portugal.

20.
Castile.

Rebellion of
D. Alphonso
Earle of Gijon,
Aera of Cesar
what it was.

21
Portugal.

Disposition of the Noblemen
of Portugal.

King of Castile
enters arme into Portugal, and is not well received.

the Queene Donna Leonora Telles de Meneses her mother being present, the King Don A Fernand remaying at Lisbon very sicke, where within few daies after hee died, hauing reigned but ill sixteene yeeres and nine monthes, the three and forth yeere of his age. His body was buried at Saint Iren, in the Franciscans church, where as D. Constance Manuel his mother is also interred.

After the marriage betwixt Don Alphonso Earle of Gijon, and Donna Isabell of Portugal, against the liking of Don Alphonso, hee did neuer loue the King his brother, some times hee rebelled, and caused reuolts, and then was reconciled, but it lasted not long. At this second marriage of the King Don Iohn, hee was in the Asturias, where hee put all into combustion, against whom the King sent some companies of men at armes.

This yeere of our Lord 1383. was held a generall assembly of the Estates at Segobia. And for that vnto that time they had accounted the yeeres according vnto the Aera of Cesar, which differed eight and thirty yeeres from the accounts which was then in vse in other Christian Kingdomes, it was ordained that the Castilians should take the beginning of their yeeres from the natiuity of Christ: the which was more fit for Christians, then to retaine this memory of Cesar Augustus. This manner of accounting by the Aera had bene long before left in Nauarre and Arragon, but was retained for some time in Portugal. The cause of this name of Aera is diuersly related, but the most probable is, that the ancients hauing accustomed to write these wordes. Annus erat Augusti centes. or some other number, by abreniation thus, A. E. R. A. C. the which the vulgar people ioyning these letters together pronounced Aera. C. the which was afterwards vsed vnto that time. They say that the last letters which were dispatched in the court of Castile, where the Aera of Cesar was obserued, were two preuiledges granted by the King Don Iohn, the one to the towne of Santa Cruz of Cestone; the other to Villa Real of Vrechia, which was in the yeere of our Lord 1421. of the Aera, answering to that of our Lord 1383. from the birth of Christ.

The King Don Iohn, before his departure from Segobia, did celebrat the funerals of his father in law, in which Realme, by an Article made in the treaty of marriage of the Infanta Don Beatrix, Queene of Castile, and heire proprietarie thereof, the Queene Donna Leonora Telles her mother should remaine Regent. The chiefe of the Nobilitie of Portugal were of diuerse humours touching the succession of the Realme: for some (amongst which was the maister of the Knights of Auiz, base brother to the deceased King) would maintaine the right of Donna Beatrix, and called Don Iohn King of Castile her husband, to come and take possession of the Realme, which did be long vnto him: others did abhorre the Castilians commaund, and could not endure that Portugal should bee vnited to Castile. The King Don Iohn solicited by many letters and messages to come into Portugall tooke aduice of his counsell, whether hee should enter in hostile manner, or peaceably. The worst counsell was followed by him, which was, force: Wherefore he speedily gathered together al the forces hee could, and first of all hee staid Don Iohn of Portugall, one of the brethren of the deceased King Don Fernand, who hauing retired himselfe out of Portugal, by reason of the murder of Donna Maria Telles de Meneses, and the mallice of the Queene Donna Leonora, had serued the crowne of Castile faithfully. But fearing least hee should cause some troubles in Portugal, hee caused him to bee put prisoner in the castile of Toledo, from whence hee was afterwards remooued to Almonacid, three leagues from the citie. Hee also caused Don Alphonso Earle of Gijon to bee imprisoned, who stirred vpp fe- ditions in Castile: and then with those small forces which hee had, hee marched to La Garde, where hee was receiued by the Bishop of that place; but the captaine of the fort would not acknowledge him, knowing the diuerse dispositions of the Nobilitie, and vnderstanding all the troubles which had happened at Lisbon since the Kings death.

The Queene widowe did reside in this chiefe Cittie of the Realme, being assisted by Don Henry Manuel, Earle of Sintra, Vncle to the deceased King by the mothers side; by Don Iohn Maister of Auiz, and others which did fauour the Queene Donna Beatrix, and

A and had set vp the armes of Castile and Portugal quartered, as the Don Iohn had taken them: but the iealousie which was bred in the hearts of the Noblemen, and people, by the too great familiarity which was betwixt the widow Queene and Don Iohn Fernandes of Andeyro Earle of Oren, mooued the maister of Auiz (who remembered still his imprisonment) to enter into quarrell with him, the which proceeded so farre, as the Earle was slaine in the Queenes lodging, which was at a place called Limonero: and instantly (as if it had bene a thing premeditated) the people of the city fell in such a mutiny, as not any one durst burie the Earle. Don Fernandes body, in the day time, but they were forced to stae till night, to put him secretly in the ground at Saint Martins: Queene Leonora being so amazed, as shee sought all meanes to flic out of Lisbon: And the rage of this multitude was so violent, as they fell vpon Don Martin their Bishop, who blaming them for their insolencies and rebellion against the Queene, they chased him into a tower of his church, into the which this poore prelate had fled to saue himselfe from the rage of the people, where they besieged him, and entering into the tower, cast him downe head-long pouring forth a thousand iniurious words against the Queene Donna Leonora, the Earle and the Bishop: whose bodie being stript, they drag'd it by the heeles to the place of Rusio, where this miserable spectacle laie all that day, and the next night following, and then they buried it in the market; the furious multitude not suffering it to haue Christian buriall.

In the meane time the Queene Donna Leonora got away, and leauing this mutinous city, retired to Alauquer, and from thence to Saint Iren, where as shee vnderstoode that many other townes, especially Ebor had done the like, taking armes tumultuously against her and her faction. At Ebor the heads of the multitude were Vincens James a Taylor, and one called Gonçall James, who committed strange insolencies, as it is the custome of a mutinous multitude. Amongst others, knowing that the Abbesse of Saint Benet was allied to the Queene Donna Leonora, they entred into her Church and pulled her from the Altar, holding that which keeps the Hoste in her armes, imploring in vaine the aide thereof, and the mercie of the commons, and so drew her into the market-place, where they murdered her most cruelly.

The Portugall authors write, that in that cittie, a little small Infant beeing in the cradell, in the house of one Stephen James, did rise three times out of her swadling clothes, and stretching out the armes, cried, Portugal, Portugal, for the King Don Iohn; the which was then ambiguous, but afterwarde (by reason of the euent) was applied to the maister of Auiz, who was also called Don Iohn. The King of Castile beeing aduertised of all these disorders, went to Saint Iren, to his mother in law, about the beginning of the yeere of our Lord 1384. where to free her selfe from trouble and daunger, and to gratifie the King her sonne in law, shee yeilded vnto him all the right shee had to the Government of the Realme. Hether came many Noblemen and Gentlemen holding the partie of the King Don Iohn, to doe him homage: who by this good beginning conceiued great hope that all would succed well and wishfully, and that hee should restore his mother in law to her dignity. Don Iohn of Portugall maister of Auiz, a young Prince, but vertuous, hauing bene prouoked by the dishonest conuersation of the Queene Donna Leonora, with the Earle of Oren, to take armes, knowing the nature of this woman, by former experience, with the hazard of his life; hee would no more fall into her power, but aspired to the regencie of the Realme, and wholly to depriue both her and the King D. Iohn her sonne in law of all government.

In this desaigne hee found such fauour and support of the Nobility and townes, who had long detested the manners of the Queene, and the deceased King her husband, as hee had meanes to resist the attempts of the King of Castile, and to make himselfe a way to the crowne. And to make the name of Castile more odious to them who desired not the vnion of these two Realmes, he caused a standard to be made, in the which was painted D. Iohn of Portugall his brother, a prisoner, standing at a grate in the Castle of Toledo, causing it to bee displaied in the city of Lisbon, in view of all the people, who were already mutined, which made them to arme with great resolution against the forces of Castile, who soone after came and presented themselves before

Earle of Oren
the Queene of Portugal's
Mistress.

Mistress at Lisbon.

Bishop of Lisbon slaine by the mutines.

Prodigie at Ebor.

An. 1384.

D. Iohn maister of Auiz applies to the government of Portugal.

Act of the maister of Auiz to make the Castilians
odious.

Lisbon besieged by the Castilians.

Castilians defeated by them of Ebo-ra.

King John
and the Queene of Castile and Portugal repulsed from Coimbra.

22
Nauarre.

the city, in which army there were one thousand launces complete, and great store of A foote led by D. Pedro Fernandes Cap de Vache maister of Saint James, Don Pero Fernan-des de Valasco, Chamberlaine to the King, and D. John Pero Ruiz Sarmiento Gouvernor of Galicia, and soone after the King came thither in person: where they laied siege, and planted their batteries, but without any great effect, for the besieged made no sallics.

In the meane time they of Eborá, who were of this rebellious faction, receiued into their towne Don Nugno Aluarez Pereira, a valiant captaine, being but foure and twenty yeeres old, vnder whose conduct they came and affronted D. John Alphonso of Guz-ty Earle of Niebla, D. Diego Gomes maister of Alcantara, and D. Fernand Sanches of Touar high Admirall of Castile, being sent by the King D. John with great troups against them, but they put them to rout, and slue the maister of Alcantara, and many men of marke. The King hearing of these newes, sent supplies with D. John Pero Ruiz Sarmiento, Gouvernor of Galicia, to whom they of Eborá, with their captaine D. Nugno Aluarez, presented battaile againe couragiously, but they retired themselves, fearing the like should happen vnto them as had done to their companions, and came vnto the King, who thinking that hee might seize vpon Coimbra without any contradiction, in the castle whereof was Goncal Telles, Earle of Neyua the Queenes brother, and Goncal Mendez of Valconcello, her vnle, hee marched thither, leading with him D.
Beatriz his wife, and the Queene Donna Leonora: but the Castilians name was so hate-full vnto the Portugals, with the behauiour of the widow Queene, as they were not ly kept out of the towne, but also they of the castle shot at them, whereas the King and Queenes were in great daunger of their liues.

The King Don John being discontented with the Queene Donna Leonora, forthat her neereft kinsmen holding the fort of Coimbra, had so shamefully repulsed him, hee grew iealous that shee had some intelligence with them: wherefore hee caused her to bee taken, and sent into Castile to the castle of Tordeillas, from whence shee neuer returned more into Portugall, yet shee by commandement from him was fer-uently and honoured there as a Queene, and dying was buried at Valledolit, in the Monastery of the religious of the Order of the Merced. The King being returned to the campe before Lisbon, hee prest it all hee could, both by water and land, but by reason of the infection which crept into his campe, and the coming of the seaarmie of Portugal, which approched neere vnto the city, together with the resolution of the beleaged, who then made many sallics vpon the Castilians, hee aduanced the little. There were some propositions of an accord made; but Don John maister of the Auiz being resolute to haue the sole government of the Realme of Portugal, and Algarbe, vntill that the King of Castile had children by Donna Beatriz his wife, there was nothing concluded.

The Infant Don Charles, heire of Nauarre, came to the King Don John at this siege, to aide and fortifie the King his brother in law: but the plague continuing with great losse of the Nobility, which died miserably at this siege, the King Don John was constrained to rise and to returne into Castile, hauing put good garrisons into those places which had receiued him. The losse of his men in this voiage was very great, and therefore hee had reason to giue some rest vnto the remainders, and prepare for the raising of a great army for the next yeere.

Before wee returne into Portugall, it is expedient to make mention of the affaires of Nauarre, and shew how the Infant Don Charles (who came newly to the campe before Lisbon) was deliuered, whom wee had left prisoner in France. During the life of Charles the fifth, the French King, there was no meanes of reconciliation betwixt him, and his brother in law Charles King of Nauarre, wherefore his sonne Charles continued prisoner vnto the Kings death, which happened in the yeere of our Lord 1380. leauing his sonne Charles the sixth of that name, successor to the Realme, being young and vnder the government of John duke of Berry, and Philip duke of Bourgondie his vnles, who shewed themselves so opposite to the King of Nauarres pourfutes, for his reconciliation and the deliuey of his sonne, which made them

A them resolute to poison them both, wherefore hauing found an Englishman, fit for his intent, they sent him to the French court with poison, to kill these princes, promising him many great rewardes, if hee did effect it giuing him also good store of gold in present.

This Englishman did what hee could, to execute his charge, but his often com-ming and going into the dukes kitchins, being also an Englishman, made him to bee suspected: so as being taken with his poulder, and hauing confessed that hee was sent to kill the dukes of Berry and Bourgonne, for that they opposed themselves against the deliuey of the Infant of Nauarre, hee was beheaded. This error did very much displease Charles King of Nauarre not knowing by what meanes to recover his sonne.

B During the Kings discontent, there fell out a quarrell betwixt Fillos of Gramont, Lord of Gramont, on this sides the mountaines, and Don Ramir Sanches of Asiayn, for matters concerning their Princes seruiue: Don Ramir was accused by the Lord of Gramont, to haue attempted against the Kings owne person: so as comming to the triall of armes, by the order of Iudges, deputed by the King, and these Knights appe-ring to fight at the day appointed, the importunity of the kinsmen and friends of either side was such, as the combate was staied, and they both remained at the Kings pleasure, who caused them to bee put in prison, the Lord of Gramont in the castle of Saint Iohn of Pie de Port, and the other in Tafalla. The Lord of Asiayn hauing C bene some space prisoner in this towne, being garded by certaine souldiars Picards, hee found meanes to corrupt them, so as hee seized vpon the captaine of the castle, and the place it selfe.

This accident being bruted through the towne, the Inhabitants went presentlic to armes and beleaged the castle, the which by the treason of one of those souldi-ars which had betrayed the captaine and the place, was recovered, with Don Ramir Sanches of Asiayn, and his confederates, whose head the King, as well for this, as for many other former offences, caused to bee cut off, and forfeited his goods, and the souldiars were euery one executed that had assisted him to seize vpon the fort, or castle of Tafalla. As for Fillos of Gramont hee continued three yeeres in prison, and then D was deliuered.

In the meane time the King Don Charles being in great care for the detention of his sonne in France, hee caused Don John King of Castile to bee solicited by Donna Leonora his daughter in law, who was retired into Castile to the King her brother, who was strictly allied and a friend to the French, to bee a meadiator for the deliuey of the Infant Don Charles. The King of Castile desirous to gratese his sister, employed his best meanes to the young French King and his Gouvernors, and did so importune them by messages, letters and Ambassages, as they set the Infant Don Charles of Nauarre at libertie. As for Don Pedro his younger brother, and Donna Maria his sister, they had bene released before. Don Charles soone after his deliuey hee E went into Nauarre, to the great content of all the Nauarrois. It was a great hatred and mallice in the King Don Charles the Father, for to attempt such a wickednesse against the princes of France, who shewed their generositie, in consenting to the deliuey of the Infant, who was not guilty of his fathers offence, who in all his actions was of so sower a disposition, as hee could not pursue his rights, nor treat of any affaires with other princes, but in choller, and disdain: and whereas hee could not obtaine and bring to passe what hee pretended, hee had recourse to synister and vnlawfull practises, desiring to reuenge himselfe of those that did him any iniury, by what meanes soeuer.

Hee had one sister called Donna Agnes, married vnto Gaston Earle of Foix, called F Phebus, who for the wrongs hee had done vnto her husband, was verie ill intreated by him, so as shee was forced to leaue his companie, and to retire into Nauarre, who was soone after followed by a sonne shee had by him, called Gaston, where both being receiued, and honoured by King Charles, conferring often with his sister of her husbands bad vsage, hee conceived such a hatred against the Earle Gaston, as hee Fff 3 drew

Desirable enterprise of King Charles
the bad.

Deliverie of Prince Charles
in fauor of the King of Castile.

Deliverie of Prince Charles
in fauor of the King of Castile.

Disposition of Don Charles
King of Na-
uarre.

drew young Gaston their sonne to poison his father and gaue him a venomous poulder A to that end, telling him that it was a remedy to make him change the hatred hee bare him and his mother, into loue. This young Nobleman being simple and ill aduised be- leeuing what the King his vncl had said vnto him, he returned into Foix, to his father, with an intent to feason him some meate with this poulder, but hee could not so play his part, but casting the poulder into the meate, it was perceiued by the cookes, or o- therwise discovered: wherefore the Earle commanded his sonne and onely heire to bee taken, causing him to die miserably in prison, so as after him hee left none but bastards, which did not succeed in the Earldome of Foix: one of them was Bernard, who serued Henry the second King of Castile, in the conquest of the realme against the King D. Pedro, and was rewarded by him, and endowed with lands and Estates in Castile, from whom descended the dukes of Medina Celi, or Zelim, who by the mothers side belong to the blood of Castile, according to the order which followeth.

Miserable death of young Gaston of Foix.

D. Fernand de la Cerde, eldest sonne to D. Alphonso the Wise, or the Philosopher, left two sons, D. Alphonso and D. Fernand: of D. Alphonso, married into France, came D. Lewis Earle of Clermont, and D. Charles, or Iohn, according vnto some, Constable of France, and Earle of Angoulesme. D. Lewis Earle of Clermont married in Andalusia, Don Leonora of Guzman, daughter to D. Alphonso Peres of Guzman, and was Lord of Hulua, and of Port Sancta Maria, and other lands in the right of his wife: of which marriage issued Don Lewis, Don Iohn, and Donna Isabella de la Cerde. This Donna Isabella was by the King Don Henry the second, being settled in the realme of Castile, married to Bernard bastard of Foix, and had in dowry Medina Celi, with the title of an Earle; of them came D. Gaston, surnamed de la Cerde, leauing the name of the house of Foix, and Bernard. Hee was the second Earle of Medina Celi, and married Donna Mencia of Mendoza, daughter to Don Pedro Gonçales of Mendoza, a great Nobleman in Alaua: by her hee had one sonne called Don Lewis, who was the third Earle of Medina Celi, and married with Donna Iean Sarmiento, daughter to Diego Peres Sarmiento, from whom came Don Gaston de la Cerde the second, and forth Earle of Medina Celi, who married Donna Leonora of Mendoza, daughter to Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Marquis of Sentillana, from whom descended Don Lewis which succeeded him in the Earldome, in whose time it was made a Dutchy, D. Lewis married Donna Anna of Nauarre and Arragon, base daughter to D. Charles, Infant of Nauarre and Arragon. This is the Genealogy of the house of the dukes of Medina Celi.

King Charles
a Leaper.

Such, as wee haue sayd, were the actions of Charles King of Nauarre, whom in the end God strooke with a Leaprofie, which made him to leaue all care of the affaires of this world, and to giue himselfe to workes of piety, according to the manner of those times, which was to build chappels, to ordaine Masses and Anniuersaries for his deceased parents, and to adde rents and giue entertainment to Clergy men and Priests which did the seruice: but about all hee labored to liue in peace with Christian Princes.

The Infant Charles being come into Nauarre about the beginning of the warre betwixt Castile and Portugal, the King Don Iohn demanded some supplies of souldiars out of Nauarre, to lead with him, wherevnto the King of Nauarre consented willingly, remembreing the good Offices hee had done with the French for his sonnes liberty, whom hee sent well accompanied to this warre, being vnable to goe in person, by reason of his indisposition. The Infant made some stay with his wife Donna Leonora, who was in Castile, and then passing on, hee came to the King being incamped before Lisbon, where hee staid not long, the King Don Iohn being forced to raise the siege by reason of the plague which ruined his armie, and returne into Castile, as wee haue said, dismissing the Infant his brother in law, with all loue and content.

23.
Portugal.
Affaires of the King of Castile
succeed well
in Portugal.

The yeere 1385. being come, the King D. Iohn preparing to returne into Portugal, hauing already sent some ships and gallies against Lisbon, hee had newes that the souldiars which hee had left in Saint Iren, had defeated some troupes of Portugal, whose leaders were the maister of the Knights of Christus, and the Prior of Saint Iohn, by reason of which victorie, many places within the Realme had planted the Standard of Castile.

A Castile: wherefore he made all the hast he could to enter into Portugall, being loth to let slip this occasion. Before his departure, he propounded in councell to put his brother the Earle of Gijon to death: but he was perswaded by many graue reasons and examples to forbear.

Don Iohn Master of Auiz, a bastard, the first of that name, and tenth in number, chosen King of Portugal.

B IN Portugal his aduersaries lost no time, but provided for all that was necessarie for a future warre: for the better managing whereof, they were of aduise to choose one, who should haue soueraigne authoritie among the rest; for the effecting whereof, the Noblemen and Knights of the Realme, who reiected the gouernement of Castile (among the which the most eminent were, Don Iohn Master of Auiz, and Don Nugno Alvarez Pereira) assembled in the cittie of Coimbra, and there held a kind of Parliament, whither also came the Deputies of the townes of their partie: there it was debated whether they should choose a Regent or a King. Many were of opinion they should choose a king, and gaue their voices, some to Don Iohn Master of Auiz, base sonne to the king Don Pedro: others sayd, it was more reasonable to make Don Iohn lawfull sonne to the king Don Pedro, king, who was prisoner in Castile.

Assembly in Portugal for the election of a king.

Many considering the wrong they did therein to the Queene D. Beatrix, were of opinion, that it was better to seeke some good accord with Don Iohn king of Castile her husband: whereunto some did oppose, saying, that the Queene D. Leonora Telles de Meneses could not be lawfull wife to king Fernand, hauing taken her by force from her husband Laurence Vazques of Acugna: and therefore D. Beatrix was no more legitimate then the Master of Auiz, and that being both base, it were better to acknowledge him for king, D then her: that as for the Infant D. Iohn a lawfull son, to whom the crowne of Portugal did rightly belong, that his deliuerie was vncertaine, and therefore they must not stand vpon it, the Portugals hauing then need of a free king, to oppose himselfe against the attempts of Castile who sought to oppresse them. This opinion preuailed, and they all consented to choose D. Iohn Master of Auiz, for king of Portugal, and so he was proclaimed eighteene moneths after the interregne; in the Monasterie of Saint Francis of Coimbra, in Aprill, this yeare 1385. the people crying out, that it was that king which was prophesied by the Infant at Ebora, whereof mention was made.

D. Iohn Master of Auiz chosen
king of Portu-
gal.

This king is called by the Portugals (of happie memorie) for that he freed the country from the Castillans, whose gouernement was exceeding hatefull vnto them: he was also surnamed the Bastard, for that the king D. Pedro begat him out of marriage. He shewed a great courage and generositie in the reception of this great charge, to defend a Realme diuided, against the power of the king of Castile, being allyed to France and Nauarre: but a Royaltie, and the liberty of his country, did sufficiently requite the perill and danger which he did vndergo. The king D. Iohn being aduertised of that which the Portugals had done at the Estates at Coimbra, he sent D. Pedro Tenorio Archbishop of Toledo, a Portugall borne, with some troupes, to retaine in their fidelitie such as followed his party in Portugall. This Prelate entring the countrie by Viseo, made a miserable spoile where hee past, for which he smarted soone after, being incountred and defeated by the Portugals nere to Troncoço. On the other side, the inhabitants of Algarbe, following the new kings partie, had seized vpon the towne of Mertola, and as they battered the castle, they were suddenly charged by them of Seuille, and put to flight: the leader was D. Aluar Perez of Guzman, Gouernor of that city, a yong Nobleman of 18. years of age: and in a manner at the same instant the Castillans tooke a great quantitie of victuals and munition, which they of Yelbes and Estremos kept in Ronchez. The king of Castile resoluing to beseege Lisbon againe, had prepared many vessels both for war, and to carrie victuals, the which came

Castillans defeated at Tron-coço.

exploits of the new king of
Portugal.

came neere vnto Lisbon, and kept the mouth of the riuer, so as no man could go in, or A come out from Lisbon. All this did not daunt the new king of Portugal, but hauing speedily assembled his forces, he went to assaile Guimaraes, the which was valiantly defended by Arias Gomes of Silua a Portugal, who was affected to the king of Castile, yet it was yielded vpon a good composition: after which he tooke the cittie of Braga, pout de Luan, with other places and forts.

Whilest these things past in Portugal, the king of Castile, burning with desire to see himselfe king of this other Realme, made great preparations, and notwithstanding that his Councillors vpon his returne into Portugal were of diuers opinions, yet he yielded to those that perswaded him to enter: wherefore leauing Donna Beatrix his wife at Aui-la, he marched towards Portugall, and layed seerge to Cillorico de la vera, where during B his stay, considering the doubtfull euent of warre, especially against Rebels, the vrsuers of Realmes, who shew themselves alwaies violent, hee made his will, and sent it to the Arch-bishop of Toledo to keepe, by the which hee ordayned many things, the which shall be specified in the life of his sonne and successeur Don Henry, which bred much tro-ble within the Realme, for that hee gaue out, whilest he liued, and after the making of this will, that he meant to alter many things, and yet he made no other will, whereof the chiefe witnesses were Don Pedro of Arragon, sonne to D. Alphonso the first Constable of Castile, and Marquis of Villena, D. John cap de Vaca Bishop of Coimbra, Peter Gonçales of Mendoza, Lord Steward of the kings house, Diego Gomes Manrique great Gouernour of C Castile, Pedro Lopes of Ayala, Standard-bearer of the Order of the Band, with Tello Gonça- les Palomeque, and other men of marke. The Castle of Cillorico was taken, from whence the armie marched towards Coimbra, burning all the villages thereabouts, and so passing on by Leyra, they came and camped at Soria, whereas a messenger sent by Don Nugno Aluarez Pereira newly created Constable of Portugal, came vnto the king, intreating him in his masters name, to auoyd the battell, which should be soone presented vnto him, and that it might be there would be meanes to come to some good accord, if it were earnestly sought.

This was but the Constables pollicie, to stay the king of Castile, for that the king of Portugalls armie was not strong enough to encounter their enemies: whereunto the king D made a gracious answer. The new king of Portugal was in Arbantes very penfue, seeing himselfe much inferiour to his enemy, who besides the Castilians, which were in great numbers, had many Noblemen of Portugal in his armie, the which beeing within a league and a halfe of that of Portugal, there were many things propounded, to end their quarrels without a battell, but they were all without effect: for the king of Castile finding himselfe strong, had a desire to fight, promising vnto himselfe all aduantages, and yet his captaines were of another opinion; and among others, Monfieur de Rie, Chamberlaine to the French king, and his ambassador with the King of Castile, a Gentleman 70. yeres old, and a captaine of great experience, saying, that his men were wearie, and it was late, and that the Portugall army, in the which were 2200. men at armes, and 10000. foote, were E camped in a place of strength: from whence, if he would haue patience, hee should see them soone dislodg for want of victuals, beeing aduertised that they had not any meate, but for that night: that vpon their dislodging he should haue better oportunitie to fight with them: & if they went to affront them in the place where they were, it was likely they should reape more shame then honor, But notwithstanding all these reasons, hee would needes fight: wherefore the Castilians hauing put their armie in battell, they were recei-ued courageously by the Portugals, along the mountaines of Maos, in the fields nere vnto the village of Aljubarot, where at the first charge, notwithstanding all the indeauour of the Portugall fore-ward, they gaue ground to the Castilians: but the new king of Portugal flying thither with his Squadron, not onely fortified his men, but also charging the enemy with great courage (who thought they had won all, and fought without order, & carelesly) he brake them, and put them to a shamefull flight with great slaughter, the king of Castile himselfe being in danger, who fled 11. leagues that night vnto S. Iren, where he arrived at the breake of day in great perplexity, and then recouering the sea-shore, hee caused himselfe to be carried to Seuille.

Polydore

Battel of Alju-barot and the Castilians defeated.

A Polydore Virgil in his Historie of England, failes in the discourse of this battell, saying, that Edmond Earle of Cambridge was there with good troupes of English for the new king of Portugal against him of Castile, and giues the honour of the battell to the Enghish: but it appears by all the Spanish Writers, (more credible in matters of Spaine then strangers) that the comming of the Earle of Cambridge into Portugall was not at that time, but in the life of king Fernand. Neither were there any French troupes for the king of Castile, as some Authors make mention. Vpon the place of battell there was an Hermitage built to S. George, who is held to be the patron and protector of Portugal, as also of Arragon, as S. James is of Castile: and this victorie is more celebrated by the Por-tugals, then any they euer had: for that by reason thereof they were freed from the subjection of Castile: it is called the battell of Aljubarote, or of S. George. In this battell there dyed many Noblemen of Castile; and among others Don Pedro of Arragon, sonne to the Constable of Castile, D. John of Castile, Lord of Aguilar del campo, son to D. Tello, L. of Biscay, D. Fernand of Castile, a yong Prince, son to D. Sancho, Earle of Albuquerque, Peter Dias Damas Prior of S. John, D. Diego Manrique, Gouernor generall of the frontier of Castile, D. Pedro of Mendoza, a Lord Steward of the king of Castiles house, Don John Fernandes of Touar high Admiral, D. Diego Gomes Sarmiento Gouernor of Galicia, Pedro
Carillo Marshall of Castile, D. Aluar Gonçales of Sandoual, and his brother Fernand Gon- çales, D. John Ramir of Arcillan, John Ortiz of Cueva, Gonçalo of Cerbantes, Ruy Braue, and Fernand Carillo: and of the Portugals following the partie of Castile, D. John Alphonso
C Sello, Admirall of Portugall, brother to the Queene D. Leonora, D. Pero Aluarez Pereira, Master of the Order of Calatraua, and his brother D. Diego Aluarez Pereira, brothers to D. Nugno Aluarez Constable of Portugal, Gonçal Vasques of Azeuedo, with Aluar Gonça- les his sonne, and others. There dyed also in this defeate Monfieur de Rie Ambassador for the French king, and his Chamberlaine. Great was the spoile of the Castilians campe, & many prisoners carryed away by the Portugals, who hung vp their ensignes & other spoils for trophees in the Monasterie of Alcouaça, and in the chiefe church at Braga, and at the Carnes at Lisbon, the which were afterwards founded by the Constable D. Nugno Alua- rez Pereira, and among others the royal Standard of Castile was taken. As for those which escaped the battell, some gathered themselves together in S. Iren, and some of them D recovered Castile, as well as they could. They of S. Iren hauing past the riuer of Tayo, with D. Gonçal Nugnes of Guzman, Master of Alcantara, (who was since made Master of the Calatraua) they ioyned with the forces of Nauarre and France, which the Infant Don Charles of Nauarre brought to the king of Castile his brother-in-law, but too late: wherfore they returned all together into Castile, hauing made all the spoile they could in the Realme of Portugal: the which by this battell of Aljubarote remained assured for the king
Don John the tenth in number, and the first of that name, hauing attained to that royall dignitie, to the which in the beginning he did not aspire, and that with the consent of the Nobilitie and States of the countrie.

Noblemen of Castile slain
in the battell.

Portugals slain of the Casti-lans sides

The end of the sixteenth Booke.

THE

THE SEVENTEENTH BOOK of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 D On Iohn Master of the Knights of Auiz, chosen king of Portugall, the tenth in number, and the first of that name.
- 2 Continuation of the warre betwixt Castile and Portugal, in the which the English assisted the one, and the French the other.
- 3 Whence the title of a Prince in Spaine growes.
- 4 D. Charles the third of that name, and 31. king of Nauarre.
- 5 Marriage of Prince Henry of Castile, and Katherine of Lancaster.
- 6 Exploits of D. Iohn King of Portugal in Castile, and a truce betwixt the two Realmes.
- 7 Tyrannous priuiledges of the Nobility of Arragon. Troubles in Sardynia, Estates at Mencon: policie of Sybille Queene of Arragon: authoritie of the Iustice Maior.
- 8 Contention betwixt the Arragonois and Angeuins for the rights of Majorca. Adoption of Lewis of Anjou by Queene Ione the first of Naples, who sold Auignon to the Pope, and what followed.
- 9 D. Iohn the first of that name, and 14. King of Arragon, his acknowledgement to the Pope in Auignon, during the Schisme. Estates in Arragon.
- 10 Marriage of Don Martin of Arragon, sonne to the Infant Don Martin, with the heire of Sicily.
- 11 Lisbon made an Arch-bishopricke.
- 12 Estates of Castile at Guadalaxara. Orders concerning souldiers and iustice. Erections of Dukehomes and other Decrees.
- 13 The stay of D. Leonora Queene of Nauarre, wife to D. Charles the third in Castile, disliked: and the causes thereof: her excuses, and the Kings instance to haue her returne.
- 14 Institution of the Order of the holy Ghost in Castile.
- 15 Farfanes, a race of Christian Affricans, and the death of the king D. Iohn.
- 16 Coronation of D. Charles king of Nauarre, and the ceremonies thereunto accustomed.
- 17 D. Henry the third of that name, 17. king of Castile, and 38. of Leon. Carriage of D. Pedro Tenorio Arch-bishop of Toledo.
- 18 Marriage concluded betwixt D. Fernand brother to the king of Castile, and the heire of Albuquerque.
- 19 A testamentarie Decree made by the deceased king D. Iohn, and the resolutions taken by the Noblemen of Castile, for the quiet of the Realme.
- 20 Troubles among the Lords of the Councell, procured by the Arch-bishop of Toledo.
- 21 Seditious Preachers, incensing the people against the Iewes.
- 22 Continuance of troubles in Castile, and means made by the Pope to pacifie them.
- 23 Persecu-

- A 23 Persecutions, thefts, and murders committed upon the Iewes, by the instigation of Preachers.
- 24 Confusions in Castile, entertained by great men, for private respects.
- 25 Troubles in Guipuscoa against Collectors. Assembly in that prouince, and Articles of their union, and preservation of their priuiledges.
- 26 Means to reconcile the disordered passions of the Noblemen of Castile, but of small effect.
- 27 Treaties betwixt Portugal and Castile, and the practises of Don Frederic Duke of Beneuent.
- B 28 Mutinie at Zamora.
- 29 Treatie of peace betwixt Portugal and Castile: practises to pacifie D. Frederic. Factions, partialities, &c.
- 30 Truce for 15. yeares betwixt Castile and Portugal.
- 31 Troubles continued in Castile by the Archbishop of Toledo, and a peace mediated by the Princes allies.
- 32 D. Henry the third is declared of full age at 14. yeares.
- 33 Discourse of the Islands of the Canaries.
- 34 Estates of Castile at Madrid. Marriage of the Infants D. Fernand. Discontent of D. Frederic Duke of Beneuent.
- C 35 Means to make D. Leonora Queene of Nauarre returne to her husband. Her practises with the Noblemen rebelled, Contemners of the Kings young yeares.
- 36 A foolish triall of the truth of Religion by armes, and what succeeded.
- 37 Means held by the king D. Henry to draw the Princes and Noblemen rebelled, to their duties. The Queene of Nauarre subdued. Warre against the Earle of Gijon, and accord betwixt the king and him.
- 38 D. Pedro de Luna chosen Pope at Auignon, who by his obstinacie continued the Schisme.
- 39 The Queene of Nauarre sent to the king her husband.
- 40 Ieanne Countesse of Foix, wife to Mathew of Castellan, reiected by the Arragonois from the succession of the Realme of Arragon.

Kings ruling in Spaine mentioned in this seuenteenth Booke.

| Portugal.                     | Nauarre.         | Arragon.      | Castile and Leon. |
|-------------------------------|------------------|---------------|-------------------|
| 10 D. Iohn Masterof Auiz. | D. Charles 3. 14 | D. Iohn 1. 17 | D. Henry 3. 83.   |
| 1. 31                         |                  |               |                   |

SUCH as are to rule ouer Nations, and especially where there is great store of Nobility, must be carefull how to gouerne their affections, lest by their too great libertie they force their subiects, either in regard of their honours, or for their iust defence to haue recourse to armes. For it is often seene when a warre is kindled, and that they which are tearmed Rebels, haue gotten any aduantage, they do no longer containe themselves within the bounds which at the first they had propounded, but they proceed, and seeke a totall change of the Estate, thinking they cannot be otherwise assured:

assured: or that the superior whom they would make their equall (which is the true effect of armes) can cuer be a true and perfect friend. Such are chiefly possessed with this iea-lousie and distrust, as are to contend with men that are given to reuenge, and of base dispositions, as women and effeminate persons, who seeke to maintaine their excess by the name and credit of a Soueraigne degree wherein they are placed, thinking that this great-nesse doth purchase them a priuiledge in any thing they do, and giue authoritie to their cruelties and impieties, wherein they please themselves, although they be many times deceived. It is most certaine, and verified by infinit examples, that neither force, nor great-nesse can auayle a Prince, whose bad life makes him hatefull to his subiects. And on the other side, there is no such guard, as the loue of subiects, the which is conceived by the opinion of vertue. Opinion followes the effects: and therefore a Prince should be alwaies carefull what opinion men should haue of him, and remember still the precept of the wife: That a man must be alwaies such as he would be esteemed. If he be giuen to inusice and voluptuousnesse, with the oppression and ruine of his subiects, let him assure himselfe, that good men wil hate and detest him and his actions, and estrange themselves from him: so as he shall remaine ingaged among flatterers, where many times he is smothered, but at the least he is for cuer infamous. The name of Rebelle is iustly detested, but the common people iudge by the cuents, and the wise and well-aduised according to the causes.

And there is nothing more certaine, whatsoeuer the flatterers of Court say, that neuer any Conspiracie against a soueraigne Magistrate was durable, or could take roote, if the hearts of the subiects were not formerly distracted by the Princes owne guilt and excesse. But if it please God to stirre vp some noble courage, who imbrace the pub-like cause, then shall a tyrant hardly auoid his due punishment, whereof Spaine affords vs assured proofes in Don Pedro King of Castile, and D. Leonora Telles of Meneses, widow to king Fernand, and Regent of Portugall, who by her vnchastnesse and tyrannie, as we haue formerly related, ruined her selfe, and did frustrate Donna Beatrice her daughter of that Crowne, setting it vpon the head of Don Iohn the Bastard, Master of the Order of the Knights of Auiz her enemy, who had no lawfull right, and (it may bee) neither thought nor hoped to attayne vnto it, but when hee saw himselfe armed and followed.

This King notwithstanding his victorie, was alwaies called the Master of Auiz, by the Castilians, who would not aduow him for king, to the prejudice of their Queene Donna Beatrice: and the king D. Iohn his aduersarie intitled himselfe king of Castile, Leon, Portugal, Toledo, Galicia, Seuille, Cordoua, Murcia, Iacn, Algarue, Algezire, and Lord of Lara, Biscay and Molina, some few daies after this great victorie wonne by the Portu-gals. S. Iren yielded, with all that countie, there remaining not any place on this side the mountaines, that held for the king of Castile. At Saint Iren D. Nugno Alvarez of Pereira Constable of Portugall, was made Earle of Oren, in recompence of his valour and faith-full seruice: and the new king D. Iohn vsed great bounty vnto all the Castilians that were prisoners, sending them home free without any ranfome. After that time, leaving the conduct of the warre to his Constable, he employed his time in workes of pietie, and gi-uing thanks to God for the victorie which he had giuen him, that is, he went in pilgrimage on foote to Saint Mary of Oliuera of Guimaraes, which is foure daies iourney from S. Iren. In the meane time the Constable passing Guadiana, entred into Castile with two thousand lances, comprehending the light horse and genetis, and good troupes of foote, where he got another victorie against the Castilians: whereof the king his master was aduertised being at Porto; who to reward the Constable, and to encourage him to do better, he gaue him the title of Earle of Barcelos. This Constable, besides that hee had in him the chiefe parts and ornament which make Nobility, hee was issued from one of the noblest families in Portugal: for his father Don Aluar Gonzales had bene Prior of S.
Iohn, or of Crato, as the Portugals say, being at the battaile of Salado or Tariffa, wonne against the Moores, in the yeare 1340. by the kings D. Alphonso the 12. of Castile, and D.
Alphonso the fourth of Portugal, he founded our Ladies Church of Fleur de Rose, and the strong castle of Ameyra, with the pallace of Bonjardin.

This

A This Prior besides many other children (for some say he had 32.) had this Don Nugno Alvarez of Pereira, Constable of Portugal, a great and famous Captaine, the founder of the house and state of Bragance: whose mother was called Heira Gonzales of Caruahal, he being borne in the yeare 1360. At the age of seuteene yeares he married the widow of Vasco Gonzales Barosso, a chiefe Nobleman in Portugal: of which mariage besides two sonnes which dyed young, issued one daughter named D. Beatrice, who was heire to her fathers Estate, and was married to D. Alphonso of Portugal, base sonne to this king Don Iohn, who was borne whilest he was Master of Auiz, of a mistris of his called D. Agnes, the being afterwards made commandresse of Santos. This Constables Grandfather was D. Gonzalo Pereira, Arch-bishop of Braga, a Prelate of a royall magnificence in his manner of liuing, and exceeding bountifull. The Constable hauing charge to continue the war, whilest that the King D. Iohn was otherwise employed touching the gouernement of the realme, he past into the Prouinces beyond the mountaines, where hee reduced to the new kings obedience, Chaus, Bragance, Almeyda, and other places, which held yet for the Queene D. Beatrice, and her husband the king of Castile, so as there remayned few which were not made subiect, and brought vnder the iurisdiction of Don Iohn king of Portugal.

But for that such quarrels are not determined by one or two victories gotten by the weaker, against one more mighty, the new king duly considering all this, and with good counsell, thought it necessarie, that D. Iohn king of Castile should be quite ruined, that he might the better maintaine his new conquest, and to this end he called the English with the pretext of apparent right: for as we haue sayd, the Duke of Lancaster, Vncle to king Richard the second then reigning, hauing married D. Constance daughter to the deceased king D. Pedro of Castile, pretending that the Realmes of Castile and Leon did belong to him, and carried the title and armes. Wherefore Ambassadors weresent vnto him, to summon him to come into Spaine, with assurance and promise, that he should be assisted with all the forces and meanes of Portugal, protesting that if he let slip this goodly occasion, besides the losse, he should reape dishonor, and be scorned of all the world. On the other side, D. Iohn king of Castile, hauing bene visited by the Infant of Nauarre, who came expressly to Seuille, and receiued letters from Pope Clement at Auignon, full of consolation, he came to Vailledolit, and there held a generall assembly of the Estates of his Realmes, from whence he sent Ambassadors to Charles the sixth the French king, intreating him to send him succours to recouer his Realms of Portugal and Algarbe, his wiues patrimoine, which were detayned from him by a bastard rebell. Thus these two princes called in strangers to the prejudice of Spaine.

The Duke of Lancaster passed into Portugal with fiftene hundred Lances, and as many Archers on foot: and Lewis Duke of Bourbon the kings Vncle, was sent out of France with two thousand Lances in fauour of D. Iohn king of Castile. The English armie running along the coast of Galicia, tooke sixe gallies of Castile, and came to the Groine on Saint Lames day, in the yeare 1386. In the meane time the king of Portugal had led his armie into Castile, and beseeged the towne of Coria, but could not take it. It was then that he sayd, He had need of the good Knights of the round table, to which hee was answered by Men Rodrigues of Valconcellos, that they had also need of a king Arthur, who could distinguish and reward good Knights: the which the king D. Iohn turned to a ieast and would not seeme to be touched.

At this seer hee had newes, that the Duke of Lancasters armie was landed: wherefore hee presently dislodged, and came to receiue and entertaine them at pont du Maure, necre vnto the Towne of Porto: The Duke had brought with him his wife Donna Constance of Castile, and two daughters, the one by her, whose name was Katherine, the other by his first wife, called Philippe. At this enterview, a marriage was treated betwixt the King Don Iohn and that Ladie Philippe, who was then deliuered into the hand of the King, her future husband, and soone after they were married, with such pompe as conforted with their persons and dignities.

Hauing consulted concerning the warre, they beganne to spoyle the Countrie of Galicia, where they took some places: but the heat of the plague, which consumed both the country

Ggg

John King of Portugal calls the English in to Spaine.D. Iohn King of Castile calls in the French.

countrie people, and the English armie stayed the course of these conquests. The King of Castile had fortified and manned the citie of Leon, Benauent, and other places in Galicia with good Garrisons, vntill he went to field, vpon the comming of those succours which hee expected from France and Nauarre. In the meane time hee caused the Duke of Lancaster to bee dealt withall about an Accord, but hee continued constant in his demands to haue the Realmes of Castile and Leon: Whereuppon the King sent Ambassadors vnto him, to let him vnderstand publickly, that hee should content himselfe with that which hee had done, and not to vexe the Countrie any more: and that if hee pretended any wrong were done vnto him by him, hee defied him to the combate, man to man; and hee that vanquished should bee King of Castile: but vnder hand the Ambassadors had charge to propound other conditions vnto him, whereuppon they came to create of a marriage betwixt the Infant Don Henry of Castile, and Catherine the Dukes daughter, by Donna Constance, with many offers, which were not accepted, at the least it did not then appeare so: for the Portugals hauing ioyned with the English armie, they marched farther into the territories and iurisdiccions of Leon, in the year 1387. and besieged Benauent in vaine, they passed by Villalobos, Piasas, and Valderas, the which they took: from whence returning by Ciudad Roderigo, they retired into Portugal, wanting victuals, and being pressed with the plague: and moreouer they had newes that the French supplies had passed Nauarre, and were entring into Castile: the which advanced the conclusion of a peace betwixt the King of Castile, and the Duke of Lancaster, the which was made at Troncoso with these conditions:

Accord betwixt the king of Castile and the Duke of Lancaster.

That the Infant Don Henry the eldest sonne of Castile, should marrie Catherine, the daughter of the Duke of Lancaster, and of his wife Donna Constance of Castile, for whose dowrie the king D. John should assigne certaine places: That the citie of Guadalajara, with the townes of Medina del campo, and Olmedo should be giuen to the Dutchesse D. Constance, to enioy the reuenues thereof during her life: That the king should pay sixtie thousand pounds sterling to the Duke, and to D. Constance his wife at certaine dayes: and moreouer, foure thousand pounds pension during their liues, and the longer liuer of them. In consideration whereof, the Duke of Lancaster and Donna Constance should renounce all rights, actions and pretensions which they challenged to the Realmes of Castile, Leon, and their dependances, and that the places taken in Galicia should be restored. This accord being thus concluded, the Duke retired himselfe into the towne of Porto, where he made his accord also with the King of Portugal: to which treatie it seemes the Duke had bene forced by the plague, which had consumed two third parts of his men. The duke of Lancaster then hauing for the fruites of his voyage married his two daughters to two kings, he returned into Guienne in the year 1387. not very well satisfied with the King of Portugal, nor the king with him. Of the marriage of Don John king of Portugal, and of D. Philippe, there came this issue: first, they had a daughter called D. Blanche, which dyed young in Lisbon: then the Infant D. Alphonso borne in the year 1391. at S. Iren, who liued not about two yeares: their third child was Don Edward borne in the Towne of Visco, and succeeded in his fathers Realme. Moreouer, they had the Infant D. Pedro, borne at Lisbon in the year 1392. he was Duke of Coimbra, and Lord of Mont Major the old, and of Amero: then the Infant Don Henry, of whome the Queene was deliuered at Porto, he was Duke of Visco, and Master of the Knights of Christus, and it was he which first discovered the Ilands of Madera in the Ocean sea. Of this marriage also came Donna Izabella, borne at Ehora in the year 1397. who was Dutchesse of Bourgogne, and Countesse of Flanders, wife to Philip Duke of Bourgondie: by her was built the Monasterie of Prolonga neere vnto Sintra, of the Order of Saint Jerome. They had besides these the Infant Don John, who was Master of Saint Iames, borne at Saint Iren in the year 1400. hee was Countable of the Realme, and being married with Donna Izabella daughter to Don Alphonso Duke of Bragance his bastard-brother, he was grandfather by the mothers side to D. Izabella Queene proprietarie of Castile and Leon. And in the end the king Don John and Donna Philippe his wife had the Infant Don Fernand, borne in the year 1402. at Saint Iren, who was Master of Auiz, a zealous prince to the Christian Religion, and full of charity.

Before

A Before that the king Don John came vnto the Crowne, being but Master of Auiz, he had two base children by a Gentlewoman called Donna Agnes, that is, Don Alphonso Barcelles, and Duke of Bragance, called D. Beatrice: and one daughter named also Donna Beatrice, who was married to Thomas Earle of Arondel. This is the issue of the King D. John the first of Portugal, who had yet a quarrell for the Realme with the King of Castile, the poursuite whereof was deferred for a time: for the king of Castile being to performe his promise to the Duke of Lancaster, and to pay him great summes of money, he made choice at that time to send backe the French forces, and not to suffer them to stay in his countrie, giuing them part of their entertaynement, and good assurance for the rest. Then hauing held an assembly of the Estates at Birbiefca, by reason the plague was at Burgos, he propounded the neede he had of money to pay the English Duke: and therefore he attempted to impose a generall Tribute vpon the Clergie, Nobility, and third Estate without exception, wherein he was crost, being forced to seeke some other expedient. From Birbiefca he came to Soria, and then to Calaoorra, where he heard the French Ambassadors, and sent others to Bayone, to the Duke of Lancaster, to confirme their accord: and then it was concluded anew, that from thence forth the Infant Don Henry should be called Prince of the Asturia's, and his wife Princeesse, after the manner of England, whereby the kings eldest son is called Prince of Wales: and then began the custom to call the eldest of Castile Princes, whom before they called Infants, and it is an error to enuile them Princes of Castile or of Spaine: for they are not called Princes for any other occasion, but that they haue the Asturia's for their portion and intertaynement, the which was made a principality, first in this D. Henry, and his wife D. Catherine: to the patrimony of which principality, Iacn, Vbeda, Baega, and Andujar haue bene since annexed. It is an error also to thinke that this title of principallie is giuen to the Asturia's of Ouiedo, for that in that region was the beginning of the recouerie of Spaine: for it proceeds not from any thing else, but from this marriage betwixt Henry of Castile, and Donna Catharina of Lancaster. Before the king Don John of Castile parted from Calaoorra, Charles the third king of Nauarre, brother-in-law to king John, came to visit him, with the Queene Donna Leonora of Castile his wife.

French succore sent backe for Castile.

Title of Prince first giuen in Spaine to the Kings eldest sonne.

This prince had succeeded king Charles the Bad his father, in the year 1386. being dead at Pampelona of a Leprosie, as the Spaniards say, and the French Histories, of a disease he got by his incontinencie, whereof he languished long. It is he of whom they write that the Philistions hauing him in cure, applying Aqua-vite to restore him, they set fire of it, which tooke hold of the bed, so as he was burnt and could not be releued: Others say, that he was sowed vp in a sheet steeped in Aqua-vite, and that the Surgeon seeking to cut the threed, holding a waxe light, the sheet was suddenly set on fire and burnt the king: but howsoeuer, hee ended his daies in great sicknesse in the year 1386, the five and fortieth year of his raigne, hauing reigned 73. His body was interred in the Cathedral church of that citie, where the heart of the Queene his wife lyes, who dyed in France in the year 1378. his bowels were buried at Saint Maries of Roncevaux, and his heart at S. Maries of Vxue. The same year he dyed, his daughter Jeanne was first married to John of Montfort Duke of Britanny, by whom she had foure sonnes, and three daughters, and afterwards to Henry King of England. Before his death he pacified the seditions which they of Pampelona had raised among themselves, causing the authors to be punished: among which, one of the chiefe was called Andrew of Turilles, who was executed.

4 Charles the 3. of that name and 3. of Nauarre.

Ggg 2

Charles

Charles the 3. of that name, the 31. King of Nauarre.

This Charles succeeded to the Realme of Nauarre, beeing called the Noble, for his bountie, affabilitie, and other vertues, which made him to be esteemed by all Christian Princes his neighbours, and generally beloued of all men. Hee was 25. yeares old, when he came to the Crowne. At the deceale of his father, he was at Pehnasel in Castile, with the King D. Iohn his brother-in-law, of whom he tooke his leaue with infinit teares, vpon the receipt of these newes. And such was the loue and singular affection which the King of Castile bare him, as from the beginning of his raigne he granted him full restitution of the townes and castles of Tudele, S. Vincent, Viana, Guarda, Estella, Miranda, Laraga, and other places, which were in deposito since the last pacification made with Don Henry king of Castile, although the ten yeares capitulated were not yet expired: moreouer he forgave him 20000. doubloons of gold, which had bene lent to the deceased king his father, and did discharge him of the promise of two thousand pounds sterling, which he had made for the libertie of Perlas of Tortui an Englishman beeing prisoner in Castile. Such and greater was the bountie of D. Iohn king of Castile to Charles the third king of Nauarre his brother-in-law, and likewise to the Queene D. Leonora his sister, and to their daughters who were at that time in Castile: and moreover hee caused the king to be accompanied into his Realme by the chiefe of his Nobility, who beeing come to Pamplona, and there receiued with great pompe and ioy by the Estates of the Realme, the first as he did for the government thereof, was to resolve with his subiects and Councillors, to adhere to Pope Clement the 7. remaining at Auignon, and to reiect Frbane the six, as the kings of France and Castile had done, yet with this protestation, that hee would not separate himselfe from the holy Apostolike church, but obey that which shold be decreed by a generall Council concerning the Schisme. Then he sought the allyance of neighbor Princes, sending ambassadours vnto them, especially into Arragon, where hee made a league with the duke of Girone, the heire of Arragon, and treated the marriage of Donna Jeanne his elder daughter, with D. Iames eldest sonne to the Duke of Girone, hauing an intent to vnite the crowne of Nauarre to that of Arragon, for that hee had no sonnes, but this marriage tooke no effect.

King of Nauarre during the schisme adheres to the Pope of Auignon.

Genealogie of Nauarre.

In the beginning of the yeare 1387. Queene Leonora his wife fell into a long and languishing sickness, which bred much trouble betwixt them. He had by her these children following: D. Jeanne the eldest, who was wife to Iohn of Foix, sonne to Archambault: D. Maria who dyed a virgin at Pampelona, D. Blanche, who was Queene of Sicily and Nauarre, D. Beatrix Countesse of Marche, wife to Iames of Bourbon, and D. Izabella, who dyed also a mayd. After these fise daughters they had Don Charles their sonne, who dyed a child, and Don Lewis which liued but fixe moneths. These be the lawfull children of the king Don Charles the third. He had out of marriage one sonne called Godfrey of Nauar, who was Marshall of the Realme, and Earle of Cortes, and one daughter named Donna Jeanne of Nauarre, who was married to Inigo Ortiz of Estuniga, sonne to Diego Lopes of Estuniga.

Of these children mention is made in this kings testament, the which is in the Cathedral church of Pampelona, in the which his breethren are also named: Peter Earle of Morraing, and Leon a Bastard, and Donna Maria also a Bastard, married to the Earle of Denia.

In the the yeare 1387. the warre betwixt Castile and Portugal beeing hote, the French troups, led by Lewis Duke of Bourbon to the succour of King Iohn, past through Niuarre, where they were furnished with all necessaries by King Charles, who after their retreat and accord made by the king of Castile with the Duke of Lancaster, hee came to Calorria, as wee haue sayd, to reioyce with the King Don Iohn, for this pacification.

Retur-

A Returning to the treatie of this warre, we say, that the Princeesse Catherine hauing followed her father into Guienne, was after a new confirmation of the accord, sent by him to Fontaraby, and there deliuered to the Prelates and Noblemen deputed by the king of Castile, to receiue her, who conducted her to Palence, where the marriage betwixt her and the Prince D. Henry was solemnized, he being but ten yeares old, and thre nineteene. The Dutchesse of Lancaster, mother to the Princeesse, past afterwards into Spaine, and came to the king D. Iohn her cousin at Medina del campo, to whome among other presents she gaue a rich Crowne of gold, saying, that the duke her husband had caused it to be made, hoping to be crowned king of Castile: but seeing they were agreed otherwise then he expected, it was his due, and therefore she presented it vnto him. The king receiued it with great ioy, and requited the Dutchesse with other gifts of price, putting her in possession of the townes promised by the accord, whereunto he added Huere. The Dutchesse past afterwards to Guadalajara, hauing had a promise of an enterview betwixt the king and the Duke of Lancaster her husband, at Fontaraby or Bajone. The king stayd not long to come to Victoria for this meeting, and the Dutchesse went before to draw her husband to Fontaraby: but he excused himselfe by reason of his apparent indisposition, and vpon the sharpnesse of the winter, which made the passage of S. Adrian difficult. D. Pero Lopes of Ayala, Bishop of Oisma, and Fernand of Illesca were sent vnto him from the king to whome he propounded an allyance which he desired to make betwixt Castile and England, and to induce the King D. Iohn to quit that of France, whereof the ambassadours excused their master. The interview being hindred by this occasion the king D. Iohn came to Segobia, to giue order for the warre of Portugal, which had bene somewhat quenched since the duke of Lancaster retreat: for the pacifying whereof Fernando of Illesca, of the Order of the preaching Friars, and the Kings Confessor, had laboured much, but could not conclude any thing.

The King of Portugall falling sicke in his pallace of Cordal, gaue some hope that matters would turne fauourable for Castile: for his sickness was so violent, as all men despayred of his life: whereat the Queene Donna Philippe was much grieued, so as shee was deliuered of her first child before her time, which made them doubt shee would not haue any more: but midwives rules are not alwaies true, for she had afterwards those children whereof we haue made mention.

Friar Fernand and others, who treated a truce betwixt these two kings, being not able to effect that which they pretended, the King of Portugal being recouered, he entred into Galicia, and spoiled the countrie, and tooke Tuy by Intelligence, and Saluaterra: after which spoiles the Confessor Fernand returned into Portugal, and renewed the treatie, where he wrought so, as he yeilded to a truce for sixe yeares, in the yeare 1389. by the which Tuy, Saluaterra, and all the Portugals had taken from Castile, was yeilded. By this pacification which continued long, Don Iohn King of Portugal, had meanes to settle himselfe in his Royaltie, and wholly to exclude D. Beatrix.

E As for the affaires of Arragon, we find that before the war betwixt Castile and Portugal, the king D. Pedro being very old, married the fourth time with D. Sibilla, widow to Artal of Fosses, whom he caused to be crowned at Sarragossa, in the yeare 1381. whether the Estates were called to that effect. At the which the Noblemen which had subiects that were no Gentlemen, maintained that they had soueraigne power ouer them, their goods and liues, and that it had bene long practised in Arragon. This action was begun vpon the complaints made by the Inhabitants of Anzanego, against D. Pedro Sanchez of Larras their Lord: but it was prohibited, and a sentence was giuen by way of prouision, that the Noblemen should enioy the rights which they had accustomed, although they were not according to the common law or written law: and although they could not shew any priuiledges granted vnto them in that behalfe, yet should it not be lawfull for the king to draw them into question, for any violence or bad vsage done vnto their subiects, but the punishment of any excesse done by the superiors to their subiects, should be left to God, the which gaue way to infinit wickednes. These Estates ended with trouble & confusion, for that D. Briande of Luna, hauing left D. Lopes Ximenes of Vvrea her husband, and married D. Lewis Cornet, these two Noblemen went to armes, and kept the field.

Ggg 3

As

5
Castile.

Portugal.

6.
Exploits of the King of Portugal in Spaine.

1389.

7.
Arragon.

Arragon. It is remarkable that at the same time both in Castile and Portugal, there were Kings reigning of the same name. The King Don Pedro his father was a lover of learning, he entertained the vniuersity of Lerida, and erected one in Huesca. Having giuen to his sonne John the towne of Girone with the title of a Duchy; then beganne the custome, that the eldest of Arragon are called Dukes of Girone, as the eldest sonne of France is called Dauphin of Vienne.

The new King Don John beganne his raigne with the persecution of his mother in law, who like vnto Donna Leonora of Castile, was retired from Barcelona, seeing the death of the King D. Pedro approach, and had put her selfe into Zaroca, where shee was soone besieged, and taken by Don Martin of Arragon the Kings brother. And for that the King Don John lay languishing in his bed, and could not be eased by the art of Physicke, this widow Queene was accused to haue caused him to bee poisoned, whereupon she was strictly examined, and all those of her household. All the goods the deceased King had bestowed on her, were made forsaite, and giuen to the Queen reigning Donna Violant. The Regency or Government of the realme was giuen to Don Martin, who also was made duke of Montblanc, by letters giuen at Grenouillez neere Barcelona. The preuiledges, lawes and statutes of that city were confirmed by him at his coming to the crowne, and hee did aduow Pope Clement at Auignon, by the counsell of the Cardinall Don Pedro de Luna, and the perswasion of the Queene D. Iolant or Violant, and he of Rome was declared vnlawfull, as made by force.

All grants made by the King D. Pedro since the yeere 1365. were reuoked. Such were the first acts of this King: a Prince weake both in body and minde, giuen to idlenesse, hunting, dauncing, musicke and poesie, with so violent an affection, as they say, hauing at his coming to the crowne, sent a solemne Ambassage to the French King, to treat of the affaires of their Estates, the chiefe Article was to require the French King, to giue him certaine Poets of Prouence and Languedoc which did flourish in those times in their vulgar tongue, not much differing from the Catalan, whom hee received as a singular fauour, honoured them, and assigned them great pensions, instituting for the loue of them schooles of their poesies. And to fill vp the measure of his imperfections, he had no care but to please his wife, vnto whom he was wholly vowed and addicted. The Generall Estates beeing assembled at Monçon, the Deputies had charge to require the severity of the ancient manners, and the restoring of martiall discipline, and that the honour of armes might bee reuiued, whereunto the King had no inclination. But about all, that the houses and courts of the King and Queene should bee reformed, and reduced to the fashion and manner of their ancestors, and that some base and vicious persons should be chased away. There were certaine Articles presented against D. Carreros of Villaragut, one of the Queens Ladies, in whom she wholly trusted, and gaue her so great credit with the King, as the honors & offices of the realme, were distributed according to her aduice and will, without reason, measure, or regard of merit. The chiefe which sought this reformation, were Don Alphonso of Arragon, Marquis of Villena, D. James his brother bishop of Tortosa, D. James of Prages, D. Bernardin of Cabrera, Vicont of Lisle and Roa, D. Pedro Queralt, D. John Bellera, and Raymond of Bages; against whom their banded some of the Kings Mignons, so as all the realme was in combustion and armes: but the Kings weakenesse was at that time profitable; for it kept them from fighting; and hauing graunted a safe conduct to D. Alphonso, D. Lopes Ximenes of Virea, John Ximenes of Virea, and other their complices, they met with Don Martin the Kings brother, had conference vpon the reformation, and agreed vpon many Articles. Amongst others Don Carreros of Villaragut was chased from the Queenes court, with a prohibition neuer to conuerse with her, or any of the Princes or Princesses. During these contentions Bernard brother to the Earle of Armaignac entred into Cattelogne, with an infinit number of souldiars French and English, who foraged and spoiled all they incountred, Bernard their leader hauing no other reason, but that he sought meanes to entertaine the souldiars. This danger forced the King to arme, and to march against these vagabond troupes, whereof some beeing found scattered and out of order, were defeated, and the rest forced to repasse into Languedoc.

Pope Clement
at Auignon acknowledged in Arragon.

Estates require reformation of the King and Queenes house.

V. gabond troupes spoiled Cattelogne.

The

A The affaires of Sardynia had beene compounded about the time of the death of the King D. Pedro, so as the lands held by Marian Iudge of Arborea, were restored to Leonora his daughter, and Brancalon of Oria her husband deliuered out of prison; and betwixt the King of Arragon, and the common weale of Genoua, there was such an order set downe, as the Siegneury of Genoua might not keepe nor arme any gallies, but in the ports of Genoua, Saouona, Albenga, and Porto Venera, in the riuer of Genoua, and in the Ligustike sea, and in other seas at Pera, Capha, Famogosta and Scio, Valencia, Majorca, Minorca, Iuiza, Caillerij and Alguer; so as a peace was entertained in the Island of Sardynia, about the yeere of our Lord 1389. when as the marriage was accomplished betwixt D. Martin sonne to the Infant D. Martin duke of Momblanc, and Mary, daughter to Frederic the third King of Sicile; a subiect of new warre, by reason of the factions and partialities which were in that Island, amongst the Noblemen, some allowing and others disliking this marriage of their Princesses, who according vnto some, had beene taken out of the castle of Carrane, where by the will of the deceased King her father, shee was entertained in the gard of Artal of Alagon, and conducted as it were by stealth into Cattelogne, by them of Clermont.

The new Kings being come into Sicile, with the duke of Momblanc, who serued as a Tutor, being accompanied by D. Bernard of Cabrera, Don Artal of Luna, allied to the King, and many other Noblemen of Cattelogne, Arragon and Valencia, and with a good army, they were receiued by them that held their party in the towne of Trapani, from whence they sought to reduce the factious, some by mildnesse, and others by rigour. The towne of Palermo was yeilded vnto him by the Earle of Modica, and there they were crowned; from whence they made a progresse, so as they were acknowledged throughout the whole Realme, yet there were often troubles renewed through the naturall lightnesse of that nation.

This yeere 1389. died Pope Vrbain, residing at Rome, in whose place the Cardinall of his faction did choose Boniface the ninth, called before Peter Tomacel, a priest, Cardinall of the title of Saint Anastasius. In the yeere of our Lord 1390. the citie of Lisbon was made an Archbishopske by him at the request of the King D. John, who followed D. the Pope at Rome, and not him, at Auignon. To it was giuen for Suffragan the bishop of Coimbra for that time: and in proceesse of time the church of Portalegre was made a Bishops seat by Paul the third.

The same yeere the King of Castile hauing assembled his Estates at Guadalajara, being thrust on with a continual desire to be King of Portugal, whereunto he was animated by the Queene Donna Beatrice his wife, hee propounded to his counsell, that hee had resolved in that assembly to giue ouer the Realmes of Castile and Leon to his sonne Don Henry, together with his other Lands and Siegneuries, except Seuille, Cordoua, Iacn, Murcia, and all the Moores frontiers: reseruing also for himselfe the third part of the reuenues of the church, granted vnto him by Pope Clement, saying, that he was aduertised, that vpon this renunciation the Portugals would receiue him for their King: for they had no other reason to oppose themselves, and to reiect him, but for that they could not endure to see the realme of Portugal vnit to that of Castile. But his counsell did aduise him not to doe a thing so dishonourable for himselfe, and not profitable for his countrie, in quitting his fathers realmes, to thinke to get a strange one, which was held by a resolute enemy: shewing him by reasons and examples that he did hazard the losse of both, and to bee a fable to the world for euer: Hee did willingly heare and belecue his counsellors, and suppressed this desire, enioyning them silence. In this assembly he granted a general pardon to all those that had offended him during the last warres, except the Inhabitants of Tuy, who had yeilded to D. John King of Portugal, and to his brother D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon, to whom he would shew no mercy. The Estates graunted him a greater subuention of money then euer any King before him had. Beeing required by the Deputies of the Prouinces he reformed the expences and superfluities of his court, and reduced his ordinary troupes of horse, for the gard of the realm, to foure thousand Launces, fiftene hundred Genets, and one thousand crosbowes one horsbackes: he ordained that euery launce should furnish two horses of seruice, and the Genets in like

10
Marriage of
D. Martin with Mary the beire of Sicile.

11
Portugal.

Lisbone made an Archbishops-ke.

12.
Castile.

Estates of Cas-
tile.

like manner. To the Launciers and Genets he assigned fiftene hundred Maraudis by the yeere, and fixe hundred to the crosbow men, a coine which was then very current: granting them moreover many great preuiledges and immunities. There also it was decreed, that the King should send vnto Pope Clement, to intreat him that in the prouision of the benefices of Spaine he would not admit any that were not borne in the country, by reason of the great inconueniences which did grow thereby: vpon the complaints made by the Clergy especially of Guipuscoa, Biscay, Alaua and Galicia, by the Bishops of Calaoarra and Burgos, for that many lay men, vnder colour of right of Patronage, had seized vpon many lands, rents and other goods of the church, by reason whereof the diuine seruice was ill attended in many places of those Prouinces, the buildings were ruined, and there were not Ornamentes necessary for the places and persons dedicated to holy workes.

The King being not well instructed of those rights, left matters in the Estate they were, least he should cause some tumult before it were iustified. Besides this, the subjects complained that many Noblemen hauing iurisdiction presumed to carry themselves in a manner like Soueraignes, both in ciuill and criminall causes: it was therefore ordained, that it should be lawfull for any one of what estate or quality soeuer, finding himselfe grieved by the Chastellans, or other subalternall Iudges, to appeale to the Iudge royall. In the behalfe of the Nobility it was required, that it would please the King to take away the clause mentioned in the testament of the deceased King Don Henry, touching the succession in the collaterall line to lands of the crowne, given by him to Noblemen and Knights which had followed and serued him in the conquest of those Realmes: wherevnto answer was made, that euery one should enioy that which had bene given him by the deceased King his father, but hee would in no sort reuoke that clause.

In this assembly of Guadalajara the truce was confirmed with Granado, the Moores Ambassadors being come thither, who brought vnto King Iohn many rich presents. There also the King gaue vnto the Infanz Don Fernand his sonne, who was Lord of Lara the title of Duke of Pegasus, hauing a ducale crowne set vpon his head, with great solemnity, the which was made like a bande round and vnited, without any floures surpassing one another, which did belong onely to Kings, though now it bee otherwise vsed, euery one seeking to countenance his authority, by vsurping of title and marke beyond their due. Hee also gaue armes to the said Don Fernand, that is, a castle and a Lion with the royall Bands of Arragon, for that hee had him by the Queene Donna Leonora of Arragon his first wife. He was the second Duke in the Realme, for that hee of Benauent was the first. These and other things were decreed at Guadalajara, whether Ambassadors came from Charles the Noble, King of Nauarre, to sommon the Queene Donna Leonora, sister to King Iohn, to returne into Nauarre, to the King her husband, but they could not preuaile.

This Princeesse being two yeeres before fallne into a great sicknesse, and finding no helpe by physicke, shee was aduised to change the ayre and to goe into Castile, hoping shee should recouer her health sucking the breath of her natie soile. For this cause the King Don Charles her husband, who loued her much, conducted her himselfe vnto the King Don Iohn her brother, with whom shee had continued some daies in feasting and sportes in the towne of Nauarre, and then hee returned and left the Queene Donna Leonora to remaine there, vntill shee had recovered her health.

The Queene was not onely well entertained by the King of Castile her brother, but her whole household was defraied, and shee was honoured as much as might bee. Being thus at her ease, shee soone recovered her health againe: but as her bodie was in better disposition by this change of ayre, so her minde was much impaired; for were it for the commodities and delights shee received in this stately and magnificent court of Castile, or for some other occasion, shee resolved to remaine and keepe there still, and to returne no more into Nauarre, grounding this vnreasonable resolution vpon the badde vsage shee said shee had receiued from the King her husband, who did not loue her said shee, but was hard vnto her; that her reuenues

Usurpations
vpon the Clergie.

Lands of the crowne giuen
in recompence
of seruice.

Duke of Benauent was the first duke in Castile.

13.
Nauarre.

Don Leonora
Queene of Nauarre light and vnkind.

A newes were not well paid her: that the Knights and other Castilians which did serue her, were not respected in Nauarre, with other such womanish excuses, with whom vanity in an other place was of more esteeme, then honesty in her owne house: the which the King Don Iohn did heare with a brotherly affection, but with great discontentment, knowing, or at the least doubting, that they were but collours without truth. King Charles hearing that shee was in good health, hee wrote diuerse times vnto her, to haue her returne, but shee excused herselfe, finding sometimes one let, sometimes another: so as in the end knowing her intention, hee employed the Cardinal Don Pedro de Luna a Cattelan, but without effect: for the Queene seeking to capitulate with the King her husband, she propounded such vnreasonable conditions, as they were forced to take an other course.

Shee had continued two yeeres in Castile, the King her husband vsing all friendly meanes to draw her home, forbearing to cause himselfe to be crowned King of Nauar, for the desire hee had to celebrate this ceremony in her company, and to haue her crowned with him: but seeing that hee lost time in writing and sending messengers, hee sent Don Ramires of Arellan and Don Martin of Ayuar, Ambassadors to the King of Castile, being at the Estates at Guadalajara, to intreat him to enterpose his authority with his sister Donna Leonora, that she might returne into Nauarre, and liue with the King her husband, as God and honesty did require. The King gaue a courteous audience to the Ambassadors, and offered to doe his dutie therein, the which he performed.

For going the day following to his sisters lodging, he let her vnderstand that it was iust & reasonable, seeing she was in health, and her husband required it, that she should goe vnto him; and the better to perswade her he promised that if she had not entertainment fit for her royall State in Nauarre, he would impart some of his vnto her, and giue her a good company of Knights and Ladies to conduct her into Nauarre, with that honour which did belong vnto her. Shee hauing no iust reason to contradict the King her brother, answered him in these termes, Sir I am much bound vnto you for many respects, besides the good counsell it pleaeth you now to giue me, wherein I know you seeke my honour and profit. The King my Lord and husband, must also be mindefull of your bounty and brotherly loue, vsed towards him in many matters of great consequence, for my sake: for if you had not employed your selfe, at my request to the French King, who held him prisoner, it may bee hee should haue found greater difficulties in his deliuey. Being come into Spaine he knowes what honours, and what gifts he hath receiued from you during the life of the King his father: And when he came to succeed in the Realme of Nauarre, all the world hath seene how liberally you haue restored him the places, which you might iustly haue retained in Nauarre, being left in deposito at the peace made betwixt your fathers: Moreover you haue discharged him of twenty thousand doubloons of gold, and of his promise for the English Nobleman, who was a prisoner taken in warre, being two thousand pounds sterling: presently after the death of the deceased King his father, you caused mee to goe out of your Realme, into his country, whether I carried whatsoever I had good and precious, to appeare the more honourable amongst the Nauarrois, with the Ladies and Gentlewomen of my traine, borne of great families, all things tending to the honour and profit of the King my Lord: But in steed of acknowledging all this (it grieues me to speake it, and I cannot speake it without blushing) hee hath not receiued me, nor intreated mee as hee ought. He appointed me certaine prouisions monthly, for the entertainment of my house, my state and attendants, whereof I haue bene alwaies so ill paid, as I haue bene often forced to ingage my iewels, to content my seruants, who complained often vnto me. Besides falling dangerously sicke in Nauarre, and almost dead, I was duly informed, that my languishing proceeded from certaine hurtfull herbes which were giuen mee by a physician a Iew, sent by the King my Lord to cure me. I doe not thinke that these herbes were giuen me by the commandement of the King my Lord, or with his priuiey, and God forbid it should once enter into my thought: but I finde it very strange that hauing complained, he did not vouchsafe to punish this bad physition, as hee deferred. Seeing my indisposition to continue I intreated him to giue mee leaue to come into

Castile,

Admonition
of the King of Castile to his sister the Queene of
Nauarre.

Excuses of the Queene
of Nauarre.

Castile, to your court, whereas God be thanked and your good reception, I have recovered my health. But during my abode here, in this case, I have beene advertised, that many flatterers and bad seruants to the King my Lord and mee, haue charged me with many slanders, the which hath much incensed him against me, soas I know not how my Estate, or my life can be well assured in Nauarre, if I returne as you perswade me: wherefore I beseech you Sir in the name of God, and for the brotherly loue you beare me, that you would be pleased to consult with your good and faithfull counsellors, vpon my returne to the King my Lord and husband, whom I loue and honour, and to provide for the safety of my life and honor: for if I should fall into any danger, or receiue any indignity, you should haue interest therein.

These words accompanied with a mournfull countenance, did much moue the King D. John, who promising his sister that he would haue a care of her affaires, he conferred with his counsell, imparting vnto them the speech which the Queene of Nauarre had vsed, causing them all toswear that they should giue him good and faithfull counsell touching her returne to the King her husband. The counsell hauing duely consulted of this businesse they came vnto the King, and told him, that they had found it expedient, that hee should cause King Charles his brother in law, to sweare to vse the Queene Donna Leonora his wife well and honourably, and for assurance thereof he should leave some places of Nauarre in deposito, in the hands of some Knights that were not suspected: whereby they thought the Queene might bee well assured to returne into Nauarre, and to liue freely with her husband. The King of Castile allowed of this aduice, and hauing caused his sister Donna Leonora to be called, he acquainted her therewith, exhorting her to follow it, the which seemed nothing pleasing vnto her, yet shee yeelded, hauing no iust cause of contradiction: wherefore the King D. John hauing caused the Ambassadors of Nauarre to bee called, hee would haue returned them home with this answer; but they replied that the King their maister would take any oth, but to deliuer places into a third mans hand, hee would not doe it: giuing many pertinent reasons, why hee should not yeeld to it.

After many allegations and disputes herevpon, the Queene said, that if it pleased the King her husband to sweare and promise to Pope Clement, the French King, and to the King her brother to vse her well, she would returne. The Ambassadors answered, that the Cardinal D. Pedro of Luna had already propounded such an oth, and that the King their maister had answered, that it was not needfull the French King should meddle with any controuersies betwixt him and his wife, and that for the rest he would make no difficulty. These disputes increasing more and more, to the great griefe of the King of Castile, who knew well that the Queene his sister was staied for some other consideration, and that the obiections made against her husband were meere slanders, he was much perplexed: for he both loued Charles King of Nauarre, and the Queene also. The Ambassadors being out of hope to worke the Queenes returne, they demaund the Infanta D. Ieanne, the King of Nauarres eldest daughter, to whom the succession of the Realme did belong for want of heires males, to be deliuered vnto them, to carry her into Nauarre, to the King her father, seeing he might not hope for any more children by the Queene, persisting in her vnreasonable resolution, to liue from his company. The Queene excusing her selfe, said, that it was not her intent to liue seperated from King Charles: but she desired to bee assured of her life: And the King her brother (who alwaies perswaded her to bee well aduised, and to beleue what he said vnto her) was forced to send Aluar Nuygues of Villa Real, President of his Chancery, into Nauarre, to take information of these venimous herbes, which shee said had bene giuen her by the physician a Iew, and to bring the depositions of the witnesses, whom shee named: but this was an information made without any aduerse party, to the great scandale of Queene Leonoras marriage: so as by the aduice of the royall counsell of Castile it was suppressed. The Queene remayning obstinate, not to returne to her husband, the King of Castile preuailed so with her, as shee yeelded to send Don Ieanne her eldest daughter, for hee gaue her to vnderstand that it would somewhat pacifie the King of Nauarre.

Besides it was to bee feared that if shee staied her, hee might in despite institute his his brother Peter Earle of Mortaign heire of his realme. It did much import the Nauarrois, to haue this daughter in the fathers power, fearing least the mother should marry her to some Castilian, against the fathers will, and to the preiudice of the liberty of the Realme: The daughter was deliuered to the Ambassadors, with one of her sisters, being royally accompanied from the towne of Roa, whether the King and his sister came to send her into Nauarre, where shee was receiued with great contentment to the King and the Nauarrois, yet he was much discontented at the rebellion and contempt of the Queene his wife.

This businesse being ended, the King of Castile came to Segobia, where he did institute the Order of the Knights of the holy Ghost, causing collars of gold to bee made like vnto the sunne beames, at which did hang a white dowe. This collar hee himselfe did weare, and gaue it to many Knights that were most familiar with him, shewing them a certaine booke of Orders, which they must obserue. Moreouer he would also institute an other deuice, which he called Reason, the which Esquires, which carried themselves valiantly in Iousts and Tournayes, and did any commendable act, should carry: yet hee beeing dead these things died likewise with him, which followed the same yeere 1390.

He was resolved to passe into Andalusia, to order the affaires of that Province, and administer Iustice: passing in the month of October by Alcalá of Henares, thether came vnto him fifty Christian Knights borne at Maroc in Affrike, who being sent for by him had past the seas with leaue from their King, and were come to doe him seruice: Hee receiued them graciously, and promised them pensions and lands in Castile. They were of the most ancient families of Maroc, hauing alwaies held the Christian religion, and were called the Farfanes. The King desirous to see them mannage their Genets (for they had the report to bee good horsemen) went to horse-backe, and going ouer at the port which is called of Burgos, he entred into a plowed field, and beginning to gallop his horse ouer the furrows, he stumbled in the midst of his course, and fell vpon the King, who was so brused as hee died, being but two and thirty yeeres old, whereof hee reigned eleuen and three monthes; his body was carried to Toledo, and buried in the Chappell of the last Kings, where his father and mother lie. A Prince endow- ed with good parts but vnfortunate, and too sharpe to his brother the Earle of Gijon, the which did somewhat blemish the luster of his vertues: he was a friend and rewarder of valiant men, and religious according to the time. Hee was founder of three of the chiefe Monasteries in Spaine, and gaue them great reuenues; that is, the Carthusians at Valdeleroya in the territorie of Segobia in Rascañe, the which is commonly called Paular: The royall Monasterie of Segobia in Rascañe, the which is commonly chiefe of the religion in the Realmes of Castile, Leon, Arragon and Nauarre, built whereas the old fort did stand. And moreouer hee founded the church and house of Santa Maria of Guadalupe, whereas he put religious men of Saint Ierosimes Order, and tooke away the Chaplains which were wont to bee there; at which place there is an Image, which they hold doth miracles.

This King was very pittifull to Princes and men of marke that were strangers and afflicted, as it appeered by the deliury which hee sought with great affection of Leon King of Armenia, who was prisoner with the Sultan of Egypt, to whom hee sent an honourable Ambassage to that effect. And afterwards this Prince being retired into Spaine, he gaue him conuenient reuenues and pensions vpon the towne of Madrid, and other places in Castile. It is he whose tombe is in the Celestins church at Paris, where he died mediating a peace betwixt the French and English.

The King of Nauarre hauing laboured in vaine for to haue the Queene his wife returned vnto him, desiring to haue her crowned with him, like vnto other Queenes, hee resolved not to delay his coronation any longer: wherefore he assembled the Estates of his realm in the city of Pampelone, whereas the solemnity of his coronation was made, as followeth: The Deputies of the Clergy, Nobility and third Estate, being assembled, with the Ambassadors of forraigne Princes, in the great chappell of the Cathedral church; the Bishops being in their Pontificall habitz, Don Alonso of Salua

Hhh

Bishop

24
Castile

An. 1390.

Farfanes - Christian Affrikans.

15

16

Nauarre.

Ceremony at
the King of Nauarres coronation.

Bishop of Pampelone, who was afterwards Cardinall, spake the words vnto the King: A O King our naturall Lord, it is fit before you receiue the Sacrament of the holy vnction, that you take the oth vnto your people of Nauarre, which hath bene accustomed to be taken in this Realme of Nauarre, by Kings your predecessors. Wherevnto the King answered, that he was ready to sweare: then a crosse being presented vnto him, and a booke; laying his hand thereon, he pronounced these words with a loud voice, We D.
Charles by the grace of God King of Nauarre, Earle of Eureux &c. Doe sweare vnto our people of Nauarre, vpon this crosse and vpon the holy Euangelist touch by vs, and to you the prelates and rich men of the cities and good townes, and to all the people of Nauarre, for all your rights, lawes, customes, freedomes, liberties and preuiledges: that euery one of them, as they now are, shalbe maintained and kept, to you and your successors, in all or in part: and that the violence and force which hath bene done to your predecessors, whom God pardon, or to you, by Vs or our Officers, we shall hereafter command it to cease, and satisfaction to bee made, according vnto right, as they shalbe made manifest by good men and of credit.

Forms of the King oth
to his people.

Form of the subjects oth
vnto the King.

Vnction of the King of Nauarre.

King of Nauarre
carried vpon
a target.

After the Kings oth, the Deputies of the Estates, according to their degrees, standing vp, did also sweare after this manner. We N. N. Barons of Nauarre, as well in our owne names, as for all the Knights and Gentlemen of the realme, sweare vnto you, our King and Lord, vpon this crosse, and these foure holy Euangelists, handled and toucht by vs, to gard and faithfully to defend your person, and our country, and to aide you to keepe, maintaine and defend the lawes and customes with all our power. After this manner did the deputies for the cities and townes sweare, euery one according to the rights, lawes, customes, preuiledges, freedomes and liberties, which they did enioy. This oth beeing taken of either side, except by the Clergy, who sweare not, the King retired himselfe into Saint Stephens chappell, of the same church, where he put off his robes, and tooke one of white rassity, which was vsuall in such ceremonies, and then was brought backe by the Bishops of Tarraffone and of Dax, to the great chappell, where as all things necessary were prepared for his vnction. The King beeing there enuironed by the Bishops, he was annointed with oyle by the bishop of Pampelone, with the praier and suffrages vsuall in such actions: and the King hauing instantly put off that white roabe he was richly attired in other royall habits, and so approached neere vnto the high altar, where there was a sword, the royal crowne glistering with pretious stones, and the royall Scepter, hee put on the sword, and then drew it forth, holding it vp on high in signe of Iustice, and then sheathed it againe, then hee tooke the crowne, and set it on his head, and last of all hee tooke the scepter in his hand, and in the meane time the prelates continued their prayers. These things beeing done the King mounted vpon a target, on the which were painted the armes of Nauarre, the which was borne by the Deputies of the Nobility, and them of the city of Pampelone and the three quarters thereof, Bourg, Peuplement and Nauarre, as well in the name of the said city, as of other cities and townes of the realme, as it had bene appointed by the King: wherevpon publike protestation was made by the Deputies of Estella, Tudela, Sanguessa, O-lite and other townes, which could not set to their hands to support this target, on the which the King was, that it was without preiudice at that time, or hereafter, to their com-monalties. Thus the King was raised vp by the deputies, who cried out thrice, Real, Real, at, Real.

The King beeing thus carried after the manner of the ancient French, hee cast money vnto the people, which done, hee was taken from thence by the Cardinall Don Pedro of Luna, the Popes Legat (who assisted at this ceremonie) and by the Bishops of Pampelone and Tarraffone, and led to a royall throne in great state: the prelates and other Clergy men continuing still in their praier and ending with a Te Deum.

These things thus performed, the Kings Attorney General, called Garcia of Leach, in the Kings name, the Bishop of Pampelone for himselfe and all the Clergy of the realme, with the Deputies of the Nobility, townes and commonalties, demanded an act of Peter of Godeille Apostolike Notary, of Peter of Iauariz Clarke and Apostolike Notary,

A Notary for the Diocese of Pampelone, and of Iohn of Ceilludo Notary, and Secretary to the King, the which was formally done. For the last act of this solemnity, masse was sung by the Bishop of Pampelone, whereas the King, according to the custome of his predecessors, offered scarlet, gold and siluer. This coronation was the fourth yeere of this Princes reigne, in February in the yeere 1390. and to make more particular relation of men of quality, which were at this assembly, deputed for the Estates or otherwise, First of all there was D. Pedro of Luna Cardinal, of the title of Santa Maria in Cosme-din, Legat a Latere in Spaine, to Pope Clement residing in Auignon: Don Martin Salua
Bishop of Pampelone, D. Iohn of Calaoarra and Calzado, D. Pedro of Tarraffone, Don Fernand of Vic of Ossona, D. Pedro of Ampurias, D. Iohn of Dax, D. Garcia of Eugni of Bayone, Confessor to the King, all Bishops. Moreouer the Abbot of Irache, the Deane of the Collegiall church of Tudelo; the Abbots of the Monasteries of Saint Saluator of Leyra, Oliuia, Yrançu, Hitero and Saint Saluator of Vrax: the Prior of the Order of Saint Iohn of Ierusalem, the dignities, Chanoinis and Clergy of the church of Pampe-lone, for the Estate of the Clergy. For the Nobilitie and military Order were Don Lionell of Nauarre, the Kings base brother, D. Arnaud Raymond Lord of Grammont, D.
Arnaud Sanches Lord of Lule, D. Pedro Lord of Laxaga, D. Martin Henrique of Lacarra Marshal of the realme, D. Ramir of Arcillan, D. Martin Lord of Mearcan, and of Saint Iulian, D. Iohn of Vcara, D. Fernand of Ayanc, D. Martin of Ayuar, D. Bertrand of Lacarra, D. Aluar Diaz of Medrano, D. Ximen Garcia Vicont of Baigner, D. Pedro Sanches of Corella, D. Pedro Ynigues of Vxue, D. Martin of Attieda, D. Pedro Arnaud of Garro, D. Iohn Gaston of Vtroz, D. Garcia Ramires of Asiayn, D. Iohn of Bern, the young Don
Pedro Sanches of Licaraçu, D. Iohn Rodriguez of Ayuar, D. Raymond of Esperca and Don Pedro of Ayanc: these were accompanied with many other Noblemen and Gentlemen, as it was fit for the Maiesty of such an act. The were also the Deputies of the commonalties, and good townes of the realme of Pampelone, Bourg, Peuplement and Nauarriere which were three quarters, or countries of the city, euery one hauing a feuerall ludge, the which kept them long in diuision, and bred lamentable mutinies and fedditions: but this King by wise counsell reduced them all into one body, and suppress the cause, to the good and quiet of the Inhabitants: Moreouer there were present the Deputies of Estella, Tudela, Sanguessa, Olite, Puente la Reyna, Arcos, which at this day belong to Castile, Viana, Garde, which is also of Castile, of Saint Vincent, of Saint Iohn of Pic de Port, of Montreal, Roncevaux, Lumber, Villafranca of Aguilar of Bernedo, at this day vnited to the crowne of Castile, and of Lans. Besides these deputies, there were many Barons, Knights and others of quality of Castile, France and England, which did honour this coronation, with the Ambassadors of forraigne Christian princes. Namely Iohn Vicont of Fustensaguet, Raymond of Beruat, Lord of Castlenau, D. Alphonso of Luna, Archdeacon of Gironne, Doctor Iohn Fernandes of Arana, D. Diego Lopes of Estuniga, high Treasurer, Diego Lopes of Lagran, Steward to the King of Castile, Francis of Pau of Arragon, Sicart of Montagu, Bernard of Rostaing a Basque. These with many others, were witnesses of all that past at this ceremony, as appeeres by the acts and writings which are in the chamber of accounts of that realme. In Iuly following the quire of the church fell, where these things were celebrated, for the re-edefying whereof, the King and others did contribute very much. The death of D. Iohn King of Castile, fell out then vnfortunatly for the King of Nauarre: for besides that hee loued him, and was beloued of him like a brother, hee was a fit instrument to raine the wilfulness of the Queene Donna Leonora, who did afterwards much trouble him, before hee could make her leaue Castile, and returne to him.

Men of account as the King of Nauarre
coronated.

F

H h h 2

Don

D. Henry the 3. of that name, the feuenteenth
King of Castile 38. of Leon.

17
Castile.

VWhen as the King Don John had this mortall fall, Don Pedro Tenorio, Archbishop of Toledo, a wise man, knowing the alterations which doe commonly follow such accidents, to the prejudice of States, hee sodainly caused a Pauillion to be pitched in the place whereas the Kings body lay, and hauing set gards about it that it might not be scene, hee dissembled his death, giuing it out that he was sore hurt, but without any danger of death: and the better to conceale this businesse, he caused his physicians to come vnto the Tent, to whom he imposed silence, then at a conuenient time, he caused the Kings body to bee brought into the towne, and laied it in the Chappel of the Archbishops lodging.

In the meane time he made such dispatches as he thought fit to the cities and townes of the realme, and to the Prelats and Knights who he knew were affected to the deceased King, and to his sonne D. Henry. The Queene Donna Beatrice was at the time of this vnfürnat accident, at Madrid, where she receiued letters from the Archbishop, aduising her to goe to Alcala, the which she did, leading in her company D. John Serran bishop of Sigüenza Chancellor of the Kings priuy seale, and others, who were very sorrowfull for these lamentable newes: but especially the Queene Donna Beatrice, who had not any children by the King her husband, and was now dispossessed of her realme of Portugal, without any hope euer to recouer it. Beeing come to Alcala, the Archbishop hauing comforted her, and left her there for the gard of the body, he went to Madrid, where hee did set vp the Standards of Castile and Leon, for the new King D. Henry, who was then at Talauera with his wife Donna Catherina, and his brother the Infant Don Fernand, whereas their father had left them when as he ment to goe into Andalusia: but hauing receiued letters from the Archbishop, he came presently to Madrid. The Archbishop gaue such order for all things, as there was no alteration. The funerals for his death were performed throughout all Spaine, with great heauinesse, the which was followed with great demonstrations of ioy, for that D. Henry was proclaimed King in the same towne of Madrid, whether the Deputies of Prouinces, and the Estates of the realme began to come; the first were D. Laurence Suarez of Figueroa maister of Saint Iames, D. Gonsalo Nugnes of Guzman maister of Calatraua, and some others, who did not medle with any affaires, nor with the gouernment of the King (who was not yet eleuen yeeres old) by reason of the absence of Don Frederic duke of Benauent, of Don Alphonso of Arragon, Marquis of Villena Earle of Denia and first Constable of Castile, and Don Pedro of Castile Earle of Transamara, Princes of the bloud royall, who were sent for, and it was fit to attend them. Notwithstanding the Archbishop of Toledo thought it fit to conclude a marriage which was of great importance, and very preiudiciall for the Duke of Benauent, which was of Donna Leonora daughter and heire to Don Shancho of Castile, brother to the King D. Henry the second, Countesse of Albuquerque and Montaluisa, and Lady of many other townes and castles: to which rich marriage Don Frederic pretended, the which was thought fit and conuenient, both for that hee was of the bloud of Castile, as also to recompence him in some sort for the marriage which had bene concluded, betwixt him and Donna Beatrice of Portugal, whom the King D. John did afterwards marry, whereby he had bene vndoubtedly King of Portugal. But the Archbishop thinking that the marriage of Donna Leonora would bee more fit for D. Fernand duke of Pegnatiel, brother to the new King, hee did worke it, and concluded it, with the Kings consent and the Ladies, vpon condition that it should bee consummated when the Infant were foureteene yeeres old. Shee beeing sixteene yeeres old, promised it, but not the Infant, for that by the marriage betwixt Don Henry and Donna Catherina, the Duke of Lancaster her father had reserved, that if Don Henry should chance to die without

D. Henry the third, proclay-med King of Castile.

Marriage betwixt the heire of Albuquerque and
the Infant D.
Fernand.

A out consummating of the marriage with his daughter, then D. Fernand his brother should marry her. The Noblemen, Prelats and Deputies of the towne of Castile and Leon, beeing not yet assembled, the Archbishop of Toledo demanded of Peter Lopez of Ayala, a worthy Knight and learned, if he knew whether the deceased King had made any will, to whom he answered yea, and that hee himselfe being present with others, the King had made his will at the seige of Cillorico in Portugal, the one and twentieth of Iuly in the yeere of our Lord 1385. and that he had sent his will to him being Archbishop of Toledo. The Archbishop remembered this, but he said that he had since deliuered that vp to the King. By this testament it was ordained, that the King dying, leauing his sonne D. Henry vnder age, the gouernment of the King and realme should remaine in the hands of D. Alphonso of Arragon, Marquis of Villena, of the Archbishop of Toledo, D. John Garcia Manriques Archbishop of Saint Iames, D. Pedro Nugnes maister of the Calatraua, D. John Alphonso of Guzman Earle of Niebla, and D. Pedro Gonçales of Mendoza Lord Steward of the Kings house, and with them one or two Bourgeses of either of the sixe townes: that is Burgos, Toledo, Leon, Seuille Cordoua and Murcia.

But afterwards the King did shew by actions, that he had changed his resolution, not meaning that this should be receiued for his last will and testament, wherevpon there grew such debate, as it was hard to pacifie it. D. Frederic duke of Benauent, D. Pedro of Castile Earle of Transamara, the Archbishop of Saint Iames, with some others, beeing arriued, hauing kist the Kings hands, as their naturall Lord, the Estates beganne to conferre concerning the gouernment of the King and realme, and hauing first propounded the aboue-named will, it was concluded that the Archbishop of Toledo, the Maisters of Saint Iames and of Calatraua, the Duke of Benauent, the Earle of Transamara, and Pero Lopes of Ayala, should enter the chamber where the King kept his papers, to finde out this will. The chamber was opened by Ruis Lopes of Aualos, who afterwards was Constable, and John Martines of Castile, gardeners of those writings, where this will was found: It beeing read in the presence of the aboue-named, and they all disallowing of that which the King had ordained, they commanded him that he should read it into a fire which burnt in a chamber neere vnto the Bishop of Cuencas, one of the household to the deceased King, to auoide all contention and trouble, yet hee durst not doe it, but laied it vnder a bed, whereas the Archbishop of Toledo tooke it, saying, that there were some clauses which did concerne his Archbishoprike of Toledo, and so carried it away.

After some great contention betwixt the Noblemen and Deputies assembled, in the end it was concluded, that without any regard to the Kings will, or any other writing whatsoeuer, the gouernment should be mannaged by a set council, wherefore they named the duke of Benauent, and the Earle of Transamara Princes of the bloud royall of Castile, the Marquis of Villena, and the Archbishops of Toledo and Saint Iames, the Maisters of Calatraua and Saint Iames, with some other Knights: and it was said, of the Deputies of sixteene cities of this Realme, eight should assist at this councill by sixe monthes, with this clause that not any Prelat, Knight, Maister, Deputie or any other should haue any voice or authority, but when they were resident in the court. This resolution pleased them all except the Archbishop of Toledo, who refused for to sweare to certaine good Articles concluded by the councill, answering with the Bishop of Cuencas, that hee did it for that hee would not infringe the lawes of the realme, which said, that the King comming to the crowne in his minority, the father hauing appointed him no Tutors, in that case the Realme should choose one, three, five, or seuen to gouerne. Wherefore if they would heare what he had to say therein, for the discharge of his conscience, and that they would afterwards proceed otherwise, hee should bee contented with that they should conclude. His answer beeing allowed by the councill, he was willing to present himselfe the next day in the castle, where he should be heard. The councill was of opinion that the Archbishop would not be so rash, as publickly to contradict a generall accord which they had made, else they prepared to giue him a bad reception.

19
Ordinance
made by the King D. John in his testament.

Orders for the Gouernment
of the realme
of Castile.

The Archbishop beeing aduertised by one of the Deputies of the resolution of the councell, hee ioynd with them the next day in a church, and sware the Articles, to auoide the scandale which had happened, if hee had done otherwise. This beeing thus repaired, the Archbishop desired to bee discharged of the gard of Don Alphonso Earle of Gijon, brother to the deceased King, who had beene a long time prisoner in the ca-file of Almonacid: wherevpon he made such instance, and so great protestations, as the councell (not able otherwise to pacesse him) decreed that the prisoner should bee deliuered into the hands of the maister of Saint James, who should take charge of him, and he caused him to be conducted to the castle of Monreal, belonging to the order of Saint James.

20
 Archbishop of Toledo surburlion.

Some daies after the councell being assembled in the church of Madrid, whereas it was often held, certaine Gentlemen belonging to the duke of Benauent entred, hauing shirts of maile, whereat many were amazed, especially Don Pedro Tenorio the Archbishop, who therevpon tooke occasion to dislodge from court, and in all places where hee past, he published that they had made a councell contrary to the will of the King Don John: writing to all the chiefe townes of Spaine, and to the Noblemen that were absent, who had beene named Tutors by the Kings will: Hee did moreover write to Pope Clement, and to the consistory of Cardinals, and the French King, and him of Arragon, intreating them not to allow of, nor receiue the dispatches of this councell. This did much trouble them of the councell, who incited by this disorder to a greater, C would beginne to diuide the charges, offices, places and sortes of the Realme betwixt them. The duke of Benauent was the first, who demanded the office of high Treasorer, or Super-intendant of the Treasor, for John Sanches of Seuille, an infamous man by reason of his great vsurie, beeing also indebted to the King in great summes of money: wherevnto the Archbishop of Saint James opposed, saying, that it was not fit that hee who ought to bee arraigned, should bee aduanced to an office which had iurisdiction: wherevpon there grew great troubles, and scandales, and the Noblemen of the councell beganne to fortresse themselues with armes, causing their seruants and valsals to approach neere to Madrid, so as the Inhabitants of the towne set gardes at their portes: by reason whereof the Duke went out of the towne, and retired to Be-nauent, leauing his companions in great feare lest hee should ioyne with the Archbishop of Toledo.

21.
 Sedition against the Jewes, caused by D. Fernand
Martinez.

As this man was moued with zeale for the affaires of state, so at the same time Don Fernand Martinez of Eccia, Archdeacon of Seuille, was moued for religions cause against the Iewes, dwelling in Spaine, inciting the people against them, not onely in his sermons, but also in market places and streetes: so as the Iewes seeing they intended to spoile and murder them, they had recourse vnto the Lords of the councell at Madrid, who deputed Iudges to preuent this disorder at Seuille, Cordoua, and other townes of Andalusia: but the people were so incensed against this sect, as notwithstanding all the diligence of the Iudges, many were slaine, and their goods spoiled: An indi-direct course to draw Infidels to the religion of Iesus Christ.

The King Don Henry who grew in yeeres and Iudgement, did much apprehend the troubles, wherein the Noblemen of the councell did ingage the Realme, and therefore hee did write vnto the Duke of Benauent, and the Marquis of Villena, who had not beene present at all these things, that they should come, or send presently to Madrid, men with full authority: complaining by his letters which hee did write to Don Frederic Duke of Benauent, for that hee had gone from court without leaue. The Duke sent Aluis Vasques of Losada, a Knight of honour vnto him, who gaue him a good accompt of his actions. The Marquis of Villena excused himselfe vpon the
 An. 1391, diffention of the Councell, who wrote in the beginning of the year 1391. to the Archbishop of Toledo, complaining greatly of the innouations which by his occasion did threaten Spaine, protesting for their parts, to yeeld vnto all that should be ordained by the Estates of the Realme: and as for the last will and testament of King John, they would alwaies referre it to his oath, if he had not declared before his death, that he meant not it should be of force.

The

A The Arch-bishop when he received these letters, was at Alcalá with the Duke of Benauent, the Marquis of Villena, D. Martin Ianes of Barbuda, Master of Alcantara, and D. Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, with other discontented Knights, by all their aduice, hauing made a league together, answer was made vnto the messengers, that hauing reloued among themselues they would make a fit answer: to whom the messengers that were sent from the King and the Councell replied, that in the meane time the Arch-bishop should forbear to assemble forces, and shold not employ the reuenues of the church to leuy soldiers: whereunto they answered, That whilst they of the Councell did gouerne to their preiudice, they could do no lesse then to seeke a remedy. During these broyles in Spaine, D. Domingo Bishop of S. Ponce, Legate to Pope Clement residing at Auignon, came to Madrid, with letters to the King, condoling for the death of the deceased king his father, and congratulating his assumption, who also brought letters from the Pope to the Councell, by the which, like a good pastor and father, he did exhort them to do iustice, and to gouerne the Realme well; the Legate making a long speech to that end: to whom Garcia Manrique Arch-bishop of S. James, answered. After which the Councell intreated the Legat to be a meane to pacifie the troubles which had beene raised by the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and that he would take the paines to look into the will and disposition of both parties, to the end he might make report thereof vnto the Pope. The Legate offered to employ himselfe in any thing they should thinke fit for the publike peace: wherefore the Councell hauing thanked him for his good will, they deputed Peter Suarez of Quignones, Gouernor of Leon, a wife and discreet Knight; Garcia Alphonso of Sahagun, and Doctor Anthony Sanches of Salamanca, an Auditor, who did accompanie the Legate. Beeing arriued at Talauera de la Reyna, where as the Arch-bishop was, he intreated him very earnestly to hearken to the peace and quiet of Spaine, giuing him many Theologi-call reasons, beeing a great learned Doctor, especially vpon the wasting of the goods and reuenues of the Church, which was the patrimonie of the poore. propounding vnto him in the behalfe of the Councell, the iust conditions which they had deliuered vnto him, and promised to performe; perswading him and his associats to come vpon his faith and assurance, vnto the castle of Buytrago, belonging vnto D. Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, D.
 to consult with them of the Councell, of the meanes how to accommodate all their diuisions. The like request and offer was made by Peter of Quignones in the behalfe of the Councell, signifying vnto them, that if they lost this opportunity, they might afterwards desire it in vaine: and of all this he protested and demanded an act. To all this the Archbishop answered vpon premeditation, and excused himselfe, as well vpon the testament of the deceased king, as vpon the lawes of the Realme which were infringed, persisting in the answer which had beene made at Alcalá, pretending other lets, so as they could not go to Buytrago.

22
 Pope Clement
 sends a Legate into Castile.

In the meane time Ambassadors came from France, to the new king Don Henry, to condole the death of the deceased king, and to performe such ceremonies as are vsuall at the coming of new kings, the Bishop of Landres, chiefe of this Ambassage, offering to the king Don Henry all friendship and ayde, in the name of the king his Master, and to confirme the league made betwixt their predecessors. To which ambassage the Arch-bishop of S. James made answer in the kings name with great applause: the king did then renew and tware the league betwixt France and Castile, and so did the Ambassadors. They being dispatched, and honoured with many goodly presents, they were accompanied with other Ambassadors, whom the king Don Henry sent into France, for the confirmation of this league: within few dayes there came also to Madrid, Ambassadors from the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon: from the Duke of Lancaster, and other Christian Princes, vpon the same subiect. They of Nauarre particularly intreated the yong King, F that he would so worke with the Queene Donna Leonora his aunte, as shee might returne into Nauarre, and liue with the King her husband; wherein they of the councell employed themselves with great affection, but they preuailed not, for she vsed the same excules, which shee had done to the deceased King Don John, so much shee was pleased to liue in the court of Castile. The King of Arragons Ambassadors, besides their generall Legation, had charge to perswade all the counsellors in particular, to gouerne the

Ambassadors
 from France to Castile.

Queene of
 Nauarre
 will not returne to her husband.

the realme with such care and loyalty, as the young yeares of the king his nephew required. And they of the Duke of Lancaſter demanded, that the league made with the deceased king, at the conclusion of their peace, should be renewed. All these received courteous answers, and were sent backe with content.

In the meane time the Arch-bishop of Toledo leauied forces, and made great practises throughout all the chiefe townes, and with the Nobilitie of the Realme. And on the other side, at the incitation of the seditious Arch-deacon Don Fernand Martines, the people of Seuille, Cordoua, Toledo, Logrogne, and other townes, of Castile, had fallen vpon the Iewes, making a horrible butcherie of this miserable people, and spoyling their goods, forcing by this meanes the rest, who escaped the present fury to become Christians, or at the least to faine themselves so: What can poore Infidels thinke (seeing such cruelties practised by Christians, and such greedinesse in them to imbeazle other mens goods) but that their religion is bloudie, desiring nothing lesse then the health of those whome they entertaine in their ignorance, by such detestable courses, and diuclish couerousnesse? With the like furie were the neighbour countries infected: for they of Valencia and Barcelona did the like, yea the rage of these zealous men had extended vnto the Moores dwelling in Castile and Arragon, if they had not feared that the king of Granada would haue massacred many Christians that were his prisoners, and that it should cause some new warre with the Arabians.

This worldly consideration respecting the commoditie of this life retayned them, not the zeale and honour of Iesus Christ, which consists not in murders and spoiles, but to do good to all men, and to pray for their enemies. The King Don Henry was aduertised of all these disorders, but by reason of his youth which was contemned, he could not apply fir remedies. Yet he did somewhat pacifie the mutinie against the Iewes: But as for the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and his Confederates, they had need of a sharper restraint. The Councell sent twice vnto him: that is, the Master of Saint Iames, who came vnto him at Illesca, and afterwards at Talauera de la Reina, D. John of Velasco, Lord Chamberlaine to the king, and Peter Fernandes of Villegas Merin Maior of Burgos, who admonished him to forbear to assemble forces, and that he should be content to vndergo with them, the resolution of the Estates, vpon their differences, but they had no other answer, but what he had formerly made.

Amidst these tumults there fell out a new occasion to increase them: for hauing beene propounded in the Councell of the deceased king D. John, to take the office of Constable from D. Alphonso of Arragon, Marquis of Villena, for certaine reasons: being now in diuision with the Councell, and not greatly beloued of the young King D. Henry, D. Pedro of Castile Earle of Translamara, came to demand this office, who had yearly for his dyet and entertainment 70000. maraudis. The Councell did let him vnderstand, that the king at the beginning when the Estates assembled at Madrid, to gratifie the Marquis D. Alphonso, had confirmed him in the dignity, and that there were no reason thus to degrade him, without some apparent cause, the which might be a means to increase the troubles which were but too great: wherefore they were of opinion, that he should for that time forbear and content himselfe with a pension, equall to the Constables entertainment, the which they promised him in the meane time: but they sayd, that they must proceede against the Marquis by the course of Iustice: for the effecting wherof, they would procure the king to cite him to come to Court, and if hee did not obey, they promised to giue him his Estate. D. Pedro was satisfied with this answer, and D. Alphonso Ianes Fajardo, Gouvernor of Murcia was sent by the King vnto the Constable, to cause him to come to court: but hee excused himselfe from coming presently, promising to be there soone after, notwithstanding it was farre from his thought: for he had intelligence with the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and others of the league, who drew men together from all parts, to come to the Court in armes, to the end they might haue the testament of the deceased king D. John, put in execution, and chafe away the Councell.

The Arch-bishop of S. Iames, the Earle of Translamara, the Masters of S. Iames and Calatraua, John Hurtado of Mendoça, Lord Steward of the kings house, & others (wherof some were named Tutors by the kings will, and some not) knowing that this was not the cause

23. cruelties and murders committed on the Iewes.

24.
D. Pedro of Castile demands
the office of Constable.

A cause which drew the Arch-bishop of Toledo, but onely a colour pretended by him and his confederates to retire from Court, and to take armes; they also provided for their parts, and called all their friends to ayde them: they drew D. Leonora Queene of Nauar, vnto their league, binding themselves by oath one vnto another, and they wrought so, as the king Don Henry continued vnto the Queene his Aunt the pensions which the deceased King D. John was wont to giue her with an increase: By whose perswasion, and others of the Councell, he tooke the office of Constable from Don Alphonso of Arragon, who had enioyed it nine yeares, and gaue it to the Earle of Translamara, who was sonne to D. Frederic, Master of Saint Iames, and cousin to the king. Herevpon they fell to armes in Castile, committing great spoyles, robberies, and murders of all sides, diuiding the B Realmes, Prouinces, Citties, and Townes, especially Seuille, whereas Don Aluar Perez of Guzman, great Admiral of Castile, and D. Pedro Ponce of Leon, Lord of Marchena, Gouvernor generall of that citie, held the Councells part: and Don John Alphonso of Guzman, Earle of Niebla and others; that of the Kings testament.

The Arch-bishop of Toledo with the Master of Alcantara were about Auila, to whom they of the citie of Burgos made many protestations, offers and prayers in vaine, for a peace; the like they did to the Duke of Benauent, and then they sent vnto the King, who was come to Cuellar, beseeching him to giue care vnto a peace, and to end the troubles by a conuocation of the Estates; the which if he thought good to hold in their citie, they offered to deliuer all their children in hostage, for their assurance that should come. The King moued with the loue and willingness of them of Burgos, sent the Legate and others to the Arch-bishop and his confederates, but they answered, That when they should be neere the place where the king was, they would declare their intentions more at large. The Duke of Benauent, and the Arch-bishop of Toledo, were already ioyned with their forces, consisting of fifteene hundred men at armes, and 3500. foote, vnto whome the Queene of Nauarre came, intreating them, that before matters grew worse, they should be satisfied with the resolution of the Estates: and whilest that she laboured with the confederates, the king went to Vailledolit, whither came about sixteen hundred men at arms, with some other forces. The confederates little regarding the Queene of Nauarre, came to lodge at Simancas, where as she was more amazed then before, and employed all her endeavors to make some accord: In the end shee obtayned that there should bee a conference at Perales, whereas at diuers times, in the presence of the Queene and Legate, the parties met and conferred. Once among the rest, the Arch-bishop being demanded by him of Saint Iames, if he had any true intent, that the deceased kings testament should take place: he made him no answer, for that the Duke of Benauent, who was not named in it, was present, whom he feared to offend: an infallible argument, that priuate respects did moue him more, then any zeale of the publike good, or the Kings seruice. It was concluded in Perales, that the Kings testament should be of force, and that the tutors named therein should gouerne: and to the end a peace might be the better entertayned, and that all emulation and ialousie might cease, there were added vnto them Don Frederic duke of Benauent, Don Pedro Earle of Translamara, and the Master of Saint Iames: and for the better strengthening of this accord, the generall Estates were held at Burgos, John Hurtado of Mendoça, Pero Lopes of Ayala, Diego Lopes of Estuniga, and John Alphonso de la Cerde, either of them giuing one of his sonnes in hostage, for the assurance of such as should come to Court.

Thus the Estates were called at Burgos; which citie was at great charges for that cause, and for the kings seruice. But before any proceeding, the Councell pretending to bind Don Alphonso Earle of Gijon vnto them, being prisoner in the hands of the Master of S. Iames, they decreed his deliuerie, and procured the king to restore vnto him all the lands which he had enioyed in the Asturia's. There came vnto the assembly at Burgos, the king with Queene Catherine his spouse, the Infant Don Fernand, and his future wife D. Leonora, who lodged in the Castle, wherof Diego Lopes of Estuniga was capitaine. The Estates being entred into conference, there grew a new tumult: for some of the Noblemen not satisfied with that which had beene concluded in Perales, would haue D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon admitted to councell, besides the above-named, wherewith the Duke of

Queene of Nauar intangled
in the troubles
of castile.

Archb. of Toledo respects
not the publike
good.

Estates at Burgos for a peace.

D. Alphonso
the kings sonne deliuered out
of prison.

the realme with such care and loyalty, as the young yeares of the king his nephew required. And they of the Duke of Lancaster demanded, that the league made with the deceased king, at the conclusion of their peace, should be renewed. All these received courteous answers, and were sent backe with content.

In the meane time the Arch-bishop of Toledo leauied forces, and made great practices throughour all the chiefe townes, and with the Nobilitie of the Realme. And on the other side, at the incitation of the seditious Arch-deacon Don Fernand Martines, the people of Seuille, Cordoua, Toledo, Logrogne, and other townes, of Castile, had fallen vpon the Iewes, making a horrible butchery of this miserable people, and spoyleing their goods, forcing by this meanes the rest, who escaped the present fury to become Christians, or at the least to faine themselves so: What can poore Infidels thinke (seeing such cruelties practised by Christians, and such greedinesse in them to imbeazle other mens goods) but that their religion is bloudie, desiring nothing lesse then the health of those whome they entertaine in their ignorance, by such detestable courses, and diuclish couetousnesse? With the like furie were the neighbour countries infected: for they of Valencia and Barcelona did the like, yea the rage of these zealous men had extended vnto the Moores dwelling in Castile and Arragon, if they had not feared that the king of Granada would haue massacred many Christians that were his prisoners, and that it should cause some new warre with the Arabians.

This worldly consideration respecting the commoditie of this life retayned them, not the zeale and honour of Iesus Christ, which consists not in murders and spoiles, but to do good to all men, and to pray for their enemies. The King Don Henry was aduertised of all these disorders, but by reason of his youth which was contemned, he could not apply fit remedies. Yet he did somewhat pacifie the mutinie against the Iewes: But as for the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and his Confederates, they had need of a sharper restraint. The Councell sent twice vnto him: that is, the Master of Saint Iames, who came vnto him at Illeca, and afterwards at Talauera de la Reina, D. John of Velasco, Lord Chamberlaine to the king, and Peter Fernandes of Villegas Merin Maior of Burgos, who admonished him to forbear to assemble forces, and that he should be content to vndergo with them, the resolution of the Estates, vpon their differences, but they had no other answer, but what he had formerly made.

Amidst these tumults there fell out a new occasion to increase them: for hauing bene propounded in the Councell of the deceased king D. John, to take the office of Constable from D. Alphonso of Arragon, Marquis of Villena, for certaine reasons: being now in diuision with the Councell, and not greatly beloued of the young King D. Henry, D. Pedro of Castile Earle of Translamara, came to demand this office, who had yearly for his dyet and entertainment 70000. marauidis. The Councell did let him vnderstand, that the king at the beginning when the Estates assembled at Madrid, to gratifie the Marquis D. Alphonso, had confirmed him in the dignity, and that there were no reason thus to degrade him, without some apparent cause, the which might be a means to increase the troubles which were but too great: wherefore they were of opinion, that he should for that time forbear and content himselfe with a pension, equall to the Constables entertainment, the which they promised him in the meane time: but they sayd, that they must proceede against the Marquis by the course of Iustice: for the effecting wherof, they would procure the king to cite him to come to Court, and if hee did not obey, they promised to giue him his Estate. D. Pedro was satisfied with this answer, and D. Alphonso Iames Fajardo, Gouvernor of Murcia was sent by the King vnto the Constable, to cause him to come to court: but hee excused himselfe from coming presently, promising to be there soone after, notwithstanding it was farre from his thought: for he had intelligence with the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and others of the league, who drew men together from all parts, to come to the Court in armes, to the end they might haue the testament of the deceased king D. John, put in execution, and chafe away the Councell.

The Arch-bishop of S. Iames, the Earle of Translamara, the Masters of S. Iames and Calatraua, John Hurtado of Mendoza, Lord Steward of the kings house, & others (wherof some were named Tutors by the kings will, and some not) knowing that this was not the cause

23.
Cruelties and murders committed on the Iewes.

24.
D. Pedro of Castile demands
the office of Constable.

A cause which drew the Arch-bishop of Toledo, but only a colour pretended by him and his confederates to retire from Court, and to take armes, they also provided for their parts, and called all their friends to ayde them: they drew D. Leonora Queene of Nauar, vnto their league, binding themselves by oath one vnto another, and they wrought so, as the king Don Henry continued vnto the Queene his Aunt the pensions which the deceased King D. John was wont to giue her with an increase: By whose perswasion, and others of the Councell, he tooke the office of Constable from Don Alphonso of Arragon, who had enioyed it nine yeares, and gaue it to the Earle of Translamara, who was sonne to D. Frederic, Master of Saint Iames, and cousin to the king. Hereuppon they fell to armes in Castile, committing great spoyle, robberies, and murders of all sides, diuiding the Realmes, Prouinces, Citties, and Townes, especially Seuille, whereas Don Aluar Perez of Guzman, great Admiral of Castile, and D. Pedro Ponce of Leon, Lord of Marchena, Gouvernor generall of that citie, held the Councells part: and Don John Alphonso of Guzman, Earle of Niebla and others, that of the Kings testament.

The Arch-bishop of Toledo with the Master of Alcantara were about Auila, to whom they of the citie of Burgos made many protestations, offers and prayers in vaine, for a peace: the like they did to the Duke of Benauent, and then they sent vnto the King, who was come to Cuellar, beseeching him to giue care vnto a peace, and to end the troubles by a conuocation of the Estates; the which if he thought good to hold in their citie, they offered to deliuer all their children in hostage, for their assurance that should come. The King mooued with the loue and willingness of them of Burgos, sent the Legate and others to the Arch-bishop and his confederates, but they answered, That when they should be neere the place where the king was, they would declare their intentions more at large. The Duke of Benauent, and the Arch-bishop of Toledo, were already ioyned with their forces, consisting of fifteene hundred men at armes, and 3500. foote, vnto whome the Queene of Nauarre came, intreating them, that before matters grew worse, they should be satisfied with the resolution of the Estates: and whilst that she laboured with the confederates, the king went to Vailledolit, whither came about sixteen hundred men at armes, with some other forces. The confederates little regarding the Queene of Nauarre, came to lodge at Simancas, where as she was more amazed then before, and employed all her endeauors to make some accord: In the end shee obtrayned that there should be a conference at Perales, whereas at diuers times, in the presence of the Queene and Legate, the parties met and conferred. Once among the rest, the Arch-bishop being demanded by him of Saint Iames, if he had any true intent, that the deceased kings testament should take place: he made him no answer, for that the Duke of Benauent, who was not named in it, was present, whom he feared to offend: an infallible argument, that priuate respects did moue him more, then any zeale of the publike good, or the Kings seruice. It was concluded in Perales, that the Kings testament should be of force, and that the tutors named therein should gouerne: and to the end a peace might be the better entertained, and that all emulation and ialousie might cease, there were added vnto them Don Frederic duke of Benauent, Don Pedro Earle of Translamara, and the Master of Saint Iames: and for the better strengthening of this accord, the generall Estates were held at Burgos, John Hurtado of Mendoza, Pero Lopes of Ayala, Diego Lopes of Estuniga, and John Alphonso de la Cerde, either of them giuing one of his sonnes in hostage, for the assurance of such as should come to Court.

Thus the Estates were called at Burgos; which citie was at great charges for that cause, and for the kings seruice. But before any proceeding, the Councell pretending to bind Don Alphonso Earle of Gijon vnto them, being prisoner in the hands of the Master of S. Iames, they decreed his deliuerie, and procured the king to restore vnto him all the lands which he had enioyed in the Asturia's. There came vnto the assembly at Burgos, the king with Queene Catherine his spouse, the Infant Don Fernand, and his future wife D. Leonora, who lodged in the Castle, wherof Diego Lopes of Estuniga was capitaine. The Estates being entred into conference, there grew a new tumult: for some of the Noblemen not satisfied with that which had bene concluded in Perales, would haue D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon admitted to councell, besides the aboue-named, wherewith the Duke of

Queene of Nauar intangled
in the troubles
of castile.

Archb. of Toledo respects
not the publike
good.

Estates at Burgos for a peace.

D. Alphonso the kings vnkle deliuered out
of prison.

of Benauent his brother, the Queene of Nauarre, nor the Master of Saint Iames, were not A contented, saying, that his deliuerie had beene without their consents, with an intent to make vse of him to the preiudice of them three, and others that were of their opinion. Such was their inconstancie, as they which before would haue the kings will take effect, demanded now the accord of Perales. In the end they made choice of two of the greatest Doctors in Spaine, to be arbitrators, and to giue their aduice therein; which were Don Goncal Goncalles Bishop of Segobia, and Aluar Martines of Villareall, but they made their controuerfies more obscure, with their importune subtilties and obstinacie.

25.
Exactions caused immunities in Guipuscoa

Whilest that great men contended for the gouernement of the Realme, the Kings Officers who had charge to recouer his rights, and to receiue his reuenues exacted vpon the B people, according to an order which had beene set downe by the Councell, pressing an imposition which is called Pedido, wherewith the countrie was charged, in the time of the King Don Pedro, from the riuer of Ebro vnto the sea, without any regard of the Priuiled- King Don Pedro, from the riuer of Ebro vnto the sea, without any regard of the Priuiled- ges or exemptions of the Nobilitie, namely, of the Inhabitants of this Prouince of Gui- ges or exemptions of the Nobilitie, namely, of the Inhabitants of this Prouince of Gui- piscoa; which tribute had beene contradicted in the time of the sayd King D. Pedro, and piscoa; which tribute had beene contradicted in the time of the sayd King D. Pedro, and since in the raignes of Don Henry, and D. Iohn, who had caused such exactions to cease, in consideration of the auncient immunities of the Guipuscoans: but in the time of this king the Councell beeing diuided, and all things in combustion, the Treasurers had reui- king the Councell beeing diuided, and all things in combustion, the Treasurers had reui- ued this receipt, whereof the Inhabitants of the countrie complained in vaine. For this C cause there was an assembly of the towne and commonalties of the Prouince of Guipuf- coa in the parish Church of Saint Mary, in the towne of Tholoufa, in August this yeare 1392. whither came the Deputies of Tholoufa, Segura, Mondragon, Motrico, Gueta- ria, Villafranca, Vergara, Salmas, and Sarauz, to aduise what was expedient for the de- fence of their immunities, who decreed, That for asmuch as the Prouince of Guipuscoa had first beene peopled by Gentlemen, and in all degrees free, and that by reason of the barrenesse of the countrie, they had neuer beene charged with any tributes, they be- sought the King, and the Councell, established by the Estates of Castile and Leon, to for- bid the Collectors, or any that haue to deale with the kings treasure, to exact any more mony of them. And attending the Councels resolution vpon their petition, the sayd D Tribute should not be payed, beeing assured that it was both the King and the Councels intention, not to lay any vndue charge vpon them: they ordained by way of prouision, as followeth:

Articles made in the assembly of Tholoufa in Guipuscoa.

First, that the Collectors and receiuers comming to exact money, there should not any thing be payed them: but the sayd Collectors should be apprehended, and led to the assembly at Vsarraga, there the Councell to determine of them according vnto reason and equity.

2 That if any of the Collectors should arrest one of the Inhabitants of the countrie, by reason of the sayd tribute, he crying out, and demanding ayde, the neighbours with- out exception, shall be bound to go forth in armes, and pousue the sayd Collector, and E hauing taken him, present him to the assembly at Vsarraga.

3 If any Collector hauing leauied a pawne of one of the Inhabitants of the country, shall escape, and cannot be apprehended, the value of the pawne shall be taken out of the kings ordinarie reuenues, with all costs, damage, and interest, for the indemnitie of the pawne.

4 That all the people of the country shal iustifie the petition presented vnto the king, tending to this, that he shall prouide a necessarie remedie for this mischiefe, and they shall be bound to contribute towards the damages which may happen.

5 That if the merchandize or wares, which they of Guipuscoa are accustomed to send towards Victoria, Saluaterra, Treuigno, Arganson, and other parts of Alaua vnto the riuer of Ebro, shall be arrested and stayed by any commonalties, townes, Lords that haue iustice, or by any person whatsoever, in regard of these tributes and impositions, whosoever shall haue the losse, shall make it knowne vnto his superiors, and to this end the Councell shall assemble at Vsarraga, and the townes shall be bound to send, that is to say, Tholoufa ten men, Mondragon ten men, Segura ten men, Salmas two men, Vergara five men, Motrico three men, Guetaria three men, Villafranca ten men, and Sarraux two

A two men, of the most sufficient among them, who together shall ordaine of the restitu- tion of those things thus seized, with the charges and fines, to the end the owner may not be damnified.

6 And for that the Merins Majors, and rulers of the countrie, were accustomed to make their circuits in great troupes, so as the people were charged and damnified, to the prejudice of the lawes and liberties of the countrie, it was ordained that hee that should haue this Office, were he Knight or Esquire, should be receiued as a Knight or Esquire, in all townes and places, so as his force should alwaies remaine in townes, in the which if the sayd Merins, or their men, did commit any insolencie or violence, for what cause soe- uer, every man should be bound to take armes, and oppose himself against the sayd force, B appealing to the Councell and assembly of the sayd townes, and worke so as the liberties and priuiledges of the countrie might remaine vniuolated, and he that was wronged vn- damnified.

7 Item, that if by reason of the sayd imposition and tribute called Pedido, some sea- zure hath beene made either of men or goods, by the sayd Collectors, Receyuers, Iud- ges, or any other within a towne, and that the sayd towne did consent thereunto, or winke at the sayd seizure, and that it hath beene transported to some other place, and there re- ceived and detayned, and the partie interessed can get no restitution, in this case the o- ther townes beeing required by him, or some other for him, shall bee bound to go with C force, to the place where such persons or goods are detayned, and there take so much of the Inhabitants goods as shall be needfull to satisfie the interessed, and themselves also, who are come thither for this cause, for all their costs and charges, and for every man that hath beene carried away, they shall take two, and detayne them vntill the deliuerie of the first, with full satisfaction of their damages.

8 If by reason of these things any of the Inhabitants of the sayd townes or iurisdic- tions should be cited or adjoined before the Prouost of the Kings Court, or other Iudges, or otherwise called in what manner soeuer, they shall not be bound to appeare, but the sayd townes shall take his cause in hand, and send their Attorneys to appeare, and defend him that is cited, without any cost and charge vnto him, but at the charge of the sayd D Townes.

9 That there shall be a firme friendship and brother-hood, sworne betwixt the sayd townes, and the Inhabitants, such as in the time of the king D. Iohn, vpon the paines or- dayned, and they shal be bound to ayde one another, so as where any wrong is done, they shall employ both body and goods one for another, and maintaine themselves in iustice.

10 And for that in former times the townes aboue-named had a league with other townes of Guipuscoa, not mentioned in this accord, their meaning was, that it should not hereafter take place, but with the consent of the king and his Councell, and that at the instance of all the townes of Guipuscoa, the sayd brother-hood and ordonances thereto belonging, were confirmed by the king D. Henry their Lord.

E 11 If any Baylife, or other Magistrate, or Gouernour, should giue assignation to all the aboue-named townes, enioyning them to their Attorneys or chiefe men of the sayd townes, they shall name their Attorneys, and send them to the place appointed, vpon condition that he shall neither do, nor suffer any displeasure to be done vnto them by his Ministers, for the which they shall giue caution. And if the assignation bee giuen out of the aboue-named townes, if it were in the towne of Saint Sebastian, the Deputies of the confederate townes shall assemble at Tholoufa: if it were to appeare in the towne of Mi- randa of Yraurgi, called Azcoitia, or at Saluaterra, called Azpeytia, or at Elgoibar, that they shall assemble at Guetaria, or Motrico, to consult what is fit to be done, both for the kings seruice, the preservation and increase of the sayd townes, and of their Im- munities and Nobility.

12 That in two assemblies which were made yearely in the name of the sayd brother- hood, the sayd townes should be bound to appeare by their deputies, as hath beene accu- stomed in precedent times: but extraordinary conuocations which should be made by the other townes of Guipuscoa, they shall not be bound to go nor send, vntill their gene- rall affociation be confirmed by the king, at the sute of them all in general.

To these Articles the sayd townes bound their goods and persons for ever, vpon paine of fifty maraudis of money then currant to be payed by him that should infringe them, and applyable to the Councell of the rest, which should maintaine the contents thereof, to dispose according to their wils: and the towne which hath sayled, shall be forced by the rest to pay the fine, by all ordinarie and extraordinarie meanes, with all charges, damages and interrests.

It is credible that the other townes of Guipuscoa made the like associations, in regard of their priuiledges and liberties. Vpon this question they pleaded against the Kings Receyuer, and there are letters found granted by the King Don Henry vpon the same, by the which he did abolish these tributes and exactions in fauour of the townes and places of Saluaterra of Iraurgui, Miranda of Iraurgui, Villamajor of Marquina, called Elgoibar, Val of Mendaro, Monreal of Deua, S. Andrew of Ayuar, Placenzia, Elgueta, S. Cruz of Cestona, the Chastellenie of Sayas, S. Nicholas of Orto, Bellamont of Vsuruill, with Aguinaga, Altigarraga, Aynduayn, Vreota, S. Peter of Alteaçu, the quarter of Larraul, Ichazo, Cicurguil, Gauria, Araun: the country of Lescano of Aduna, the Chastellenie of Aiztondo, that of Aleria, Curnatraga, the parish of Beasain, Arama, Alcega, Echafonda, Saldibia, Gaiña, Légorreta, Goyas, Vidania, Beyçaina, Rexil, Aya, and the territorie of Azgoitia, whereof there are letters found giuen in Saint Marie of Pelajos, in the year 1399. and confirmed at Valledolit 1401. and by other kings. Thus the Guipuscoans defended their freedoms and liberties against the Kings Officers, who made their profite during the confusions and troubles betwixt the Noblemen and the Councell. Afterwards all the Townes, Boroughs and places of this Prouince of Guipuscoa were vnited and made one bodie, and haue maintained themselves so vnto this day, to the great good and generall commoditie of the Countrey, and the seruice of the soueraigne King.

26
Union of all the townes of Guipuscoa.
An. 1392.

The Estates of Burgos continued with little concord, by reason whereof in the beginning of the year 1392. the Deputies of the Estates, with the consent of the parties contending, propounded euery one to write his voice in bulletins, vpon that which was in question: Whether they should follow the testament of King John, or not, and the sayd bulletins being cast into a coffer and then opened, the partie that had most voyces should carrie it: but without comming to this trial, the Queene Donna Leonora, who alwaies laboured to reconcile these differences, made another accord, and brought so many reasons, as Don Frederic duke of Benauent, and D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon, were received into the gouernement and counsell: so as the Councell should consist of tenne spirituall men, besides the Deputies of the sixe townes, whereof siue should reside fixe moneths: and these were thus diuided: the Duke of Benauent, the Arch-bishop of Toledo, the Master of Saint James, and John Hurtado of Mendoza for one fixe moneths: the Arch-bishop of Saint James, the Earles of Gijon and Transtamara, and the Master of the Calatraua for the other: the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Niebla should make vp the ten, but they would not come to Court. It seemed by this expedient, practised by the Queene of Navarre, that the affairs were in a course of peace: but the death of Diego Sanchez of Roja a knight of the Earle of Gijons faction, who was slaine neere vnto Burgos by two horsemen of the Duke of Benauents house troubled the whole assembly againe, and had like to haue caused great slaughter in the citie: he that was slayne was interred, and the murderers escaped. For which fact the Deputies of the Estates were so much discontented, as they neglected all that had bene decreed, and done, touching the establishing of a Councell, and took the way of writing their voyces in bulletins, the which being put into a coffer & thag opened, it was found that all did ioyntly require to haue the will of the K. John in force. Whereupon the Duke of Benauent, who was not mentioned, went from Court much discontented. The Arch-bishop of Toledo seeing him retired, agreed with them of the aduerser party, vpon these conditions: That whensoever the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Niebla should forbear to come to Court, hee should supply their places, and that a moitie of the kings reuenues should be deliuered to him, to be distributed as he should thinke fit, that he should be satisfied for the charges hee had bin at in seeking the execution of K. Johns testament. These things thus concluded, the next day the king

Accord between twixt the Noblemen of Castile.

A king with the knights and deputies of the Prouinces being present, it was decreed, that the testament of the deceased king D. John should be obserued, and that sixe tutors with the Deputies of Burgos, Toledo, Leon, Seuile, Cordoua and Murcia, should gouerne. There were then present of the tutors, the Arch-bishops of Toledo and S. James, the Master of Calatraua who was successor both in the dignity and tutelage to D. Pero Nuygues, and D. John Hurtado of Mendoza, representing in like manner in this charge D. Pero Gonzales of Mendoza, named by the will. And for that the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Niebla were absent, the king sent for them to come to Court by a certaine day. The Legate was very ioyful of this accord, and absolved all them that had sworne to the contrarie: and in like manner the king did pardon all those that had made any leagues or assemblies. And to giue some contentment to the Duke of Benauent, and the Earle of Gijon, who were excluded from the gouernment, the tutors agreed to giue to either of them a pension of a million of maraudis yearly, during their liues. In this manner the gouernement of the realmes of Castile began to take some form: but yet the factions dyed not, for euery man fought rather his owne aduancement, then the publike good, as well such as remained in Court, as those that left it: some with extreame ambition and desire to gouerne all, as the Archb. of Toledo, and others vpon diuers pretexts of discontents, they did for a long time entertayne diuisions and factions.

Order for the gouernment of
Castile.

During the troubles of Castile, D. John king of Portugal, did quietly enioy his conquered realme, with whom the tutors of Castile sought to prolong the truce, which was almost expired. For the effecting whereof they sent vnto the frontier D. John Serran bishop of Siguença, Garcia Gonçal of Herera, and Diego Fernandes of Cordoua, Marshals of Castile, with Anthony Sanchez, Doctor and Auditor: to whom vpon proposition of a perpetual peace, or of a long truce, there were such vnreasonable conditions demanded by the deputies of Portugal, as the Castilian Ambassadors were forced to return without effect. The K. of Portugal shewed himself intractable in his demands, by reason of the new support he thought to find in Castile. For they treated a marriage betwixt a base daughter of his called D. Beatrice, and D. Frederic duke of Benauent, who gaue willingly care vnto it.

27
Portugal.

Treaty of marriage to the prejudice of Castile.

The Ambassadors hauing made their report to the king D. Henry their master, whome they found at Segobia, hee sent back into Portugal the bishop of Siguença, and Doctor Anthony Sanchez, adding vnto them Pero Lopes of Aizala, Alcaide Maior of Toledo. They were much troubled concerning the marriage of D. Frederic, whereof the Q. of Navar did aduertise the king D. Henry, yea she did solicit in the name of the D. of Benauent, that either he might bee allowed to marry the daughter of the K. of Portugal, or else they should giue him the Countesse of Albuquerque to wife, who was secretly accorded to the Infant D. Frederic. The K. desiring neither of these marriages, seemed to refer all to the Countesses will, who told the Archb. of Toledo in the presence of them all, that shee would do all that pleased the king: wherefore there was hope giuen to the Queene of Navar to haue the marriage finished at Arenalo, and a dispatch was sent to D. Frederic, to aduertise him of what was past: but all this was but to diuert the marriage with Portugal, being more pleasing to the Duke, then that of the Countesse of Albuquerque, the which hee made openly knowne vnto the king: wherefore the king proceeding in the same manner, sent the Archb. of Toledo to him, to perswade him with reason, that neither of these two marriages was fit for him, and rather to offer him the Marquis of Villena's daughter, with a more ample dowrie, then that which the king of Portugal could giue to D. Beatrice his daughter. But he could draw no other answer from D. Frederic, but that many Noblemen about the king declaring themselves his enemies, he was forced to seeke fauor and friendship in Portugal.

At the same time the Inhabitants of Zamora, growing iecalous of the captaine of the castle, and of the tower of S. Sauior (being a gentleman called Nugno Martinez of Villaycan, a deuoted seruant to the Duke of Benauent) put themselves in armes, and made trenches and barricado's against him, saying, that he had some bad dessein with the Duke of Benauent, whose men he receiued daily into those forts in great numbers, so as they sent to demand succours of the king, and of the Master of the Calatraua, who had bene sent with some troupes, to keepe a garrison at Salamanca, against the frontier of Portugal.

28 Troubles in Zamora.

The Master considering the consequence of this trouble, at this time when as the truce with Portugal being expired, they expected warre, would not send any succours, lest he should incense the Duke in shewing himselfe partiall; the which pleased the king, who sent the Bishop of Sigüenza speedily to Benauent, whereas the Arch-bishop of Toledo was yet, to the end they might so worke with the Duke, as these troubles of Zamora might be pacified, the which they effected, and the Archb. came to Zamora, & brought the captaine, vpon assurance that the king would take it well to promise to deliuer the fort of S. Sauior, into the hands of Fernand Alphonso of Montenegro, Governour of Toro: the towne also gaue hostages: which things beeing thus ended, the Archb. returned to the king at Segobia.

29
Portugal.

conditions of peace proposed by the king
of Portugal.

Castile.

The Deputies of Castile appointed to treat a peace with Portugal, hauing met with the Prior of S. Iohn of Portugal, and others appointed by the King D. Iohn at Sabugal, & conferred often of that busines, they could not yeeld to those hard conditions which were demanded: for the Portugals would haue the townes of Miranda and Sabugal left free to them: that the king D. Henry should giue 12. Gentlemen, and 12. good Burgeses in hostage for 12. yeares, for the assurance of the peace, which should be changed euery fourte yeares, and others of the like quality deliuered for them. And that during the sayd 12. yeares he should not giue any ayde vnto the Queen D. Beatrix, nor to the Infants D. Iohn and D. Denis, brethren to the deceased king D. Fernand, who were in Castile, nor to any other that should attempt against the Portugals: that all prisoners of either side should be deliuered, with other conditions, which seemed so hard vnto the Castillans, as they durst not adventure to promise any thing, but onely concluded a truce for two moneths, that they might conferre more amply vpon this pacification.

In the meane time the king D. Henry came to Medina del campo, to bee neere to Portugal, and to the duke of Benauent, who made shew to breed some innouation within the realme, hauing drawne together about 500. lances and a great number of Gentlemen at Pedroço, and about Toro. By reason wherof, & of many other infolencies, wherof complaints came daily to Court, the king sent the Archb. of Toledo againe vnto him, with some Deputies of the citties which were of the Councell, to let him vnderstand, how vnseemely it was for him to entertaine the realme, whereof he was a member, in such ielousie, and to consume the people by the spoils and robberies of his men who kept the fields: to what end went he so armed? what feared he? whereon did he complaine? what great benefit did he pretend by the allyance of Portugal, that he should disdaine the fauours of his king, who had dealt both bountifully and honourably with him, giuing him a million of maraudis yearly, and might hope for greater matters, and seeing that he had such ample testimonies of the kings loue, and the counsels, to perswade him to come to court, where he might purchase more fauor then euer? The duke answered to all that which the Archb. had propounded vnto him, that he had neuer giuen care to a marriage with Portugal, but in case a peace or a long truce were concluded betwixt the two realmes. As for that hee went accompanied with souldiers, it was well knowne that he had enemies in Court, who had factions throughout the realme, which forced him to stand vpon his guard, and therefore they should not hold it strange if he came not to court. Moreouer, if he had receiued fauors from the king, he was ready to employ them in his seruice, and his whole estate. The Archb. deliuered many reasons vnto him, in presence of the Deputies to pacifie him, and then returned to Medina del campo, where hauing giuen an accompt vnto the king and councell of his employment, he held it fit to content the duke in some sort, for the marriage of Portugal was much aduanced. Thereupon it was bruted (whosoever were the author) that the Duke approached neere vnto the towne, and that hee had intelligence with some, to be brought in with his forces, which caused a great mutiny among them, and euery man began to gather souldiers together for his owne assurance.

The Archb. who was a friend to the duke (so far forth as he did entertaine the troubles wherein he tooke delight) propounded a means which he held very conuenient, to auoid the spoiles which might follow these quarrels, which was, that he with the Archb. of S. Iames, and the Master of the Calatraua should retire themselves to their houses, and that about the king there should only remaine Iohn Hurtado de Mendoza, and the Deputies of townes,

A townes, and that the king should consult with them how to giue content to the duke of Benauent, and to find him a party equall to that which was offered him in Portugall.

By these factions, all the Realme was in combustion, and all sorts of infolencies were committed both in town and countrie, iustice was abused, and the treasure misgouerned. The city of Seuille was molested by D. Pedro Ponce of Leon, Lord of Marchena, and D. Alphonso of Guzman, Admirall of Castile, who seized thereon, in the absence of D. Iohn Alphonso of Guzman, Earle of Niebla one of the tutors, chasing many of his seruants and followers out of the city. On the other side Nugno Martinez of Villaycan, captaine of the fort of Zamora, not satisfied with the accord which had beene made by the meanes of the Archb. of Toledo, sent to the duke of Benauent to haue him approach, and he would deliuer him vp the castle which he had in guard: the duke posting thither, could not effect this enterprise, for that the inhabitants of Zamora, being aduertised by some of the dukes men, provided for it, whereupon the Duke returned, and many that followed him did abandon him: wherevpon the king sent the Archb. of S. Iames, and the Master of Calatraua to assure the townes that were suspected, but they were shut out of Toro, the inhabitants saying, that they would not receiue any, if the king were not in person, but they entered into Zamora, where as many knights of the dukes traine yeilded vnto them, and soon after the king came. But the Duke was aduertised thereof at the castle of Majorca, belonging to the Infant D. Fernand, by Iohn Alphonso de la Cerda, who hauing bin high Steward of the Infants house, and then displaced by the kings tutors, substituting in his place Pero Suarez of Quignones, Governour of Leon, had through despight fallen to the Duke of Benauents partie.

Whilest that these contended in Castile, the Deputies, appointed to treat a peace with the King of Portugal during the truce which had beene prolonged, came to Extremoz in the yeare 1393. the Portugal demanding for a finall resolution, these Articles following. That they should giue in hostage the base sons of the duke of Benauent, of the Earls of Gijon, and of Niebla, (for the great men of Spaine had more base children then legitimate) the nephewes of the Masters of S. Iames and Calatraua, of the Arch-bishops of Toledo, and S. Iames, of Iohn Hurtado of Mendoza, and of Diego Lopes of Estuniga. But about all they demanded the Duke of Benauents son, thinking he would not giue him, vnlesse the king of Castile, would deliuer the castle of Zamora into his hands, the which they desired, being assured that the Duke was wholly at their deuotion: but when they vnderstood, that he had sayled to enter that fort, and that he began to be abandoned by many of the knights which had folowed him, they became more tractable, and yeilded to a truce for 15. yeares, so as they would giue them in hostage, the Earle of Gijons son, and eleuen Knights sonnes more, with 12. children of the citizens of Burgos, Toledo, Leon, Seuille, Cordoua, and Zamora: yet would not the Deputies of Castile conclude this truce, which was most beneficiall for Portugall, but demanded some respite to aduertise the king and his tutors. The king with his councell hauing considered the danger wherinto the homebred troubles, together with a forraigne warre would draw them, they yeilded to all the Portugals demanded, namely, not to ayde nor assist D. Beatrix the widow Queen, nor D. Iohn, nor D. Denis her Vncles. Thus a truce was concluded for fifteene yeares betwixt Castile and Portugal.

The Court being in the cittie of Zamora, the captaine of the castle refused for some daies to deliuer the place vp to the king, saying, that his father Iohn Martinez of Villaycan lately deceased, being Governour of Zamora, and he had held it by fealty and homage, and that they might not deliuer it vp vntill the king were 14. yeares old complete: but the tutors sought him by so many meanes, and made him such promises, that he should be recompensed for his fathers estates, which had beene giuen to others, as in the end he deliuered the place into their hands, for the which he was in effect recompensed. They had promised him the gouernement of Ledesma, which did belong to the Countesse of Albuquerque, but they of the place refusing him, for that they did not trust him, he was otherwise provided for. The Court remaining at Zamora, the Archb. weary of too much rest, retired himselfe into his Bishoprick, being not greatly affected to the kings seruice, but to take part and adhere wholly to the Duke of Benauent, he now gaue them greater cause to suspect 30.

Portugal.
1393.
Demands of Portugall to Castile.

31
Castile.

Mistries of sig
will warre.

suspect him, for that he grew in choller with them of the Councell vpon his departure, A pressing them to giue the Duke of Benauent contentment, and to pay him the Arrerages of his pensions: and that they should also giue satisfaction to D. Diego Hurtado of Mendo-ça, touching the Admiralty which he demanded, and to John of Velasco, for the Office of Lord Chamberlaine to the King, and to Don John Alphonso de la Cerda, touching the place of Lord Steward to the Infant D. Fernand, which they had taken from him, to giue it to Pero Suarez of Quignones. Whereunto they answered mildly, that it was fitt such men should be satisfied, and that they would resolute, according to iustice and equity, and as their dignitie required. Besides these importunities, and other presumptions, it was reported, that he had receiued the twentieth penny of all merchandize and goods which had bene sold within the Realme, with other vnlawfull impositions: whereupon the Go-uernors gaue order to stay him, and Don John of Velasco. Whereupon they were commanded to deliuer vnto the King or his Captaines, the castles which they held: so as the Arch-bishop was constrainned, notwithstanding any excuses, and allegations of his good seruice, to dispossesse himselfe of the castles of Talauera, Vzeda, and Alcala the old, and John of Velasco of that of Arnedo. For the Arch-bishops imprisonment there was a generall interdiction in the Diocesses of Zamora, Palence, & Salamanca, and in the court.

Archb. of Toledo and D. John of Velasco detained prisoners in court.

Such things past in Castile, during the minoritie of the King D. Henry, which did much grieve the confederate Princes their allies, to see a young Prince so ill intreated by his ambitious subiects; among which, the most remarkable were the great Prelates of the Realme. Among others, Charles the sixth, the French king, did the office of a Christian Prince and friend, sending this yeare 1393. a sollemne ambassage to the king of Castile, she which came to Toro, where as the Court then remayned, to condole for the disobedience of his subiects, especially of the Noblemen, offering the king, in their Masters name, all ayde and support of the forces of France, if he had need. The French did also write to euery one of the Gouvernors, to the chiefe Noblemen of Castile, and to the principall townes, exhorting them by the duty which they did owe vnto God, & to the crown of Castile, to obey their King, and to seeke the peace and quiet of the realme. This ambas-sage was receiued, heard, and sent backe with great honor, as it was fitt.

To draw the Duke of Benauent to the kings seruice, the Arch-bishop of S. James went to him being at Tordehumas, a place belonging to the duke, hauing a safe-conduct from D. Alphonso Henriques of Castile, son to the deceased D. Frederic, Master of S. James. This Archb. wrought in such sort, as he reclaime the duke, promising him in the kings name a confirmation of his annuall pension, and to giue him 70000. thousand frankes of gold, to aduance him to some good marriage, so as he would leaue the allyance of Portugal, and moreouer, the King would pardon him all that was past. After which the Duke came to Burgos to the king, without any distrust, yea he refused a son of D. John Hurtado of Mendoça, and one of D. Diego Lopes of Estuniga, with the Arch-bishoppes nephew, which were offered vnto him for hostages: at which his free disposition the king and the whole court did much reioyce. Being at Burgos, the truce concluded with Portugal was proclaymed, as it had bene in like manner in Lisbon: thither came Ambassadors from the Duke of Lancaster, to demand two yeares arrerages of the pension which the deceased king D. John had granted to the sayd Duke, and to the Dutchesse D. Constance his wife, being foure score thousand Frankes of gold, the which was willingly payed, and therefore the Duke did quit the interest which hee pretended, for want of due payment.

35
Minority of D.
Henry king of
Castile.

The King Don Henry growing to the age of foureene yeares, when as hee should take vpon him the gouernement of the Realme, being riper of iudgement then of yeares, he did anticipate three moneths to free himselfe of his tutors: and therefore hauing called the Noblemen and Prelats which did freely frequent the Court, with the Deputies of the townes, in the presence of D. Domingo Bishop of S. Ponce, Legat to Pope Clemen, hee declared that from thence forth he tooke the gouernement of his realmes into his owne hands: wherefore none of them should any more stile themselves Tutors, nor meddle with the gouernment, vnlesse they were called.

In this assembly the Legate was a meanes to haue the Arch-bishop of Toledo restored to those places and Castles which had bene before violently taken from him, and the inter-

A interdiction of the three aboue-named Bishoppricks was taken away, the king making great submissions: There they also treated to reforme many disorders within the Realm, by reason that Bishoppricks and other spirituall-liuings were giuen to strangers, whereas they should be employed to entertaine youth at schoole, or to reward men of merit, and such as were borne in the Country, which was the cause that Spaniards did not studie, for want of meanes, whereby the Realme was much dammified, not onely in spirituall matters, but also in temporall. The redresse must come chiefly from the Pope, who being importuned by such as had bin preferred to benefices, and by letters of fauor from forraigne Princes) decreed, that they should enioy them, but after their deaths none should be preferred to any benefice in Castile and Leon, if he were not borne in the country. In this businesse the king carried himselfe afterwards as he pleased. Being free from his Gouvernors, hee had many waightie affaires, especially for the confirmation of the peace made with the Duke of Lancaster, and for the truce newly concluded with the king of Portugal, there being a reservation in both treaties of a confirmation when he should come to the full age of foureene yeares. And moreouer, it did behooue him to send an ambassage into France, to renew the League with king Charles the sixth. Besides, the or-dinarie expences in the Gouvernours time amounted to fife and thirtie millions of mara-uidis then currant mony, so as it was needfull to cut off this excessiue charge: for these considerations and others, he called a generall assembly of the Estates at Madrid. Whi-lest that they assembled, he passed into Biscay, where hee had not bene since his com-ming to the Crowne.

Orders for the giuing of spiritual liuings.

The Companies and commonalties of the countrie, at his comming assembled in the field of Arechualaga, according to their vsuall manner, demanding from the king a confirmation of their auncient liberties, rights, and priuiledges, the which he granted. More-ouer, they desired to bee freed from all royall Prerogatiues which had bene imposed in that Prouince, since the death of King John, and that he should confirme the new societies erected among them, for the punishment of malefactors: and hee did also grant the combat as it was vsed among Gentlemen in Castile: of all which things he granted then full power with the aduice of his Councell. There the King was receiued for the Lord of Biscay, where hauing kissed his hands, he was led to the church in the towne of Larraberna, where according to the custome of his Predecessors Lords of Biscay, hee tooke an oath vpon the altar to maintaine the rights of the countrie. Being afterwards come to Guernica, some Biscayens presented a petition vnto him, to haue all crimes which had bene committed in the country since the death of King John pardoned, from the which hee was dissuaded by the Noblemen of his Councell, that loued iustice to auoyd the pernicious consequence thereof. Hee did also sweare at Berneo, in Saint Eusemia's church, to maintaine the freedoms and liberties of that Town, but not so amply as they desired.
 Being returned to Guernica, after much disputation touching the combat, which some demanded, and others denyed, he granted it by pluralitie of voyces, and then was this manner of challenge brought into Biscay, the King being set vnder a tree, in the vsuall place, and after the accustomed manner. Then hee returned by Durango and Victoria to Burgos, and from thence to Madrid, where the Estates assembled.

Demands made by them of Biscay
to the king
of Castile.

This yeare some Biscayns and Guipuscoans, armed certaine shippes at Scuile, at their owne cost and charge, to seeke their fortunes at sea, and came to one of the Ilands of the Canaries, called Lanzarote, where being landed, they made prey of all they found, against whome the Ilanders with their King gathered together, and came to encounter them, but the Biscayns had the vpper hand: they slue many of their enemies, and caried away an hundred and seenty prisoners, with the King and Queene of the Iland: hauing well obserued these Ilands, with the number, greatnesse and situation, they returned into Spaine with great store of hydes, wax, and other things, whereof those Ilands abound. The king D. Henry was very ioyfull of this exploit, and from that time challenged a right of propriety in the Ilands of the Canaries, which they hold to be the ancient fortunat Ilands, whereof he afterwards gaue the conquest to a French Gentleman, called John of Betancourt, reseruing the fealty and homage thereof vnto his Soueraigntie.

33 Discovery of the Canaries.

In the assembly of the Estates held at Madrid, the Kings majoritie was confirmed, who also to court, to giue his opiniop touching these things, but hee answered, that hee would A not come, whilest the Archbishop of Toledo was in court.

36.
Moorez.

With these intestine troubles, the King D. Henry was almost drawn into an vnseasonable warre, with the Moores of Granado, by the vaine ouerweening of D. Martin Iuanes of Barbuda, maister of the Alcántara, a Portugal borne, who being entred into quarrell with Ioseph King of Granado, touching religion, would make triall of the truth of Christian religion by armes; of his person against the King of Granado, or of a hundred Christian Knights against two hundred Moores, or more, to that proportion, vnto a thousand. The King being aduertised of this other tumult, hee commanded the maister by his letters not to enter into this action; for that hee would not by any meanes haue B the truce broken with the Moores: but the maister not regarding, the Kings prohibition, marched to Cordoua, with three hundred Launces, and one thousand foote, hauing a crosse for his Ensigne. They of Cordoua, let him know that he should not undertake this enterprize, which was contrary to the Kings will and seruice, and the peace of the country, giuing him many examples of their ruine which haue caused vnecessary wars: but he gaue more credit to an Hermit, called Iohn del Sayo, who had assured him that hee should haue the victory, wishing him not to giue care to any that said the contrary: Moreouer being much giuen to Astronomy, he thought he had foreseene something C by the starres. The wisest men of Cordoua, namely D. Alphonso and D. Diego; Lords of Aguilar, seeing that no reasons could preuaile with the maister, would haue stopped his passage at the city bridge: but he was so fauoured by the superstitious multitude, vnder colour that it was dishonourable to hinder an enterprize of the crosse against Infidels: so as he not only past, but so augmented his troups, as being come to Alcala the Royal, he had aboue five thousand foote. At Alcala D. Alphonso Fernandes of Cordoua Lord of Aguilar, and his brother D. Diego Fernandes, came vnto him, who did admonish him againe, adding withall, that euery one would hold it indiscreetly done of him, who was reputed a wise Knight, and Maister of the Order of Alcántara, to goe and desie the King of Granado, who was so neere, as with in lesse then two daies hee might encounter him with two hundred thousand foote, and fifty thousand horse, and that without doubt, besides the daunger and hurt hee might doe vnto the realme, by the breach of the truce, D and defeat of his men, he should blemish his honour, and draw vpon himselfe perpetuall blame, amongst all men that professed armes as a rash and ill aduised captaine: but finding him obstinate, and pretending that it would be held cowardise and basenesse in him, if hauing past so farre, hee should now returne: wherevpon they wished him to lead his men to the riuier of Agores, which makes the limit betwixt Granado and Castile, and there attend the King of Granado a day or two: if hee appeered, hee should either fight with him body to body, or else a hundred Christians against two hundred Moores, as they agreed: But if the Moores came not to the confines, hee should bring backe his troups, and so hee should preserve his honour and reputation. The Maister who was confirmed in his desire to fight with the Moores, being moreouer incensed for that the Granadins had intreated two Gentlemen ignominiously, whom hee had sent vnto their King, to carry this challenge; hee answered brauely to these Knights, that hee thanked them for their good aduice, but he was resolued not to stay, vntill hee saw the port of Eluira at the city of Granado, or fight with the Moores, if hee met them vpon the way, & that he did hope to let the world see a miracle within few daies. Thus he entred vnfortunatly into the country of Granado, and did assault the tower of Excla, where hee was hurt in the hand, and neere vnto him were three of his men slaine by the defendants, whereas hee beganne to bee amazed, for the Hermit which followed him had told him, that he should not loose a man, and therefore hee demanded of him what it ment, that they had already slaine three of his men, to whom the Hermit answered, that it was ment, in battaile, and not at the siege of places, the which the Maister beleued, as assaying the tower more furiously then before.

Great power
of the realme
of Granado.

Afores the bonds betwixt Granado and Castile.

Hermit an Impostor.

The King of Granado seeing the rashnesse of this vnadvised Maister of the Order of Alcántara, sent Ambassadors to the King of Castile, to complaine of the breach of the truce made betwixt them, and to demanda if it were by his commandement or not. On

A On the other side hee assembled a good number of horse and foote, with the which hee marched towards the frontier, he surprized the maister, who was ill aduertised, and charged him, with his troups so furiously, as without giuing them time to arme, hee slue the maister, and all his horsemen, with most of his footmen, of the which about fiftene hundred saued themselves by flight. The maister D. Martin Iuanes caused himselfe to bee surnamed Without feare, and there is such an Inscription found vpon his tombe in Alcántara, whether his body was carried by the permission of the King of Granado. The King of Castile had newes of this defeat being in the Monastery of Santa Maria of Pelayos, neere vnto the towne of Saint Martin de val d'Eglise, where in a manner at the same time arrived the Ambassadors from the King of Granado, who made their complaint, and demanded if the maister of Alcántara were entred in hostile manner into Granado, by his commandement, and what his pleasure was for the entertayning of the truce. The King answered, that what the maister had done did much displease him, and that he had forbidden him by his letters to undertake such quarrells, it auayling nothing to countenance religion by the breach of the truce, which he desired to entertaine with the King of Granado his friend: but he had not obeyed him, for the which he had beene punished, if God by his iust iudgement had not abandoned him to bee slaine by the Moores, and his men defeated, as they had well deserued, whereof he was newly aduertised, to his great content. The Messengers were sent backe with this answer, the which C did increase the ioy which the Moorish King conceived for his victory, by the assurance which they brought him of the continuance of the truce betwixt Granado and Castile.

Ambassade
from the king of Granado to the King of
Castile.

This trouble vpon the Moores frontier, was a pretext for the Duke of Benauent and other of the confederates to arme, and to fortifie themselves, euery one in his quarter, saying, it was to be ready at the Kings commandement, if the Moores did enter into Andalusia. The King did cause D. Fernand Roderiques of Villalobos, to bee chosen maister of the Knights of Alcántara, in the place of the deceased Barbuda. D. Lawrence Suarez of Figueroa maister of Saint Iames, vnderstood of this route in Ocagne, where he was, and came presently to the King being at Pelayos; he aduised him to haue his forces in readinesse for all euents, assuring him that he should easily suppress the Duke of Benauent and the Earles of Gijon and Transamara, with other Malcontents, the which hee should not much regard, but rather bee carefull of the Moorish warres, if they grew hot. And to assure the frontier of Andalusia it was expedient that he were sent to Villa Real, with the Archbishop of Toledo, to ioine with the Maister of the Calatrava, and that the King should come to Toledo: promising moreouer that he would perswade D. Alphonso of Arragon Marquis of Villena to come and doe him seruice. The King beleued this counsell, and came to Toledo, whether D. Diego Lopes of Estuniga came vnto him, and gaue an account of the goiage which hee had made vnto D. Iohn Garcia Almirique Archbishop of Saint Iames: but the King being otherwise aduertised of the disobedience of the Duke of Benauent, and of his confederats, and how they continually leauied men, he came to Illesca, being followed by the Archbishop of Toledo, the Maister of Saint Iames, the Earle of Niebla, D. Diego Hurtado of Mendoza Admirall, Iohn Hurtado of Mendoza Lord Steward, Diego Lopes of Estuniga chiefe Iustice, Ruy Lopes of Aualos Chamberlaine, and other Noblemen, with about seuentene hundred Launces.

37
D. Henry re-duceth the rebels to his obedience.

Heere D. Alphonso of Arragon Marquis of Villena, who had not approched neere the court all the Kings reigne, came and kist his hands, being accompanied with a hundred Knights and Squiers of the country of Valencia, which he had aduentured through the absence of the Earle of Transamara his competitor, who was in disgrace with the King D. Henry. The Marquis hauing purged himselfe of such things as might bee objected against him, and made many excuses, for his not comming to court, he made sure to be restored to his Office of Constable of Castile, which had beene taken from him by the Gouernors, to conferre it vpon D. Pedro Earle of Transamara, to the preiudice of his honour and dignity, to whom the King gaue a gracious answer, assuring him that he would order his affaires with all equity and Iustice: then he intreated him to passe the mountaines and to come with him into Castile the Old, but the Marquis excused him selfe,

D. Alphonso of Arragon received gratitously by the king of Castile.

selfe, saying, that he was not come so well appointed as he desired to doe him seruice, A but if he gaue him meanes he would returne willingly to serue him. So he returned into his country, not well satisfied with the King D. Henry, who made no account to restore him to his office of Constable, but soone after, by the aduice of the Archbishop of Toledo, he tooke from him the title of Marquis of Villena, for that it seemed not safe, nor profitable for the Estate of Castile, that a Marquisate fronting vpon a forraine Realme, should remaine in the hands of a Knight who had so strict an alliance as the Marquis D. Alphonso had with the Kings and Realme of Arragon. From Illesca the King past to Vaileddolit, where he was aduertised that the duke of Benauent was at Cisneros with six hundred Launces, and two thousand foote; and the Archbishop of Saint Iames in Amusco, with other six hundred Launces and one thousand foote. Many were of opinion that the Kings forces should be led against them, to fight with them: but the founder iudgment dissuaded al fighting, if it were possible, for the realm should looke of either side, besides the hazard where into the King should thrust both his Estate and life, by a battaile, to the which a Prince must neuer come against his subiects, vnlesse he be forced by ineuitable necessity. This aduice preuailed, and there were sent vnto the Archbishop of Saint Iames, and at his request, John Hurtado, and Diego Lopes of Mendosa to Calabaganos, with whom they wrought so, as they drew him to court vpon assurance, whereas the Archbishop did also obtaine a safe-conduit for the Duke of Benauent, to whom he went himselfe, and brought him to court. The duke being in the Kings presence, sought to free himselfe of the accusations which were laied against him. First he maintayned that he had taken none of the Kings reuenues within his iurisdiction, but what was due vnto him, the which should not be held so great a crime, seeing that many prelats and others of lesse quality then himselfe, had often vied it, and were not drawn into questiō. As for the men of war which he had gathered together, he had therein followed the general command, for feare of war with the Moores, after the defeat of the maister of Alcantara: and if he had bene at Roa, to see the Queene of Nauarre his sister, it was not preiudicial to the realm, nor contrary to the Kings seruice. These excuses were held neither good nor true by the king, who notwithstanding told him, that he would willingly forger al that was past, so as he would from thenceforth liue in peace and obedience, propounding vnto him these conditions. That if it were found he had leauied more money then had bene assigned him at the last Estates held at Madrid, he should restore it vnto the king, or to such as it did belong: that he should cause D. Pedro to come to court, whom the King pardoned, for that which did concerne him, restoring to others their interests: that the duke should giue his two base sonnes in hostage, and should leaue in deposito the castles of Medina del Riosecco, and Tordehumos for foure yeeres; with this clause that if he raised any tumults, those places should come vnto the King: That if he should fall from the Kings seruice, certain Knights of his household should promise & swear to turne vnto the kings party: that the pension of an hundred & 15. thousand Marauidis, granted vnto the Duke at the Estates at Madrid, should be augmented to five hundred thousand: that for the seuentie thousand frankes of gold which had bene promised him for his marriage, the King gaue him the reuenues of Valence de Campo, the which John of Portugal had till then enjoyed, and now he tooke it from him, for that hee had bene a practiser and confederat against his Estate. These things being thus ordred, the duke and the Archbishop went from court, and being come to Cisneros, the duke ratified all, and dismissed his troups, retayning only a hundred launces for the Kings seruice.

Within few daies after D. Alphonso Henriquez came vnto the King being at Vaileddo-lit, with a letter of credit from the Constable D. Pedro Earle of Transimara his brother, telling the King, that if it pleased him to giue some assurance vnto the Earle, hee would come to court: wherevpon the King assured him, and hee came presently, freeing himselfe of many things whereof he had bene accused: then he complained of D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon, who had forcibly taken from him the towne of Paredes of Naua, which the deceased King D. John had giuen him in exchange for the towne of Alua de Tormes, which he had taken from him, to giue it to D. John Infant of Portugal.

The King gaue the Constable a good reception, promising to provide for all things according

Duke of Benauent comes to court, and seeks to purge himselfe.

conditions propounded to the Duke of Benauent.

D. Pedro Earle of Transimara comes to court.

A according vnto Iustice: and presently he went in person to Paredes of Naua, which place he deliuered into the hands of Ruy Lopes of Aualos his Lord Chamberlaine, and did sommon his vncler D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon, to appeere within threescore daies, and to produce what right he had to this place, wherevpon Iustice should be done him: but if he did not appeere, it should be adiudged to D. Pedro. The King did also presse him to swear the Articles of the truce of Portugal, as other Noblemen, Prelats and Knights had done according to the capitulation, the which the Earle would not doe, but sought excuses and euasions, wherewith the King was very much discontented. This was a matter of great importance, for the Marquis of Villena and the Earle of Gijon refusing to swear the Articles, the King of Portugal pretended that the truce was of no force, and that the hostages were forfeited vnto him: So as he refused the oth which the Marquis, after his refusall, would haue taken when as hee came to court, saying, that the time prefixed for such ratifications was past, wherefore they must capitulate anew.

During these troubles in Castile, the King of Nauarre did still sollicit his wiues returne or at the least of his two daughters: and the King D. Henry had a great desire to see her dislodge, but he knew not how to send her honestly out of Castile: But she her selfe prepared the way: for when as shee vnderstood that the Duke of Benauent, and others of the league were reduced vnder the Kings obedience, fearing some surpris, she procured D. Pedro the Constable to come to Roa, with two hundred Launces, and some footmen, and then seeing her selfe as it were assured, shee sent vnto the King, to demand assurance to come to court, to iustifie her selfe: but the King thinking that the Duke of Benauent, the Constable, his aunt, and all they of the league in Generall, did smother in their breasts the same wils they had before, hee resolved to punish them, one after another; and therefore he caused them, that the Queene of Nauarre had sent vnto him, to be staied, and then being come to Burgos, he propounded in counsell, what was to bee done. There were present the Archbishop of Toledo, the maisters of Saint Iames and Calatraua, D. John Hurtado of Mendoza the Admiral, D. John Hurtado, D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, and others, whereof some came armed to counsell, by the Kings commandement. D. Frederic Duke of Benauent came also, notwithstanding that some of his friends had wished him to retire, telling him that they ment to take him: as he entred into the place where the counsell was kept, the King went forth, making shew that he would goe sup, and speaking aloude, that they must consider what answere to giue to the Queene of Nauarre.

And soone after hauing sent them word, that they should speedily dispatch that which they had to doe, the Duke was taken prisoner, and put in the castle of Burgos, in the custody of the Maister of Saint Iames, from whence hee was afterwards transported to Monreal, and in the end in the time of the King. D. John to the castle of Almodouar del Rio neere vnto Cordoua, where he ended his daies.

This is that famous prison of D. Frederic duke of Benauent, celebrated throughout all Spain. This done the King sent Diego Peres Sarmiento the Gouvernor, to seize vpon all the Lands and goods, not onely of the Duke of Benauent, but also of the Constable D.
Pedro, and by the same meanes he seized vpon the lands of his aunt, Donna Leonora
Queene of Nauarre, and he himselfe, being followed with some troups, went to Roa (where she was) to beseege her, and take her: wherevpon the Constable who was with her, abandoned her, and went into Galicia, to provide for his owne affaires. The Queene seeing her selfe forsaken, beganne to lament, filling all the castle of Roa with pitifull cries; and the more to moue them to pitty, she attired her selfe, her daughters and women in mourning weeds, and sent her Confessor vnto the King, to know his pleasure, seeing hee came in that manner with an army. The King gaue him some reasons, and marched on to Valera, from whence he sent John Hurtado of Mendoza and Ruy Lopes of Aualos to the Queene, to whom (being full of teares, and with a mournfull habit and countenance) she complained much of the King her Nephew, saying, that hee sought to take away her goods; and demanded assurance to see and speake with him.
The Inhabitants of Roa, carefull of their safeties, sent to offer the place vnto the King, if it pleased him to receiue them as his owne, and not to alienate them any more, wherewith

D. Frederic Duke of Benauent a prisoner.

Queene of Nauarre daunted.

with the King was content: wherevpon they receiued the Archbishop of Toledo, John Hartado, Diego Lopes and Ruy Lopes with their followers, and soone after the King entred, to whom the Queene being come, they entred into a church, and there had much conference. In the end the King granted her the reuenues of Roa, Sepulueda, Mardrigal and Arcualo, retayning the Iustice vnto himselfe and he commanded her to follow him to Vailledolit.

Earle of Gijon sits upon Outside.

This businesse being ended, the King marched towards Leon to make warre against his vnkle D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon, who was in the Asturia's, and had seized vpon the city of Oueido, which did belong vnto the King, the which he did fortifie, with his towne of Gijon, and other places. By the way hee had conference with the Archbishop of Saint James, who was much moued for the imprisonment of the Duke of Benauent: for he had come to court vpon his word and assurance. The King made him promise that he should not enter into any league, yet the griefe hee had for the Dukes detention, made him forget all the affection he had had to the seruice of the crowne of Castile, which in the end he left, and retired into Portugal, making the Schisme in the church his pretext, saying, that of his knowing the Pope raigning in Auignon was not lawfull, but he that held his seat at Rome: and for that the Portugals did adhere vnto him he retired into Portugal, where he obtained the Bishopricke of Coimbra, and then the Archbishopricke of Braga, where he ended his daies. He was of the noble family of Manriques, a man of a small stature, but of an actiue spirit, full of courage, high minded, eloquent, liberrall, apt to compound great mens quarrels, ambitious, and one that enuied the Archbishop of Toledo. D. Pedro of Tenorio, who was of a different humor; seuer, stately, ambitious also, but he couered his ambition with modesty, maintrayning his dignity in such sort as he was respected and feared. He lost in Castile the Archbishopricke of Saint James, the office of Chancellor to the King, with many other iuyings. The King in passing caused the castle of Manfilla to be razed, and vntied the towne (which had belonged vnto the Duke) vnto his demaines. He then sent his men against Gijon, the which they did beseege both by sea and land.

Archbishop of
S. James: retires
into Portugal.

His disposition

Being come to Leon, he made a declaration in a great assembly, in the chiefe church, of the rebellions and felonies of the Earle D. Alphonso his vnkle, committed both against the King D. John his father and himselfe, the fauours he had done him since his enlargement by the Gouernors, and his Ingratitude, for the which he did confiscate all his goods to the crowne, except the Siegneury of Noruegna, which he gaue to the church of Oueido, as had bene formerly ordained by the deceased King his father. The King hauing sent some troupes towards Oueido the Earles men were chafed away, and the King was maister of the city; so as the Earle was forced to shut himselfe into Gijon, where he was straightly beseege. One of his base sonnes called D. Hernando holding the castle of Saint Martin, deliuered it vnto the King, and came vnto his seruice. The Constable D. Pedro Earle of Transmara, seeing what had befallne the Duke of Benauent and the Queen of Nauar, and how they handled the Earle of Gijon, he found means to make his accord, and came vnto the King at the seege of Gijon, by whom he was well receiued, and had giuen him the townes of Pont Ferrada, Villafraanca and Vargarcell, which had bene the Duke of Benaunts. The yeere growing towards an end, and the country of Asturia being barren, not able long to maintaine an army, the King resolved to make some accord with the Earle, who sought it: wherevpon they concluded these Articles. That the French King should be Iudge of their controuersies, who should iudge within six monthes whether the Earle had offended, and if it were found that hee should loose his lands, he was content, if not, all should be restored to him againe: That vntill a definitiue sentence, the towne of Gijon should remaine in the Earles hands, vpon condition it should remaine in the Estate it was then, without adding any supply of victuals or men; and that the Earle should not goe about three leagues from the town, if it were not into France, to sollicite the iudgement of this cause. In which case the King should giue him thye hundred thousand Marauidis, to defray his charges: That the Earles other Lands should remaine in the possession of D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, Lord Chamberlaine to the King, who should hold them vpon his faith; and that the Earle

Accord made with the Earle of Gijon.

A Earle should giue his sonne D. Henry for hostage. By this composition the Earle D. Alphonso was freed from seege.

This yeere 1394. died D. John Alphonso of Guzman Earle of Niebla, a man of a peacefull spirit, yet was he somewhat engaged in the troubles of Castile, leauing his sonne D. Henry of Guzman heire to his great possessions. Pope Clement died also that yeere in Auignon, the sixteenth yeere of his Popedom, in whose place the Cardinals of that seat, meaning to proceed to the election of an other, receiued letters from the Vniuersity of Paris, to perswade them to deferre it for some daies, to know the intention of Pope Boniface the ninth, resyding at Rome, touching the vnion of the church; yet notwithstanding they entred into the Conclau nine daies after the funeral, and without regard of any letters written by the Vniuersity, and King Charles, they gaue their voices, and withall made a protestation in writing, that the future Pope should not hinder the rooting out of the Schisme, and that he should bee bound to giue ouer his dignity if neede were; they made choise of D. Pedro de Luna, carrying the title of Santa Maria in Cosmedin, a Cartelan and Doctor of the Canon law; a man of great authority, and well practised in worldly affaires, whom they called Benedict the thirteenth. The French King yielding to that was done, sent his Ambassadors to Auignon, to doe the accustomed homage to the new Pope: but beeing afterwards solicited by some of the Cardinals, who repented themselves of Benedict's election, he sought, by meanes of the protestation which had bene made, to force the Pope to quit his dignity, vnder pretext to reconcile the Schisme: but Benedict was loth to leaue so sweet a morcell, which so many of his order had gap'd after, resisting long, to the great preiudice of all Christendome, and the French king did in vaine sollicite by many Ambassages, D. Henry King of Castile, to ioyne with him, in the displacing of Benedict from his Popedom, whom the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon did also obey.

38
Death of the Earle of Niebla.

Death of Pope Clement at Auignon.

Election of Pedro de Luna
to be Pope, called Benedict
the 13.

The King D. Henry hauing proceeded, as we haue said, against the chiefe authors of the troubles of his realme, he returned to Vailledolit, and knowing by good experience the disposition of his aunt, whom he had brought with him, he resolved to send her into Nauarre, to King Charles her husband, the which (notwithstanding the Estate shee was in) she did impugn by all meanes possible: wherefore the King fearing she would steale away, and put her selfe into some place of strength, which would be very troublesome to take, he commanded the prior of Saint Iohn to set a gard about her lodging, and he himselfe went to Tordeillas. Then the Queene knew that she must of force returne into Nauarre, without any other assurances then such promises and othes as the King her husband had giuen, and seeing no euasion, nor delay, she sent to intreat the King her Nephew to be well aduised what he did, in seeking to force her to returne into Nauarre: and seeing that it did concerne both her honour and life, she intreated him to propound it to the graue and learned men of his counsell, to resolve what was fit for her to doe. The King was very well pleased herewith, and committed the businesse to the Bishops of Palence and Zamora, by whose aduice it was concluded, that the Queene Donna Leonora should returne to her husband, and that the King her Nephew should accompany her to the frontiers of Nauarre, whereof she was aduertised, that she might dispose her selfe to obey, but it was against her will: wherevpon the King returned to Vailledolit, and from thence they tooke their way towards Nauarre, hauing sent the Archbishop of Toledo and him of Zamora, an Arragonois, and the bishop of Albi a Frenchman, with others, to Tudele, to aduertise King Charles of his wiues coming and to take a new oth of him, to intreat her well and honourably. The Archbishop of Saragossa came to meet the Queene, being accompanied by many Knights of Nauarre, France and Arragon; to whom she was deliuered, with her daughters, vpon the confines of Castile and Nauarre, to the great contentment of King Henry, to whom she had bene chargeable many yeeres, by her turbulent and ambitious spirit. The King D. Charles did shew by the effects, that he was neuer ill-affected towards her; for he receiued her, with all that did accompany her, with great honour, and shewes of loue and ioy: he intreated her courteously, and honoured her as much as she could desire: commanding there should be feasts and bonfires made throughout all the realme of Nauarre, by reason of her coming.

39
Nauarre.

Queene of Nauarre sent to her husband against her
will.

ming. And for that they had not yet had any sonne, he would haue the Estates of his A realme (assembled to that end at Pampelone, some monthes after the Queenes returne) swear the Infanta's his daughters for lawfull heires of the realme, and of his other Estates, who should succeed one after another, vnto the last liuer. He caused his subiects to take this oth, as it was accustomed in Spaine, and to auoide warre and sedition, whereof they had fresh examples in the neighbour countries of Arragon and Valencia.

Arragon.

D. John King of Arragon, sonne to D. Pedro the Cerimonious, hauing reigned nine yeeres and three monthes, went about that time into the Island of Majorca, whether he had beene drawne by the seditions of the Islanders, rayfed against the Iewes, which dwelt among them, whom they had slaine, and spoiled, after the manner of the Castillans and Arragonois, incensed by a seditious Archdeacon, preaching at Seuille, with which B the mischief all the townes of Spaine were in the end infected except Saragossa. The King hauing punished the chiefe authors of these hatefull mutinies, in his returne, he was driven by a storme, to Cap de Cruz, about Ampurias, from whence being come to Castillon, he was surprized by sodaine death; some hold that it was in chasing the Wolfe in the woods of Foxa, others say, hee fell and bruized his skull, in the yeere 1395. This Prince, as we haue formerly said, had taken to wife a French Lady, called Martha, daughter to James Earle of Armaignac, who gouerned him quietly, by whom he had one only daughter called Joane, married at the time of his death to Mathew of Castelbon, C Earle of Foix, and Lord of Bearn, which was the cause of much warre in Arragon. The Queene D. Martha being dead, soone after her deliuey, the King D. John married Donna Violant daughter to the Duke of Bar, who brought him a sonne, but of short life, and lies interred at Saragossa, and afterwards a daughter, carrying the mothers name, and married in her time to Lewis duke of Aniou, sonne to that Lewis which died in Italy, pursuing his interest to the realme of Naples. After the death of King John, Mathew Earle of Foix, who had married his eldest daughter, pretended, according to the custome practised in Spaine, that the crowne of Arragon did belong vnto his wife, and sought all meanes to obtaine it: but the Arragonois would not then subiect themselues vnder a strange Prince, and reiecting the womans right, they did choose D. Martin for their king, who was brother to the deceased, and was then in Sicile.

The Arragonnois reiect D.
Joane from the succession
and choose D.
Martin.

These quarrels ryling from the succession in Arragon, and the reiection of the heire of that realme, which happened soone after the returne of the Queene Donna Leonora into Nauarre, it moued King Charles to take an oth of his subiects, that they should maintaine the Realme to his eldest daughter, and successiue to the rest.

The end of the seuenteenth Booke.

THE

THE EIGHTEENTH BOOKE

of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

- A 1. Proceeding of D. Henry King of Castile, against the Earle of Gijon in France.
2. Actions of Mahomet Guadix, and other Kings of Granada, treacheries, possessions, and other exceffe of that nation to reigne.
3. Deeds of D. Henry King of Castile, called the sickly. Examples of his Iustice, temperance and rigour, with other politike acts.
4. Iohn Pablo, a few a learned man, and his conuersation with the honours and dignities, which he and his children obtained in Spaine.
- B 5. Reformation of the Knights of the Calatraua.
6. Warre betwixt Portugal and Castile, for the crowne.
7. The Dutchesse of Momblanc seizeth upon the realme of Arragon, in the name of her husband D. Martin, who was the 15. King of Arragon, and the first of that name, wherevnto the Estates consented.
8. Confirmation of D. Martin King of Arragon: his carriage in the gouernment of his realme to foraine Princes and the Pope.
9. Death of D. Pedro Tenorio, Archbishop of Toledo, his family, qualities, workes and buildings, vacancy of that see foure yeeres.
10. Ruy Lopes d' Aualos, and the beginning of the house of Aualos.
- C 11. Continuation of the Schisme, friar Vincent Ferrier a great preacher.
12. Warre against the Moores of Granada: the death of King Henry the 3.
13. Marriage of D. Blanche Infanta of Nauarre, with Don Martin King of Sicile. Accord made by the King of Nauarre with the French King, for the Lands of his patrimony that were seized.
14. D. Iohn the second of that name, King of Castile, an Infant of two and twenty monthes old. Fidelity and modestie of D. Fernand the Kings vncle: Castile gouerned by him and the Queene mother.
15. Warre of Granada managed by the Infant Don Fernand: first vse of Artillerie in Spaine.
- D 16. Superstitions, new sects and a third head in the church of Rome.
17. Warre of Sardinia, troubles at Valencia, death of D. Martin, the sonne King of Sicile:
Marriage of D. Martin the father, King of Arragon.
- E 18. Warre of Castile against the Moores.

Kkk 2

19. Death

The Contents.

- 19 Death of D. Martin King of Arragon: Factions for the succession to that crowne: The A pretendants: Arbitrators named to choose a King.
20 Duke of Benavente escapes out of prison. The Jewes and Moores commanded to carry certaine markes by the counsell of friar Vincent Ferrer.
21 D. Fernand first of that name, and the 16. King of Arragon: opposition of the Earle of Vrgel, his imprisonment: the Kings coronation.
22 Retreat of Pope Benedi& into Spaine. Counsell of Constance, Estates at Saragossa: Marriage of the Infant D. Alphonso of Arragon, with Donna Maria of Castile.
23 D. Alphonso the fifth King of Arragon.
24 Government of Castile under Donna Catherina the Queene mother. B 25 Proceeding of the Council of Constance against Pope Benedi&, and his obstinacy.
26 Conquest of the Canaries, by Iohn of Benavente.
27 Family of Estuniga: death of the Queene Regent, and other affaires of Castile.
28 Deeds of D. Iohn King of Portugal: Monastery of the bastaile, and other workes built by him. Taking of Ceuta in Barbary: descoverie of the Madera's. First search of the Portu-gals into the South and East seas.
29 Marriage of the Infant D. Iohn, brother to D. Alphonso King of Arragon, and of
D. Blanch of Navarre, widow Queene of Sicile.
30 Marriage pursued with violence by Don Henry maister of Saint Iames, brother to the King of Arragon, of Donna Catherina, Infanta of Castile; and what fol- C
lowed.
31 Causes of the warre of Naples attempted by D. Alphonso King of Arragon: Estate of that Realme under Queene Ioane the second.
32 Advancement of D. Alvaro de Luna, to be Constable of Castile.
33 D. Iohn first of that name, and 32. King of Navarre, in the right of D. Blanch his wife.
34 Delivry of D. Henry maister of Saint Iames being prisoner, Estates at Toro. Restitution of the Constable, being chased away: ambition of D. Iohn king of Navarre, and of his brother D. Henry.
35 New Order of Monkes of Saint Ierome in Spaine.
36 Estate of the Moores of Gramado under Mahumet the left-handed, and other Kings. D 37 Troubles betwixt Castile, Navarre and Arragon.
38 Marriage of Donna Isabella of Portugal, to Philip duke of Bourgondy. Institution of the Order of the golden Fleece.
39 Proceeding by iustice against the King of Navarre and his partisans in Castile.
40 Peace concluded betwixt Portugal and Castile. D. Nugno Alvarez of Pereira first Constable of Portugal, and his last acts.

Kings in Spaine mentioned in this eighteenth Booke.

| ARRAGON.  | CASTILE and LEON           | NAVARR.        |
|---|----------------------------|----------------|
| 15. D. Martin 1.16. D. Fernand 1.17. D. Alphon 5. | 18. D. Iohn 2. and the 39. | 32. D. Iohn 1. |

IN

The generall History of Spaine.

A IN the reign of King Henry the third, it often appeared how vaine the en-terprizes of bad subjects are against a vertuous and innocent Prince: for God did preferue this poore pupill, from the ambitious rage of his Tutors, Princes, Prelats and great Lords of Castile, ruining them by their owne discord. And he did so much honour the royall Maiesty, as when as this young Prince had taken vpon him the government of the realme, at the age of foure-teene yeeres, he deliuered them into his hands, to punish them, as their obnoxious rebellion, and ingratitude had deserued. Being freed (as we haue said) of the Duke of Benavente, the Queene of Navarre, and the Archbishop of Saint Iames, and hauing by their example reduced the Earle of Trastamara and the Archbishop of Toledo, to their duties:
there onely remained D. Alphonso Earle of Gijon his vncl, who was reduced to that extremity, as he was forced to vndergoe the censure of a strange Prince, in a cause which concerned his honor, his goods and his liberty: the which he might haue enioyed with reputation, yea much augmented his dignity, if he had contained himselfe with modesty, in the fauor of D. Henry King of Castile his naturall Prince.

According to the accord made at the seege of Gijon, the King sent his Ambassadors to the French King, to debate the causes he had to dispossesse D. Alphonso, who hauing staid many daies in the court of France, the Earle of Gijon, nor his Attorney appeering, and the time of the assignation being expired, they prepared for their returne, when they C had newes that their aduerser party was come to the coast of Britaine, and was comming towards Paris: wherefore to giue more countenance to their cause, they attended.
Being arriued, hee spake with King Charles, for his iustification, accusing the King his Nephew, that he sought to take his portion from him, lying in Asturia, Leon and Castile, the which was assigned him by the deceased King D. Iohn his brother, adding many other charges and excesses, wherevnto the Ambassadors answered pertinently, laying open the Earles ingratitude, rebellion and conspiracy, against the King his Lord, and benefactor, who had drawne him out of prison, and restored him to all his goods, the which King Iohn had iustly taken from him, adding therevnto pensions, Estates and honours; and accusing him in particular of the violent vsurpation of the towne of Paredes of Naua, and other tyrannicall actions done by him, hauing also refused to signe the truce of Portugal, with many other acts of contempt and felony: concluding that hee ought to loose the Earldome of Gijon, and to be wholly left to the discretion and will of the King his Lord; so as in the proofes of these crimes, exhibited by the Ambassadors, in defence of their Princes actions, hauing not any thing to reply publicly, he gaue the Lords of the French Kings counsell secretly to vnderstand, that the ill will which the King his Nephew bare him, incensed by his bad counsellors, who were corrupt and mercenary, proceeded from nothing else, but that hee had alwaies opposed himselfe to the practises and secret intelligences which they had with the English, in league with whom they would draw the King of Castile, to the preiudice of the friendship and ancient al-E liance, which was betwixt the houses of Castile and France: wherefore he intreated them to deale so with King Charles, as he would iudge fauorably of his cause, causing his Estates and Lands, to be restored to him againe, promising, all his life time, to doe him good and loyal seruice.

The King desirous to reconcile Princes that were neere in blood, caused the Ambassadors to be treated with about a prorogation of the assignation; for they had protested that the time prefixt being expired through the Earles negligence and contempt, to whom the King their maister had caused three hundred thousand maraudis to be de-liuered, for the charges of his voiage, and to take from him all excuse, that they could no more appeere before him, as before, their Iudge: yet they said, that seeing the King of F Castile their Lord had submitted himselfe vnto his Iudgement, for the brotherly loue that was betwixt them, notwithstanding, that many of his counsell had disuaded him, holding it a disparagement for the soueraigne Prince to contend with his vassall and subjects before a strange Iudge, and out of his country and iurisdiction.

They were of opinion, that if the Earle Don Alphonso did willingly deliuer the towne of Gijon vnto the King of Castile, and submit himselfe to his will and mercy, that

Kkk 3

that by his intercession the Earle should obtaine a safe conduit and assurance to come into Castile, and so he should treat of his affaires more profitably then by any other course. They withall made a request vnto King Charles in the name of the King their Lord, that for the league which was betwixt the two Kings and realmes, he would be pleased to command D. Alphonso to depart his country, which the French King could not refuse, and therefore he caused notice to be giuen vnto the Earle, that he should retire himselfe, and commanding all Gouernors of Prouinces, especially of port towns, not to giue him any fauor or aide, wherefore he went away in poore estate, & kept himself some daies about Rochelle. The six monthes of truce concluded betwixt the King and him being many daies before expired, and yet the Ambassadors had not written any thing concerning the conclusion of this sute, there were some troupes of horse and foote sent about Gijon, after which the King came with greater forces, both by land and sea, the which did so presse the place, as the Countesse, Donna Isabella of Portugal, yeelded it, compounding for her life and liberry, and of some Knights that were within it, and the deliery of her sonne D. Henry, whom the King held in hostage. In the meane time letters came out of France, from the Ambassadors, contayning what had past in this cause, wherewith the King was wel satisfied. The miserable Countesse Isabella, daughter to D. Fernand King of Portugal, being destitute of all meanes, went into France to her husband D. Alphonso, who was poore, and without any helpe or fauour, but from the Vicountesse of Touars, in whose country he liued in the towne of Marant. After the taking of Gijon, the King went to Seuile to treat a truce with the Moores, being solicited by King Mahumet then reigning in Granado, the third after the death of Mahumet the old, who was bruted to haue poisoned the King D. Henry the second, and this was his succession.

Given yeelded vnto the King, and the Earle dispossessed and banished into France.

Mahumet Guadix the tenth King of Granado.

<sup>2</sup> Mahumet surnamed Guadix, after the death of Mahumet the Old his father, was settled King of Granado: he onely among all his predecessors, received this Scepter peaceably, and left it quiet at his death. During his reigne which beganne in the yeere 1379, and ended 1392, he had not any warre against Christian Princes for all the time of his reigne, the Estate of Castile vnder King John was so troubled with wars with D. Fernand King of Portugal, and afterwards with the maister of Auiz, and besides with the Duke of Lancaster, as the Realme of Granado felt no trouble. This Mahumet Guadix was sonne in law to the King of Tunis, whose daughter, named Hadis, of the ancient linage of the Almohages, he had married when his father liued, by whom he had Ioseph his successor to the Realme, and yet he had other wiues, and many children by them, according to the liberty of the Mahumetists, in that point. During this calme, he fortified many places in the Realme of Granado, especially towards the frontier of Andalusia; by the which the Kings of Castile were accustomed to invade the Moores. Hee renewed the truce betwixt the two realmes of Granado and Castile, with King John, in the yeere 1390. the which was sworne and confirmed by the Kings, and by their eldest sonnes and successors. The name of Guadix was giuen him, for the great loue he bare to the towne of Guadix, and that country, from his Infancy, the which he did frequent and beautifie with many things whilest he liued. He died in peace, in the yeere of our Lord 1392. the thirteenth of his reigne.

Ioseph the eleuenth, King of Granado.

To him succeeded this King Ioseph, of whom wee haue made mention, in the route with he gaue vnto Martin Ianes of Barbuda, maister of Alcantara. Before there was

A was some likelihood of warre, during the raigne of D. Henry the 3. king of Castile, but it was soone pacified, after an encounter neere vnto Lorca, wheras the Moores at the coming of this king Ioseph, beginning to flie, were defeated with great losse. If the father had reigned peaceably, as well among his subiects, as with Christian Princes his neighbours: his son gouerned with great difficulty & tumults: for besides the quarels he had with the Christians, (which succeeded reasonably well) he was pursued by his owne sonne, and in danger to loose both Crowne and life. This bad sonne called Mahumet, as his Grandfather was, thrust on with ambition to raign, ioyned with a Nobleman among the Moores, called Aben Mohaya, who had long hated King Ioseph. These two together did what they could to put him from his royall seate, dispersing among the Moores all the slanders they could inuent against him: but chiefly they did charge him with the vice of clemencie, which he had vied to many Christian captiues, hauing set them free without rancome: an vndoubted argument, sayd they, that he was a Christian in heart. There were great combusions throughout all Granado, by meanes of this peruerse sonne and his confederats, the which were pacified by the mediation of an Ambassadour from the king of Maroc, of the linage of the Merins, who was then at Granado, for his Princes affaires, who wrought in such sort, as the sonne and all that followed him, yeelded obedience vnto the king, to the good of the Realme, which for a time enioyed a desired peace: for by reason of the troubles, many Christians had imbraced these quarrels of the Moores, ioyning with either partie, but all tending to the ruine of their estate. Besides this Mahumet, son to king Ioseph, who made warre against him, Histories make mention of three others: that is, Ioseph the eldest, who reigned, but not immediatly after his father, Cidi- Ali and Cidi- Amed. After this pacification, and the defeat of the Master of Alcantara aboue-mentioned, king Ioseph was more respected among his subiects, and gouerned his Realme in peace the remaynder of his dayes without any opposition. He kept friendship with the Princes of Spaine his neighbours, and with the Kings of Affricke, as much as he could: yet he grew into secret hatred with the king of Fez, whereof no man knowes the occasion, neither did he discouer it, vntill he felt the poison, which this trecherous king sent him: for among many rich presents, there was a cassocke of cloth of gold, of great price, but infected with D this mortall poyson, which did not worke sodenly, but by degrees: an art much practised among those damned creatures, to free themselves of their enemies, or to make States and Principalities voyd, as their ambitious appetites did driue them. King Ioseph hauing no cause, as he thought, to suspect any such treason from a king of his sect, whome hee had not offended, receiued the presents: but hauing one day put on the cassocke, he felt himselfe presently poysoned without remedie: the which was of such force, as hauing depriued him of all his naturall faculties, his flesh fell away by peece-meale, with great horror to them that were about him, and amazement of the Phisitions, which had him in cure, to whome the true cause of his infirmitie, nor the remedies were euer knowne. Thus this king died miserably, hauing reigned about foure yeares in Granado, in the yeare of our Lord 1396. and of the Arabians 779.

Some persecutes the father to raigne.

Ioseph king of Granado poysoned.

VVonderfull force of poyson

Mahumet the 9. of that name, and 12. king of Granado.

MAHVME T his sonne surnamed Aben-Balua, who had so much desired to raigne in his fathers life-time, vsurped the Realme from his elder brother Ioseph, who yeelding to the time, supported it as well as he could, beeing countenanced by some Noblemen, that were friends to his deceased father and him. The first entrance of this king Mahumet was pleasing vnto the Moores, by the cruelty he suffered to be done to two Priars brethren, who moued with an inconsiderate zeale, would goe and preach in Granado. Beeing forbidden by the king to preach their doctrine to a people ill prepared to receiue it, they persisting in their resolution, the Almaguis and Doctors of the Alcaron fell vpon them,

D. Henry of Castile, called the Sickly.

<sup>3</sup>
Castile.

and having whipt them, they slue them most cruelly, so as these two poore Friars were A held holy Martyrs, whereof some of their bones were gathered together, and carried to Seuille and Cordoua, to them of their Order, all men perswading themselves that they wrought miracles. This king thinking himselfe settled in his estate, he confirmed the truce with Christian Princes, especially with D. Henry king of Castile, who freed him of the tribute which the kings of Granado were wont to pay to the Kings of Castile. The King Don Henry shewed himselfe tractable, by reason of the indisposition of his person; who being the rest of his daies ill disposed, purchased the surname of Sickly, and made him to desire peace with his neighbours, and to hate warre. The friendship and familiaritie of these two Princes was very great, and continued long, visiting one another by ambassages, and sending presents, striving who should be more stately and bountifull: and King B Mahomet desiring on a time to make demonstration of his loue to the king D. Henry, sending him rich presents, hee gaue the charge of the ambassage to one of his wiues, the which gaue great content to the king of Castile.

But to returne to this king Don Henry, after that he had subdued the Princes of his bloud, and their confederates, who contemning his youth, and thrust on by ambition, had troubled his Realme, he beganne to be sickely, and vnfit for the actions of warre, and the causes whereof by the singular grace of God ceased. Hee had a great care of Iustice, and to ease his subiects, and being in that estate hee fought all meanes to maintaine his reputation and authoritie, fearing nothing more then to be contemned of his seruants, to C whome he sometimes seemed seuer and rigorous, and sometimes was content onely to terrifie them: Whereof they produce this example. The king on a time hauing hunted late in an vnknowne countrie, and ill followed, recouered his lodging, being readie to sit downe to his supper, hauing a very good stomacke, he found it ill prepared, so as hee began to grow in choller with the clark of his kitchen, saying, that hee was negligent, and that he would punish him. The clark who (it may be) sought for this occasion, excused himselfe vpon the small meanes which were appointed him by his Counsellors to furnish his table: so as, sayd he, besides the assignation which is very short, I recouer it with such difficultie, as I am forced to pawne mine owne, to supply it: wherewith the king was D very sad, taking it for a great argument of the small esteeme the Noblemen that ruled, made of him, by this dishonest sparing for a kings table, into whose coffers there entered of yearly reuenue 70. millions of Marauidis, if Writers do not erre. And therefore he beganne to studie, how he might make them know it, giuing to his Clarke one of his robes, called at that time Balandrawas, the which hee pawned for two shouldres of mutton; with the which, and some Quails which they had taken, the king supped, being serued by the Clarke.

Being returned to Burgos, he dissembled that which he had in his heart, and watched an opportunitie to be reuenged. Hee was aduertised that the chiefe Noblemen of his trayne and Councell, holding the greatest dignities in the Realme of Castile, the Prelats, the Masters of knightly Orders, the Duke of Medina Celi, D. Ray Lopes of Aualos, Don E Iohn and D. Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, Diego Lopes of Estuniga, Iohn of Velasco, Gomes Munrique, Peter Alfan of Ribera, and others hauing gouernements in the chiefe Prouinces, should meet together one night at a stately and sumptuous banquet: wherefore hee found meanes to enter disguised, to see their cheare, and heare their discourse: where hee saw all things furnished in great abundance, and with more then royall state, where there wanted not any thing that might please the appetite, and as for their discourse and table-talk, it was nothing but of the great and bounteous pension they drew from the King, of the profits and commodities of their Offices and Gouernements, gifts, presents, honours, fauours, and such like, which makes the Courtiers paradise. The King hauing observed all this, being returned vnto his lodging, hee secretly in the night, drew in F his Guards, and many other souldiers: and when it was day, he sent for all these Noblemen of the Banquet, to come vnto his Pallace, to be witnesses to the Will which hee would make, who flocking thither with all expedition, they stayed in the great Hall, vntill it was past noone.

In the end the king came forth with a naked sword in his hand, setting him downe in

A in his chaire, and then presently the hall was full of his armed guards, so as the Noblemen were amazed at this vnaccustomed ceremonie. The king addressing his speech to the Arch-bishop of Toledo, asked him, how many kings of Castile he had seene: he answered, that he had seene foure; which were the king D. Pedro, D. Henry his grandfather, D. Iohn his father, and himselfe. The like demand the king made vnto the rest, and euery one answered as he had seene, according to their ages, some three, some foure, and some five. How can it then be, sayd the king, that I who am younger then any of you, can brag to haue seene about twenty: The Noblemen replied, that they knew not what hee meant thereby; for naturally with his corporall eyes he could not haue seene so many kings. Yes, truly, sayd the king, I haue seene them, and all you here present are those kings, who dis- C pose of my Realme, and manage my rents and reuenues at your pleasures. I am king but in name, and as a shade, but you are the bodie and the effect, wasting my goods to my dishonor, and the contempt of my authoritie. I haue seene, I haue seene the pompe and abundance you liue in at my charge, and haue vnderstood how you intreat my subiects, and abuse the power which I giue you in your estates and gouernments: but you shal not liue vnpunished, I haue conuicted you all by your owne confessions and brags, and iudge you all to die, like bad and trecherous vassals. This speech being ended, the Ministers of iustice appeared, & among them the executioner of the court, carrying an axe and cords, the which did much amaze all the Noblemen, thinking verily, that they should lose their heads: seeing themselves compassed in his guards, and considering that they had to do with a young king, who for want of iudgement might giue way to his choller, and re- C uenge his wrong without regard to the consequence. Being thus amazed, looking one vpon another, and not knowing what to answer, the Archbishop of Toledo tooke courage to speake vnto the king, who kneeling downe, told him, that so seuer a sentence was happily more iust then honourable for a young Prince, or profitable for the realme of Castile, which for euer would feele the losse of so many great and worthie men, both for counsel and armes, as he meant to put to death, for that they had committed some faults which are common to all that liue with kings, and are bred vp in great charges of realmes. Moreouer, it was not reasonable to take that for a confession to conuict one, which is spoken at banquets, and in wine, where men do vsually talke, and bragge, and oftentimes D without truth, yet he spake not these things to iustifie himselfe, or any of his companions nor to contend against his clemencie, as being free from offence, the which they would rather implore and trie, demanding with all humilitie, the liues of all these offenders, and his pardon, adding many other reasons, the which were allowed by the king, for he desired an occasion to pardon them, yet he would haue them yceld vp all the forts which they had in guard, and he condemned them in pecuniarie synes, so as he drew from them a- boue an hundred and fifty millions of marauidis, for the exactions and concussions done vpon his people, and the kings money: keeping them two moneths in the castle of Bur- gos, vntill the full payment and execution of these things.

E If he were moderate in this act of iustice, hee vsed greater rigour at Seuille, where all was full of partialities, proceeding from the diuisions and quarrels which his tutor had bred, which the Magistrates and kings officers could not suppress. Being declared of full age, he went thither and caused the Earle of Niebla, Peter Ponce of Leon, and other heads and chief authors of these seditions to be put in prison; and hauing examined euery mans actions, he banished some, others he condemned in great synes, and losse of their offices, and caused many to be hanged, or lose their heads: so as there were about a thousand persons intangled in these punishments and executions of iustice: one of the chiefe ministers whereof, was Doctor Iohn Alphonso of Toro, to whom the gouernement of Seuille was giuen for matters of iustice: and the more to countenance him, the king stayed there ma- ny daies.

F This king gaue many other testimonies of his loue to iustice: he gaue audience to all suitors indifferently, three daies in the weeke, he heard all the complaints of his subiects, and provided for them: he could discerne of men of iudgement, which were fit for coun- cell, and the gouernment of the commonwealth. The most esteemed, and of greatest au- thoritie about him, were Don Pedro Tenorio, Arch-bishop of Toledo, Friar Iohn Henri- ques,

Executions at Seuille.

Election of many men to make a great effort.

4
Doctor Pablo, a Jew, learned, and of a good life.

Doctor Pablo's children all learned.

Counsel of a Jew against Jews.

ques, and Friar Fernando of Illeſca, with the Cardinall D. Pedro of Frias Biſhop of Olma, A and theſe for the Clergie: of Knights he made great eſteeme of Don Laurence Suarez of Figuerola, Maſter of Saint Iames, Gonſales Nugnes of Guzman, Maſter of Calatraua, Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, high Admirall of Caſtile, Ruy Lopes of Aualos, his Lord Chamberlaine, and afterwards Conſtable, Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga chiefe Juſtice, Peter Lopes of Ayala, a knight of great learning, who came to be Lord Chancelour, John Pe- laſco a Chamberlaine, and other knights of his Councell, which conſiſted of ſixteen graue perſonages. Among others, that were very deare vnto him, there was a Doctour, a Jew by ſect, borne at Burgos, who afterwards imbraced the Chriſtian Religion, called Don Pablo, who for his learning and good life, was in time choſen Biſhop of Carthagea, and in the end obtained the Biſhopricke of Burgos. He had many times oppugned the Chri-ſtian Religion, as a Jew Rabin, and Maſter in the Iewiſh Law, but hauing receiued in gift of a Chriſtian Doctour, the booke of Saint Thomas Aquinas intituled de Legibus, he read it diligently, and was ſo moued with the reaſons thereof, as he left his Iewiſh religion, the which is not ſtrange, ſay the Diuines of Spaine: for he that knowes not Saint Thomas knoweth not any thing, and he that knoweth him, knowes all things. This Prelate who was a great Preacher, a great Philoſopher, wiſe and iudicious in matters of State, and of the kings Councell, wrote many bookes, whereof ſome are yet extant. Becing a Jew, he was married, and had three ſonnes all learned men, whereof the one was Deane of Sego-bia, and ſucceeded his father in the Biſhoppricke of Burgos, he was called Don Alphonſo C of Carthagea, from whence we haue the genealogie of the kings of Caſtile, written in Latine. Don Gonſalo another ſonne of D. Pablo was Biſhop of Palenca, a Prelat of great learning: and the third was Aluar Garcia of S. Maria, a learned man alſo, D. Pablo their father becing of the King Don Henries Councell, notwithstanding that he had bin a Jew, did aduiſe him and his ſucceſſors, not to receiue into their ſeruite, either of his houſholds Councell, or to any Offices of the Realm, any Jew, although he were conuerted, and that for ſome ſpeciall cauſes.

The King Don Henry being endowed with theſe good qualities beyond the Ordinary of young Princes, had alſo ſome blemiſhes, like other mortall men: for hee was noted to be ſparing, and deſirous to heape vp treaſure, and yet they ſay, that it was without the op-preſſion of his ſubiectes, the which is hard in a Prince: yet hee gaue many prouiſions and pentiſons to them that were neere to him in bloud, or allyed to him by affinitie: as to the Queene D. Beatrix, his mother-in law, whome he maintained in the eſtate of a Queene, and to Don Fernan his brother, who ſhewed himſelfe alwaies obedient to his will. His countries becing in peace, he gaue himſelfe to repaire and fortiſie the frontier places, and did build a new caſtle of Carthagea. As for religious buildings, the church, and conuent of the Carthuſians at Burgos, called Mireſteurs, are his worke: he was a great fauorer of the Franciſcans, to whome Queene Katherine his wife, had a particular deuotion, who was a Ladie of great pietie, according to the inſtruction of that time, bountifull, maieſticall, wiſe, and diſcreet in her words, yet ſuperfluous in her manner of liuing, and louing wine, whereby in her latter dayes the fell into a palſey. E

The Kings infirmities which began at the age of ſeuenteene yeares, did in time ſo vndermine him, being incurable, as he became drie and leane, ſo as the proportion of his body was changed, and he ſeemed another man, then formerly he had beene: moreover, he was ſo ſad and melancholicke, as moſt commonly he was alone, and would not admit of any company. Yet he was alwaies carefull of the gouernement of the Realme. He alwaies entertayned Ambaſſadours in Princes Courts, as well Chriſtians as Mahumetiſts, by whom he was aduerted what was done in forraine countries, their manners, and manner of go-uernements: a thing moſt profitable for him that ſends them, but not for them that receiue them: for by Ambaſſadours which are reſident, the Councels and actions of Princes are diſcouered, to the great preiudice of their eſtates. Two of his Ambaſſadours ſent into the Eaſt, the which were Pelayo of Soto maior, and Fernando Pelafuel, fell into the hands of Tamberlaine, Emperour of the Tartarians, after the defeat of Batazet; who intreated them graciouſly, and ſent them backe into Spaine with an Ambaſſador of his, to demand friendſhip of king Henry.

During

Ambaſſadors diſcouer the councils and actions of Princes.

A During his raigne, in the yeare 1397, the order of the Knights of the Calatraua, in ſteed of a blacke hood which they had worne vntill that time, tooke for their marke a red ſquare croſſe, which they carry at this day, the which was done by the Bull of Pope Bene- dixt of Auignon, at the inſtance of Don Gonſal Nugnes of Guzman, maſter of the Calatraua.

5 Red croſſe the
marke of the Order of Calatraua.

The realme of Caſtile being at peace with all men it was ingaged in new troubles by Don John King of Portugall, for that the Articles of the truce, concluded betwixt their Ambaſſadors for ſixteene yeares, had not beene ſigned and ſworne by certain Noble men of Caſtile, as had beene agreed: with other light occaſions, which drew him to field, being yet proud of his former victories, and contemning the youth and infirmity of King

6
Portugal.

Henry his aduerſary, wherefore he ſuddenly brought his army before Badajos, which towne hee tooke, and the Maſhall Don Garcil Guttiere of Herrera in it: whereat the King Don Henry was much incenſed, and ſpeedily prouided for all things neceſſary, to ſuppreſſe the boldneſſe of this Portugall King, both by ſea and land. One of the moſt remarkable exploits of this warre, which continued three yeares, was the incounter of ſiue Caſtillan gallies with ſeaunen of Portugall, coming from Genoa, laden with armes and ſouldiers:
the fight hauing continued very ſharpe ſome houres, in the end foure of the gallies of Portugall were taken, one broken and the reſt put to flight. In this incounter the Portugalls loſt about ſiue hundred men, beſides the armes and equipage of their gallies, the which were drawne to St. Lucar. Many noble men of Portugall at that time left King
John, and retired into Caſtile, where they were entertained, and had lands and houſes giuen them by the King D. Henry. Among others Martin Vaſques of Acugna, and his brethren Giles Vaſques and Lopes Vaſques came alſo with an hundred lances, John Fernandes and Lopes Fernandes Pachecos bretheren, Aluar Gonſales Camelo Prior of S. John, with many others. The king of Portugal entring by Galicia, he tooke from king Henry the town of Tuy, and towards extremadura he layd ſeege before Alcantara, to whoſe ſuccour was ſent D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, then made Conſtable of Caſtile, in the place of the Earle of Tranſamara, who raiſed the ſeege, and entring into Portugal, ſpoiled and burnt the countrie, and tooke Pegna maior, a place of ſtrength, by force. On the other ſide, the D towne of Miranda of Duego was beſieged by King Henries captaines, who preſt it in ſuch fort as it yeelded. After ſome courſes and prizes made at ſea by the Admirall of Caſtile, the truce was renewed betwixt the two kings, and was ſo entertayned, as it was the laſt war which the Portugals had with Caſtile vntill our daies, ſo as theſe two Princes gouerned their Eſtates in peace and quietneſſe the remainder of their liues.

Victory of the Caſtillians at ſea

In Arragon whileſt they contended for the right of the ſucceſſion againſt Mathew of Caſtelbon Earle of Foix, and his wife D. Iſeane eldeſt daughter to the deceaſed king D. John as we haue ſayd: D. Maria wife to the D. of Momblanc, being abſent in Sicily, took vpon her the title of Queene, by the aduice of the counsell of Cattelogne, in the city of Barcelona, where there aſſiſted D. Inigo Valterra, Archb. of Tarragona, Bernard of Pinos, Hugh Angleſole, Roger of Moncade Viceroy of Sardinia, Michel Gurrea, Francis of Aranda, Whe-
E was held the wiſeſt of his time, Bernard Michel, William Puſade, Gerard Paliol, and Bernard Zatrille. Theſe were of opinion that the Regencie of the realme ſhould bee put into the hands of D. Maria, vntill her husbands coming, to whom they had ſent D. Hugh of Bage, Biſhop of Tortoſa, John Foulq ſon to the Earle of Cardona, Emanuel Ragiaſel, Raymond Zauaſ, a Citizen of Barcelonet, and Peter Grimald of Perpignan, Ambaſſadors, to giue him notice of his election, and to haſten his returne. The widow Queene Piolant, was in the meane time accompanied by foure of the chiefe Ladies by order from the Councell, the which did neuer abandon her, and ſhould haue a care of her deliuey, for that the ſaid ſhe was with child. And for that many men of ſtate, and others hauing had charges & offices in the time of the deceaſed King, had abuſed them, their actions were now called into queſtion during this Interegne, and ſome of them were committed at Barcelona. The Will of the deceaſed King, beeing opened in the Aſſembly of Cattelogne, they found that the ſame Duke of Momblanc, to whom the peoples fauour inclined, was there named heyre and ſucceſſor to the Crowne, in caſe the King Don John dyed without iſſue male, the which was ſignified to the Counteſſe of Foix.

7
Arragon.

Francis of Aranda a wife
man.

Officers called into queſtion.

As

At the Estates assembled at Sarragossa, to giue order that the realme should receiue no A losse in the absence of the king D. Martin, these chiefe men were present:

D. Garci Fernandes of Heredia, Arch<sup>b</sup>ishop of Sarragossa.

D. John Martines Murillo, Abbot of Montarragon.

D. Pedro Fernandes of Ixar.

D. William, and Raymond Allamans Ceuillon.

D. Pedro Ruis Morio, for the great Prior of Amposta.

The Prior of Rota.

The Abbot of S. Fides.

D. Pedro of Ladron, Vicount of Villanoua.

D. Lopes Ximenes of Vireca.

D. Fermand Lopes of Luna.

D. John Martines of Luna.

D. Alphonso Fernandes of Ixar.

D. Pedro Fernandes Vergua.

D. Francis of Allagon.

D. Pedro Ximenes of Vireca, son to D. Lope.

The Attorneys of D. Lewis Cornel, of D. Arsal of Allagon, of D. John Ximenes of Vireca Atrasillo, of D. Pedro Galcerand of Castro, and of D. Anthony of Luna. Moreover, John Ximenes de la Cerde, Iustice Maior of Arragon, with many other Noblemen, knights and Deputies of towns and commonalties, who without regard to the demands and protestations of Mathew Earle of Foix, and D. Jeanne his wife, confirmed the Duke of Monblanc testamentarie heire of the Realme, disannulling the conuentions made by the deceased king D. Pedro, grandfather to D. Jeanne, at the treatie of her marriage with the Earle of Foix, by the which it was sayd, that if Don John her father dyed without issue male, she should inherit the Realme: whereupon Mathew Earle of Foix sought to obtaine his right by armes, seeing that iustice was denied him. And hauing employed the ayde of the Earle of Armaignac, of John Duke of Berry, the French kings vncl, and of other Noblemen of France, he passed with a thousand men at armes, and three thousand light horsemen, from the Vicountie of Castelbon, beyond the Pyrenes, and by the valley of Ferriere at Villemur, he tooke Camaraça, and marched as farre as Lerida, where hee spoyle the country: against whome the Estates did chose Don Pedro of Vrgell for General. And for that it was suspected that D. John Earle of Ampurias, had fauoured these French troupes at the passage of the mountaines, he was committed to prison, but soone after deliuered, hauing made prooffe of his innocencie. Although the Earle of Foix did much annoy the Arragonois, yet the greatest losse fell vpon himselfe, for being too weake a partie to incounter the power of Arragon, he did nothing but spend his estate, ingage himselfe, and strue for nothing, his army being forced to rise from before Barbastro, and to retire for want of victuals and other discommodities towards Huesca, and then to passe by Caparosso belonging vnto Nauarre, into Bearne, on this side the mountaines, after which hee neuer made any memorable attempt. The king D. Martin, notwithstanding all the importunitie of the Arragonois, was not resolu'd to leaue Sicile, vntill he had seene his sonne peacefull king of the Iland, the which he effected after a long and tedious warre, by the ruine of the noble families of Clairmont and Alagon, and of other rebels, whereof Andrew of Clairmont Duke of Modica was beheaded at Palermo, after which Arsal of Alagon was expelled Sicile, with all his family, by vertue of whose Predecessors, that Realme had bene in a manner conquered for the house of Arragon.

Articles of marriage broken by the Estates to the prouidence of the Earle of Foix.

Andrew of Clairmont beheaded at Palermo.

D. Martin

D. Martin the first of that name, and 15.
King of Arragon.

Matters beeing thus brought to passe, D. Martin elect King of Arragon, leauing with the King his sonne, called also D. Martin, and his wife Marie, William of Moncado, Marquis of Malta, chiefe Iustice and Constable of the Realme, Peter Serra Bishop of Cattranea, Francis Zagarriga, Hugh Santapaz, and other Cattelans and Arragonois, for L Counsellors, he sayled towards the Island of Sardinia, where he was visited by the Noblemen holding his partie, as well of that Island as of Corsica, whereas the Earle of Cinerche and others of the familie of Istria, and of that of Rocca, held many townes and castles at his deuotion. From thence the King past into Prouence, where he did visit Pope Benedict in Auignon, receiuing a rose from him on Palme Sunday, hauing done him homage for the Islands of Sardinia and Corsica: then continuing his voyage, hee arriued in Cattelogne in the beginning of Maie, in the yeare 1397. At his entrie into the countrie, hee found a stately ambassage, where were the chiefe Noblemen of Arragon, and deputies of the cite of Sarragossa, who intreated him, that without any stay he should goe vnto the
C Estates assembled at Sarragossa, and that he would not deale in any affaires of the realme, vntill (according to the auncient custome) hee had taken and receiued their othes, the which seemed something strange vnto the King: yet he answered these ambassadors graciously, that being tired with so long a voyage, he had need of rest: wherefore after some little staie at Barcelona, hee would come presently to Sarragossa: notwithstanding after his entrie into Barcelona, which was very stately, sitting in his tribunall, hee pronounced a sentence against Mathew Earle of Foix, and D. Joanne his wife, beeing his neece, by the which he declared them rebels, and guilty of high treason, and fallen from all their rights: he did confiscate the Vicontie of Castelbon, and other lands held by them in the realme of Arragon and Cattelogne, adiudging them vnto the crowne. Moreover, hee sent from thence shippes and souldiers into Sardinia and Sicile, sending backe D. Roger of Moncado into his gouernment of Sardinia, and D. Pedro of Bage into Sicile. After which, hee went to Sarragossa to the Estates about the end of October. The King presiding in this assembly, did much commend the vertue, fidelitie, and valour of the Arragonois, seeking by good words to make them tractable and well-affected to him and his children: for alter the oath taken by him for the obseruation of the rights and priuiledges of Arragon and other Prouinces, and reciprocally by them, he intreated the Estates to acknowledge his sonne D. Martin King of Sicile, beeing absent, for lawfull heire of that crowne after him, the which was willingly done, the King of Siciles ambassadors hauing promised an vnion of the two realmes for euer, and to cause the King their master to ratifie it, and to take the oathes accustomed in such acts. There was giuen vnto the King at these Estates 130000 florins of gold to pay his debts, and 30000 for his expences. During the assembly, there was some tumult of warre in the Mountains, there being entred by the pace of Sarazal some of the Earle of Foix troupes, who tooke and sackt Thermes: but without any other exploit they returned. In the meane time Mathew of Castelbon Earle of Foix dyed without any children, being in the yeare 1398, whereby D. Martin remayned peaceable King of Arragon, who settled himselfe, and disposed of his affaires according to his desire.

Sentence as against the earle
of Foix.

Death of the
Earle of Foix.

First of all knowing that the wisdom of a Prince consists chiefly in knowing wel how to chuse men of valour, whose seruice he must vse in the gouernment of his Estate, he laboured to draw vnto him, by his bountie and fauour, the hearts and affections of those which he knew to be such: namely, he gratified D. Alphonso of Arragon much, and honored him with the Duchie of Gandia; he made D. James of Prade Constable of Arragon, and to many other Noblemen and knights, hee gaue gifts and priuiledges: hee restored Archambaud of Graille, who had bene heire in the right of succession to the Earledome of Foix by reason of his wife, sister to the deceased Mathew of Castelbon,

Wisdom necessary in a Prince to chuse
men of valour.

to the lands which he had forfeited: yet he made but a bare recompence to his Neece the Countesse of Foix, who retired her selfe to Valencia, with 3000. florens of yearly pension, for her whole entertainment, where she ended her dayes. He married his other neece D. Violant to Lewis Duke of Anjou, chosen king of Naples, to whom hee gaue 160000. florens in dowrie, so as the should renounce all rights and pretensions which shee might haue to the Crowne of Arragon, and other lands of the deceased king D. John her father, adding afterwards to this bond, an allyance which he made with Nauarre, to be the better assured of the French. And not to forget the workes of pietie, couered with the vale of religion, seeing Pope Benedict greatly molested in Auignon, although it were by the practices of the French king, he sent an armie by sea, to assist him, and if need were to carrie him away, the euent whereof was miserable: for being come vnto the mouth of the riuer of Rhosne about December, in the heart of a very sharpe winter, the gallies not being able to go vp the riuer, by reason the water was low, most of the slaues, mariners and soldiers dyed for cold.

Statues sent by the Pope into
Arragon.

The fauour which the king of Arragon did shew vnto the Pope, did so far auayle him, as it made the French king forbear for a time to oppose himselfe: to acknowledge the which, and in his loue to his country, he sent into Arragon foure statues of siluer and gilt and enriched with stones, the which were kept in the city of Sarragossa, and therein were inclosed the reliques of Valerius, Lawrence, Vincent and Euerastia, reputed by the Sarragossians for Saints, patrons and protectors.

Thus the king D. Martin sought in the first yeares of his raigne, to content the world by his humane wisdom, and to purchase the fame of a politicke and religious Prince: notwithstanding as humane wisdom failes most commonly, he could not keepe such a meane, but in gratifying some, he discontented others, yea the Arragonois themselves: for the Realme being often in combustion, by reason of the old quarrels betwixt the houses of Luna, Virea, and Gurrea, and especially during the interregne many of these factions presumed to go to field, and did rob and spoile euen to the towne gates: whereupon the king raised some troupes to suppress these theues, giuing the charge thereof to Don Alphonse, sonne to D. Alphonse of Arragon Duke of Candia, making him as it were Governour of the realme, and his Lieutenant generall: a great dignity, which was presently impugned by the Noblemen of Arragon, moued through enuy, alledging, that that charge ought not to be giuen according to their ancient customes, but to one that was borne in Arragon: wherefore they appealed before the Iustice maior, being an attempt against their liberties and freedoms: so thinking to preuent a mischief, hee augmented it for the Realme was presently full of armes, which hee was forced to remedy with great difficulties and seuerer meanes, it may be vnworthie of his royall Maiestie.

Troubles in Arragon.

Castille.

The Schisme which was in the church of Rome, did somewhat trouble Spaine: yet by the wise counsell of Princes, all past without any great akeration. The French king did greatly sollicite him of Castile to ioyne with him, to force Pope Benedict of Auignon to submit himselfe to a compromise treated by the Princes, and according to the protestation of the Cardinalls which had chosen him, to leaue his dignitie, vntill it had bene determined who should be Pope, and head in the church of Rome. For the which the king D. Henry hauing called a great assembly at Salamanca of Prelats and Doctors, both Dominians and Canonists, in the end he yeelded after many difficulties: whereof D. Martin K. of Arragon being aduertised, he was wonderfully moued: for he did much support Pope Benedict, a Cattelane by nation, and therefore sent to Salamanca before the kings departure, his ambassadours were Vidal of Blagues, and Raymond of France, to complain of this vnion which the king of Castile had made with him of France, without communicating any thing vnto him: to whom an answer was made in friendly tearmes, which did satisfie them.

In the assembly of Salamanca it was aduised, that the two Popes should reuoke all the proceedings made one against another, and should haue an interview in some place of assurance, where they should denife betwixt themselves how to free the church of this Schisme, the which they should declare within a certaine time: and during the delay they should giue a certaine pastor vnto the church, but if they could not, or would not agree, that

A that then they should both giue ouer their pretended dignities: but this aduice was of no force, for D. Pedro de Luna, or Pope Benedict, would by no meanes leaue it, saying, that he would hold his Popedom, whereupon he was much afflicted by the French, yet by the meanes of the king Don Henry, he had some rest for a time, and the French king seemed neither to acknowledge, nor obey him, the which continued not long.

At that time there sprung vp a Sect of white coates: their author was a Priest of the mountaines of Sauoy. They were men moued with deuotion, who began to runne ouer Italy, as it were in procession, attired in white shirts, and wearing their haire long ouer their faces, demanding pardon of God, and mercie for their sinnes, with great and lamentable cries: and moreover in going they sung Hymnes, as that which begins, Stabat mater dolorosa, and other such suffrages. Their troupe in the beginning being but small, they grew to so great a number, there ioyning with them at all the townes where they past, men, women, children, Clergi-men, secular men, Gentlemen, peasants, poore and rich, so as they were forced to diuide themselves into bands, which sometimes were not lesse then ten, twelue, or fifteen thousand persons, which made many Princes and Potentates of Italy to suspect, that vnder a shew of religion they had some hidden enterprize to the prejudice of their Estates. The towne of Luca gaue them most credit. They ranne vntill that their captaine with a great multitude of his sectaries being come to Viterbo, Pope Boniface found meanes to draw him to Rome, where being examined of his intention, they found nothing in him but meere ignorance and superstition, whereby all the townes and families in Italy had bene troubled: many men leauing their houses, wiues, children, parents, with all publike and priuate affaires, to follow this poore ideot, who for all the paine he had taken, was by the Popes sentence condemned to the fire, who being burnt, euerie one retired to his home, and his followers were dispersed into diuers parts.

Beginning of the white coate

About the yeare 1399. died D. Pedro of Tenorio, Archb. of Toledo, being forrie hee could not attaine vnto the yeare 1400. to the end he might depart this world in the yeare of Iubile. The Spaniards speake much good of this Prelate: that he had bene employed during the raigne of three kings, in the weightiest affaires of Spain, with opinion to haue bene a wife and discreet Councillor, a learned man, and a louer of learned men: but he was wilfull, and that which he himselfe bragged of, not very liberall (for the great reuenues which he enioyed) especially to his kindred, who neuer receiued any aduancement from him, nor by his fauour, from the king of Castile. His house was ancient, issued from Galicia, but growne greater in Portugall: he himselfe was borne at Tauria, the sonne of a simple Gentleman, and but poore. He left many remembrances of him in his buildings in diuers parts of Spaine, as S. Martins bridge in the citie of Toledo, and the castle of S. Seruant towards the port called Alcantara, the Monasterie of S. Catherine of the Order of S. Jerome, and the Collegiall church of Chanoins in the towne of Talauera, the chappell where his bodie lyes in the great church at Toledo, and the cloyster thereof, a stately and royall worke. Besides these buildings, he repaired the castles of Canales, Alhamin and Almonacid. He caused a strong castle to be built neere vnto Alcala the royall, to serue for a refuge for Christian slaues, which escaped the Moores that were nere vnto the frontier, and ordayned a certaine rent for the entertainment of a wonderfull great lampe, the which should be a direction in the night for poore fugitiues, giuing light three great leagues round about. The towne of Villafrañca, the church and the bridge vpon Tayo, betwixt Talauera and Guadalupe, were his worke, it being called at this day, the Archbishops bridge. By the death of this Prelate, the sea of Toledo was void foure yeares, the Schisme in the Romish church being the cause thereof. In the meane time D. John Bishop of Siguencia had the gouernement of the Church, who gaue credit to the image of Saint Marie of Nieua, and beganne to build the Church thereof, the which was afterwards augmented by the Queene Donna Catherine. This image was found by one Peter, who for that cause was surnamed, Of good aduenture, who hauing found it, aduertised the bishop. It is much reuerenced by the Spaniards, who hold, that shee doth wonderfull and great miracles.

An. 1399.

Death of the Arch-bishop of Toledo.

Sea of Toledo void for foure yeares.

The yeare 1400. at what time the Iubile was, the Spaniards going about to set vp a great

Demond of King Henry of
the first.

of a hundred millions of Marauidis then currant, paying to euery horseman twenty Marauidis a day, and to euery foote-man tenn. He therefore intreated the estates, to provide and contribute that summe freely and speedily, seeing it must be employed for the defence and safety of all Spaine. The estates were amazed at so great a charge at that season and besought the Infant to speake vnto the King for the moderating of the summe, seeing hee had to great a treasure lying at Segobia, whereof a small portion might ease the Estates. The Prelats and Clergy men about all others, made great difficulty for this contribution: the which in the ende the King, after conference with his Brother, and other his familiars, ordred in this manner.

Testament of
the King D.
Henry.

That the Estates should presently furnish fourty five Millions of Marauidis, which are valued at a Million of Crownes by the Authors of those times: and if the King should neede any more, hee might impose it without calling of the Estates. The condition to impose mony vpon the subiects without calling the States seemed hard, yet they all consented for that time, so as it might not be a president. Matters standing thus, the Kings infirmity increased in such sort, as foreseeing his approaching death, he made his will, and instituted for heire of his realmes his Sonne D. John, beeing but twenty two monethes old, leaving him for Tutors, vntill hee came to the age of fourteene yeares complete, the Queene D. Catherine his wife, and his brother the Duke of Pegnasel. And if his heire should die, hee did then substitute his daughter Catherine, and vnder the same tutors, to whome also he left the gouernment of his realmes.

Death of King
Henry of Cas-
tile.

His will was to be buried in the habit of Saint Francis, and that his Sonne should be bred vnder the discipline of Diego Lopes of Estuniga, chiefe iustice of Castille, of D. John Velaasco his Lord Chamberlaine and of D. Pablo Bishop of Carthage-na. Having thus disposed of his last will, hee died soone after. Some Authors say, that he was poysoned by a Phisition a Jew, the which was knowne afterwards by the confession of other Jewes that were prisoners, for other disorders committed in derision of the ceremonies vsed in the Christian Religion, and were executed at Segobia. The King D. Henry the third hauing rayned sixteen yeares and almost three months, dyed in the yeare 1406. in December, in the City of Toledo, being not much above twenty seauen yeares old: hee was interred in the Chappell of the last Kings in the Cathedrall Church there. The same yeare dyed Pope Innocent the seauenth at Rome hauing rayned two yeares, in whose place was chosen Angelo Carairo a Venetian, Patriarke of Constantinople, and Cardinall of Saint Marke, by thirteen Cardinalls of his faction, and was named Gregory the twelfth by whome the Schisme was contynued.

13
Nauarre.

After the returne of the Queene D. Leonora to the King of Nauarre her husband, shee was deliuered of a Sonne in the city of Pampelone, who was called by his Fathers name, but heliued little. The peace of this realme was great vnder this King Charles, who liued very contentedly with his wife, after her returne, and made her Regent when hee past into France, which was in the yeare. 1397. for hee had many great affaires to decyde with King Charles the sixt, who detayned many places from him, which had bene seazed on in his fathers time, and had often sollicitied him in vaine by his Ambassadors to do him reason: wherefore hee was forced to goe in person. Before his departure, hee ordayned there should be payed towards the building of the great Church of Pampelone, ruined some yeares before, the fortieth pennie of all the reuenues of his realme, for twelve yeares, where-with it was built in the forme we now see it. Hereof there were letters given by this King at Saint John of Pie de Port this yeare 1397. in May. His voiage into France did benefit him little, for besides that the French King was not counsellled to yeld vp the places which he held, especially in Normandy; the friendshippe which the King of Nauarre had with the English, was suspect and odious vnto him, although this amity were not preiudiciall to the French, but rather a Neutrality (to the end they might liue in peace) then a league. Seeing therefore that hee was not wellcome, hee returned presently into Nauarre, from whence soone after he sent the Cardinall of Pampelone, who had retired himselfe into Nauarre, after that hee had endured many miseries in Auignon, for Pope Benedict.

Hee

A He vsed such dilligence and fit meanes, as he made the French King and his counsell willing to giue recompence to the King of Nauarre for his lands, wherefore he was constrained to repasse the Pyrenees againe. In the meane time died John of Montfort duke of Brittain, husband to Ioane, sister to this King Charles of Nauarre, who had by her husband foure children, John who was duke, Richard, Arthur and Gyles. This Princeesse was afterwards married to Henry of Lancaster King of England, fourth of that name, he who deperied his cousin Richard of the crowne: by him she had not any children. Charles King of Nauarre, hauing caused his sonne Charles to be sworne his heire by the Estates of his realme, he married D. Ioanne his eldest daughter to John the eldest sonne of Archambaud, who had succeeded in the county of Foix and Bearn, by the death of Mathew of Castelbon: his second daughter called Donna Maria died a Virgin: and as for the third, Mary Queene of Sicile, being a little before dead, who by her testament had left this realme to D. Martin her husband, sonne to D. Martin King of Arragon, he thought to make her Queene of Sicile, and to marry her to this young D. Martin being a widower. He therefore sent his Ambassadors to the King of Arragon to this effect, who was very well pleased, and yeelded to the marriage, although they had offered him many other matches for his sonne D. Martin King of Sicile, and that the Sicilians did what they could to make him incline to a marriage with Ioane sister to Ladislaus King of Naples. The accord was made betwixt the King of Arragon, and the Ambassadors both of Nauarre and Sicile (amongst which was Peter Serra, Cardinal of Cartanes) at a place called C. Alen in the Realme of Valencia, in the yeere of our Lord 1401. where it was concluded that the King of Nauarre should giue in dowry with his daughter a hundred thousand florins, of the stampe of Arragon: whereof forty thousand in hand, and threecore thousand at a certaine time, for the which he should giue in pawne the townes and castles of Arguedas, Santa Caro, Murillo, and Gallipienso: the King of Arragon should binde for her dowry the townes and castles of Sos, Saluaterra, Vncastillo and Ruefte. And for that they were somewhat allied by affinity, there should be a dispensation procured from Benedict. For confirmation and execution of these things, the Kings of Arragon and Nauarre had an enterview vpon the confines of their Realmes, betwixt Cortes and Mallen, where they did sweare what had bene concluded. With the King of Nauarre did sweare D. Lionel of Nauarre his brother, D. Charles of Beaumont chiefe Standard-bearer, D. Martin of Lacarra Marthal, D. Francis of Villa Espeza, Chancellor of the realme, John Ruys of Ayuar, superintendant of the treasure, and D. Martin of Olloqui prior of Saint Iohn with others: In like manner did many noblemen and prelates for the King of Arragon.

Marriage of
D. Martin
King of Sicile and D. Blanch
of Nauarre.

This done the King of Arragon was conducted to Cortes, where hauing bene royally feasted by the King of Nauarre, the Infanta D. Blanch was deliuered vnto him, a Princeesse of excellent beauty, whom he led into his country, & hauing prepared a fleet at Valencia, he sent her into Sicile, to the King D. Martin his son vnder the charge of D. Martin of Cabrera, a Knight of Carrelogne, in 1402. This Lady was in the end Queene of Nauarre: for soone after the content of this marriage followed a discontent for the death of D. Lewis the second son to the King of Nauarre, being but sixe months old, and not long after that of D. Charles his eldest, which two Infants are buried in the Cathedral church at Pampelone, and D. Blanch suruiued her eldest sister D. Ioane. The crowne of Nauarre fell then to the succession of daughters, and the King caused D. Ioane his eldest daughter, to be againe sworne heire of the realme, with her husband D. John of Foix. This same yeere the Episcopall sea of Pampelone was voided, by the death of Cardinal Martin of Salua, bishop of that city, who had past the age of 66. yeeres, in great trouble and paine, to maintaine the party of Pope Benedict in Auignon. D. Michel of Salua his Nephew obtained the Bishoprike after him, who was afterwards made Cardinall by Pope Benedict, in following of whom he died two yeeres after at Monaco. The King of Nauarre being the third time called in France, his voiage was then more profitable vnto him, then at the precedent, for he obtained of king Charles the sixt the Lordship of Nemours the which was erected to a Dutchy, and moreouer twelve hundred pounds sterling of yeerely rent, to be taken out of the reuenues of Bry and Champagne, with a good

Death of the two sonnes of Nauarre.

Title of Earle of Euxeu cesseth in the house of Na-uarre, and take that of duke of Nemours.

good summe of ready money for all pretensions and rights, the which he renounced, seeing he could not doe otherwise: in respect whereof the title of Earle of Euxeu ceased in the house of Nauarre, taking that of Duke of Nemours.

The towne of Cherbourg in Normandy, being deliuered to the French: all letters and Marthal D. Martin Henriques, was by this accord deliuered to the French: all letters and expeditions being ended, the King D. Charles returned into Nauarre, an other way; for he past by Languedoc and Cartelogne, where he visited the King D. Martin at Lenida, with great content and pleasure to these two Princes allied. Passing from thence by Saragossa, he came into his country, where afterwards he gaue himselfe to building in many places, yea two sumptuous pallaces, one in Tafalla, the other in Olite, the which now fall to ruine, for want of reparations, especially that of Olite, where the Marshalls of Nauarre were accustomed to lodge: and the Spaniards say, that he had intent, to make a paved causey and couered, to passe at all times without discommodity, from one of these places to the other, being but a litle league distant. The bridge of Estella vpon the riuer of Ega, was this Kings worke, who for that he had liued in continuall peace, had store of treasure, to imploy in such buildings. During his aboad in France, there had bene some speech of marriage betwixt his youngest daughter D. Beatrice and D. James sonne to the Earle of Vrgel, of the bloud royall of Arragon, the which by reason of certaine lets,ooke no effect: wherefore the King being returned, he married her to Lames of Bourbon Earle of March, one of the goodliest and actiue Princes of his time. The marriage was celebrated in the city of Pampelone, in the yeere 1406. with great solemnity, and concourse of the nobility of Spaine and France, about the beginning of the warre of Granado, and a litle before the death of D. Henry King of Castile, the newes whereof were greuous to King Charles, a great friend and allie to the house of Castile.

D. Iohn the second of that name, 18. King of Castile, 39. of Leon.

14
Castile.

Factions in Castile after the Kings
death.

The heat of the warre against the Moores was somewhat quenched by the death of King Henry, leaving his sonne and successor in his realmes, an Infant, in his swathing clothes, being but two and twenty monthes old. For it behoued to haue a speedy care of that which was necessary for the peace of the Realme, wherein the Queene D. Catherine, and the Infant D. Fernand duke of Pegnasfel, appointed Governours by the testament of the deceased King; imployed all their care: but they could not keepe the noblemen from entring into factions: and as the government of two is neuer firme, they were the first which diuided themselves. The prelates, noblemen and deputies of townes which were in court, assembled againe in Toledo: Some perswaded the Infant D. Fernand duke of Pegnasfel, to take vpon him the title of King, promising to maintain and defend him, alledging that it was no new thing in Spaine, when as the deceased Kings children were young and not fit to gouerne, or they left none but daughters, that the royall Scepter was put into the vnckles hands, or of some other Prince of the bloud, a man of fit age and endowed with wisdom, to gouerne the affaires of that realme: producing many examples of D. Sancho the fourth, who had bene receiued for King, and the children of his elder brother, being yet young reiectet, and of the King D. Henry his grandfather, who had reigned with the consent of the Spaniards, although he were a bastard, to the prejudice of D. Constance Dutchesse of Lancaster, being then eldest daughter to the King D. Pedro, with other examples more antient, as well of Castile as of the first Kings of Leon, either well or ill reported; That the vrgent affaires of the realme, and the warre of Granado which was begunne, required that he should reigne, and the troubles which he had lately seene in his brothers time, did aduertise him to prevent others, which were a breeding, if Castile should receiue an Infant of two and twenty monthes for King. The Infant D. Fernand was not well pleased with these perswasions, but the Constable D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, hauing in a publike assembly, required openly,

A openly that they would raise him to the royall throne of Castile, being a plot laied among the noblemen, thinking that most voices would choose D. Fernand, he made an answer of rare example, and persifted therein; and to whom then said he belongs the realme, but to my Nephew D. Iohn sonne and onely heire to the King D. Henry my brother? Thus by this conscientious Prince, the crowne of Castile and Leon was preferred for the Infant, who was then at Segobia, with the Queene Donna Catherine his mother, whether the duke of Pegnasfel went, with the other noblemen, after the funerals of the deceased King. The breeding vp of the young King was left in the mothers charge, who made great instance against D. Iohn of Velasco, and Diego Lopes of Estuniga, who demanded it, according vnto the fathers will, to stop whose mouthes, and to giue them some content there was presently giuen them twelue thousand florins of gold. The will being read, and an oth taken, the Queene and the Duke charged themselves with the gouernment of the King, swearing in the hands of D. Iohn of Illeica Bishop of Siguença, and promising the obseruation of the lawes, rights and preiudges of the realme, Prouinces and cities thereof: But within few daies the Queene and D. Fernand disagreed in their commands. The Queene being a woman was gouerned by an other woman of Cordoua, called Leonora Lopes, without whose aduice she did not any thing, no not that which was resolved in counsell; so as without the dukes great modesty and patience, the realme had bene full of seditions and great confusion. It was ordained that the King should haue three hundred launces for his gard, and the Duke two hundred, the which did much displease euery man of iudgement. And for that the souldiars which were vpon the frontier were not paid, and endured much, there was drawne out of the Kings cofers twenty millions of Marauidies, vpon condition it should be repaid out of the first of the Kings reuenues that should be receiued, or others that should be leauied.

Whilest they were attentue about these affaires at Segobia, the Marshal of Castile Fernando Garcia of Herrera, being in Lorca, entred into the country of Granado, to surprise some moores, who had their retreat at Vera, but for want of ladders he could not effect it. Some daies after he incountred with other troups neere vnto Xurena, where hauing defeated them, he entred into the towne, but he could not take the castle; wherefore the Christians retired, hearing that a great number of Moores came to charge them. These petty exploits did somewhat kindle the warre of Granado, wherein the Infant D. Fernand desired to imploy himselfe.

Difficulties increasing in Segobia, in respect of the government, it was thought fit Donna Catherine the Queene mother, and D. Fernand duke of Pegnasfel should diuide it betwixt them: so as the places remoat from all tumults of warre, and within the country, should be at the Queenes disposition; which were the dioceses of St. Iames, Tuy, Astorga, Ouedo, Leon, Zamora, Salamanca, Ciudad Roderigo, Auila, Segobia, Olma, Burgos and Calaoarra. And vnder the dukes charge, should remaine the Archbishoppries of Toledo and Seuille, and the Bishopries of Cuenca, Siguença, Carthagen, Caliz, Cordoua, Iacn, Badajos, Coria, Plaisance, Lugo, Mondonedo, Palence and Orense, with certaine conditions vpon the iudgement of suits, and other things.

The King of Granado hauing for his allies and assistants in this warre the petty Kings of Tunes and Tremessen, he caused his army to march towards Priego. And at the sametime the Duke of Pegnasfel went towards the frontier, and came to Seuille. There were many light incounters, sometimes with gaine, sometimes with losse: the towne of Zaara, the castle of Andiro, Priego, Cagnete, Las Cuevas and Ortexica were taken from the Moores. The strength of the Moores army was about Iacn, and yet they durst not giue bataille to the Christians, who went and camped before Septenil, hauing in their campe some peeces of ordinance, whereof the Spaniards were in those daies very vnskillfull, the inuention of that deuillish Engine being then new. At sea thirteene galleys of Castile did fight against three and twenty of the Moores, D. Alphonso Henriques being Admiral of Castile, who tooke eight of the enemies galleys, the rest soone perished, and some fled.

The sege of Septenil was long, during the which D. Pedro of Estuniga tooke Ayamont: and in the end through the valour of the Moores, which were within Septenil, they

The Infant
D. Fernand
suffeth the realme of Cas-
tile.

Gouernment
Castile diuided betwixt the Queene mother and the Duke of Peg-nasfel.

15
First use of Arillery in Spaine.

they were forced to raise the siege. The Moores after this retreat recovered Priego A and Las Cucuas, and burnt them: they attempted Cagnette, but they found it well manned.

The duke of Pegnafiell going from Seulle, had carried in this warre the sword of King Fernand furnished the holy, who tooke that city from the Moores, attributing some vertue and happinesse thereunto: and for that hee had promised to bring it backe, and leaue it in its place, hee did it at this returne, and then past into Castile, leauing good order vpon the frontier: this is all was done in the yeere of our Lord 1407. in the warre of Granado; at what time died Don Pero Lopes of Ayala great Chamberlaine of Castile, being threescore and fiftene yeeres of age, a Knight endowed with two principall qualities which adorne nobility, for besides his learning, which was great, he had made B prooffe of his valour in the two battailes of Nagera, betwixt the two Kings D. Pedro and D. Henry brethren, and in that of Aljubarote, betwixt D. John King of Castile and D. John of Portugal. He hath left in writing the History of Castile, of his time; a treatise of hunting, whereunto he was much giuen, and other Bookes.

An. 1407.
Death of D.
Pero Lopes of Ayala, valiant and learned Knight.

An. 1408.

The yeere 1408. being come, the Estates of Castile and Leon, assembled at Guadalajara, whether came the King, the Queene-mother and the Infanta. The duke of Pegnafiell came also, whereas the deputies of the Estates hauing had diuerse conferences touching the continuance of the warre of Granado, they agreed and offred money for the furnishing thereof, yet with some delaies and difficulties. D. Pedro de Luna Archbishop of Toledo, who had bene at this assembly, had led a young man of eightene yeeres of age C with him, whom he aduowed to be his kinsman, and was called Aluaro de Luna, whom he brought into the Kings house, and made him Page of the chamber, by the means of Gomes Carrillo the Kings Governour. He was held to be sonne of Aluaro of Luna, Lord of Cagnette, who was chiefe cup-bearer to the King D. Henry: but he who was held to be his father, did not avow him for his sonne, for he was borne of a dishonest woman, called Mary of Cagnette, who had bene common to others, and had brought them children: wherefore Aluaro de Luna did not thinke that this was his sonne, and for that he should not inherit his great possessions, hee found all in his life time, leauing to this child only eight hundred florins, and that at the intreaty of his friends. Aluaro the father being dead, the child retired to Auignon, to the court of Pope Benedict, where hauing remained some time, he came into Castile to the Archbishop, by whose meanes he was receiued into the Kings house, and in time grew so great, as he was made Constable of the realme, and yet it was not very successfull for him. His mother Mary of Cagnette, had also by a captaine of Cagnette, D. John of Crezuella, who was Bishop of Ojuna, and afterwards Archbishop of Seulle, and in the end of Toledo.

Exploits of warre betwixt
the Castilians
and Moores.

Treaty with the Moores.

Whilest they remained at Guadalajara, the King of Granado came to the siege of Alcaudete, hauing seven thousand horse and 26000. foote in his army: yet through the valour of Martin Alphonso of Montemajor and others, which were within the place, it was preferred. The Moores victuals were many times cut off by the garrisons of Andalusia, & many light victories gotten one of the other, whereas Garcia Fernandes Manrique captaine of Xeres, and Fernand Rodriguez of Vallezillo, who held Zahara, and Fernand Arias of Sahaedra, Governour of Cagnette, shewed themselves both valiant & vigilant, carrying great spoiles out of the Moores country, every one in his quarter. This warre being more difficult to the King of Granado then hee had esteemed, hee sent Ambassadors to the Governours at Guadalajara, to demand a truce, the which was graunted, against the will of D. Fernand Duke of Pegnafiell, who desired the warre should continue. Wherefore the Estates reduced the subuention which they had granted of threescore millions of maraudies, to fiftie and forty.

Joseph

Joseph the thirteenth King of Granado.

Dying this cessation of armes, King Mahumet Aben Balua died, hauing put on a poisoned shirt, the twelfth yeere of his reigne, and of the Arabians the 791. in whose place came King Joseph his eldest brother, a little before put in prison in Salobregne, from whence he was drawne and led with great silence to Granado, to raigne ouer the Moores, being loath presently to divulge Mahumets death, for feare of the Christians enterprises. Seeing himselfe settled, he sent a messenger presently to D. Alphonso Fernandes Governour of Alcala the royal, aduertising him of his aduancement, and withall he sent vnto the King of Castile and to the Governours, a Moorish Knight called Abdalla Alemin, to let them vnderstand what had past, intreating them to reioyce at his good hap, and to continue the truce made with his predecessor Mahumet, the which the Queene mother, and the duke D. Fernand did confirme for the said time, and sent a Secretary to Granado to see it sworne. At his returne, he was accompanied with an other Ambassador, who had charge to present vnto the King of Castile, horses, twords, some peeces of veluet, rayfins, dried figs, almonds, and other presents, and to require a prolongation of the truce for two yeeres, but he obtained it not; for the Queene mother and the duke of Pegnafiell, would haue King Joseph acknowledge himselfe vassall to the King of Castile, whereof the Ambassador excused himselfe, saying that he had no charge to treat of any such matter: yet all acts of hostility ceased that yeere 1409. notwithstanding some tumult at Priego, the Moores contrary to their plighted faith, running vpon them which did repaire it: but this was peaceified and satisfied, with excuses from King Joseph, and the truce prolonged for fiftie monthes.

An. 1409.

The court being at Vailledolit, was then in some combustion, for that many imagining that D. John Velasco and D. Diego Lopes of Estuniga, did entertaine the Queene mother in quarrel with the duke of Pegnafiell, D. Frederic the young Earle of Transamara, sonne to D. Pedro, did presse him to punish them, offering to lay hold of them, if he pleased: whereof they hauing some intelligence, retired from court, whereat the Queene was much discontented, and was not quiet vntill she had caused them returne, hauing obtained a safe conduit from the duke D. Fernand. At Vailledolit there arrived Ambassadors from the French King, and from Lewis Duke of Orleans his brother, who offered the King of Castile and his Governours to come to the war against the Moores, with a thousand launces entertained: with them were Ambassadors from the Dukes of Austria and Luxemburg, making the like offers: and moreover the Duke of Orleans demanded Queene Beatrix, widow to King John the first to wife. There were great thanks giuen vnto them all, and the truce made with the new King of Granado made knowne vnto them. As for the marriage the widow Queene would giue no care vnto it, contenting herselfe to liue a widowes life, in her house of Villa real, from whence she did not part. The French Ambassadors confirmed the ancient league betwixt the houses of France and Castile.

At Vailledolit there was an assembly, in the which was ratified the marriage of the Infanta Donna Maria the Kings sister with her cousin Germain D. Alphonso eldest sonne to the Duke of Pegnafiell, to her was assigned for dowrie the Marquisate of Villena, Aranda and Portillo: and for an earnest penny of the marriage, there were thirty thousand doubloons of gold deliuered. This yeere D. Laurence Suarez, of Figueroa, master of Saint James being dead, there was substituted in his place D. Henry the third, sonne to the Infant D. Fernand Duke of Pegnafiell, notwithstanding all the labouring of Garcia Hernandez, Lord of Villagarcia, great Commander of Castile.

About that time there was set vp (as a most holy thing in Spaine) an Image of the Virgin Mary, found by a religious Frenchman, in the mountaine which is betwixt Salamanca, and Cité Roderigue, called La Pegna of France, where afterwards there was a Monastery monastery built, in honour of this Image, whereof the Spaniards report many Prodiges A and miracles, of the which they haue made whole bookes and treaties. This age was fertile (during the Schisme of the church) of sects and new monasticall institutions. For besides the reformation of the regular Chanoins of Saint Augustin, by the diligence of Leon of Carrate Prior of Frigionaja of Santa Maria in the fields of Luca; the Order of White Monkes of Mount Oliuet had its beginning neere vnto Siena, by Bernard and other Monkes of Siena, and that of Saint George of Alaga, by Laurence Insulin a Venetian otherwise called blue Celestins.

16.
Marriage betwixt D. Alphonso eldest sonne to the Duke of Pegnafiell, and D. Maria the Kings sister.

Three Popes at one time in the church of Rome.

The same yeere the Schisme in the church did produce a third head in the church of Rome: for many Princes hauing insisted much for the reuion of the church, that the B two Popes Benedict of Auignon, and Gregory of Rome, should meet at Sauona, and take some good course for the quiet of Christendome, these good fathers, zealous of their glory, did so contemne one another, as there was no meanes to draw them together: wherefore many Cardinals being disbanded, as well from the sea of Rome, as from that of Auignon, there was a councill celebrated by them at Pisa in Tuscany, by the which Benedict and Gregory being depofed from their papal dignity, Peter Philarge, a friar, borne in Candy, Archbishop of Milan, and Cardinal of the title of the twelve Apostles, was chosen, and named Alexander the fifth, who liued but tenne monthes: wherefore the Cardinals were forced to meet againe at Bolonia in Lombardy, whereas Balthasar C Cosse a Neapolitaine, Cardinal of the title of Saint Eustace, and Legat of Bolonia, was chosen, and named by them John the three and twentieth. This was a tripling of the Schisme, and confusion in the church of Rome: for the two first Popes did still hold their dignities, and had their followers, to the contempt one of another, namely Castile and Nauarre held for Benedict relying in Auignon, holding the other two for false Popes.

Arragon.

17 Vvare in Sardynia.

About all others D. Martin King of Arragon did reuerence and support Pope Benedict, who at that time had many crosses both within and without his realme: for the King of Sicile his sonne, being young and gouerned by young men, had so discontented the Noblemen of the country, both Sicilians and Arragonois, as finding himselfe plunged againe in very great difficulties, the King his father was forced to send him succors both of gallies and souldiars, whereby in the end he became maister of all Sicile, but with great paine: and being better counselled he did gouerne it with more honour and authority, but not without continuall iealousie and distrust: Yet hee had meanes to imploy himselfe in the warre of Sardynia, and to preserue that Island to the crowne of Arragon: In the which Brancalcon of Oria, had made such attempts against the Arragonois, as they were in a manner ready to abandon it, hee hauing ioyned vnto his forces those of Americ Vicont of Narbone, who had married Beatrice sister to his wife Leonora of Arbozea; these two brothers in law, being strong and also fauored by the common-weale of Genoua, it was needfull to haue the forces of Sicile and Arragon vnited to suppress them. D. Martin King of Sicile came thether in person with tenne gallies, with a resolution not to leaue the Island, vntill he had wholly subdued it, whereof he did aduertise the King his father, who soone after sent D. Pedro Torellia into Sardynia with an hundred and fifty saile, which transported good numbers of foote and horse with many Noblemen and Knights of faine.

Viceroy of Valencia
slaine
by the treachery of his owne brother.

During this preparation D. Raymond Boil, Viceroy of Valencia, was murdered in Easter weeke, going out of the castle, whereof his owne brother was a practiser, whereof being conuicted, he lost his life, with the rest that had committed the murder. Within a while after there was a marriage in the same city, betwixt D. James of Arragon Earle of Vrgel, sonne to D. Pedro, and D. Isabella the Kings sister, and daughter to the deceased King D. Pedro, and of Sibille of Sforza, his last wife, an vnfortunate marriage, as we will see. And for that a son which D. Martin King of Arragon the grandfather, conceived vnto was dead about that time, D. Martin King of Arragon the grandfather, conceived vnto great a griefe, as retrying himselfe from all affaires, he shut himselfe vp in the Monastery of Val de Christus, which hee had caused to bee built, and left the whole charge of the warre of Sardynia to his sonne Don Martin King of Sicile, who (with the forces of

A of Arragon, led by D. Pedro Torellia) charged the enemies campe about Sauluri, and put them to rout with great slaughter, forcing the Vicont of Narbona to saue himselfe in Montreal: he tooke Sauluri and the castle, with the towne of Eglise, and laied siege to Oristagno, the chiefe fort of Brancalcon of Oria, and of the Sardinians rebelled: but the King being surprized with sickness in this fortunate victory, hee caused himselfe to be carried to Caillery, where he died, to the great griefe of all the Sicilians and Arragonois, and extreame sorrow of the King of Arragon his father, who liued not long after him. By his death without any lawfull children, the realme of Sicile fell to the King of Arragon, and was for euer after vnited to that crowne. Blanche of Nauarre, the widow Queen, remained Regent of the Island, by the will of the King her husband, confirmed by her father in law: A base sonne of his called D. Frederic, had for his portion the Earldome of Luna. At that time there grew great troubles in Arragon, whereof D. James Earle of Vrgel was the chiefe author, a turbulent Prince, who made no difficulty to challenge the crowne euen in the life time of the King Don Martin: and for that it was a tickle point, and did not succeed well, he aspired to the ordinary Regency, which was a dignity wherewith the eldest sonnes of Arragon, and the presumptiue heires, were wont to bee honoured, the which hee obtained, and was moreover made Constable: but vnderhand the King gaue order that he should not be receiued in his Regency, and caused an appeale to be made by the factions of Vvrea, Hercidia and other, before the C Iustice Major of Arragon.

Death of Don
Martin King
of Sicile.

Marriage of
D. Martin
King of Arra-gon & Donna Isabe of Princes.

This was in the yeere 1409. when as the King desirous to see if he might haue a child to succeed him in his great Estates, married with Donna Isabe of Prades, or Marguerite, as some write, a faire young virgin of the blood royall, the which hastened his end: and in the meane time hee was much sollicit by Lewis duke of Aniou, who had married Donna Violant, daughter to D. John King of Arragon, and by the Duke of Pegnasel, borne of Donna Leonora of Arragon, daughter to the King Don Pedro, and sister to this King D. Martin, that he would declare his successor, the which he refused to doe, at their requests, but tired with their importunities, he was ready to name by his testament, for heire of the realmes of Arragon, Sicile and other lands, Don Frederic de Luna, bastard to his deceased sonne. This King being thus distracted with passions in his age, the affaires of Sicile and Sardynia were more troubled then before.

18
Castille.

In the yeere 1410. beganne the warre in Castile against the Moores, the truce beeing expired, and the Moores army hauing surprized Zahara with great slaughter of the inhabitants and souldiars, and great spoile of them that remained. The Infant Don Ferdinand comming for this occasion to Cordoua, hee caused the ruines of Zahara to bee repaired, and went to beseege Antequera, hauing in his army tenne thousand foote and three thousand five hundred horse. Neere vnto the towne were two hills, the approaches whereof beeing kept, the army might bee safe from all attempts of the Moores, who were in field with five thousand horse and 80000. foote, led by Cidi Ali and Cidi Amet brethren to Ioseph King of Granado. These passages were garded, the lower part of the hill with fixe hundred Launces and two thousand foote vnder the command of Don Sancho of Rojas Bishop of Palenca, Don Diego Fernandes of Quignones Gouvernor of the Asturia's, D. Aluar Peres of Guzman, and Don John Hurtado of Mendoza. And at the other hill of harder access, being higher and easier to be kept, there were set foure hundred Launces and one thousand foote, commanded by Don Martin Vasques, D. Fernand Peres of Ayala, Gouvernor of Guipuscoa, D. Raymond of Guzman and Iohn of Soto Major great commander of Alcantara. The Duke of Pegnasel had caused many ladders to bee brought from Seuille, with other Engines of warre to assaile townes.

F The Moores beeing desirous for to raise the siege from before Antequera, came to assaile the Bishop of Palenca and his troupes in this passage of strength, from whence they were not onely repulst, but the skirmish growing very hot, in the end, beyond the Moores expectation, there was a great encounter, the Bishoppe beeing fortified with new bands, which came from the campe, so as the Moores fighting without order, and rather hindered then fauoured by their numbers of rascally footemen, they they were forced to turne their backs with great losse; for authors write that there were above fiftene thousand of them slaine vpon the field, and onely twelue hundred Christians.

M m m

Defence of Christians
neere to Montexicar.

After this victory the sege was continued, and the place battred by all meanes, the which in like manner was valiantly defended, where as the Christians lost more in the sallies of the beleeged, then they had done in the battaile. There died Martin Ruiz of Abén Dagno, of a poisoned arrow. On the other side three hundred christians home-men, going out of their garison of Iaen, were incountred, and cut in peeces by the Moores about Montexicar. But the Moores garison of Archidona within two leagues of Antiquera, were happely defeated by the Christians that were at the sege, for they did much annoy them, by their continuall courses, and cutting off their victualers and foragers that came to the campe. The riuier of Gorza was their common waiting place whether they could not go without a gard. The Christians being aduertised of an enterprise made vpon their men, hauing set a sentinell vpon an high eminent place, called the rocke of two Louers, they found themselves so strong, when as the Moores came to charge them, as they repulst them, and pursued them beating and killing euen vnto the gates of their fort: there were two thousand slaine vpon the field, and many carried away prisoners. The rocke of two Louers was so called from the deed of a Christian

Rocke of two Louers.

slauie, and his Maisters daughter being a Moore, whom he had perswaded to flie with him from Granado, to enioy their desired loues, and to liue freely together in Castile: they being pursued by her father, who was well accompanied, and ouertaken vpon this rocke, which is midde-way betwixt Archidona and Antiquera, after that they had long defended themselves against them that would take them, and seeing no meanes to escape, they cast themselves downe head-long from the top of the rocke, imbrasing one another, and so slue themselves. To diuert the sege of Antiquera, the Moores sent some to burne the Engines of battery that were before it with wilde fire, vnder colour of treating of a truce. The treason being descouered and punished, the Infant caused a trench to be cast and a rampart to be made round about the place, setting good gards, and then he pursued the sege, hauing fortified his army with the companies of Seuile and Cordoua, who haue alwaies done great seruice in these Moorish warres, the which kept King Ioseph for aduenturing of a battaile.

Antiquera
taken.

The towne of Antiquera being prest with all violence, it was taken, there going first vnto the assault, the companies of D. Garci Fernandes Manrique, of D. Charles of Arcilan Lord of Los Cameros, and Roderigo of Narbaez. The first which died in fighting, was Iuancho a Biscain, and the first which entred were Gutierre of Torres and Sancho Gonzales Cherino. The castle did hold out eight daies longer, and then was yielded by the Moores, to haue their liues saued and their goods, who were safely conducted to Archidona. There entred into it, Don Frederic Earle of Transtamara, and the Bishop of Palencia: the garde of the towne and castle was given to Roderigo of Narbaez. In the meane time the Moores did forrage the territorie of Alcala the royall, and the Christians after the taking of Antiquera, did ouerrunne the country of Aznal-mara, Cabecha and Yehar, small rownes which were taken by force, through the wisdom and valour chiefly of the Constable D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos: after which exploits the Infant Don Fernand returned a victor to Seuile, where he had messengers from the King of Granado, soliciting him to make a truce, wherevnto hee yielded, being prest to attend the affaires of Arragon: wherefore there was a truce concluded betwixt Castile and Granado for seuentene monethes.

Truce with the King of Granado.

19
Arragon.

Wee haue before left Don Martin King of Arragon, being without children, to succeed him, importuned by many Princes, pretending to bee his heires, troubled with the seditions and rebellions of the Sardynians and Sicilians, being old and broken, and yet newly married to a young Princeesse, with hope to raise his house: But being the weake both in bodie and minde, griefe and care made the way to a pestilent feuer, the which seized on him this yecre 1410. in the Monastery of Valdonzell, neere to Barcelona, hauing reigned about 14. yecres, whose body was buried in the Monastery of Poblete.

There

A There was no will of his sount, or any heire instituted in his Realmes of Arragon, Sicile &c. The reason thereof was thought to bee for that hee knew not to which hee should incline amongst all the pretendants to that crowne, after his deceale. Wherefore the Arragonois, Valentians, Cattelans and Sicilians were in great perplexity, for Don Fernand Duke of Pegnafiel Infant of Castile pretended a right, being sonne to Donna Leonora of Arragon, sister to the two last Kings deceased: Lewis Duke of Anjou hauing married Donna Violant, daughter to King Iohn the first, maintained the succession to belong to him: the like pretension had Don James Earle of Vrgel, hauing also married one of the daughters of the King Don Pedro: Don Frederic of Arragon, Earle of Luna, base sonne to Martin King of Sicile, put forth himselfe, and so did Don Alphonso Earle of Gandia: all these pretendants had their partisans within the Realme, and euery one tried all meanes, with great contention, and likely hood of sedition, to attaine vnto that which hee pretended, so as in these tumults Don Anthony of Luna slue Don Garcia Archbishop of Saragossa treacherously. To prevent which disorders in time, the Noblemen of the Realme agreed, that of the three Estates there should be nine men chosen, by whose Iudgement the Scepter of Arragon should bee giuen to him of the pretendants whom they should thinke most profitable for the common-weale. For Arragon there were named Don Dominike Bishop of Huesca, Francis of Atanda and Don Berenger of Bardaxi a great Lawier. For the principality of Cattelog, D. Pedro Zagariga Archbishop of Tarragona, William of Vallesca and Bernard of Gualues. And for the Realme of Valencia were chosen Vincent Ferrer, of the Order of the preaching friars, who was afterwards cannonized, his brother Bonifacio Ferrer a Lawier, a Monke of the Order of the Carthusians, and Maister Peter Bertrand, this last was substituted in the place of Gines of Rabeca who fell mad. These nine men being assembled in the castle of Caspe which is in Arragon, all those which pretended any right vnto the Realme, were summoned to exhibit their reasons before them, whereof some appeared personally, and others by their Ambassadors. In the meane time in Castile the Infant D. Fernand, for himselfe and the King his Nephew, caused this businesse to be consulted of by the learned of the country, who in the beginning were of opinion that both of them had an interest, and that they must frame an opposition before the Delegates, as well in the Kings name, being a pupill, as in his vncle and tutor Don Fernand; yet hauing better considred, or being otherwise perswaded, they gaue all the right of the succession, in the realme of Arragon, to the Infant D. Fernand, who for this cause deputed Ambassadors, the Bishop of Palencia, and D. Diego Lopes of Estuniga, chiefe Iustice of Castile, and Lord of Bejar, with Doctor Pero Sanchez of the Kings council, to send them into Arragon: and at the same time hee caused fiftene hundred launces to draw neere vnto the frontier of Arragon: hee and the Queene-mother with the young King comming to Aillon, a neere place to Arragon.

Princes pretending to the realme of Arragon.

Murder of the Arch-bishop of Saragossa.

Nine arbitrators to chosse
the King of
Arragon.

D. Fernand
with his right
of his armie.

Whilest they are busie about these pursutes, the Duke of Benauent a prisoner in the castle of Mont-real, brake prison, and escaped, hauing slaine the captaine which had him in gard, whereof they being aduertised at court, they provided speedily for all the passages, especially towards Portugal, thinking that hee would bend that way: but hee went towards Nauarre, where hee was kindly entertained by the King D. Charles, and by the Queene Donna Leonora his sister: who notwithstanding hauing receiued letters from the Queene-mother, the Infant Don Fernand, and the councill of Castile, intreating them to set a gard vpon the Dukes person, vntill they had further newes, they caused him to bee put into a strong castle, yet intreating him with all honour and respect, and then they sent an Ambassador into Castile, to make their excuse, for that they had receiued this fugitiue Prince, and intreated him as their brother, but they kept him in fure garde, that he should not attempt any thing against the crowne of Castile. This Ambassador found the court at Aillon, where he was well receiued, and his excuses allowed.

20
Castile.

There arrived also Ambassadors from the French King, with very rich presents, the which were required with others of no lesse value, being sent by an expresse Ambassage some monethes after.

Mmm 2

This

An. 1411.
Greene crosses the badge of the Knights of Alcantara.

This yeere of our Lord 1411. Pope Benedict graunted that the Knights of Alcantara, in steed of hoods which they did weare in signe of their profession, should from thence forth carry greene crosses. During the courts aboade at Arllon, attending what would bee the end of the troubles of Arragon, which increased daily, they sent the hogemen of Castile to fauour the friends of the Archbishop of Saragossa that was slaine, by the which the lands of D. Anthony de Luna were spoiled. And at that time friar Vincent Ferrer, that great preacher, made a voiage to the court of Castile, who made some sermons before the Queene mother, and some Noblemen; by whose aduice there was an Order made, that all Iewes, dwelling in Castile, should carry for a marke and distinction to bee knowne, a peece of red cloth vpon their cloakes, and the Moores' greene hattes with white moones. The affaires of Arragon growing tedious, the King was carried backe to Vailledolit. The truce of Portugall being expired it was treated by Ambassadours to make a perpetuall peace, the which was not then concluded.

Arragon.

The arbitrators appointed to iudge to whom the Realme of Arragon did belong, hauing bene many daies in conference in the castle of Caspe, in the end they did all agree to adiudge it to the Infant D. Fernand of Castile, whereof hee had notice given him in Iune, in the yeere 1412. beeing at Cuenca: wherefore hauing made his election knowne vnto King John his Nephew, and to the Queene his mother, and giuen great thanks for the fauour he had receiued in that respect by the forces and meanes of Castile, he prepared himselfe to goe and take possession of his Realme. And first of all hee declared for Tutors and Gouvernors of the Realme in his place, D. John of Illesca, Bishop of Siguença, D. Pablo bishop of Carthagena, D. Henry Manuel Earle of Montalegre, and Pero Alfan of Ribera, Gouvernor of Andalusia, with whom hee ioyned other men of State and learning. This and other things beeing ordred hee went into Arragon, where he found great resistance, especially of Don James Earle of Vrgel, who pretended where he sought by all friendly meanes to draw vnto his seruice, but in vaine for the Earle being obstinate, he drew the English into Spaine, notwithstanding whole aide hee yielded.

D. Fernand the first of that name, the sixteenth King of Arragon.

21.
Genealogie of
A. 1402.

Don Fernand the first of that name, reigned in Arragon, Cattelogne, Valencia, Sicile, Majorca, Minorca &c. By the consent of all the Estates: and for his good parts was surnamed the honest, whose posterity was famous: Before hee came to the crowne of Arragon, he had by his wife the Countesse of Albuquerque, Don Alphonso, who was heire of the Realmes, and was in his fathers life-time called Prince of Girone, in steed of the title of Duke, vsurped vntill that time by the eldest sonnes of Arragon. He had also by her the Infant Don John, who was King of Nauarre, and afterwards of Arragon and Sicile by the decease of his elder brother. Moreouer hee had, Don Henry maister of Saint James, Don Sancho maister of the Alcantara, and the Infant Don Pedro, who died in the warres of Naples, beeing slaine with a great shot: all these five Princes were borne in Castile. The daughters which issued from this marriage were Donna Maria Queene of Castile, married to King John the second her cousin germaine, and Donna Leonora who was Queene of Portugal, wife to Don Edward. D. Fernand was two and thirty yeeres old when hee beganne to reigne in Arragon, beeing Lord of great possessions in Castile, whereof he gaue the Dutchy of Pagnafiel, and the Signeury of Lara to Don John his second sonne, all which Inheritance, both by father and mother in Castile, his children enioyed for a time, but beeing turbulent, and not able to entertaine themselves with the Kings of Castile, they lost all.

In the yeere 1413. the King Don Fernand hauing beseegeed the Earle of Vrgel, in

A Vrgel, in the towne of Balaquer, for that hee did still raise new troubles, hee prest him in such sort, as his wife was perswaded to goe forth, and casting her selfe at the Kings feete to demand her husbands life. The King vsing his accustomed clemency, pardoned him his life: but the Earle comming forth, and hauing kist the Kings hands, hee was shut vp in the same castle. There were many Knights of Castile which serued the King in this warre, and amongst other forces, there were sent vnto him by Donna Catherine Queene of Castile, foure hundred launces with promise to furnish him with foure thousand, if he had need; but the Earles yeelding freed him of that necessity. Hee seized vpon Lerida, and other places, and in a short time made all within the Realme to bow, and therefore hee sent away his souldiars of Castile well satisfied, Don Godfrey of Nauarre, Earle of Cortes, and Marshall of Nauarre, the Kings base sonne, was at this warre, with some men at armes.

The new King did afterwards cause the Earle of Vrgel to bee araigned, and condemned him to perpetuall prison, depriuing him of his dignity and goods, and then he sent him prisoner to Vruagna, a fort in Castile, from whence he was afterwards transported to Mora. The Countesse his mother was also condemned to loose her goods, and some men of base condition were put to death. These things being done, the King came to Saragossa, where he was crowned by the Archbishop of Tarragone, in the presence of many Noblemen of Arragon, Valencia, Sicile, Cattelogne, Castile and Nauarre, at the which there were great and stately triumphes. To serue at this ceremony, the Queene of Castile his sister in law had sent him a crowne of gold, weighing fiftene marks, inrich with many stones of great value. He was armed Knight by the Duke of Gandia, and then annointed and crowned in the great church of Saragossa: after which adhe was very bountifull to the Noblemen and Knights that assisted at his coronation. From Nauarre came the Marshall D. Godfrey, Peter Martin of Peralta, with many others.

Going from Saragossa, he came to Morella, where he should meete with Pope Benedict, who after his deposing had retired himselfe into Arragon, yet retaining still his dignity, as much as he might. There they had an interview, whereas Pope Benedict went in a sollempne procession, in his pontificall habit, with a white Miter on his head set with stones of great price, to whom the King did all the honour hee could deuise: Before his departure from thence there came Ambassadours from the Emperour Sigismond, who perswaded the King of Arragon to fauour the counsell, which was then called at Constance, for the rooting out of the schisme. To treat whereof there was an interview concluded betwixt the two Princes at Nice, and the King was intreated to perswade Benedict, willingly to renounce his dignity of Pope. The counsell began the fifth day of Nouember in the yeere 1414. and continued about three yeeres. There were Ambassadours sent from Castile, by the aduice of King Fernand, D. Diego of Anaya Maldonado Archbishop of Seuille, and D. Martin Fernandes of Cordoua, accompanied with many great Doctors in Diuinity. This yeere died in Castile Vincent Arias a great Doctor, and the first that did comment vpon the lawes of Castile.

The King D. Fernand hauing held the Estates of Cattelogne at Momblanc, he past to Valencia, where he found Benedict held for Pope, onely in Castile, Arragon and Nauarre. In that court there were also many prelats, noblemen and knights, as well of the realme as strangers, by reason of the marriage which was celebrated there, betwixt the Infant D. Alphonso of Arragon, the Kings eldest sonne, and Mary of Castile, sister to the King Don John, by reason whereof there were great sports, so as some Bishops, according to the manner of that age, carried the praise, namely Don Sancho of Roias Bishop of Palence: to whom at the intreaty of the Queene of Castile, Benedict, the pretended Pope, did conferre the Archbishoprike of Toledo, beeing void by the decease of Don Pedro de Luna. And for that in the contract of future marriage, there had bene granted in dowry to the Infanta, the Marquisate of Villena, when as there was no likely-hood that the Infant should come to the crowne of Arragon, it was againe concluded, for that it seemed by this means the Marquisate should bee alienated from the crowne of Castile, that in lieu thereof there should bee giuen two hundred thousand doubloons of Castile.

Coronation of
the King D.
Fernand at Saragossa.

22
Pope Benedict
in Arragon.

counsell of Constance.
An. 1414.

Marriage betwixt
D. Alphonso of
Arragon, and D.
Maria of Cas-
tile.

During the Kings aboad at Valencia, hee fell sicke, which staied him from going to A Nice: wherefore the Emperour Sygmund resolved to come into Spaine, whereof the King D. Fernand being aduertised, he caused himselfe to bee carried to Perpignan to meet with this great Prince, who toiled himselfe for the reuinion of the church: an example of modesty in his traine which was small; in habits which were simple: and in his seruice, for he was not serued but in penter.

Interview of the Emperours
Sygmund and
D. Fernand
King of Arra-
gon.

Their interview was in September in the yeere of our Lord 1415. after the foureteenth Session of the councill of Constance, where John the three and twentieth, and Gregory the twelfth, were depofed, who yeelded (though against their wills:) onely Benedict held his Popedom by force, and would not allow of this council, with whom neither the intreaties nor threats of Princes, nor the acts and protestations of Ambassadors from the councill could preuaile: after whose departure, the King Don Fernand laboured what he could to induce this froward spirit to yeeld to the consent of all Christendome; but there was no meanes; yea Benedict retired in great indignation to Pignicola, a fort vpon the sea in the Realme of Valencia: wherefore the King by the aduice of Friar Vincent Ferrer, and other great Doctors, gaue him to vnderstand that he retired himselfe from his obedience. This did not amaze Benedict, but flying to his spirituall armes, hee pronounced King Fernand to bee fallne from all regall authority in Arragon, writing to all the townes and people that were subiect vnto him, that they should not yeeld him obedience.

Death of D.
Fernand King
of Arragon.
An. 1416.

The King little regarding it, not onely persisted in his resolution, but also went into Castile; to perswade the councill of King John his Nephew, to submit him and his Realmes to the authority of the councill: but being not fully recovered, he was forced to stay at Igualada, where hauing newes of the death of his sonne, Don Sancho maister of Alcantara, his sicknesse increased, so as hee died in the yeere of our Lord 1416. hee had reigned onely three yeeres and tenne monethes, beeing about fixe and thirty yeere of age, and was buried in the Monastery of Poblete. Hee did institute by his will Don Alphonso his eldest sonne, to bee heire of his Estates, and for want of children did substitute his brethren: and if they died without children, hee did substitute vnto them the sonnes or nephewes of his daughters, excluding them. The authors of the History of Sicile write, that this Prince beeing come to the crowne of Arragon, would not sodainly intitle himselfe King of Sicile, for that the Island was full of tumults and seditions, which grew presently after the death of King Martin, whereof the chiefest was Bernard of Cabrera Earle of Modica and chiefest Iustice, which is the principall dignity in that Realme, who with other Noblemen his confederats, pretended that the vnion of Sicile with the crowne of Arragon, plotted by the two King Martins, father and sonne, had bene concluded against all right and custome: and therefore they maintained that it was lawfull for the Sicilians to choose a King at their pleasures.

Bernard of Cabrera had a conceite that this honour was due to him, and therefore hee sought to seize vpon the person of the widow Queene Donna Blanche the Regent, to the end that hee might marry her, were shee willing, or not, thinking by this meanes to make his way more easie to the crowne: but shee beeing aduertised of his intent, retired from Cattanea, and fortified her selfe in Syracusa, where soone after shee was besieged by Bernard of Cabrera and his partisans, and without their speedy and faithfull succours, which disallowed of his enterprises, shee had bene taken. Cabrera was repulst from this seige, and the Queene carried to Palermo, where as hee pursued her againe, hauing gathered all his forces againe together, and had almost surprized her: Hee still laied ambushes for her, vntill at length hee himselfe was betrayed by his owne men, and drawne into his enemies snares, who deliuered him into the hands of the Admirall Sancho Doriz, who kept him some daies prisoner, in great miserie, in the castle of La Motte of Saint Anastase, and in the end deliuered him to the Agents of King Fernand, by whom hee was sent to Barcelona, there to receiue the punishment of his rashnesse at the Kings pleasure: but this milde and generous Prince, moued with his age, and the seruices which the Princes of Arragon

A Arragon had receiued, after that he had reprehended him sharply, he not onely set him at libertie, but did assigne him an honorable ranke in his Court. The troubles of Sicile being pacified by the taking of this Bernard of Cabrera, Don Fernand was acknowledged for king, and obeyed, who gouerned it by his Lieutenants and Viceroys, as other Kings of Arragon haue since done. The Maiesty of this Prince was such, together with his mildnesse and wisdom, as without vsing the rigour of armes, or any other violent constraint, he caused all rebellion to cease, as well in Sicile as Sardinia. As for Queene Blanche, widow to Martin king of Sicily, who was also heire of Nauarre, shee was afterwards married to the Infant Don John of Arragon.

D. Alphonso the fifth of that name, the 17. King of Arragon.

TO Fernand succeeded his sonne D. Alphonso, surnamed the Valiant, a Prince worthy of that title, for his royall vertues, and the famous conquests and exploits of warre done by him, and for that he did no lesse loue learning then armes. Eight and twenty daies before the death of the King Don Fernand, dyed Donna Leonora Queene of Nauarre his Aunt, hauing bene married to King Charles her husband foureteene yeares, she was buried in the Cathedrall church at Pampelona.

There was great mourning and heauinesse in Castile, at the newes of King Fernands death, whose obsequies Queene Katherine caused to be celebrated, with a pompe worthy of such a Prince, and afterwards by the aduice of the Nobility, shee tooke vpon her the sole gouernement of the realme, and the tutelage of King John her sonne, whome shee gaue in guard to Don John of Velasco, D. Diego of Estuniga, and to D. Sancho of Rojas, Archbishop of Toledo: whereat the Constable D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, D. Pedro Manrique, and D. Alphonso Henriquez grew very ieaious, whereupon there grew quarrels and troubles after the accustomed manner during the minority of Kings. The Queene and the Councill did prolong the truce with the King of Granada, for two yeeres. In the yere 1417. sending Lewis Goncal of Luna, Secretary of the Kings chamber to Granada to that end. By this treatie the king of Granada set an hundred prisoners at libertie, whose ransomes would haue mounted to a great summe of money. D. John Rodrigue of Castagneda, Lord of Fouente Duegna, and D. Inigo Ortiz of Estuniga, sonne to Diego Lopes, being in quarrell, and demanding the combate, the Queene would not grant it them in Castile, but commanded them to retire into Granada, where as king Ioseph would giue them the field: These Knights were put into the field by the Moorish king, but he presently forbade them to fight, declaring that they were both good Knights, and reconciling them together, he sent them home honored with Iewels and rich presents. This hee did at the intreaty of the Queene-mother of Castile, who had writ earnestly vnto him, shewing therein to haue a mild and Christian-like heart. For these combats are proofes of mad men, which should not be suffered in the place of iustice, seeing thereby all controuersies, how great soeuer, may be compounded and ended.

The Emperour Sygmund grieuing for the death of the king of Arragon, after that he had laboured in vaine to reconcile the kings of France and England, who were continually in warre, he passed to Constance, whereas the Councill in the two and thirtieth Session, declared Benedict to be periured, contumacious, a rebell, Schismaticke, and Hereticke, depriving him of his papacie, which he had held almost two and thirty yeares: yet he played the Pope still in Pagnicola: but the Princes of Christendome in generall yeelded to the Councill, notwithstanding Benedicts exclamations, that seeing it was called without his authoritie, it was not lawfull. The Cardinals which were at Constance, being two and twenty, with thirty Electors deputed by the Councill, did chuse Orthon Colonne, a Romane, Cardinall of the title of Saint George in Velabro, and named him Martin the fifth. Benedict although he were abandoned by the Princes, yet he continued still in his purpose, keeping some Prelates vnder his obedience, among which were the Cardinals of

24
Castille.

Truce with Granada.
1417.

Combats should not be allowed among Christians.

Pope Benedict
condemned by the Councill.

Councill condemned by Pope Benedict.

Tholoufa, Rafan, S. Angelo, S. Eustace, S. George, and Montarragon, the Archb. of Tarra- A gone, and the Bishops of Barcelona, Vic, Elne, Gironne, Huesca, and Tarrassone, with many Abbots, and other Clergimen, who held him for true and lawfull Pope.

26 Conquest of the Canaries by John of Betan-
court.

This year John of Betancourt, a knight of France, by gift from Queene Katherine, con- quered the Ilands of the Canaries, and intituled himselfe King. He could not take the great Canarie, for all the Inhabitants of the Iland had retired themselves thither: wherefore finding too great resistance, he retired himselfe, having buile a fort in that of Lancerot, from whence he did trafficke, and drew profit from the neighbor places, of leather, tallow, slaues, and other such commodities: he being dead, one Menaule succeeded him, in whose time Pope Martin instituted an Episcopall see in those Ilands, to the which there was a certaine Monke called Friar Mendo aduanced: but this king Menaule hauing no great re- gard, when there was question of profit, to the soules health of the Ilanders, he sold them indifferently, as well the Pagans, as those which had received Baptisme: whereof the new Bishop did complaine to Queene Katherine, requiring her to free them of that Lord: whereupon she sent Peter Barba de Campos with three ships of warre, with whom Menaule hauing long contended, in the end by the Queenes sufferance, he sold these Ilands to a Knight of Seuille, called Fernando Peres, in whose hands, and his successors of Seuille, they have remained vnto the time of the king D. Ferdinand the 5. and of the Queen D. Izabella.

Menaule the 2
King of the Canaries, sold the Ilands to them of Seuille.

27
Family of Elstaniga comes out
of Nauarre.
An. 1418.

D. Diego Lopes of Estuniga, Iustice maior of Castile, hauing long serued King Henry the 3. and John now reigning dyed this year. His house came out of Nauarre, and was of the blood royall, as some Authors haue left in writing. The year 1418. Queene Catherine dyed suddenly, being fifty yeares old, she was buried at Toledo in the chappell of the last kings. By her death King John was freed from tutors, and there was a Councell established, with the which he should gouerne his Realmes, whose letters and expeditions should be signed on the back-side, by two of his Councillors. This year there came am- bassadors to him from France, to demand ayde against the English, to whom they gaue hope of an army at Sea. The king of Portugal did also send to confirm a perpetual peace betwixt Castile and Portugall, but there was nothing concluded at that time. The Eng- lish proclaimed warre against Castile, whereupon the truce with Granado was prolon- ged for two yeares. King John being at Medina del campo, was betrothed to D. Maria of Arragon his cousin, daughter to the deceased king D. Ferdinand: then hee held a Par- liament, when for his new accord of marriage, they granted him a great subuention. The same year mention is made of the death of Friar Vincent Ferrer of Valencia, afterwards canonized a Saint by Pope Calixtus, who was also of Valencia. Hee that most gouerned the king at that time entring into his maioritie, was Don Sancho of Rojas, Arch-bishop of Toledo, whereat they did murmure, from which time the Estate of Castile was very turbulent.

The Guipuscoans and Biscayens fell to theeuing at sea, without any subiect of warre, euen vpon the coast of Brittain, whereof D. John then liuing complained much by his ambassadours, to the King of Castile, who desirous to liue in peace with Christian Princes, sent Fernando Peres of Ayala, Gouernour of Guipuscoa, to bee an arbitrator. Hee with another chosen by the Duke of Brittain, caused all disorders to bee reformed, and restitution to be made. The Councell of King John, was then reduced to fiftene Prelates and Knights, whereof fise should assist and serue, and they should change euery foure moneths.

28
Portugal.

Don John King of Portugall laboured to quench and qualifie all occasions of new troubles, betwixt his Realme and that of Castile, by a firme peace: Wherefore hauing sent backe his ambassadours in the year 1419. to Don John King of Castile, they were re- turned with good hope and promise, to send ambassadours into Portugall, expressly to that end. This king D. John the first of that name then reigning in Portugall, hauing made a long truce with D. Henry King of Castile, during that time he gaue himselfe to go- uerne his Realme with iustice, to repaire the ruines which had growne by the precedent warres, and to adorne it with new buildings: wherein employing himselfe with iudge- ment, bountie, and wisdom, hee was beloued and respected both of his owne subiects, and of strangers.

In

A In remembrance of the victorie which he had gotten at Aljubarote, he did build neere vnto it a sumptuous Monastier, which he dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and did call it Saint Mary the royall of the battell, or victorie, which is a Conuent of Iacobin Friars. And for that he had a better iudgement then many other Princes, knowing that most of the religious Monkes, and other persons did not vnderstand the Latin tongue, in the which the houres and suffrages were sung in churches, he caused them to be translated in- to the Portugall tongue, and in like manner many bookes of the holy Scripture, and the interpretation thereof, namely, the foure Euangelists, the which did afterwards much displease our Doctors in Diuinity. Hee was so zealous of the honor of his house, as a Groom of his chamber called Don Fernand Alphonso of Saint Iren, hauing so much for- gotten himselfe as to deflowre one of the Queenes maides, daughter to D. Aluar Peres of Castro, Earle of Arroyales, he caused him to be burnt in the place of Ruffio in Lisbon, and as for her, he chased her shamefully from Court, sending her to her parents, neither could the Queenes intercession preuaile any thing. He did also punish with great seuerity, the other insolencies of his Courtiers; and about all things he shewed himselfe a louer of ius- tice, onely he did forget to do reason to D. Beatrix Queene of Castile, pretending to be right heire of the Realme, which he enioyed whilest that she liued (as it were) in a priuate estate in Castile, an example of rare patience and chastitie: for shee would neuer heare speake of a second marriage, although she were sought vnto by Princes of great state, who happily might haue settled her in her fathers kingdom.

C Besides the aboue-named buildings, he built the towne of Almerin vpon the riuer of Tayo, the pallace of Sintra, the castle at Lisbon, those of Sierra Balada, neere to S. Iren, and other. Seeing himselfe in peace with all Christian Princes, and well obeyed of his sub- iects, he passed the sea with an armie, and tooke Ceuta from the Moores of Affricke, ha- uing in his company the Infant D. Edward, holding then the place of the eldest, for Don Alphonso was dead, the Infant Don Pedro Duke of Coimbra, and Lord of Montmajor the old, and of Auero, Don Pedro of Meneles, Earle of Viana, Standard bearer of the realm, who was the first Gouernour of Ceuta, which victorie was intermixt with mourning for the death of the Queene D. Philippe his wife, which happened in the year 1415. at what time the king D. John did take a vay the vse of accompting the yeares, by the Era of Ce- sar, the which had bene till that time obserued in Portugall, ordaining, that from that time the year should begin from the Natiuity of Christ: and that it should bee so dated in all publike and priuate writings, to the end to conforme himselfe to that which was brought into Castile, Arragon and Nauarre, and to auoyd the confusion which fell out in contracts and bargains, betwixt the subiects of the Realmes of Spaine.

In the year 1419. the Infant Don Henry his sonne, who was Master of the Order of Christ, moued with an honest emulation, by the conquest which his father had made vpon the Barbarians, hauing conferred with some men of knowledge and experience in Cosmographie, resolved to runne ouer the Ocean sea, and to discover the shoare and Ilands thereof. Going from Lisbon with some ships, hee came to the Iland of Madera in the year 1420. the which he found desert and full of wood, whereof it carries the name: for Madera is that which the Latins call Materia, and we timber. He set fire to this wood, so as hauing cleaned it, they found the soyle good and fruitfull for all things, especially for sugar canes, which grow in such abundance, as both Spaine and all Europe make great vse of it.

The Infant did afterwards continue this and other nauigations, and was the first spur- re to the Portugals, which came after, to discover the coasts of Affricke and Asia, and the I- lands of the South, and Easterne seas, with great honor to their nation, and infinit profite to the whole world. These things were attempted by the Portugals, when as the peace betwixt them and the Castillans was doubtfull: for the Councell of Castile delayed it, by reason of the kings minority, yet they liued quietly one with another.

About that time the ambassadors of Castile, which had bene sent to the Councell of Constance, returned into Spaine, bringing home the re-union of the church of Rome vnder Pope Martin the fift. Among them was Don Diego of Anaya Maldonado Archb. of Seuille, who built the Colledge of Saint Bartholomew at Salamanca, this year 1420. being

Booke of the holy Scripture translated into Portugall.

1419.

An. 1420.
Madera discovered.

D. Henry Master of Christ the first disco-uerer at sea.

Castile.

beeing called the great Colledge, the most auncient of all Castile, where many learned men haue bene bred. In that Vniuersitie of Salamanca are many other Colledges, built and endowed with good liuings, where there is good exercise of Diuinity, arts, and tongues, as also in other townes of Spaine, by the care of Bishops and good Prelates, labouring chiefly to maintaine learning which are the grounds of pietie and vertue.

29.
Nauarre.

The same yeare a marriage was made betwixt D. Blanche of Nauarre, the widow-Queene of Sicile, and the Infant D. John of Arragon, second sonne to the King Don Fernand deceased. By the treatie concluded the yeare before, it was sayd: That if the Infanta, the presumptiue heire of Nauarre (for the elder sister the Countesse of Foix, was already dead without children) should die before her husband, hauing children or not, that hee should raigne during his life in Nauarre, after the decease of King Charles, his father-in-law. From this condition and promise being sworne, there grew many troubles in Nauarre. Besides the expectation of the Realme, there was giuen to the Infant Don John by King Charles, in dowry with D. Blanche his daughter, foure hundred twenty thousand, a hundred and twelue florens of gold, of the coyne of Arragon, fixe folz, and eight deniers: a notable summe for a King of Nauarre, an argument of the great treasure which hee had gathered together during the long peace of his raigne. It was also agreed, that the lands and forts which the Infant did hold in Castile and Arragon, should descend to the heire which should be borne of that marriage, succeeding to the Crowne of Nauarre. The Infant did enioy in Arragon the Dutchie of Gandia and Momblanc, the Earldome of Ribagorça, and the towne of Balaguer: and in Castile the Dutchie of Pegnasil, Infantazgo, and the Seigneurie of Lara: and moreover, the townes of Cuellar, Castro-Xeris, Villalon, and Haro: afterwards he obtrayned Alba de Tormes, Olmedo, Paredes of Naua, Majorga, Villarado, Cerezo, Medina del campo, Aranda of Duego, Roa, Colmenar, and other places, all which he afterwards lost by the wars he had against Castile, the titles and patters whereof are remayning in the records of Nauarre.

Possessions D.
John Infant of
Arragon.

These articles of marriage were sworne by the three Estates of the Realme. And it was long disputed betwixt the Infant Don John, and the king of Castiles counsell, where this marriage should be celebrated. In the end he got fortie dayes libertie to go and perform it in Nauarre, whither he went accompanied with many of the Nobility of Castile: From hencefoorth D. John will entitle himselfe Infant of Nauarre and Arragon. The marriage beeing ended, returning with his wife D. Blanche towards Castile, hee met with a messenger from Don Sancho of Rojas, Archbishop of Toledo, who aduertised him of a great excess committed by his brother Don Henry, Master of Saint Iames, soliciting him to returne with all speed to court: and thus it was.

30
Castille.

Don Henry the third sonne to the deceased Don Fernand king of Arragon, desired to marrie Donna Catherine, King Johns youngest sister, who had the Marquitate of Villena for her dowrie, but fearing that he should neuer obtaine her by any due course, he resolved to haue her by force: so as beeing rash and exceeding bold, he entred on a time into Toledo with three hundred armed men, where he seized on the kings person, wherein he was assisted and fauoured by Don Ruy Lopes of Aualos the Constable, and D. Pedro Manriques. They tooke John Hurtado of Mendoça Lord Steward of the kings house, and others who were opposite vnto them, and holding the King as it were a prisoner, they caused many of his household seruants and Officers to be chased away: about all, they desired to displace D. Aluaro de Luna, kinsman to the deceased Archbishop of Toledo, who of a page of the chamber was come to be the kings great minion. But D. Henry held it now the best to winne him by mildnesse and bountie, that hee might make vse of him in that which he pretended.

The Infanta Donna Catherina, to whom this marriage with Don Henry was not pleasing, entred into the Monasterie of Saint Claire in that cittie, from whence she was afterwards taken, for that Don Henry led the King to Segouia, and then to Auila, promising not to vse any force concerning the marriage. Don John Infant of Nauar and Arragon, hearing of these newes, he much blamed the attempt of Don Henry his brother, and resolved to oppose himselfe against him, wherefore he called all his friends to Olmedo, and such Noblemen and Knights as disliked of this excess: so as in few daies hee assembled 3000.

A three thousand Lances, the Infant D. Henry preparing also for the warre, hee was in a manner equall in strength to his aduersaries, beeing in the towne of Auila, whether hee had led the King. The factious being ready to enter into a furious warre, D. Leonora the widow Queene of Arragon, and mother to these two Princes, laboured so betwixt them as all these troupes retired except a thousand Lances, which remayned for the Kings gard: then comming to the treaty of marriage, the Infanta D. Catherina being instantly intreated by the King her brother (who was not free) to take D. Henry for her husband, she would by noe meanes harken to it, D. Henry being the stronger about the King, thinking that D. John was opposite to his desires, he kept him from the king, & not respecting him, nor them that followed him, he called an assembly of his partizans, in forme of a Parliament, where he caused the fact of Tordefillas to be allowed, and ordained what he pleased: yea he caused letters to be written in the Kings name to the Pope, by the which hee intreated him to giue vnto the Infant D. Henry the Lands of the Maisterhippe of Saint Iames: in fee simple, to him and his children for euer, with the title of a Dutchy: an impudent demand, and so reiected by the Pope. The King married with D. Maria of Arragon, in Auila, without feasts or ceremony, and then they led him to Talauera: and the Infant D. Henry neuer ceased vntill he had celebrated his marriage with D. Catherina his Cousin Germaine, causing the Marquitate of Villena to be assigned for her dowry with the title of Dutchy, who was the third Duke of Castile: and the question being of marriages, where they doe vsually shew themselves bountifull, Aluaro de Luna the Kings Minion, had in guilt the towne of Saint Stephen of Gormas, and other Knights were advanced to other lands, as it pleased D. Henry. The King being much discontented with his restrained Estate, hee conferred often with Aluaro de Luna of the meanes how hee might escape, but there appeared great difficulties on euery side, for the confederats which held him watcht carefully ouer him, notwithstanding going one day abroad vnder colour of hunting, he aduentured to runne to Villalua, and finding himselfe not safe there he past to Montalban, which is betwixt Talauera and Toledo, some what out of the way: whereof the Infant D. Henry being aduertised, who had newly fynished his marriage he was wonderfully troubled in mynde, drawing what forces he could to field, and then the Constable and he followed the King, but in vaine, for he was in a place of safety, who sent some to aduise them that they should not follow him, but returne to Talauera, which the Infant D. Henry did, but the troupes which were in the poursute stayed not vntill they had some newes, and came and lodged about the Castle of Montalban, yet they attempted not any thing, for the reuerence they bare vnto the King, who seeing himselfe as it were besieged, and without victualls in the place, he had means to aduertise the Infant D. John, D. Sancho of Rojas, Archbishop of Toledo, the Admirall D. Alonso Henriques, and other Knights, intreating them to come and free him.

Estates forced.

Demands of D.
Henry must beuent.

Marriage forced betwixt D.
Henry and D.
Catherine of Castille.

King escapes out of D. Henrys hands.

In the meane time D. Henry held a counsell with his partisans at Talauera and prouided for many things, lest the King should escape from him. Being intreated by his men, who were in the forme of a Campe about Mountalban, hee came thether, bringing with him the Queene D. Maria his Sister and all the Nobility that was at Talauera, to repaire this disorder in some sort. The King and such as were with him in the Castle, for want of better foode, did eate their horses: D. John of Torfillas Bishop of Segobia, being brought in, hee sought to make an accord for the Infant D. Henry: but the King interrupted him, saying, that D. Henry should come himselfe, and so hee sent him backe. D. Henry would not aduenture to enter, but he procured that the Constable d' Aualos, and D. Aluaro of Luna conferred together, but they could not conclude any thing, nor yet the deputies of the prouinces of the realme, who entring into the Castile, were intreated to moue the King, but they could get noe other answer but that D. Henry must free his lodging from teage: who indeed was forced to dislodge, for the Infant D. John and other Noblemen, being followed by good troupes of men at armes approached, and would haue taken him from thence by force. Thus the King was deliuered from this teage, and the Castle furnished with victualls: wherefore he sent a commandement to the Infant D. John of Arragon, that he should not aduance with his troupes, vntill he had other newes from him. The Infant stayed at Fonsalida, where D. Alonso Henriques the Admirall ioyned with him,

King of Castile
beseged by his owne subjects.

him, being well accompanied, and others which came from all parts, to deliuer the King A as they laid, out of prison. This was at that time when as Villa-real beganne to be called Ciudad real, in recompence of the good seruice which the Inhabitants did vnto the King in this tumult. Don Henry being retired to Ocagne, hee had commaundement from the King to lay downe armes, but hee would not obey. The King parted from Monraban to returne to Talauera, vpon the way hee was met by the Infant Don Iohn, and Don Pedro his brother, with other Noblemen, who hauing kist the Kings hands, dined with him at Villalua, and then they werē sent backe to their troupes: for Aluar de Luna, who gouerned the King, could not endure that any of the Infants should stay in court, least it should impaire his credit and authority.

The King being come to Talauera, he sent a new commaundement to Don Henry and his confederats to disarme, who were content, so as D. Iohn the Infant of Arragon, did also disarme, whom the King commanded to send away his men, wherein he obaid; after which the King hauing dispatched some businesse in his fauour at Talauera, hee went to Auila: by the way hee came to Pegnasil, where hee did visit his cousin Donna Blanche of Nauarre, wife to the Infant Don Iohn, making great demonstrations of loue vnto her. Don Henry would not disarme, especially being degraded of the title of Marquis of Villena, by a decree of the councell, and his lands being seized on, hee would recouer them by force, if he might not otherwise, for prooofe whereof hee assailed Chinchilla, Alarcon and the castle of Garci Nugnes, where there was a garrison C for the King: causing on the other side his wife Donna Catherina (to whom the Marquisate did belong) to bee a sutor vnto the King for his pardon: but the King was so incensed, as he would not heare speake of it, and he reuoked the title of Duke, which hee had caused to bee given him, of the lands belonging to the Order of Saint Iames, hoping to make them hereditary. The King did also reuoke the gift of Castagnedain the Asturia's of Santillana, which hee had made vnto Don Garci Fernandes Manrique, for that hee was one of Don Henry's faction: Don Garci refusing to yeeld, being in possession, there were some companies of men at armes sent, who chased him, and tooke some of his followers, of whom Iustice was done. Don Henry hoping for no fauour from the King, marched towards Aguilar del Campo, as hee sayd, to kisse D the Kings hand; but the King dislodged from Aguilar, and came to Palenquela, sending word to Don Henry that hee should not aduance, and that hee should dismis his souldiers: then hee came to Vailledolir, and from thence to Tordeillas, whereas Queene Mary his wife was: yet Don Henry followed the King, leading with him fiftene hundred launces, and came vnto Guardarama; so as the King was forced to draw companies vnto him for his safety. Don Henry sent againe to beseech him to giue him access, that he might discharge himselfe, causing the deputies of townes to make the like sute from him; but they laboured in vaine, the King giuing them so many reasons, as they laied all the blame vpon Don Henry and told him that he must obey, and leaue his armed troupes, the which he promised to doe, but he did not performe it.

The Queene Donna Leonora mother to these Infants of Arragon, being in great perplexitie to see this her Sonne in danger to be ruined, she laboured all shee could possibly to pacifie the Kings wrath most iustly incensed against this rebell and rash vassall. Don Lope de Mendoza Archbishop of Saint Iames did the like, but they preuailed nothing, the King reiecting all prayers and sutes, vntill hee had laid aside Armes: wherefore Don Henry hauing made shew of two thousand Lances, and three hundred light horse, hee dismist them, and returned to Ocagne with the Noblemen of his faction, except Don Pedro of Velasco, who came to the Court. The King did also muster his men, where there were found about fixe thousand men at Armes, whom hee also discharged, being payed, except one thousand Lances which hee ratayned for his guard.

In the meane time Donna Blanche Infanta of Nauarre, was deliuered of a Sonne at Pegnasil, in the yeare of our Lord, one thousand foure hundred twenty and one, the which was Christened at Olmedo by the King of Castile, and was named Don Charles: and Don Aluar de Luna was his other God-father: Don Iohn the Infants father, sealed the

D. Henry deprived of his cords and dignities in Cas-
tile.

Intercession
for D. Henry Infant of Ar-
ragon.

A the King and whole court, with great bounty and state. Two yeares after this Infant was carryed into Nauarre, at the instance of King Charles his Grand father, who at that time made Viana a Principallitie, affected to the eldest Sonne of Nauarre, annexing to the towne and castle of Viana, those of Guadalupe, Saint Vincent, Bernado, Aguilar, Vaconuilla, Pombation, San Pedro, Cambreda, val de Campeço, Maragnon, Toro, Herrara and Buradon; and more ouer he gaue vnto him Goxola, and Cienruenigo, Peralta and Cadrieta, these foure last being distant Siegaucias, from the Principallitie: And at the Estates at Olmedo, he caused him to be sworne heire of the realme of Nauarre, after the decaie of the Infant Don Iohn his father.

From Olmedo, the King of Castile came to Toledo, to the Estates, whether D. Henry, B the Constable, and their confederates were cited, who appeared not, but sent their Ambassadors to make their excuses, saying, that they held for their professed enemies Don Saicho of Rojas Archbishop of Toledo, D. Iohn Hurtado of Mendoza, and many others, and that they suspected the Infant D. Iohn: wherewith the King being more incensed then before, refused to pursue them by armes, wherewith they were: but Don Henry being aduertised, and aduised, promised to present himselfe before the King at Madrid by the fourteenth of May this yeare 1422. where he appeared a day before the Assignation. An. 1422.

Hauing kist the Kings hand, beginning to enter into a discourse, to excuse and iustifie himselfe, the King would not heare him, but sent him backe to his lodging. The day following, there were produced in the Kings Councell, fourteene of the Constable d'Analos C letters, by the which he was charged with treason, and practising with the King of Granada against the King of Castile his Lord. They were openly read by Sancho Romero the Kings Secretary, who said, that D. Diego of Fuentefalida, Bishp of Zamora had giuen him them. D. Henry and Garci Fernandes Manrique, thinking to defend the Constables innocie and fidelitie, were committed to prison by the Kings commaundement, and all the horses and furniture they had in Court seized on. The Constable and the Infanta D. Catherina, being aduertised of what had past at Madrid, they left Castile, and retired to Balueda, a castle in the realme of Valencia, and the Governour Don Pedro Manrique fled to Tarassone: wherefore the King caused all their goods to bee seized, commanding all D Governours and Magistrates to apprehend them. These letters did not seeme very certain, wherefore they of the Kings councell suspecting that they were counterfet, (as in truth they were) they caused the Kings Attorney generall, to frame an accusation against the Constable, for that he had beene a confederate and fauourer of D. Henry, when as the King was detained in Tordezilla, and of the disorders which after followed: by reason whereof his goods were seized on, for it did appeare that the letters were counterfet, by the confession of Iohn Garcia of Guadalajara the Constables Secretary, who betraying his Maister, had himselfe counterfetted them, and sealed them with his leale at Toledo, for which crime he was executed at Vailledolir. The King caused Gonzala Mexia to bee named Administrator of the Order of Saint Iames, whereof the Infant D. Henry, being in prison, was Maister, and did aduertise the King of Arragon of his detention and the E causes. The Constable and the Infant D. Catherina being retired to Valencia, they were well entertained by them that did gouerne those realmes: in the absence of D. Alphonso of Arragon, who was at Naples, whereat D. Iohn King of Castile was so much discontented as he sent his Ambassadors into Italy to the K. of Arragon to complaine of this fact.

About the end of this yeare 1422. King Iohn had by Queene Mary his wife, a daughter borne at Ilesca, who was named D. Catherina: and about that time D. Sancho of Rojas Archbishop of Toledo, died at Alcalá de Henares, in whose place was substituted Don Iohn of Contreras Deane of the same Church, and borne at Riixa. The Infanta D. Catherina was declared and sworne heire of the Realme of Castile, the yeare following 1423. at the Estate of Toledo, if the King her father should die without heires male: for such was the custome of Spaine. There the truce betwixt Castile and Portugall was renewed for twenty nine yeares, with a condition, that if hereafter the one should offer to make warre against the other, hee should giue him warning 18. moneths before: A sinceritie which is contemned in this age, whereas they seeke to surprise one another by any secret and indirec meanes. This truce was proclaimed the court being at Auila.

N n n.

And

D. Roy de Aualos the Constable charged with treason.

Death of the Archb. of Toledo.

And soone after the king Don John beeing at Vailledolit, there came ambassadours from A D. Alphonso King of Arragon, to excuse the reception which had bene given at Valencia, to the Infanta D. Catherina, and the Constable, Don Ruis Lopes of Aualos: and to acquaint the king of Castile with the successe of the waite of Naples; whereas they king of Arragon was buied.

38
Arragon.

Isabella
of Joane 2.
Queene of Naples.

This Prince who was famous not only among all them that had reigned in Arragon, but in all the rest of Christendome had this occasion to vnderstand the warre of Naples: after the decease of king Ladislaus, his sister Joane the second, widow to the Duke of Esterlic, having succeeded in the Realme, as shee was infamous, by reason of the familiarity which was more then did beset the greatnesse of a Queene, which she had with Pandolfello, a Knight of Naples, being held to be one of the goodliest men of his time. Shee to couer their loose life, contracted marriage with James of Bourbon, Earle of Marche, a Prince of the bloud Royall of France, vpon condition that he should not intitle himselfe king, nor should nor meddle with the gouernement of the Realme, but as she pleased. The Earle being come to Naples, he soone discovered what past betwixt the Queene his wife, and Pandolfello: wherefore being mouued with a iust disdain, hee caused the adulterer to be flaine, and deprived the Queene of the gouernement, hauing punished her onely with words and reproches. The Queene dissembling her discontent against the Earle, watched a fit opportunity to be reuenged: wherein she wrought so by her practises and intelligences, as she not onely recovered her liberty, but she put the Earle her husband into prison, who beeing afterwards freed by the intercession of Pope Martin, retired into France, leauing the Queene to liue after her owne appetite. Pope Martin who was molested by the faction of Vrsins, the chiefe whereof was Braccio Fortebracci, hee made a strict league with this Queene, by the which she promised to ayde him with three thousand horse, and other things: but their friendship was soone dissolved: and Pope Martin to annoy Queene Joane, did inuest in the Realme of Naples, Lewis Duke of Anjou, called the third, who was sonne to Lewis the second, and of the Infanta D. Violant of Arragon, and declared Queene Joane fallen from it, and deprived thereof: wherefore Lewis began to league himselfe in Italy with many Princes and Potentates, namely, with the Commonweale of Genoua, who were mighty at sea, from whom he was ayded to conquer the Realme of Naples, with thirteene gallies, whereof Baptist Fregoso was General.

Pope Martin enemy to Queene, calls in Lewis Duke of Anjou.

Alphonso King
of Arragon,
leads an Armie into Corsica,
against the Genouois.

These things beeing come to the knowledge of King D. Alphonso, who was newly advanced to the Crowne of Arragon, beeing young, and desirous of glorie, considering how much it might preiudice the Estate of Sicile, if the house of Anjou should settle it selfe againe at Naples, he thought he should greatly disappoint Lewis his deffines, if he should make warre against the Genouois: wherefore hauing prepared an armie at sea, he came and landed in the Iland of Corsica, which was wholly in the power of that State, and vnder colour of the right which the kings of Arragon did pretend, by reason of ancient donations made vnto them by the Popes, of the two Ilands of Corsica & Sardinia: at his first landing he tooke Calui, and then besieged Boniface, pressing it in such sort, as without speedie succors from Genoua it had bene taken, and the whole Iland. During this seige Queene Joane, who saw a great storme readie to fall vpon her, sent Anthony Caraffa vnto him, intreating him to vnderstand the defence of her and her Realme, against Lewis of Anjou, the Pope and their allies, in requitall whereof she would adopt him for her sonne and successor in the Realme of Naples, and for an earnest-peny she would deliuer him the two castles of Naples. King Alphonso was well pleased with these conditions, who to make this accord authentick, sent Raymond of Perillos to Naples with 18. gallies, and 14. galliots, and D. Bernard of Centillas, and D. John of Moncado his ambassadours, with authoritie and sufficient instructions, who agreed with Queene Joane in the Kings name, and receiued the aboue-named forts: and after the releefe of Boniface by the Genouois, whereas the king receiued some losse, he passed with the rest of his army into Sicile, and from thence to Naples, where the accords and adoption was confirmed, the Queene inuesting him then in the Dutchie of Calabria, as presumptiue heire of the Realme: but the peace betwixt the mother and the sonne was not lasting: wherefore the repenting

A repenting to haue adopted Alphonso, he dealing in her affaires, there fell out warre betwixt them: so as after many encounters, and variable successe, the Queene left Naples, and was forced to retire to Auerse, from whence she sent to call backe Lewis of Anjou, beeing then at Rome, who in the yeare 1423. came to Auerse, where hee was receiued with great ioy, and was adopted there by the Queene, and was made Duke of Calabria, and Alphonso reiecte as ingrate: at which time happened in Castile the imprisonment of D. Henry Master of Saint Iames, brother to the king D. Alphonso, and the retreat of D. Catherine his wife, with the Constable to Valencia, and of other Noblemen into diuers parts of Arragon, whose goods D. John King of Castile had confisked, whereupon grew many quarrels: by reason whereof the King D. Alphonso was forced to returne into B
Spain, leauing his brother D. Pedro at Naples, to make head against the Duke of Anjou, with James Cadorna, and many Noblemen Italians, of his faction to assist him. Sayling along the coast of Prouence, he surprized Marfeilles, a Towne belonging to the Duke of Anjou, being Earle of Prouence, the which he spoyle and burnt, carrying away for a precious Iewell the body of Louis sometimes Bishop of Tholousa, sonne to King Charles the Lame, being held a Saint. It is noted for a noble and religious act in this Prince, that at the taking of the towne hee would not suffer any iniurie to be done vnto the women that were retired into the Churches, nor any thing to be taken from them. It was taken in the night at a second assault: Alphonso being rich with spoiles landed at Valencia.

Marfeilles surprized by the King of Arragon.

In the meane time in Castile they made the processe of all the fugitiues, and degraded C
D. Ruis Lopes of Aualos, of his Estate and dignitie of Constable, deprived him of the gouernement of Murcia, and did confiscate all his lands and goods. He had enioyed Xodar, Nimena, the tower of Alaquin, Arcos, Arjone, Arjonilla, Figuiera and Colmenar, in the countie of Auila, and Osono and Ribadeo in Galicia, and other places, which were all forfeited to the King, who gaue the office of Constable to Don Aluar de Luna, who was afterwards created Earle of Saint Stephen de Gormas, and receiued with great solemnitie. Alphonso James Faierdo was made Gouernor of the frontier of Murcia, and his lands were distributed to others: so as the house of Aualos remained very poore in Castile. The King decreed, that D. John of Tordezilla Bishop of Segobia, who had bene Superintendent of the treasor, in the time of the deceased King Henry, should be apprehended, to make him giue an account of his charge: but the bishop of Zamora who had this charge, shewed himselfe a friend, and suffred him to escape into Portugal, from whence he past to Valencia. About the end of this yeere 1423. D. Leonora king Johns 2. daughter was borne: as soone as he had intelligence that the king of Arragon was arrived at Valencia, he sent him an Ambassage, to congratulat his arrival, and to intreat him to send him D. Catharina the wife of D. Henry and the fugitiues of Castile, or else to chase them out of his country: whereof the king D. Alphonso excused himselfe, as well to these Ambassadors of Castile, as by others whom he sent expressly to K. John, who intreated him for an interview, wherewith the king was willing, but such as were enriched with the constables spoils, dissuaded him, wherewith the king of Arragon was discontented, and afterwards more, they refusing him to let him confer with the Queen of Castile his sister. In the yeare 1424. the Infant D. Catherina died at Madrigal, where vpon the King caused the Princeesse Leonora to be sworne for heire of those realms, in case he died without any issue male. In which yeere there also died at Pegniscola, Benedict, being 90. yeeres old, hauing held the Popedom 31. yeeres 2. months and 10. daies, from his election made at Auignon, and after that hee had bin deposed by the council of Constance, 7. yeeres and 4. months, his body was interred in Illuega, in vnhalloved ground (as they say:) a man to violent in all his actions, obstinate and indomptable: of so strong a constitution of body, as they could not attribute the cause of his death but to poison, the which they found had bin giuen him in certaine sweet meats, by a Monke, called Thomas, set on by the Cardinal of Pisa, who was sent into Spaine to that end. The crime being auerred, the Monke Thomas was taken and quartered, the Cardinal who remained at Tortosa fled, fearing that Don Roderigo and Don Aluar de Luna Benedicts Nephewes should reuenge his death vpon him. After his decease the Cardinals which were of his faction, and were retired with him, to Pegniscola, would haue continued the Schisme, and entering into the Conclau

32
Castile.

D. Aluar de Luna made Constable of Castile.

Don Alphonso
King of Arra-gon & Castile of a new Solismon.

1425.

Birth of the Infant Don
Henry of Castile.

Nauarre.

Death of Charles King
of Navarre.

Pampelona
united into one body.

with the accustomed ceremonies, they did choose a Chanon of Barcelona, named Gil A Mugnos, borne at Teruel, whom they called Clement the eight, wherevnto Don Alphonso King of Arragon consented, beeing in bad termes with Pope Martin at Rome. This Clement created Cardinals, gaue Benefices and Dispensations, and did all acts of a Pope as well as Martin, and by him the Church of Rome continued diuided.

In the yeare one thousand foure hundred twenty and fise, D. Henry sonne to D. Iohn King of Castile, was borne at Vailledolit, who succeeded him in the Realmes. Hee was baptized by Don Aluaro of Osorno Bishop of Cuenca, the God-fathers were Aluar de Luna, the Constable, and Don Alphonso Henriquez Admirall of Castile: and the Godmothers Donna Eluira Porto-carrero the Constables wife, and Donna Joane of Mendoça B the Admirals: and within few moneths after this Infant was sworne Prince and heire of the realmes in that Towne, in the Monasterie of Saint Pablo, the Infant Don Ihon of Arragon, as Lord of Lara, being the first that swore him fealtie and future homage.

The offences betwixt the Kings of Castile and Arragon were such, as they attended nothing but open warre, not onely in these two realmes, but also in Nauarre, the successor thereof, Don Iohn, being much bound to either cuntry: wherefore the King Don Charles vsed all meanes possible to reconcile them. Notwithstanding the King Don Alphonso sent a letter open, by a Secretarie of his, to the Infant D. Iohn his brother, to come into Arragon to assist at a Parliament which hee had called, vpon paine to bee declared a rebell. Don Iohn not onely obtained leaue to goe to the King his Brother, but hee C had also full authoritie to make an accord with him. When he came to the Court of Arragon at Tarassone, hee had newes of the death of the King of Nauarre, his father in lawe, which happened suddenly at Olite, in September, being busie about his build- ings. A Prince much lamented both of his subiects and strangers, for his vertues and milde dispositions: who besides other remarkable things, settled a perpetuall peace in Pampelona, the which before his time had bene diuided into three regions or coun- tries, called Bourg, Peuplement, and Nauarriere, gouerned by three diuers Iudges, with seuerall Iurisdiccions, so as there oftentimes fell out great contentions and mu- tinies among them, the which hee did abolish, reducing all the Inhabitants of the Towne vnder one Iustice, taking away for euer the factious names of parts and quar- ters, placing one Gouvernour or Magistrate ouer them, with ten Iurates to assist him. Hee was threecore and foure yeares old when hee dyed, and had reigned thirtie nine yeares and nine moneths. His body was laide in the Cathedrall Church at Pampelona, with Queene Leonora his wife.

Don John, first of that name, thirty three King of Nauarre.

Don Iohn his sonne in lawe succeeded him, in the right of Donna Blanche his wife, the Crowne of Nauarre passing from the house of France, to the house of Castile and Arragon, for want of heyres male, the which continued not long. Hee was about eight and twenty yeares old when hee began to raigne in Nauarre: when as King Charles dyed, hee was in the campe of King Don Alphonso, who being incensed against the King of Castile, for his brother Don Henrys imprisonment, was gone to Armes, and had his forces on the confines of Arragon and Nauarre, about Tarassone, the which hee caused to enter into Nauarre, as soone as the newes came of the Kings death. After which they vsed this ceremonie: Don Iohn, who should succede, kept F his chamber three dayes, after which hee went to horse-back, accompanied with the King his brother, and causing the Standard of Nauarre to be carried before him, by a Knight called Nugno Vaca, and a Herald to march before with a coate of the armes of Nauarre, crying out aloud, Nauarre, Nauarre, for the King Don Iohn and Donna Blanche his wife: going often about the field, the Trumpets sounding, and being followed

Ceremonie in taking possession of the realmes of
Nauarre.

A followed by many Knights and Gentlemen of Castile and Arragon, on foote, but there was not one Nauarrois, for the Nobilitie of Nauarre had done the like at Olite, for the Queene Donna Blanche their naturall Princeesse, and not without a misterie.

Whilest that these things past vpon the frontiers, the King of Castile hauing made a great assembly at Palence, and gathered together much money, in the end hee was aduised to free Don Henry out of prison, beeing the cause of all this tumult, and for the which the King of Arragon had taken Armes. The King of Castile would first haue the King of Arragon disarmed, which difficultie being debated, it was agreed that Don Henry should bee deliuered in the hands of Don Iohn King of Nauarre, who should bee answerable vntill that the King of Arragon his brother had laide downe B Armes. Wherefore Pero Garcia of Herrera, Marshall of Castile, followed by fise hun- dred men at Armes, came to the Castle of Mora, whereas the Infant Don Henry was deliuered vnto him, hee swearing to conduēt him and deliuer him into the hands of Don Iohn King of Nauarre.

34.
Castile.

Don Henry brother to the King of Arra-gon and Nau-arre, deliue-red.

The two Kings Brethren being come to Saint Vincent of Nauarre, hearing that they brought Don Henry, they returned, and going to meete him, the King Don Iohn recei- ued him at Agreda, and then ledde him to Tarassone, whereas the King of Arragon embraced him with great content. Beeing there, Don Lewis de Guzman Maister of Calatraua, and Don Ihon of Soto maior, Maister of Alcantara, sent to offer him their friendship and meanes, against them of the Kings Councell, and against his Mig- C nions, which had bene opposit against him. The which the King of Castile did not doubtr, but sent Fernande of Robles, and Doctor Periagnez of his Councell, to Calcante a Towne of Nauarre, to treat with the King Don Ihon touching his returne into Castile to end that which remained to doe touching Don Henry, the which hee yielded vnto, and came to the King of Castile beeing at Roa, who entertained him kindly, and hauing bene there some dayes together, without speaking of any affaires, the King of Castile went to Segobia, and hee of Nauarre to Medina del Campo. Soone after, in the beginning of the yeare one thousand foure hundred twenty and six, hee came to Toro to the King of Castile, where hee gaue him an accompt of that which hee had negotiated with the King of Arragon his Brother, wherewith the D King seemed to bee very well satisfied. The Estates were held there, by the which the King was let vnderstand of the superfluous charge of a thous and Lances which hee led for his garde, the which cost eight Millions of Marauidis, wherevpon they were redu- ced to a hundred, vnder the Constables charge, who was in such authoritie and fauour, as euery man feared him openly, or hated him secretly. The Estates requiring also that the Kings excessiue gifts should bee cut off, it was ordained, that all that had or should be giuen by the King before the age of twenty fise yeares, should bee reputed void: Many other good decrees were made, but they lasted little.

Estates at Toro, and their remonstrances.

The King of Nauarre staid in Castile, where he had great possessions, and was much fauoured, yea for his sake many Noblemen Castillans were aduanced to Offices in the Kings house, as Ruy Diaz of Mendoça was made Lord Steward, and Ihon Aluaro of Ga- dillo Standard-bearer. As for himselfe hee was wholly gouerned by Diego Gomes of Sandoual, whom he made Earle of Castro Xeris, a place which was of his patrimonie. There were three Leagues beginning in Court, one for the king of Nauarre, the second for Henry his brother, and the third for the Constable Don Aluar de Luna, who increa- sed daily in authoritie. The king spent the rest of that yeare one thousand foure hundred twenty and sixe, at Fuente del Saucó, at Vailledolit & at Zamora, where he caused some pettie mutiniers and rebels to bee punished by Iustice, whilest that great men, which troubled the realme, liued in all assurance.

F In the beginning of the yeare one thousand foure hundred twenty and seauen, the In- fant Don Henry and his wife Donna Catherina came from Valencia to Ocagne, where the hatred burst forth betwixt the King of Nauarre, and the Constable Don Aluar de Luna being much fauoured and highly supported by the fauor of the King, who desired also to entertaine the King of Nauarre. Don Henry aduancing towards the Court, came to Vailledolit, accompanied by the Maisters of Calatraua and Alcantara,

Nnn 3

and

League against the Constable
Aluaro de
Luna.

D. Aluaro de Luna fled from court.

and others of the faction opposite to the Constable, it availing nothing that the King, A who was at Simanca, did write vnto him, and commanded him by many messages, that he should not come to Court, but returne to Ocagne. The two Brethren entring into Vailladolid, being confederate with Don Pedro de Velasco, who was Earle of Haro, and Lord Chamberlaine to the King, Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza, Lord of Hita and Buitrago, who afterwards was the first Marquis of Sentillana, Don Fernand Aluarez of Toledo Lord of the Vallee of Corneia, who afterwards was the first Earle of Alba, and his Vncle Don Guttiere Gomes of Tolledo Bishop of Palence, the Maisters of Calatrava and Alcantara, with other noble men of Castille, sent to beseech the King, that for some good respects he would command the Constable to retire from Court, for that the absolute power which he did vsurpe in the gouernment of affaires, was the cause of many inconveniences. The King would haue it put to Compromise, and that the King of Nauarre on the one side, and Don Aluaro on the other, should deliuer their reasons before Arbitrators: of which aduice Francisco of Soria, a Franciscan Friar, was the Author. The Judges named for the confederates, were Don Lewis of Guzman Maister of the Calatrava, and the Gouernour Don Pedro Manrique, and for the Constable, Don Alphonso Henriques high Admirall of Castille, and Fernand Alphonso of Robles, of the Kings Councell, and his chiefe Treasurer: and for an Vmper the Abbot of Saint Benets in Vailladolid. All which gaue sentence, that Don Aluaro de Luna the Constable, should absent himselfe from Court, for the space of eightene moneths next ensuing, and not come within fiftene Leagues of it, and so should they doe whom hee had put into the Kings Chamber.

The Constable yeelding to this sentence, hee retired himselfe to his house at Aillon, and the King of Nauarre with his brother Don Henrie, came to Cigales, where the King was, of whom they tooke their leaues with reasonable good shewes of loue: yet Don Henry had a better countenance of him then the King of Nauarre, to whom they imputed the whole cause of the Constables dismission, which made the King the more desirous to see him againe. And for that Fernando Alphonso de Robles, one of the Kings Counsell, had bene one of the principall Instruments of all these alterations, hee was shut vp in the Castle of Segobia.

Accord made by the King
with Don
Henry.

After all this, they treated of Don Henries affaires, and of his confederates. The accord which the King made there with Don Henry, besides the restitution of his goods, and the dignitie of the maistership of Saint James, was, that for the Marquisate of Villena, hee should enioy Trugillo and Alcaras, with their appurtenances, and other lands in the country of Guadaluja: Moreover they gaue him two hundred thousand Florens of gold in ready money, and a Million and two hundred thousand small Maraudis of yearly pension during his life. To the King of Nauarre for his charges during the troubles, hee gaue a hundred thousand Florins to bee payde by a certaine time. There was then present Inigo Ortiz of Estuniga, Marshall of Nauarre, who had married Donna Joane base Sister to the Queene Donna Blanche.

D. Rayn Lopez of Aualos restored to his honor and good name, but not to his goods.

The King discharged and sent home to their houses a great number of vnecessary men which followed the court without cause, who were but a burthen to him and the country: and to take away all occasion of distrust and new troubles, hee granted a generall pardon to all men, of what Estate, quality, or condition soeuer they were, that had medled with the precedent troubles. Hee restored Don Rayn Lopez of Aualos the Constable (beeing accused to haue had Intelligence with the Moores, by letters produced to the Kings Councell) to his honour and fame, but hee neither restored him to his Office nor goods. Amidst these treaties the Constable Aluaro de Luna was called backe againe to the court, his verie enemies consenting therevnto, yea the King of Nauarre, and his brother Don Henry, who grew after so ialous one of another, who should bee in the Constables fauour, as they entred into factions: wherefore the King of Castille employing therein the Queene of Nauar, and the Estates also of Nauarre, they perswaded their King to returne into his realme. D. Henry went in pilgrimage to Saint James, and then was sent to the Moores frontier, who began to raise some tumults, as we will hereafter shew.

The

A The King of Castile being at Vailladolid, D. Leonora Infanta of Arragon, sister to the King of Nauarre, past thereby going into Portugal, to be married to Prince Edward, the heire of that Realme, to whom the King her cousin gaue the best reception he could, honouring her with rich presents, money and men to accompany her. Soone after the King being at Arando of Duero, he receiued D. Pedro Infant of Portugal, and Duke of Coimbra, very graciously, being also his cousin germaine: for D. Philippe mother to D. Pedro, and Donna Constance mother to the King D. Iohn, were sisters daughters to the duke of Lancaster, but by diuers ventures. This Prince came from traauailing ouer Christendome: and it is he of whom it is said in Portugal, that hee had seene the seven parts of the world, that is to say all: from thence he past much honoured into Portugal. In like manner there came the same yeere into Castile, D. Pedro Infant of Arragon, in his returne from Naples, whereas the affaires had not bene very successfull for the Arragonois: where he went to see the Queene Donna Leonora his mother, at Medina del Campo. The King freed D. Garci Fernandes Manrique out of prison, who had bene committed with the Infant D. Henry. Thus past the gouernment of Castile vnto the end of the yeere 1428.

D. Pedro of Portugal a great traueler.

In the which the King of Arragon hauing made an accord with Pope Martin, he forced the Antipope Gil Magnus, refyding in the castle of Pegniscola to renounce the Popedom, hauing held it foure yeeres, whereby the Schisme in the church of Rome ended, hauing continued foure and forty yeeres. This Gil Magnus had in recompence the Bishoprike of Majorca, and was receiued into the bosome of the church, and in fauor with the Apostolike sea of Rome. The Cardinals created by him gaue ouer their hats, and Martin remained sole Pope.

This yeere beganne an other sect of Monkes of Saint Ierosme, springing out of that of Saint Bartlemew of Lupiana, wherevnto Friar Lopes of Olmedo, a Doctor of the lawes, and a religious man in that Monastery, gaue the beginning. Hauing bene chosen by the Monkes of Saint Bartlemew to be generall of their Order, being desirous to reforme them, he gathered out of the Bookes of Saint Ierosme, and others, a certaine rule and manner of lyuing, which hee said, had bene held in Bethelhem, wherevpon that great Doctor, and his Monkes prescribed that monacall weed, which hee said was vsed by them, and hauing presented all vnto Pope Martin, hee caused his order to be allowed, vnder the name of friars hermits of Saint Ierosme, of the obseruance of Bethelhem, and then he fought to haue it receiued in Spaine, by the religious of his Order, and to reforme them to bee more perfect, according to the same: but they told him plainly, that they would none of it, wherefore he was forced to finde out other followers. He therefore erected a conuent vnder that title neere vnto Seuille, called of Saint Isidro, a name which hath remained to this new sect, so as there haue bene since in Spaine two sorts of Monkes of Saint Ierosme, the one of Lupiana, and the other of Saint Isidro, or of friar Lope. This Order of Monkes makes the fourth of them that liue vnder the Romish church in Spaine, numbred with the Bernadins, Benedictins and Carthusians. These Isidres haue multiplied in such sort, as since they haue extended themselues farre into Italy, and other Regions. And although that their beginning be from Spaine, and that in the beginning the chiefe of their order was a Spaniard, yet in succession of time, and through the negligence of the Spaniards, the Italians haue gotten it: and whereas they sent vice-generals of this Order out of Spaine into Italy, now it is otherwise. Such were the effects of the doctrine of that age.

35
Castile.

Four Orders of Monkes which beg. not.

Whilest that D. Iohn King of Nauarre, and his wife D. Blanche were in Castile, the Estates of Nauarre assembled, and tooke a new oth to D. Charles Prince of Viana. Queene Blanche went first into Nauarre, and soone after the King her husband arriued, hauing made a renuntiation of certaine lands in Castile, in fauour of his sonne D. Charles, being then seven yeeres old, where the leagues were renewed betwixt Castile, Nauarre and Arragon, King Iohn hauing full power from King D. Alphonso his brother. And on Whitsonday 1429, the King D. Iohn and Queene Blanche his wife were crowned at Pampelone, the three Estates of the realme being assembled, and the rights, preiudges and liberties of the country sworn by them. D. Martin of Peralta Bishop of Pampelone did the ceremony ceremony of the vnction, and others accustomed in such cases. There were present the Ambassadors of forraigne Princes, the Bishops of Calaoorra, Tarrassone and Bayone, with many Noblemen and Knights of Nauarre, Castile and Arragon. At this coronation there was againe sworne and confirmed the matrimoniall conuentions betwixt the King D. Iohn, and D. Blanche the heire, made in the time of King Charles her father.

The Estate of the Moores of Granado, during these tumults in Castile, had bene quiet, by prorogation of the truce with the King of Castile, and his counsell, in consideration of a certaine tribute, which was paid by King Ioseph vntill his death, the which was in the yeere 1423. being very old, and hauing enioyed the realme fiftene yeeres.

Mahumet the Left-handed, called Aben-Azar the foureteenth King of Granado.

Moores.

AFTER Ioseph reigned his sonne Mahumet, called Aben-Azar, the Scepter of Granado continuing by him in the succession of Ferrachen, who was Gouvernor of Malaga. This King who was left-handed of his person, had also a sinister reigne: for he was thrice chased from his throne, after great miseries, and twice restored. These seditious changes were ordinary, and haue alwayes bene amongst the Arabians, who are inconstant, treacherous, rauishing and ambitious, if there be any liuing. King Mahumet did maintain the truce, and entertaine himselfe in the fauour and friendship of the King of Castile, for some yeeres, and in like manner with Muley Aben Ferriz King of Tunes: but he could not get the loue of his owne subiects. In the beginning of his reigne, he made a Knight whose name was Ioseph, of the family of Aben Sarraes (which was great and much esteemed amongst that nation) Alguazil Major or chiefe Marshall of Granado. The troubles of Castile, whereas many Noblemen, yea D. Henry Maister of Saint Iames, banded against their King, was a president for the Moores, who conspired against this Left-handed Mahumet, in fauour of an other of the same name, surnamed the Little: so as they made him King, and forced Mahumet to flie to Tunes, to King Muley Aben Ferriz his friend: in which exile he was followed by about five hundred Moores of his faction, as well horse as foote, who were all well entertained, and afterwards assisted to recouer the lost Kingdome in Spaine.

Mahumet Aben-Azar expelled.

Mahumet the Little, the fifteenth King of Granado.

Tyrants care not to be hated, so they be feared.

MAHUMET called the Little, reigned then about the yeere 1427. the eleuenth of that name, and fifteenth King of the Moores at Granado. The surname of Little, was giuen him, to distinguish him from his predecessor, who reigned before him. This King entring by tyranny, thought that rigour and cruelty was the best means to maintaine him in his Estate, as commonly tyrants doe; wherefore he beganne to persecute the Officers, friends and partisans of his predecessor (whom he had expelled) by imprisonments, banishments, confiscations and cruell deaths, whereas many were ruined, and many also escaped, amongst the which was the Alguazil Ioseph Aben Sarraes, who fled to Lorca a towne in the realme of Murcia, submitting himselfe to the mercy of the King of Castile, and of the Gouvernor of Lorca, who was Lope Alphonso of Lorca, who afterwards led him to court, and presented him to the King D. Iohn at Illesca, a towne belonging to the Archbisshop of Toledo, seated betwixt Madrid and Toledo. The King gaue good entertainment to this Moore, from whom he vnderstood the resolutions of Granado, Lope Alphonso being truchman betwixt them. The King being intreated by Ioseph Aben Sarraes, to aide his maister to recouer his realme, hee yielded vnto it, and hauing giuen him many presents, and shewed him all fauour, he sent him with Lope Alphonso in Ambassage to

A to Tunes, to let King Mahumet vnderstand how much hee desired to doe him good, and to exhort him of Tunes, to aide and fauour his guest. The businesse succeeded so well, as Mahumet Aben Azar, receiuing money, and all other kinde of aide, from the King of Tunes, he past from Tunes to Oran, and then crossing the sea, hee came and landed at Vera in Granado, whose comming being divulged through the country, the towne thereabouts, yea that of Almeri, opened their gates vnto him. Mahumet the Little, who held the Realme, resolved to make head against him, thinking that his forces were yet but weake, sending about eight hundred horse and some foote before to encounter him, most of which ioyned with Mahumet Aben Azar, who pursuing his good fortune, entred with the like facility into Guadix, yea hee was receiued into the city of Granado: so as Mahumet the Little, his competitor was forced to shut and fortifie himselfe, in the Alhambra of Granado; where he was presently besieged, Aben Azar lodging his campe at a place called Alcabiçar, neere to the fort of Alhambra: to whose obedience there presently yielded the townes of Malaga, Gibraltar, Ronde, and in the end the whole realme: wherefore Mahumet the Little, being hated and abandoned of all men, and fainting, hee was forced, and taken in the castle of Alhambra, with his children, where hee ended his daies miserably, and his children were kept prisoners. Thus Mahumet Aben Azar recouered the realme, two yeeres after he had bene expelled, in the yeere 1429. and of the Arabians 812.

Mahumet Aben-Azar recouers his realme of Granado.

Mahumet the usurper taken and put to death.

An. 1429.

37 Castille.

C The King of Nauarre at his departure out of Castile, left Diego Gomes of Sandoual, Earle of Castro Xeris, his familiar friend there, who presently cauled the townes of Pegnassiel, Portillo and Castro Xeris to bee repaired, which made D. Iohn King of Castile conceiue, that there was some enterprise in hand to his prejudice, and that the King of Nauarre was gone away discontented with him. In which opinion he was confirmed by the newes which he receiued, that they leauied both foote and horse in Nauarre and Arragon, the which they couered with a pretext to send them into France, to succour King Charles against the English: Moreouer that hauing treated an accord and pacification betwixt Castile, Nauarre and Arragon, although the King of Nauarre had signed it, yet he of Arragon would not heare of it. For these causes the King of Castile sent D. Iohn Francis of Soria his confessor, and Peter of Bocanegra Deane of Cuenca, Ambassadors into Nauarre, to know what the King of Nauarres intention was, and to complaine of the Earle of Castros doings, and of other things, whereof hee was aduertised, which were practised against him, and the Estate of Castile: To whom answer was made, that they did not practise any thing against him, and that the souldiars which were leauied, were not to bee sent into Castile, and if they should, it were not for any thing that might offend the King their maister.

But in effect D. Iohn King of Nauarre, hee of Arragon, and D. Henry their brother, were conspired against the government of Castile, and they had an intent to trouble the State, to pull downe them that were great, and to aduance others, who were kept vnder or chased away; about all the King of Nauarre was furiously iealous of the Constables D. Aluaro de Lunas greatnesse, and other things that were managed in that court contrary to his liking: and as he was of a turbulent spirit, hee did not cease to seeke occasion of quarrels, entertaining his brother D. Alphonso king of Arragon in the hatred which he had conceiued against the king of Castile, for the imprisonment of D. Henry. These two Princes being thus disposed, all things prepared to warre, the which did much trouble the Queene Donna Blanche, and the Estates of Nauarre, who intreated him that hee would forbear, and enioy his realme in peace, and those goodly Estates which hee had in Castile, whereas the Queenes dowry was assigned, & the reuenues of many Lordships affected to Prince Charles his sonne: but they were not heard, and much lesse a second Ambassage from the King of Castile, in which were D. Alphonso Tenorio, Notary or Secretary of the realme of Toledo; and Doctor Fernand Gonçales of Auila counsellor of State to the King of Castile, with two deputies of townes: wherefore the King of Castile made preparation, and leauied men of all sides, to resist the kings of Nauarre and Arragon, and he rooke a new oth of fealty of all the Noblemen of his realme, especially of the Infant D. Henry.

Ceremonie in taking possession of the realme of Nauarre.

Here-

Death of D.
Alphonso Henriques Admiral of Castile.

Warre of the Castilian against Arra-gon and Na-
uarre.

Hereupon the King of Nauarre sent to excuse himselfe, and to require an enterview of A the King of Castile, but his excuses were not credited, yet the enterview was graunted. At this time there being dead D. Alphonso Henriques high Admiral of Castile, bafe sonne to D. Frederic maister of Saint Iames and grand-child to King D. Alphonso the twelfth, there was substituted in his place his sonne D. Frederic; his body was interred at Saint Clara in Palence, founded by him. The Kings troups being ready to march, the constable went towards the frontier of Arragon with two hundred launces, and the King led the rest of his forces towards Pegnasfel, whereas the Earle of Castro and the Infant D. Pedro, brother to the Kings of Arragon and Nauarre, had fortified themselves. Their other brother, D. Henry, sought in the meane time to leauy men about Toledo, but the B Inhabitants hindred him. The King sommoned D. Pedro and the Earle to yeeld vp the towne of Pegnasfel, vpon paine to be proclaimed traitors, and to be so condemned; so as the Earle yeelded vp the towne, vpon honorable conditions, and amongst others, not to be bound to carry armes against the King of Nauarre. The castle which was commanded by Gonzalo Gomes of Sumel, held some daies. On the other side the Kings of Arragon and Nauarre, entred into Castile, with two thousand five hundred men at armes, and some few foote, whose entry the constable could not stop, with whom Don Henry ioyned with two hundred and twenty horse, against the promises made. They ranne neere vnto Cogollado, and beeing come to Xadraque, the Constable following C them, they presented him battail, the which he would not accept, for Peter Cardinal of Foix sonne to Archimbold, and Mary Queene of Arragon, sister to the King of Castile, came by great iourneies out of Arragon, and put themselves betwixt them, making an entrance to an accord, which was, that the two Kings should returne into their realmes, and that the constable and other noblemen of the King of Castiles army, should intreat him to restore vnto the King of Nauarre, and to the Infant D. Henry their lands: for as soone as the army of Arragon and Nauarre had entred into Castile, the King did cause all that the house of Arragon did hold in Castile, to bee seized on. By this meanes the armies parted, and the two brethren Kings came to Huerta and Hariza, in Arragon, and the Infant D. Henry to Ocagne; but the indignation of D. John King of Castile, was so great, as he did not regard, that which had bene capitulated, but sent to all his subjects, D that they should hold the Arragonois and Nauarrois for enemies, and make violent warre against them, and comming himselfe in person to the campe at Piquera, hee resolved to goe and charge his enemies in their fort at Hariza. Queene Mary and the Cardinal Felix returned againe to the King of Castile, propounding many meanes of peace, but all in vaine: whereupon they returned, very much discontented. D. Frederic of Castile Earle of Arjone, was apprehended in the army, vpon suspicion that he fauored the Arragonois: war being proclaimed throughout al Castile, the inhabitants of the country of Biscay, Guipuscoa, Alaua, and Rioja, entred suddenly into Nauarre, where they committed infinit spoiles. Thus an innocent Realme suffered for a nocent King, whom they had earnestly intreated to entertaine peace with Castile.

The King of Castiles army being strong and ready to enter into Arragon, hee sent word to D. Alphonso King of Arragon, that he would spare his country, if hee would forsake the king of Nauarre, the which he refused: whereupon the constable of Castile being followed by five hundred horse, marcht to Monreal, tooke it, spoiled Cetina, and finding no resistance, returned to the army, which consisted of 7000. men at armes, 3600. genets or light horse, and 60000. foot, with the which King John entred into Arragon, where he tooke and burnt the towne of Hariza, but hee attempted not the castle, which was very strong: this was all the exploit was done with that mighty army: for the two brethren Kings not presenting themselves to battaile, and victuals fayling for so great an army, he was forced to retire into Castile, towards Medina Cell, from whence he sent for the gard of the frontier, D. Pedro of Velasco his Lord Chamberlain, with 600. launces to lie with them in Alfaro, Calaoarra, or Logroño: against whom the King of Nauarre did fortifie Tudele, Viana and La Garde.

In the meane time D. Henry and D. Pedro brethren to the kings, ouerran the country of Estremadura, hauing to incounter them Don Roderigo Alonso Pimentel, Earle of Benauent

Army of the King of Ca-
stile.

A. Benauent, who finding himselfe weake, had the Constable sent to him, with sufficient forces: The king being returned to Pegnasfel, wrought so as the captaine of the castle yeelded it vnto him, fearing to be put in the ranke of rebels and traitors to their Prince. The king of Arragon slept not, but employing his forces (his enemy being farre off) hee tooke in Castile, in the country of Soria, Deca, and the castles of Ciria, Boronia and Bozmediano, carrying away an infinite number of prisoners, aboue forty thousand charges of corne, and great store of cattle and other spoiles. The king of Castile was much moued with these newes, and gaue all the lands which the king of Nauarre, his sonne D. Charles, the Queene Donna Blanche, and the Infant D. Henry held in Castile, to D. Henry his sonne, Prince of the Asturia's, and he sent D. Pedro of Velasco to make most E violent warres in Nauarre: and being resolved to enter himselfe in person the next yeere with a great army, he called the Estates to Burgos, to haue money, demanding a hundred millions of Maraudis to entertaine it sixe monthes: and for that their was some difficulty to draw together so great a summe he borrowed of rich men, and of churches, all their plate and siluer vessel, and sent it to bee coined at Seuille. During the assembly at Burgos, there came Ambassadors from the kings of Nauarre and Arragon, which were, Peter of Peralta, the Abbot of Roncevaux, Doctor John of Lezana, D. John of Luna, and Berenguel of Bardaxi, to treat of a peace, to whom answer was made, that the king of Castile would send Ambassadors expressely to giue them a conuenient answer: and to them of Nauarre, shewing particularly in the name of Queene Blanche and of her sonne C D. Charles, that they had not done any thing, for the which they should seize their rents and pensions, yea the Queenes dowry, who had neuer consented to these quarrels, the like answer was made. The Ambassadors of Castile were D. Sancho of Rojas Bishop of Astorga, Pero Lope of Ayala Marshall of the kings body, and D. Fernando Gonçales of Auila, of the Kings counsell. Who being come into Nauarre, made great complaints of D. John King of Nauarre, accusing him of great faults, wherein they did also comprehend the Queene, saying, that she was a confederate in the warre, seeing that she had sold her jewels to furnish her husband with money, and made other demonstrations of an enemy. From Nauarre they past into Arragon, where they gaue as little hope of peace: wherefore King D. Alphonso sent Ambassadors to Rome, to Pope Martin, to complaine D of the King of Castile, who refused all honest meanes of an accord. The Constable being come into Extremadura, he made the Infants D. Henry and D. Pedro retire towards Albuquerque, vpon the frontier of Portugal, whether they sent great store of cattle, hoping they should serue to victual them, for the which the King of Portugal was glad to excuse himselfe to the King of Castile, who complained. The Constable tooke Trugillo, and hauing seized also of the castle by the meanes of one of the captaines of the garrison, he deliuered it into the Kings hands: hee attempted Montanches, and hauing taken D. Roderigo Alonso Pimentel Earle of Benauent with him, he came and camped before Albuquerque, an impregnable fort, but hee desired to draw the Infants to fight E Knight to Knight, but they would not vouchsafe to accept it: wherefore he retired his army towards Pierrebonne, from whence hauing aduertised the King of the Estate of his affaires, he came presently to the campe, and then the castle of Montanches yeelded, by intelligence which the constable had with the captaine. The Prouinces and townes of Castile did furnish the King with five and forty millions of Maraudies for the warres: and there was an Ambassage sent to Rome to Pope Martin to free the King of Castile of the imputations which were laied vpon him by him of Arragon. The King of Nauarre making shew to enter into Castile by Briones, D. Pedro of Velasco went to field, with all the troups he could gather together, hauing drawne out of Biscay three thousand men, led by John of Abendagno, Ordengo Garcia Arrega, Gonzalo Gomes of Buitron, and his sonne Gomes Gonzalo of Muxica, Lord of the house of Muxica, and finding no man to make head against him hee went to beseege the towne of Saint Vincent, the which was taken by assault, but whilest the Biscains were busie at the pillage, not caring to keepe any order, nor martiall discipline, entering confusedly into the houses, without any gards vpon the approaches: being entred into the houses, the Inhabitants who were armed, and retired into the castles, seeing this confused multitude in their towne, they brake

Exploits of the King of Arra-
gon.

Biscains defeated by them whom they had vanquished for want of discipline.

Towne of Saint Vincent obtains new priviledges.

Institution of the Order of the golden fleece.

Ceremonie of the Order of the Fleece.

1430.

39.
King of Navarres lands in Castile confiscated and gi-uen away.

brake out vpon them, and incounting Gomes Gonçales in the street, with a small company they tooke him, hauing slain most of his souldiers: whose father Gonçalo Gomes of Butron, running to succour him, beeing as ill accompanied as his sonne, was slaine with some of his men, and could not be releued. D. Pedro of Velasco, seeing that the castle could not be forced with a long and painefull seege, he set fire on the suburbs, and of some houses in the towne, and then returned to Haro, carrying with him many of his Knights and good souldiers wounded. The towne of Saint Vincent, for the losse it sustained then, and for the good seruice it did in the warre betwixt Nauarre and Castile, obtained many priuiledges and freedoms for the inhabitants thereof. He among the Nauarrois which did most harme to the Castellans, was a Knight called Sancho of Londog-no the kings Marshall, issued from the house of Londogno, neere to Ordugna, a member of Biscay: he running one day into Kioja, was surprized by the ambushes which Diego
Perez Sarmiento captaine of Bastide had layed for him, who carried him prisoner to that fort: but this losse was soone recompenced by Ruy Dias of Mendoça the bald, borne at Seuile, and yet he did serue the king of Nauarre faithfully, and was gone forth of Tu-dele with foure hundred horse and fise hundred foot, ouer-running the countrie of A-greda, against whom D. Inigo Lopez of Mendoça Lord of Hita and Buitrago (who kept a garrison there for the king of Castile) falling forth, and coming to fight in the field of Arauiana, he was there vanquished, with the death and imprisonment of many Castillans. At that time the Infanta D. Izabella of Portugall, daughter to the king D. Iohn, was married to Philip Duke of Bourgondie, Earle of Flanders, and Lord of many other Seigneuries, who had two wiues without any children. Of this marriage was born Charles whose daughter and onely heire was afterwards married to Maximilian of Austria. The very day that this marriage betwixt D. Philip, and the Infanta Izabella was celebrated with great pompe at Bruges, the Order of Bourgondie of the golden fleece was instituted by him, the tenth yeare after his coming to it, vpon a vow which he had made to go and make warre against the Infidels of Syria, and to conquer the countrie of Iurie: but his great affaires made his vow fruitlesse. His Order had for head and patron (I know not by what diuinity) S. Andrew, and the solemnitie of the Order was to be celebrated euery yeare three dayes together, whose knights should be the first day attired in red, in signe that heauen is purchased by the effusion of bloud and by Martyrdome: the second day in blacke, representing mourning for the dead: and the third in white, in honour of the purity of the Virgin Mary: and they should carry for a marke of their knight-hood, a chaine made in fashion of fuzils, with a rams skin & fleece hanging at it: a deuise taken, not from the Pagan Iason, but from the faithfull Gedeon, as some say. The first knights of this Order were foure and twenty in number, of the Noblest and most renowned of his Estates of Burgondy, Flanders and the Netherlands: wherewith since many Princes and great Noblemen of Spaine and other places, haue held themselves much honoured. This was that Duke Philip, who to reuenge the death of his father Iohn, murdered at Montreaufaut-Yonne by the Dauphin Charles, drew the English into France, to the ruine of his naturall country, as you may read at large in the History of France.

The yeere 1430. being come, D. Iohn King of Castile prepared to make warre against the King of Nauarre, against whom he had the greatest spleene; and forgetting no kinde of rigour, he resolved to deprive him and his of all the lands which they held in Castile, without euer hoping to re-enter into them: and therefore he gaue to D. Gutierrez of Toledo Bishop of Palence, and afterwards Archbishop of Toledo, the towne of Alua de Tormes, to D. Pedro Manrique Gouvernor of Leon, the towne of Paredes de Naua: to D. Roderigo Alphonso Pimentel, Earle of Benauent, Majorga: to the Marshall Inigo Ortiz of Estuniga, Cerezo: he would haue giuen to Fernand Diaz of Toledo, fise hundred vassals in the lands which did belong to D. Iohn King of Nauarre, but hee refused them:
He gaue to D. Frederic of Arragon Earle of Luna, base sonne to Martin King of Sicile, Villalon and Cuellar: to Queene Mary his wife Olmedo; and other places to other Knights. The king being come to field, before the fort of Albuquerque, hee caused the Infants D. Henry and D. Pedro to be summoned, to yeeld him the place, promising that the Infants should be herd in Iustice, and that all the rest should haue a generall pardon:

giuing

A giuing the Infants thirty daies time to resolue, and the rest forty: but their answers were arrowes and bullets, with great daunger to the Kings person, who being in a great rage at their obtnacy, he caused D. Henries proceesse to be made, and gaue the administration of the maister-ship of Saint Iames to the constable, diuiding his lands to diuerse Knights, very prodigally, as hee had done the King of Nauarres. In the meane time D.
Diego of Estuniga, or Suniga, Bishop of Calaoarra, and Calçada and his vnle D. Pedro of Estuniga, Earle of Ledesma, Iustice Major of Castile, and another D. Diego of Estuniga his cousin, with the forces of the frontier, tooke the towne of La Garde in Nauarre, by Scalado, being two leagues from Logroño, the castle held out, and cost many good mens liues, on either side, and beeing fortified with new succors, sent from the King of Nauarre, they made furious and bloody sallies vpon their enemies, who held the towne, but in the end they were so prest by the Bishop and the Earle of Ledesma, as they did capitulate to yeeld, if by a day prefixt they were not releued by the King their Lord; during the which there should be a cessation of armes; and if there came any succors, the besieged should bee bound to aduertise the Bishop that hee might doe as hee pleased.
This accord being made, the captaine of the place besieged made a mine vnder ground, by the which he drew into the castle a great number of souldiers, which the King of Na-uarre had sent him, vpon the aduertisement of the capitulation. The time beeing ready to expire, the captaine aduertised the Bishop, that the succors were arrived, and at that instant he opened the mine in the midst of the place, from whence issued great numbers of souldiers of Nauarre, who beganne to charge the Castellans, which caused a great confusion amongst them, and did much trouble the Bishop; yet beeing made with this treachery, they put themselves in defence, and repulst the Nauarrois into the castle ditch, hauing lost many good men of either side. This hauing not succeeded so happely as the Nauarrois expected & their victuals fayling them, by little and little they abandoned the fort: So La Garde both towne and castle remained in the King of Castiles power. The Queene D. Leonora mother to the Princes of Arragon, sorrowful for so many ruines, being old, and wholly giuen to deuotion, lyuing at Medina del Campo, in her Monastery of S. Iohn de las Dueñas, was not exempt from the discomforts of this war: for the King of Castile suspecting that she fauored her children, caused her to be shut vp in Santa Clara of Tordisillas, and put garrisons in her houses of Montalban, V-uegna, and Tyedra: and would haue done as much at Castro Xeris, and Saldagne, but the Earle found meanes to exempt himselfe, and yet the King was not very well pleased with him. The court being in Astudillo, there came an Ambassador from Iohn Earle of Foix, father to Gaston, who afterwards married Leonora the heire of Nauarre, who besought the King of Castile, that he would bee pleased that the Earle his master might employ himselfe, to make a peace betwixt him and the Kings of Nauar and Arragon: to whom the King of Castile answered, that he did thanke the Earle of Foix for his good will, but there was no meanes of a peace. On the other side the Earle of Armagnac, an enemy to the King of Nauarre and the Earle of Foix, hauing giuen all the hindrance hee could towards Galcony, that no succors should passe out of France to the King of Nauarre, for the which he had bene at great charge, hee sent to intreat the King of Castile, to rebourse him, to whom were paid ten thousand florins of gold. This yeere D. Pedro of Velasco, Generall vpon the frontier of Nauarre, was created Earle of Haro. The King being at Burgos, had newes that the Infant D. Pedro ouerrunning the country about Zamora, had taken the castle of Alua de Lista: and passing afterwards to Olma, which was the Rendezvous for the army of Castile, there came vnto him a Franciscan friar, confessor to Donna Blanch Queene of Nauarre, whom they called Archbishop of Tyre:
Peter of Perault chiefe Steward to the King of Nauarre, and Ramir Deane of Tudelo, F counsellor to the King, Ambassadors for the King of Nauarre; and for him of Arragon,
D. Dominike Bishop of Lerida D. Raymond of Perillos, and William of Vigue, Knights, sent to treat and conclude a peace, at what price soeuer.

The difficulties were very great, and they were forced to send backe some of the Ambassadors to the two brethren Kings, and in the meane time the army marched:
but the reasons, and propositions of the Ambassadors were in the end admitted, and a ooo

truce

Garde taken by the casti-lans.

Leonora
Queene of Arragon resisted by the King of Castile.

Truce betwixt
the King of Castile and the King of Arragon and Navarre.

Death of the Duke of Arragón.

Moores.

Castro Xeris
confiscated.

truce was accorded at Majano, for five yeeres, both by sea and land, betwixt the King of A Castile, and D. Henry his Sonne Prince of Asturia's, on the one part; and D. Alphonso King of Arragon, D. John King of Navarre, D. Blanch his wife, and D. Charles Prince of Yiana, their Sonne, on the other part: into which truce there entred for the King of Castile, the Earle of Armaignac; and for the two Kings brethren, the Earle of Foix. It was stiled, the Earle of Armaignac; and for the two Kings brethren, the Earle of Foix. It was also agreed, that D. Godfrey of Navarre, Earle of Cortes, brother in law to King John, who had followed the party of Castile, should not be troubled nor molested in the perception of his goods, nor otherwise. This Knight staid long in Castile, and did the King good service in his warres against the Moores: the like assurance was graunted in regard of the Infants D. Henry and D. Pedro: and to iudge of the differences during the B truce, there were seven persons named for Navarre and Arragon, and seven for Castile, whose seat should be at Tarassone and Agreda, alternatiuely. Thus ended the warre betwixt Castile, Navarre and Arragon, to the great prejudice of the King of Navarre: for he was dispossessed of all the lands he had in Castile, and moreover of the towne of Garde in Navar. During these treaties, D. Frederic Duke of Arjone died a prisoner at Pegnasel, whose Dutchy and Estates were given to D. Frederic of Arragon, Earle of Luna. There were also restored vnto Queen Leonora her houses & castles, and she was set liberty, and freed from the Monastery of Santa Clara of Tordeillas, at the intreaty of the King of Portugal, to whom the King of Castile sent the proceedings against her four sonnes, the King and Infants of Arragon, and their offences, to the end that she might see what C reason he had to confiscate their lands. The same yeere King John of Castile, was follicited to make a league of friendship with the English, but he excused himselfe touching the league, being loath to doe any thing to the prejudice of the King and Realme of France, an ancient friend and confederate to the crowne of Castile, sending backe the Ambassadors with a discreet and friendly answer: and soone after hauing sent D. Sancho of Rojas Bishop of Astorgo to the King of England, hee concluded a truce betwixt Spaine and England for one yeere. At the same time being fought vnto by the King of Granada to continue peace and friendship betwixt them, the said Moorish King offring him all the force of Granada to serue him at his will, he gaue him thanks for the D offer, and by an Ambassador which hee sent expressely to Granada, to conclude some truce, hee delcouered the Estate of that realme. The Ambassador, who was Lewis Gonzales of Luna, Governor of Cordoua, found King Mahumet averse to those conditions which the King of Castile demanded: wherefore he returned without any conclusion, reporting how little assurance there was of the Moores faith; which made the King of Castile to thinke vpon the affaires of that frontier, and to man it well, sending some presents to the King of Tunes, by Lopes Alphonso of Lorca, his Ambassador, with complaints against the King of Granada, intreating him that he would not succor him in the warre which he was resolved to make against him.

Mahumet Aben-Azar King of Granada, was, as we haue said, restored to his regal seat, in the yeere 1429. two yeeres after his exile, who shewed himselfe thankfull to the King E of Castile, for the fauour and aide which he had giuen him in the recouery of his realme, sending sundry Ambassages vnto him, with offers and thanks: but refusing this yeere to pay the tribute and pensions to the King of Castile, which he demanded, of friends they became enemies, and the warre was begunne by Diego of Riucera, Gouvernor of the frontier, who running through the plaine of Granada, tooke about two hundred horse, and towards Ronda, D. Fernando Aluares of Toledo, Lord of Val de Corneja, did great spoiles vpon the Moores. The King of Castile meaning to imploy D. Diego Gomez of Sandoual, Earle of Castro Xeris, in this warre, hee sent for him to court; but the Earle distrusting the King, retired to Briones a place belonging to Navarre, from whence hee sent to make his excuse, but it was not allowed. Wherevpon the King caused F his processe to be made, and by a sentence giuen at Zamora hee was condemned by contumacy, as a rebell, his castle of Castro Xeris was confiscated, and deliuered by the Captaine thereof to John of Luxan, Ramir of Tamojo, and to Doctor Fernand Diaz of Toledo, whom the King had sent thither. The Earle hauing many great men, and of the Kings fauorits which hated him, durst neuer more appeare in his presence. Before 40

Portugal.

Peace betwixt Portugal and Castile.

Religious buildings of the Constable Don
Nugno Aluares
Pereira.

A Before he entred into Granada, Don John King of Castile, keeping his Court at Medina del Campo, was solicited by the Ambassadors of Portugal, to make a perpetuall peace betwixt the two realmes, wherevnto hee consented, and it was sworne in the yeare one thousand foure hundred thirty and one, by the two Kings, and their eldest sonnes, and next successors to the Crowne, Don Henry of Castile Prince of the Asturias, and Don Edward of Portugall. This peace did end all quarrels betwixt Portugal and Castile, and continued fortie three yeeres, to the great good of both realmes. This yeere died Don Nugno Aluares Pereira, first Constable of Portugal, by vertue whereof Don John, from being Maister of Auiz, came to the royall dignity. This great personage towards the end of his dayes, possessed with a superfluous deuotion, left the affaires of the B world, whereas hee mought haue serued God well, and beene profitable to the common-weale, retyring himselfe into the Monasterie of the Carmelites in the city of Lis-bone, which he had built, and there he liued very solitarie and simply almost nine yeeres.
The Portugals speake wonders of the almes-deeds, fastings, prayers, and other workes tending to piety of this Noble man, as well in his Monasticall life, as before. Besides the Carmelites at Lisbon, he caused S. Georges Church to be built in the place of battraile at Aljubarote, that of Saint Mary of Villa viciosa; the great Chappell of the religious of Saint Augustin in the same place, the Church of Saint Mary de Monte, Saint Mary of Portel, and Saint Mary of Sonfel; and others. Before hee retired himselfe, hee distributed his goods after this manner. To Don Diego his grand-child, borne of Donna C Beatrix his daughter, and of Don Alphonso Earle of Barcellos, her husband, hee gaue the Earldome of Oren, with all the lands which hee held in Extremadura, at Lisbon and thereabouts. To Don Ferdinand his other grand-child, borne of the aboue named, heire after his father of the Duchie of Bragance, and who succeeded in the Earldome of Arroyolos, with all the rents hee had on this side Tayo and Vdiana. To Don Isabella sister to his two grand-children, married to the Infant D. John Maister of Saint James of Portugal, the Kings Sonne, who was the second Constable of that realme, hee gaue the lands of Lonsada Payua and Tendanes, and the Towne of Almadaan, with the rents of Loule: and to his familiar vassalls and household seruants, he diuided his money, horses, armes, apparrell and mouebables. And thus naked, and discharged of all temporall goods D hee entred into the Monasterie, where hee was possessed with so strong an opinion to me-ritheauen by austeritie of life, strauell, and affliction of his body, as hee resolved to seperate himselfe more from the company of men, and to liue alone in desarts, if the King Don John and Prince Edward his Sonne, had not diuerted him, shewing how much it would hurt the estimation which all men had of him, and of his wisdom: wherefore hee contained himselfe in his Monasterie vntill his death, which was in the yeare 1431.
and 71. of his age.

E

The end of the eighteenth Booke.

000. 2.

THE

F

THE NINETEENTH BOOKE of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 V Arre betwixt the Castillans and Moores: seditions among the Princes Moores.
- 2 Troubles in Castile.
- 3 D. Edward the first of that name, and 11. King of Portugal: his disposition: title of Prince of Portugal first usurped by the eldest &c.
- 4 Pursue of the warre of Naples, after the death of Queene Ioane the second, by the Kings of Arragon.
- 5 Combats in Castile and else-where: warre of Granado.
- 6 Peace betwixt the Kings of Castile, Nauarre and Arragon, Alliance betwixt them by the marriage of Prince Henry of Castile with D. Blanch Infanta of Nauarre.
- 7 Vnfortunate warre of the Portugals in Affrike.
- 8 Quarrell betwixt the Princes of Castile and the Constable D. Aluaro de Luna, with his Insolencies.
- 9 D. Iohn of Pacheco mignon to Prince Henry of Castile comes to bee the greatest man of the Realme.
- 10 Marriage of Prince Henry and the Infanta of Nauarre: the Princes dishability to consummate the marriage. New troubles against the King.
- 11 D. Alphonso the fifth of that name and 12. King of Portugal, gouerned by his mother, and the troubles which ensued.
- 12 Continuance of the quarrels and factions in the court of Castile.
- 13 Successe of the warre of Naples, made by D. Alphonso the fifth King of Naples.
- 14 Second marriage of D. Iohn King of Nauarre, with D. Ioane Henriques. Continuance of the troubles.
- 15 Proceedings against the King of Nauarre, and them of his faction: Seazure of their goods in Castile. Bataille of Olmedo, lost by the King of Nauarre. Condemnation of his confederats.
- 16 The Constable D. Aluaro de Luna restored to credit: beginning of the Kings hatred against him.
- 17 The Constables furious enterprises against the Nobility.
- 18 Moores incited by the King of Nauarre against Castile: warre against Granado.
- 19 Excesse of D. Bertrand of Gueuara.
- 20 Exploits of warre betwixt the Nauarrois and Castillans.
- 21 Seditions at Toledo: Concussions and rebellions of D. Pedro Sarmiento.
- 22 Birth of D. Isabella, who was Queene of Castile and Arragon.

23 Entry

- A 23 Entry of the Castilian army into Nauarre, and their retreat through the modesty of D. Charles Prince of Nauarre; the vertues and disposition of this prince.
- 24 Hatred betwixt Prince Charles of Nauarre, and his mother in law. D. Ioane.
- 25 Enterprises against the Constable D. Aluaro de Luna: his imprisonment, and miserable end.
- 26 Last acts of D. Iohn of Castile and his death.
- 27 Troubles, emulations, and death of Princes in the house of Portugal: alliance of the Emperor Frederic in that familie by marriage. Descouery of the country in Affrike by the Portugals.

The Kings mentioned in this nineteenth Booke, are of PORTUGAL.

11. D. Edward. 1.
12. D. Alphonso. 5.

He affaires of Castile beeing some-what pacified, with the Christian Princes of Spaine, made way for the warre which King Iohn had resolved against the Moores of Granado, notwithstanding that according to the discipline brought in of late, hee had alwaies a spleene against them which had presumed to resist him by armes: and therefore vpon euery occasion he fell into new troubles within his realme: for he had mignons by whom hee was wholly gouerned, who made him iealous of many great men, and by their importune reports did estrange them, and in the end made them ill affected to their Prince. For besides that which we haue related in the precedent Booke, of the Earle of Castro Xeris, D. Iohn of Soto Major, maister of Alcantara, being sent for by the King, he neuer durst with assurance present himselfe before him, nor come to court, what promise soeuer he made him, neither could Don Gustiere Gomes of Toledo, Bishop of Palence, his great friend perswade him: Yet did he performe whatsoeuer they commanded him, that did concerne the Kings seruice, and the obedience which hee ought him, excepting alwaies that he would not be bound to come to court against his will. And moreouer, notwithstanding any peace concluded betwixt Castile and Nauarre and Arragon, the King D. Iohn did still entertaine occasions of quarrels, and maintained the Earle of Armagnac, a great enemy to the King of Nauarre, furnishing him with money, to the end he might be as a thorne in his foote, to annoy him towards France, so as hee might not attempt any thing against Castile. And for a greater prooffe of his hatred against this Prince, nor satisfied to haue taken his lands from him in Castile, he caused his castle of Pegnafil to be razed.

The country of Galicia beeing in a manner all in armes through the quarrels of Nuño Freire of Andrada, and his subiects, the King sent and pacified them, then leaving D. Pedro Manriques for Gouernor general in Castile, he went in person towards Cordoua: for Roderigo of Pereira Gouernor of Gascola having entered rashly with three hundred Hatred betwixt Courtiers cannot be reconciled, but by the ruine of one party.

Castilians defeated by the Moors.

red horse, and one thousand foot into the country of Granado, had beene defeated and A most of his men cut in peeces by the Moores: but this losse was at the same instant recōpenced by the taking of the towne and castle of Ximena by scalado, through the diligence of the Marshal Garcia of Herrera: wherefore the King hearing that the warre began to grow hot, he made hast to approach nere vnto that frontier: being vpō the way, & passing by Ciudad Real, there was a great earthquake, ouer a great part of the country; for euen the city of Granado was shaken therewith. The King being come to Cordoua, he sent the constable D. Alonso de Luna with three thousand horse, who forraged the territories of Illora, Trajara, Loxa, Archidona and other places in the champion country of Granado, and then he returned towards Ecija.

Moores.

In the meane time a knight, called Gilaire, who was by birth a christian, and had beene taken being but eight yeeres old, and instructed in the law of Mahumet, came to the King at Cordoua, telling him vnderstand that there was a Knight of the Moores, descended from King Mahumet Aben Alhamar, called the Vermeil, the ninth King of Granado, hee who had beene slaine by D. Pedro King of Castile, called Ioseph Aben Almas, who was in no good termes with Mahumet Aben Azar then raigning, and desired some fit occasion to reuolt from him; wherefore if the King would enter into the plaine of Granado, hee did assure him, that this Moore would come and ioyne presently with his army and reuolt the whole realme in his fauor. This businesse being propounded in counsell, they were of opinion, that King Iohn should aduance with his forces, which were 80000, C fighting men. On the other side Mahumet Aben Azar assembled all his forces of Granado, which amounted to two hundred thousand foote, and fise thousand horse, with the which hee came to make head against King Iohns army, with whom Ioseph Aben Almas the Moore, had ioyned, with some troupes of horse. The armies being neere, about the mountaine of Eluira, there were many skirmishes: so as on a Sunday the first day of Iuly, both the armies were drawne forth to battaile, in the which the Christians had the victory. This was called the battaile of Figure, for that it was fought in a country full of figs, and is very famous in Spaine; for there died about ten thousand Moores, King Iohn remayning so maister of the field, as he spoiled and burnt all round about the city of Granado, and yet the Moores durst neuer come without their walles to defend their houses and fields. The King of Castile had greater enterprises, but by the counsell and importunity of the Constable, he retired: they say the King of Granado had corrupted him with good store of gold, which he sent him in a present of figs & dried rayfins, which made him so presse the Kings retreat: who being returned to Cordoua, and hauing gi-uen order for the safety of the frontier, he came to Toledo, and from thence to Escalone, where he was wonderfully feasted by the constable. After which the Estates were called at Medina del Campo, at the which the peace with Portugal was confirmed, and there was granted to the King of Castile by the deputies of the Prouinces, 45. millions of Marauidis, for the charge and continuance of the warre against the Moores of Granado whereof Ioseph Aben Almas intituled himselfe King, by the aduice of D. Iohn King of Castile, who did assist and fauor him all hee could to dispossesse Mahumet Aben Azar: and therefore he sent commandement to the captaines and Gouernors of the frontier, to assist him in any thing hee should vndertake. This Moore was so well followed in a short time by a good number of Knights of his sect which hated King Mahumet, as hauing sur-prized Montefrio, he made it his residence and storehouse for the warre, the which he did mannage with wisdom, valour and iudgement: and being aided and fauored by Don Lewis of Guzman, maister of Calarraua, D. Diego of Riuera, and other Noblemen and Christian captaines, within few daies hee rooke the townes of Cambil, Alicum, Illora, Ronda, Inajar, Archidena, Casarobonella, Serenil, Turon, Hardales, Castellar and Loxa, all which yielded willingly, except the castle of Loxa, which held for king Mahumet, into the which the Algazil Ioseph Aben Sarraz had put a good garrison: but soone after he being dead, it was yielded to Ioseph Aben Almas, through the fauour of a route the which hee gaue to Mahumets troupes: which victorie was of such consequence, as the citie of Granado opened her gates: so as King Mahumet being out of hope to bee able to resist, going out of Alhambra, with that which was most deere and precious,

Defeat of King Mahumet and the taking of Granado, by Ioseph Aben Almas.

A precious, hee led with him the two sonnes of Mahumet the little, who had beene vanquished and slaine by him, with a Sister to Captaine Coxo his Neece, and so fled to Malaga.
By this euent Ioseph Aben Almas remained King of Granado, in the beginning of the yeare 1432. Mahumet hauing raigned since his returne three yeares, and it was in the 815. yeare of the Arabians raigne.

1432.

Ioseph Aben Almas, the sixteenth King of Granado.

B

THIS new King Ioseph being receiued of the whole realme without contradiction, the Crowne of Granado returned by him into the family of Mahumet Aben Alha- mar, or the Vermeil, who presently made himselfe vassall to the King of Castile, by whose faueur hee had gotten the realme, promising a certaine tribute of money and other things, whereof there were letters past, sealed with his seale of Gold. He did aduertise King Iohn of the successe of this warre, and did attribute all the happinesse thereof to God and him: informing him moreouer of the siege which hee went to lay before Malaga, wherein the King did assist him, as he had done before, commanding D. Diego of Ribera, C Gouernor of that frontier, to furnish him with men, victualls, and all sorts of aide in that enterprife. Whilst these things were acting, there came a Genoiois to Court, an Ambassador from Muley Aben Ferriz, King of Tunes, who had charge to intreate King Iohn to spare King Mahumet Aben Azar, and to finde some expedient for peace: but finding the realme already possessed by Ioseph, hee complained in the name of the King of Tunes his maister, of the misfortune of Mahumet his Kinsman: to whom the King of Castile answered pertinently, saying, that he had made warre against him for good and iust reasons, for that hee had beene daily informed that hee had secret Intelligence with the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon his enemies. This Ambassador staid some dayes in the Court of Castile, being then at Vailledolit. The raigne of Ioseph Aben Almas lasted not D about sixe moneths: for being old and broken, hee dyed that same yeare 1432. whereby Mahumet Aben Azar came to raigne againe the third time, who being aduertised of the death of his Competitor, rooke all fit courses to make the Granadins obey him againe, wherein the King of Castile did not oppose himselfe, it may be moued at the request of the King of Tunes, by his Ambassador, who returned well satisfied into Affrick, being accompanied by Lope Alphonso of Lorca, sent by the King of Castile, that hee might take with the King of Tunes some friendly expedient for peace, betwixt Castile and Granado: and in the meane time there was a short truce granted to Mahumet, who made a Knight called Audilbar, who had beene faithfull vnto him, his Alguzil Maior, in the place of the deceased Ioseph Aben Sarraz.

Mahumet Aben Azar re-couers the realme of Granado.

E The warre of Granado being ended after this manner: there fell out new occasions of trouble in the Court of Castile by the Kings credulitie, who willingly gaue eare to reports, giuing him to vnderstanding that the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon had secret intelligences with D. Pedro Fernandes of Velasco, Earle of Haro, Gustiere Gomes of Toledo, Bishop of Palence, and his Nephew D. Fernando Aluarez of Toledo, with other great men of Castile: wherevpon he staid some, imprisoned others, and many seeking to escape, were brought back to Court, being then at Zamorra, and others escaped: so as it was full of amazement and tumult. Of the number of the prisoners were the aboue-named D. Fernando Aluarez of Toledo, Bishop of Palenza, and the Earle of Haro, who had the Court giuen him for prison, putting in caution. The Bishop was committed to the castle of Muzientes, and D. Fernando his Nephew to that of Vruenza. D. Ferdinand F of Velasco the Earles brother fled away, and being come into his brothers country, hee assured himselfe of the towne and places of strength there. Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, Lord of Hita and Buirrago, hearing what had beene done in Court, and how his friends and kinsmen were persecuted, hee fortified himselfe in Hita. There was no matter found to charge and conuict these Noblemen, so as they were deliuered one after

2
Castile.

Trouble in Castile by false reports.

after an other, but the Bishop and his Nephew were the last of all. Don John of Soto. A Maior, Maister of Alcantara remained, who being in disgrace with the King, and afterwards reconciled, yet hee fell againe into dislike, so as Don Henry Infant of Portugal was enforced to imploy himselfe to restore him to grace. The King gaue charge to Doctor Franc to end all differences with him, who conferring with Diego of Manjarres Treasurer of Alcantara, they ended all matters, so as the Maister had reason to bee contented: but hee shewed himselfe so indiscreet, as hee reiected all that they had concluded: and notwithstanding that the Doctor sought to satisfie him in all his demands, yet he was so transported with his passions, as contemning the King, and all them that treated in his name, he called D. Henry and D. Pedro Infant of Arragon, remaining at Albuquerque to deliuer them Alcantara, and the forts which depended. The Maister going from Alcantara to Valencia, before he had gone two leagues, he had a conceit that hee should not be safe in that towne, wherefore he returned to Albuquerque, to the Infant D. Henry: And for that he feared to be surprized in the towne, he desired to lodge in the castle, whether also Doctor Franc was led prisoner. Whereupon it was giuen out, that the Infant Don Henry kept the Maister of Alcantara prisoner in the castle of Albuquerque: wherewith Gutierre of Soto Maior, great Commander of Alcantara, nephew to the Maister, being much discontented, he staid the Infant Don Pedro prisoner at Alcantara, the whole people consenting thereunto. Don Frederic Admirall of Castile being aduertised of these things, hee went post to Alcantara, with all his horsemen, to the end this prisoner might bee deliuered vnto him, to conduct him vnto the King, but the Commander would not yeeld him: The Admirall wisht him to keepe him in safe guard, promising him a great recompence in the Kings name, and from thence hee went and spoiled the country about Albuquerque.

The detention of the Infant Don Pedro, did much trouble Don Henry his brother, who caused the Maister to goe to field, to let the world know that hee was no prisoner: but for all this the Commander would not release Don Pedro: for the King tempting the couetousnesse and ambition of this man, promised to make him maister of Alcantara in his Vncles place: so as it appeared to all men, that in retaining Don Pedro, hee had more hope to aduance him-selfe, then charitie to his Vncle, who indeed was deprivied of his Maisterhip, the Commander advanced vnto it, and the Inhabitants of Alcantara, for their forwardnesse in the taking of the Infant, were endowed with great priuiledges. Don Henry seeing his affaires in very bad estate, fearing they should vse his brother vnworthily, he had recourse vnto the King of Portugal, to mediate his peace with the King, and his brothers deliury: by whose meanes an accord was made with this condition, that the fort of Albuquerque, & all others that the Infants did hold, should bee deliuered into the Kings hands, and they deprivied of all their lands in Castile.

These things happened in the yeare 1432. when as King John gaue the title of a City to the towne of Victoria, the chief in the prouince of Alaua. About the end of this yeare there fell such abundance of Snow in Nauarre and Arragon, as the townes and boroughs were in a manner besieged, the Snow continuing forty dayes together, so as they could not go from one place to another: and the long continuance thereof made many beasts, yea the most sauage, and birds of all sorts, to come familiarly into their houses, being prest with hunger, and suffer themselves to be taken, as if they had put off their natural wildnesse, and were become tame, a preface of future miseries.

The truce betwixt the King of Castile, and Mahomet Aben Azar King of Granado being expired, in the yeare 1433. there were new supplies of men sent vnto the frontiers of Andalusia, vnder the command of Don Fernand Aluarez of Toledo, Lord of Val-de-corneja, who tooke Benamaruel and Bencalema from the Moores: and the Estates of Castile were held at Madrid, where they treated to continue this holy warre.

This yeare D. John King of Portugal, dyed in the Castell of Lisbon, a Prince full of yeares, leaving his realme in peace, and a happy memory of his gouernment, hee was seauenty seauen yeares old when hee dyed, and had reigned forty nine yeares. His body was layed in the Cathedrall Church at Lisbon, and afterwards buried in the royall Nephew betrays his uncle through ambition.

Infants of Arragon lose all their lands in Castile.

Admirable Snow in Nauarre & Arragon.

An. 1433.

Portugal, Death of Don John King of Portugal.

A royall Monasterie of S. Mary of the battell. Before he left this world, he saw a son borne of D. Edward his sonne and succesor of the Realme, and of Donna Leonora of Arragon his wife, who was named Don Alphonso, and reigned after the father.

D. Edward the first of that name, and II. King of Portugall.

B On Edward was presently after proclaymed king in the pallace of Alcaçaua, in the presence of his breethren D. Henry Master of the Order of Christ, and duke of Viseo, the Infant Don John, Master of Saint Iames of Portugal, and Constable of the realm, Don Pedro of Meneses Earle of Viana, the bishop of Ebor and many other Prelates and Knights: whereas the bishop of Ebor did celebrate the ceremonie. They say, that the Noblemen being assembled to celebrate this act, a Jew, Phisitian to the new king, and very learned in astrologie, came and presented himself vnto the assembly, beseeching them to deferre it vntill noone, with assurance that he had obserued some bad constellation, threatening that Kings raigne, that should be receiued at that houre. The king (who was better instructed, touching these prognostications) would haue them proceed without delay, wherefore the Jew replied, that the king should raigne little, and with great trouble. He was one and forty yeares old when he began to raigne, and had bene married five yeares before, too late for a Prince that was heire to a great Estate. His wife Donna Leonora was daughter to King Fernand, who of Duke of Pegnasfel had bene making of Arragon, by election of the arbitrators deputed by the Estates of the countrie, borne of Donna Leonora of Albuquerque, who was issued of the bloud royall of Castile and Portugall: for Donna Beatrix her mother was daughter to the king Don Pedro, and sister to Don John king of Portugal, borne of the faire and happie Agnes of Castro, and the father was Don Sancho sonne to Don Alphonso king of Castile, the last. Of this Princeesse of Arragon king Edward had Don Alphonso, his eldest, and succesor to the Crowne of Portugall, borne in the pallace of Sintra, in the yeare 1432. then D. Fernand his second sonne this yeare 1433, who was Duke of Viseo, and married Donna Beatrix his cousin germaine, daughter to D. John, Master of S. Iames, and the third Constable of Portugal: of which marriage was borne Donna Leonora Queene of Portugall, wife to Don John the second: and also D. Isabella Dutchesse of Bragance, and Don Dominicke Duke of Viseo, and Don Manuel who came to raigne in Portugal, from whome is descended the last King Don Sebastian by the masculine line. Besides these two sonnes, Donna Leonora brought king Edward, her husband, foure daughters, D. Philip who dyed being but eleuen yeares old, stricken with the plague at Lisbon, D. Leonora married to the Emperour Fredericke the third, father and mother to the Emperor Maximilian of Austria, the first of that name, the third was D. Catherine, who was betrothed to Don Charles Prince of Viana, heire of Nauar, and afterwards to Edward the fourth King of England, and yet married neither of them, but dyed a mayd: the fourth was D. Jeanne, a very faire Princeesse, who married with Don Henry the fourth, king of Castile. This was the issue of king Edward, who is numbred for the eleuenth king of Portugall, vnfortunate at the least in this, that during his raigne the plague neuer ceased to consume his people: yet he was a loue of iustice, for the administration wherof he deputed euery three moneths one of his brethren, an Earle and a Bishop, commanding them to do Iustice to euery man, and to suppress all exceffe: he was sober in speech, and in his manner of liuing, as much as any Prince of his time: he did limit the expences of his Wardrobe to fife hundred doubloons of gold by the yere, he caused both gold and siluer to be coyned of a good Standard. His residence at his first comming to the crowne was at Belin: there his brother the Infant D. Pedro the Traueller, duke of Coimbra, came and kist his hands, and sware vnto him fealty and homage.

The first yeare of his raigne, and the second of the age of his sonne Don Alphonso, hee caused Genealogie of Portugal.

Title of Prince first usurped
by the eldest sonne of Portu-
gall.

Stately funerals of King Iohn of Portu-
gall.

Modesty of the Infant D. Pedro, and his other vertues.

caused him to be sworne the lawfull heire of the Crowne, by the assembled at Sintra, and A would haue him called Prince, a title first vsurped by him in Portugall, following the example of the eldest of other Christian kings, his neighbors in Spaine. After this solemnitie, he caused the bodie of the king his father to be transported, whose obsequies were the most royall and stately that euer were made for any king of Portugall. For two moneths space that he lay in the cathedrall Church, there were thirtie Masses sayd every day, and an aniuersarie once a weeke, the bodie being accompanied, and watched euery night by a great number of clerkes and religious men, singing diuers suffrages for the soule of the deceased. The bodie being to be transported, it was layed vpon an high bed, garnished with many banners and trophees, and it was watched in the night by the Infant Don Pedro, being accompanied by a great number of gentlemen, Don Fernand Arch-bishop of Braga the kings nephew, doing the seruice, who the next day sung Masse in his pontifical habit, with great state & ceremonie, after which and the Sermon made by Friar Giles Lobo the kings Confessor, the bodie was layed vpon a chariot, and conducted by the new street, where there was another Sermon made, & a third in S. Domingo: after which it was accompanied with a great procession out of the towne, and conducted by the king and the Princes to the Monasterie of S. Denis of Odiuella, distant a league and an halfe from Lisbon, where it rested that night, where as the Infant Don Henry, Master of the Order of Christ, with his commanders watched: from thence it was carried to Villafraanca, where they made another pause: the Infant Don Iohn Master of Saint Iames, with his Commanders, watching that night: Passing on the next day with the like pompe, they came to Arcoentre; where it rested againe, and the bodie was watched by the Infant D. Fernand Master of Auiz, with his commanders. Continuing the next day, they came to Alcouaça, where they made the fourth pause, and there watched D. Alphonso Earle of Barcellos, brother to the Infants aboue-named, accompanied by his two sonnes, Don Diego Earle of Oren, and Marquis of Valencia, and Don Fernand Earle of Arroyolos, and Marquis of Villavitiola, in all which places there was Euen-song and vigils sayd at night when it arrived, and in the morning before it parted Masse being sung pontifically by the abbot of Alcouaça, and the Bishops of Ebor and la Garde, in all places: in the end they came to the Hermitage of Saint George in the place of battell, with the like procession, pompe and ceremonie, as they came out of Lisbon. The Hermite came forth to meet it, and did accompanie it to the royall Monasterie of the battell, where it was receiued, and layd in a royall sepulchre, with great and sollemne Masses, and other ceremonies, and very rich offerings, where as aboue all others the pietie and filiall duty of the Infant D. Pedro, was remarkable, in which good and kind offices hee continued towards king Edward his brother, in the gouernement of the affaires of the realm committed vnto him.

This Prince is much commended by the Portugals for his modestie, affirming, that he would neuer suffer any one to kisse his hand, nor to speake to him kneeling, nor to vse any other tearmes of submission accustomed to great men: Hee loued learning and learned men greatly, and himselfe did write some Treaties of the gouernement of Princes, and made some traductions out of the Latine tongue into the vulgar Portugal, not without learning and iudgement: He had a particular deuotion to Michael the arch-angell, as he was instructed by the Diuines of that age, wherefore he carried a ballance for his deuice, and was a great builder of Temples and holy places: He caused Saint Michael of Penela, and Auero to be built: and in the same towne he was the founder of the Monasterie of Pietie of the preaching Friars, and of the church of Tentubel: and of the hospitall of Saint Eloy: he made a collegiall Monasterie, as it is at this present. Besides which buildings, hee caused the Estates to be built in the city of Lisbon, to lodge Courtiers, to ease the inhabitants of that troublesome, and many times preiudiciall subiection. This Prince was husband to Donna Izabella of Arragon, daughter to Don Iames Earle of Virgel, and of D. Izabella Infanta of Arragon, daughter to Don Pedro the fourth of that name. Of D. Iames, I say, who thinking to raigne in Arragon after the decease of D. Martin, rebelled against the determination of the arbitrators, who had chosen Don Fernand of Castile for King, the which cost him his libertie, and estates, goods, and dignities, whereof being

A deprived, he dyed a prisoner. The Infant Don Pedro had by this Ladie Donna Izabella, Don Pedro who was third Constable of Portugall, who in the warres which the Castellans had against Don Iohn king of Nauarre, heire to his brother Don Alphonso King of Arragon, he was chosen King of Arragon, and dyed in that warre, with that title. Moreover he had Don Iohn future king of Cypres, husband to Donna Izabella, whome Don Alphonso the fifth of that name, her cousin germaine married: a princeesse hauing her deuotion and hope directed to Saint Iohn the Euangelist, in whose honor shee caused the Monasterie at Lisbon to be built, dedicated to him on the toppe of Euxobregas. With these two sonnes he had D. Philippe, who liued a religious woman in the Monasterie of Odiuella, and was so giuen to studie, as she translated into the Portugal tongue, a worke of Laurence Iustinian Patriarke of Venice and of Aquileia, founder of the Order of S. George of Alaga, moreover, Don Iames and Donna Beatrice, who were retired after their fathers decease, by Donna Izabella, Dutchesse of Bourgondie, their aunt. Don Iames was aduanced to spirituall liuings, afterwards made a Cardinall, and Arch-bishop of Lisbon, and Donna Beatrice was married to the Lord of Rauestein, nephew to the Duke of Bourgondie. This Cardinall dyed a Virgin, as they say, at Florence, where he was buried, in the time of Pius the second.

Cardinall dyed
a virgin.

In the beginning of the yeare 1431. there had beene a generall councill called, the which was continued by Pope Eugenius Successor to Martin the fifth, in the cittie of Basill, this yeare 1433. but afterwards the fathers were diuided, and the Pope himselfe, finding the councill not plyable to his affections, transferred it to Ferrara, and from thence to Florence. In this councill of Basill, the Fathers being assembled, they were spectators of a combate betwixt a gentleman of a Portugal race, but borne in Castile, called Iohn de Merle, and Henry of Rauestein a knight of Bourgondie, who fought on foot, and the Bourgondian was vanquished. The same de Merle had a little before fought a combate on horsebacke, with the like happinesse, in the cittie of Arras against Peter of Brechemont, Lord of Charny, in the presence of D. Philip.

Councill of Basill.

King Edward hauing finished his fathers funerals, and all solemnitie, oaths, reception of fealties and homage, and other accustomed duties, at the first coming of Kings, hee assembled the Estates of his Realme at S. Iren, in the yeare 1434. to consult concerning the gouernement thereof: from thence there was an ambassador sent to the councill of Basill, which was D. Diego Earle of Oren, being accompanied with many learned men and Prelates of Portugal: and then the warre against the Moores was propounded, after the example of Kings his Predecessors: It was also held conuenient to continue that which King Iohn had begun in Affricke: for the execution whereof he obtained a Croisado from the apostolike Sea of Rome, by the meanes of the Earle of Oren, who brought the Bull into Portugall.

An. 1434.

The King of Castile also sent many of his Prelates and Diuines to the Councell, during the which Don Alphonso Carrillo, Bishop of Siguença and Cardinall, dyed, whose Bishoppricke was giuen to his Nephew, carrying the same name, who in time came to be Archbishop of Toledo. The ambassadors for the king of Castile at this councill were D. Aluaro of Osorno, Bishop of Cuenca, D. Iohn de Sylua Lord of Cysuentes, Standard-bearer to the king, and Doctor Alphonso of Carthagea, Deane of S. Iames and Segobia, sonne to D. Pablo Bishop of Burgos, which Bishoppricke Don Alphonso obtayned in his life time, he being preferred to be Patriarke of Aquileia. There falling out a great question in the councill betwixt the ambassadors of England and Castile for the precedence, this Doctor Don Alphonso of Carthagea did so well defend the preheminence of the crowne of Castile, and gaue such pertinent reasons for the dignity and prerogative thereof, as the fathers gaue the precedence to the ambassador of Castile, wherein the Doctor was held to haue done great seruice to his countrie of Spaine, whereof he himselfe hath made a treatise: notwithstanding Raphael Volaterran, in his third booke, and last chapter, sayth, That in the time of D. Fernand the 5. this cause was pleaded againe at Rome, and ended in fauor of the king of England, who had giuen sentence by prouision, without any great examination of the cause.

Castile.

Controversie betwixt England and Castile for precedencie.

Returning to the politticke affaires of Castile, the King D. Iohn being aduertised that Don

D. Frederick of Arragon Earle of Luna a prisoner in Castile.

Don Fredrick of Arragon, Earle of Luna, would haue seized vpon the city of Seuille, A he caused him to be apprehended at Medina del campo, and to be carried to the Castle of Braquelos, which is neere vnto Olmedo, where he ended his dayes, and many of his confederates were put to death, who for that cause were brought to Medina del campo. The warre begun in Granado, continued with variable successe, for after the taking of Benamaruel, by Don Diego of Ribera, Lord of Val de Corneja, Gouvernor of the frontier of Andalusia, attempting the towne of Alora, hee had bene slaine by the Inhabitants, and them that defended it: after whose death, the King gaue the gouernement to D. Pedro Alfan his sonne, a young man but fiftene yeares old. Don Roderigo Manriques somewhat to ease this losse, tooke the towne of Huefcar by scalado, and the castle afterwards by fight: for the recouerie of which place, there were enterprises and encounters betwixt the Christians and the Moores, all that yeare, 1434. in the which dyed D. Iohn of Contreras, Arch-bishop of Toledo, and Primat of Spaine: and to him succeeded D. Iohn of Crezuela, brother by the mothers side to the Constable D. Aluaro de Luna.

About that time the king of Castile gaue vnto the Earle of Armagnac (who had alwaies shewed himself his great friend and partizan in the wars against Nauar) the towns of Cangas and Tinco, with the title of an Earle: and there arriued at Madrid ambassadors from Charles the 7. the French king, to renew the league betwixt France and Castile, to whom the king gaue audience in great state, and sitting on a high throne he gaue them a good and friendly answer, who after much feasting, were sent home well satisfied: there they did see a ramelyon lying at the kings feet, a thing which is not ordinarie.

The same yeare dyed D. Henry of Villena, the kings vncler, son to D. Pedro, and nephew or grand-child to D. Alphonso of Arragon, who had bene Marquis of Villena, and first Constable of Castile: a Prince abusing learning, wherein he had bene bred, giuing himselfe to infamous Magicke arts, whereof he had written many treatises, the which by the kings commandement, and by the censure of Friar Lopes of Barientos, then Schoole-master to D. Henry Prince of the Asturia's, were for the most part burnt. The king being in pilgrimage at Guadalupe, D. Gutierrez of Soto maior, the new Master of Alcantara, being entred into the Moores countrie with 800. horse and 400. foot, was surprized and compassed in by the Moores in a streight passage, so as there hardly escaped an hundred of his whole troupe. This crosse shold haue admonished him of the bad office he had done his vncler, and the Infant D. Pedro: the which although they would couer with a colour of the kings seruice, yet was it a plotted treason: D. Fernand Aluarez of Toledo, Lord of Val de Corneja, had bin also in danger, if he had not speedily retired from Huelma, which hee sought to force, hauing failed to take it by scalado: for a great number of Moores marched to fight with him, and hee had not sufficient forces to resist them. Hauing retired with his men to laen, he entred by Guadix, scoured the country, and was sharply incoun-tered by the Moores, who notwithstanding were vanquished: D. Fernand Aluarez spoiling two leagues round about Guadix.

The truce betwixt Castile, Nauarre and Arragon being expired in the yeare 1435. E there came ambassadors to the court of Castile, from the Queenes of Arragon and Nauar, to beseech the king for a propagation of the truce, in the absence of their husbands, which the king granted them for some moneths: the which was the sooner obtained by their sending of D. Iohn de Luna, the Constables cousin, who gouerned the king his Master. These two kings, breethren, were gone into Italy, to pursue the realme of Naples, where matters succeeded as followeth: After that king D. Alphonso (being called back into Spaine, for matters which concerned him nere, namely, for the imprisonment of his brother D. Henry) had left Naples, Queen Ioane and her adopted sonne Lewis of Anjou, had some time of breathing, and means to recouer the city of Naples, and other places of the realme; there only remained Iohn Anthony of Vrsins, Prince of Tarentum, a partizan to D. Alphonso, who made head against Lewis duke of Anjou: the duke making war in Calabria, was surprized with a burning fever, whereof he died at Cosenza, in the yeare 1434 not leauing any children: and the same yeare dyed Queen Ioane also, leauing by her will (whether it were true or counterfeit) Rene of Anjou, duke of Lorraine and Bar, brother to Lewis deceased, heire of the realme of Naples, who was at that time a prisoner in the hands

Death of Don Henry of Villena.

Defeat of the Moors by the Christians.

4
Arragon.

Death of Ioane Queen of Naples, and her will.

A hands of Philip Duke of Bourgondie, by reason of the warre betwixt the French and the English: for whose libertie the Gouernors of the Realm, chosen after the Queens death, sent ambassadors into France: but on the other side those that were affected to the house of Arragon, as the Prince of Tarentum, Iohn Anthony of Marzan Duke of Sessa, Christopher Gaetan, Earle of Fondy, and Roger his brother, with other Noblemen and knights which held Capua, called backe King Alphonso, who a little before was come into Sicily, hauing left the Queene D. Maria his wife, Regent in Arragon, and had led his breethren with him. D. Iohn king of Nauarre, who had left the gouernement to D. Blanche his wife, Queene proprietarie of the Realme, D. Henry and D. Pedro, who being dispossessed of all they held in Castile, had retired themselves vnder the fauor of the kings their breethren, with them, and many Noblemen and Knights, as well Spaniards, as Sicilians, King Alphonso past into the Realme of Naples, and came and landed at Gayete, in which place were besides the Inhabitants, and other souldiers of the countie 300. Geneuois, vnder the command of Francis Spinola of Genoua, sent by Philippe Maria Angelo, Duke of Milan, vnder whose protection the common-weale of Genoua was at that time, and who held the partie of René Duke of Anjou. The beseeched seeing themselves prest, aduertised the Duke of their extremity, and what need they had of succors: whereupon he presently gaue order to prepare an armie at Genoua, of the which Blaise Araxeto was General, being accompanied by Elisa Spinola, Iames Iustinian, Galiot Lomelin, and other famous Captaines & expert at sea, who directed their course towards the Iland of Ponce, whereof King Alphonso, who was before Gayete, being aduertised, hauing nineteene great ships, and eleuen gallies, he left onely five to continue the sege, and resolved to go in person with the rest to encounter the enemy: but he must first pacifie a question which was growne betwixt the King of Nauar, for the generall conduct of the armie, with his brother D. Henry, either of them aspiring to haue it, mooued with zeale to ayde their brother.

Hauing set sayle, Don Pedro hauing charge of the gallies, the Kings and the Infants euery one apart, well appointed, came to encounter the Geneuois armie, the which did consist of twelue great ships, three gallies, one galeasse, and a foist. Being in sight, and within a league and a halfe one of another, the Geneuois seemed as if they would not fight: the kings army kept it selfe together till noone, struiuing to get the wind, that they might fight with more aduantage: In the meane time the gallies of Arragon discovered the enemies armie, which approached neere vnto them, finding that they had left three great ships behind, as it were for a rereward. Before they came to ioyne the Generall of the Geneuois armie, sent a trumpeter in a boate to let the king of Arragon vnderstand, that their intent was not to hurt him, but they had onely put to sea to draw out of Gayete, their souldiers, cittizens, and merchants of Genoua, with their goods and merchandize, and to transport them to Genoua. The trumpeter was detayned a good time, during their consultation, but the conclusion was, that they must charge them: for it was likely, that the Geneuois had sent this trumpeter, for that they fainted, and feared the Arragonois armie. The captaines and souldiers, with great demonstrations of courage, cryed out for battell, and presently discharged their artillerie, which the Geneuois did presently answer, so as grappling ship to ship, and galley to galley, the fight was furious and cruell, and continued long doubtfull, vntil that the three great ships left by the Geneuois in the rereward, hauing gotten a full wind, came with great violence vpon the ships of Arragon, and among others giuing the stemme to that in which King Alphonso was, they made it lye on the one side, and had so shaken and shattered it, as it tooke in an abundance of water, and put the king and all them that were in it in great danger, so as he was forced to yeeld to Iames Iustinian, Gouernor of the Iland of Scio, who took him into Spinola's ship.

The shippe wherein King Iohn did fight, hauing lost her maine-yard, yeelded, and was taken by Galiot Lomelin. Don Henry was prisoner to Cyprian de Marc. With these Princes there were taken D. Diego Gomes of Sandoual, Earle of Castro Xeris, and two of his sons, D. Iohn of Sotomajor, who had bene Master of Alcantara, Ruy Diaz of Mendoça the bald, Fernando Aualos Chamberlaine to D. Henry, and another Sonne of Don Ruy

D. Alphonso King of Arragon called back to Naples.

Army sent by Genoua to succor Gayete.

Prisoners taken in a battell at sea.

Ppp

Lopes

Lopes d'Aualos, who had beene constable of Castile, with many other Noblemen and Knights of Arragon, Nauarre, Cattelogne and Valencia, and about 600. souldiers and mariners slaine. The Infant D. Pedro, leaping with the helpe of a cable from one galley to another, escaped: there were 13. ships taken, and most of the gallies were burnt, or sunke, after they had spoiled them. To conclude, the Geneuois victorie was great & memorable, as well in regard of the prisoners, as of the rich spoyle which they shewed all curtesie and humanity, for after the end of the fight, they did set at liberty about 400. souldiers, that were prisoners, besides mariners, retayning only the chiefe men: wherein they did wisely, and like souldiers, for a multitude of prisoners of meane qualitie, are but an incumber: and it is an vnprofitable charge, and doth many times make the vanquished take courage to rebell, and to become Masters of them that hold them. Among the multitude that were set at liberty, there were many Knights of great worth escaped vnknowne. That which gaue the aduantage to the Geneuois army, was the 3. ships left in the rereward, the abundance of scalding lime, and wild-fire which they cast, and finally, that they were better sea-men then the Arragonois.

By unanimity of king of Milan Alphonso.

The victorious army approaching neere to the Iland of Ischia, King Don Alphonso being a prisoner was prest to make it yeeld vnto the Geneuois, wherunto although he were a captiue, he would not yeeld. By this defeate the seege was raysed at Gayete, and the prisoners carried to Sauona, from whence they were afterwards, by the Duke of Milans commandement, distributed into diuers prisons: King Don Alphonso to Pauia, with Don Henry and others: King Iohn, the Earle of Castro, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoza were led to Milan.

Monny of the duke of Milan

These lamentable newes did wonderfully trouble the Queens of Arragon and Nauar, and all the people of these two Kingdomes, especially Donna Leonora the widow-queen of Arragon, who liued in her Monasterie of Saint Iohn de las Duegnas, without the walles of Medina del campo, very simply and modestly, who conceiued so great a griefe as shee dyed soone after: This did much afflicte the King and Queene of Portugall, and all the Noblemen of that Realme. The imprisonment of these Princes and Noblemen was short, for Don Philip Maria being courteous, and visiting his prisoners often, hee was so perswaded by king Alphonso, that both he and his Estates should reape more profit in maintaining the partie of Arragon, then that of France, as vanquished with his reasons, hee not onely let them all go free without ransome, but gaue them many rich presents, after that he had entertayned them royally many dayes, suffering them to go and come with all libertie, where they pleased. Hee caused Don Iohn, King of Nauarre, and Don Henry his brother, to bee conducted to Porto Venere with fixe hundred horse for their guard, where they were receiued by Don Pedro their brother, and moreover he would that the Neapolitane Knights which were then at Milan, and the ambassadors of townes should take an oath of fealtie to King Alphonso, acknowledging him for their king, making so great a change of all things, as of an enemy he became a partisan and friend to the Arragonois: by reason whereof the Geneuois being incensed, rebelled against the Duke.

If the newes of the defeat and taking of these Princes, caused great heauineffe in Arragon and Nauarre, the ioy was so much the greater, when as they vnderstood of their deliuerie, the which was carried into Castile, where as the king of Nauarre was much desired of many, to whom the greatnesse of the Constable D. Aluaro de Luna, was offensive and hurtfull, Don Fredericke Admirall of Castile, who was one of them, sent a messenger to Queene Blanche, aduertising her that her husbands absence was very prejudiciall to himselfe and all his friends, for that his aduersaries grew great according to their owne desires, and therefore she should do well to hasten his returne as soone as might be: The like aduertisements were giuen her by many other knights of Castile, wherefore she sent three knights of her household into Italy, to the king her husband: which were Iohn Henriquez of Lacarra, Sancho Ramirez of Aualos her caruer, and the Seigneure of Vertiz, to hasten his returne.

D. Iohn king of Castile at the request of his sister Queen Mary of Arragon, continued the truce fixe moneths longer, vpon the newes of the defeat of the two kings brethren. Being

5
Castile.

A Being at Segobia, there was a Germain knight called Robert presented himselfe vnto him, who would make triall of armes, with D. Iohn Pimentel Earle of Majorca, by whom he was vanquished. The like prooffe being made by other twenty Germaine knights, which came in the company of Robert, had in a manner the like issue, to the dishonour of strangers, and great commendation of the Spanish nation: D. Fernand of Gnevara, a knight of great valour, being at Vienna, the chiefe towne of Austria, he fought within a list on foot, with a Germaine knight called Vourapach, in the presence of Duke Albert sonne-in-law to the Emperour Sigismond, who casting his staffe, caused the combat to cease, and put them out of the lists, to the great honour of the Spanish knight. Don Iohn of Pimentel Earle of Majorca, desirous to trie his valour with strange Knights out of Castile, as he practised to play with a battell-axe with a seruant of his called Lope de la Torre, hee was strucke by him inconsideratly on the face, so as he dyed soone after; a due reward for this quarrelling exercise, which was then in so great estimation, to go seeking honor, (without cause or quarrell) in the force and dexterity of the body, more then in the gifts of the mind, humanity and iustice.

Whilest that King Iohn was busie at Aleala of Henares to celebrate the funerals of his deceased aunt Queene Leonora, there was hot warre made vpon the frontier of Granado, where as D. Alphonso James Fajardo, receiued the townes of Velez the white, and Velez the red, which yeelded voluntarily to the king of Castile, the Inhabitants Moores promising to pay him the same tribute which they payed to king Mahomet, wherewith the King was satisfied: but he would not heare the ambassadours of Baça and Guadix, who came to beseech him to giue them another king a Moore, then Mahomet, for that he did intreat them ill: but k. Iohn knowing that this was but a deuice to free themselves from the spoile which he intended against them, he sent them away, and commanded his captaines to forrage and spoile their countrie, the which was executed by D. Fernand Aluarez of Toledo. The Moores of Galea and Castilegia yeelded to D. Roderigo Manriques, vpon the same conditions like vnto them of Velez. It fell out vnfortunatly for D. Henry of Guzman, the seege which he pretended to lay to Gibraltar: for being come by sea with some barks before the towne, whether his sonne Iohn of Guzman should come by land with the rest of his forces to beseege it, he had no patience to attend, but landed, & began to skirmish on the shoare, neere vnto the walles, with the Moores which sallied out against him, but the sea flowing, it forced him to retire to his barke, leauing many of his Knights on land, in prey to the enemy, who began to cry out and to complaine, that he had left them there to the slaughter, with such vehement words, as moued to pittie, hee caused his barke to approach to land to receiue them: but it was so ouer-laden as it sunke, and there the Earle Don Henry, with about forty Knights were drowned, whose losse was great. The bodies being cast vpon the shoare, were drawne to land by the Moores, and the Earles was put into a coffer, and set vpon an high tower, to be a terrour to the Christians, where it continued some yeares. By this pittifull successe, the sonne retired from Gibraltar, and out of all Andalusia with teares and mourning: the bones of this Earle are at this present in a most auncient Tower made of Bricke, in the highest part of the castell of Gibraltar, which the common people beleuee was built and erected by Hercules.

D. Henry of Guzman drowned neere Gibraltar.

Whilest that these things past in Spaine, in the yeare 1436. the Kings of Arragon and Nauarre were deeply engaged in the warre of Naples, whither the Duchesse Lea Bell of Lorraine, wife to René of Anjou a prisoner was come, and with the helpe of Pope Eugenius defended her husbands right courageously. The two brethren kings being aduertised of the affaires of Spaine, by their friends and seruants, they resolved to send a ioynt ambassage to the king of Castile, to treat a peace with him vpon some good conditions. The ambassadors found the Court at Toledo, where hauing deliuered their charge vnto the king, it pleased God that after many conferences and debates, a peace was concluded vpon a promise of marriage betwixt D. Blanche Infanta of Nauarre, and Don Henry of Castile, Prince of the Asturia's, with these conditions:

That the solemnization of this marriage should bee accomplished within the limite of a certaine time, betwixt Henry heire of the Realmes of Castile, and Donna Blanche, eldest

Conditions of
peace betwixt
Castile, Nauarre
and Arragon.

eldest daughter to D. Iohn king of Nauarre, to whom should be assigned the Marquisat A of Villena, the townes of Medina del campo, Olmedo, Coca, Roa, and Aranda: the reuenues of which lands, D. Iohn King of Nauarre should receiue the foure next following yeares. That if there were no children borne of this marriage, the king of Nauarre should haue ten thousand florins of gold of yearly rent assigned vpon the reuenues of Castile. That to D. Blanche, Queene of Nauarre, and to her sonne D. Charles, should in like manner be given an assignation of ten thousand florins of gold yearly, during their liues. That all knights should be pardoned, which during the warres, and fore-past quarrels, had followed either partie, and they restored to their goods and dignities, except on the part of Castile, D. Iohn of Soto-major, who had beene Master of Alcantara, and the B Earle of Castro Xeris: and on the behalfe of Nauar, D. Godfrey of Nauar, Earle of Cortes: Item, that to the Infant D. Henry brother to the kings of Arragon and Nauar, should be assigned 5000. florins of gold of yearly hereditarie rent: and to the Infanta D. Catherine his wife should be given 50000. florins of gold in ready mony for her dowrie. These articles beeing accorded, a peace was proclaimed in the Realmes of Castile, Arragon, and Nauar, and D. Pedro of Acugna, son to Lopes Basknes of Acugna, Lord of Buendia, was sent to Azagna, with sufficient authority, to make the first promise in the name of Prince Henry, and it was concluded the sollempne betrothing should be at Alfaro, whether came at the time assigned, the Prince D. Henry accompanied by D. Aluaro de Luna, constable of Castile, and many other Noblemen, Knights, and Prelates, who arriuing C two dayes before the Infanta: being aduertised that she was at Corella, he went to meete her with all his traine. The Queen of Nauarre, mother to the Infanta, Prince Charles her brother, the Bishop of Pampelone, with many other Prelates, Peter of Peralta, Lord Steuard of the kings house, Leon of Garro, and other knights, many Ladies and Gentlewomen of Nauarre attended her, all in equipage worthy of such a solemnitie, the which was celebrated in Alfaro, in the yeare 1437. D. Pedro of Castile, Bishop of Osma stipulating and receiuing the promises, either of them being but 12. yeares old. The Prince D. Henry gaue many goodly and rich Jewels to the Infanta, and vied the like bountie to the Ladies and Knights of her traine. Then hauing spent foure dayes at Alfaro in great feasting and joy, the parties separated themselves, euery one retiring into his country. By this peace D there was also restored vnto the king of Nauar, the town & castle of la Garde, and the castles of Asaturuguen and Burandon: and towards Guipuscoa, there were yeelded the castles and places of Gorriti, Cobono, Toro, Araciel, and Saragana, which the Guipulcoans had taken during the wars. Moreouer, the towne of Briones was yeelded to the king of Nauar, touching the Seignourie and the reuenue, but the Soueraignty remayned to the king of Castile. This peace was promised and sworne, vpon a penalty of 300000. florins of gold, payable by him that should breake it: and it was confirmed by the chiefe officers of either realme, both clergy and secular, and by the deputies of the chiefe townes. For Nauar, there signed D. Martin of Peralta bishop of Pampelona, the archb. of Tyre, the Queens confessor, the Prior of S. Iohn, & the Deane of Tudela, clergy-men: D. Lewis E of Beaumont, Tristan Lord of Luce, Peter of Peralta, Lord Steuard, Philip Marshall of Nauar, & Vicont of Ro, with other knights: moreouer, the deputies of the cities of Pampelona, Estella, and Tudela, and of the townes of Sanguessie, Olite, Arcos, Biane, S. Vincent and others. For Castile, besides the great officers of court, there did sweare all the Noblemen of the frontier of Guipuscoa, Rioja, and others, yea they of the families of Lazcano, Berastequi and Amezqueta: and these accords were written by Bartholomew of Renes, Secretarie to D. Iohn King of Nauar, and of Queen Blanche his wife, and by Alphonso Peres of Biuera, high Treasurer and Secretary to the king of Castile.

Imprisonment
of D. Pedro
Martique.

This ioy was crost according to the custome of humane things, with great grieve in the court of Castile, the king hauing caused D. Pedro Martique Gouernour of Leon to be committed to prison, where at euery man did shew himselfe discontented, so as the king caused 2000. lances to come for his gard, which remayned continually about the court. He sent the prisoner to the castle of Fuente Duegna, commanding that hee should haue the liberty of the prison, & that somtimes they should suffer him to go on hunting, which liberty was procured by the Admirall of Castile, who was discontented for his detention. This

A This yeare which was 1438. there were brought vnto the King stones, which they said, were fallen from heauen in great abundance, at Madernelo, a house belonging to the Constable, very light: the which although they were reasonably big, yet were they so light as they did not hurt any one they fell vpon, a strange thing, and which was held prodigious. The Articles of the peace being brought into Italy, were allowed and confirmed by King Don Alphonso, in the presence of Doctor Ferdinand Lopes of Burgos, one of the Kings Councill.

1438.
Stones fallen from heauen
very light.

The warre of Granado was managed with variable successe: many Knights among the Moores disliking the gouernment of King Mahumet, reuolted, taking the party of Castile, of the which one Aben Amar was Captaine, who soone after went with his men to the King of Tunes, with leaue from the King of Castile, hauing receiued both pay and presents from him: and moreouer 6000. pounds sterling for the charge of their voyage. Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoça Gouernor of the Fronter, Lord of Hyra and Buytrago, who was afterwards Marquis of Sentillana, tooke the towne of Huelma from the Moores, and had the castle afterwards by composition, causing the garrison of Moores to be conducted in safety to Cambil and Halabar. But Roderigo of Perca, Gouernor of Caçorla, being entred rashly into the Moores countrie, was surprized by a great number of horse and foote, lead by Aben Sarraz, a wife and valiant man, among all them of his nation, by whom he was cut in peeces, scarce twenty of his men escaping, being in all foure hundred horse, and a thousand foote: yet this victory was not without losse of blood to the Moores, for their Captaine Aben Sarraz was slaine, and many Knights of note.

Granado.

The sacred warre of Affrick, which was led by D. Ferdinand Maister of Auis, and Don Henry Maister of the Order of Christ, Infants of Portugal, had answerable successe, who hauing obtained, by great importunity from the King their brother, leaue to passe the sea, had besieged the towne of Tanger, hauing brought but 6000. fighting men out of Portugal. The siege hauing continued thirty seauen dayes, being well assailed and well defended, there came an infinite multitude of Moores, both horse and foote, to succour the besieged, being lead by the Kings of Fez, Maroc, Velez, and other Princes in person. Wherefore the Portugals fought to retire themselves, but beeing in a manner inuested D by this great armie, they were forced to fortifie themselves in their trenches, and changing their condition of besiegers, they found themselves besieged, so as hauing no meanes to escape, they must capitulate with the Moores for their liues and liberties, promising to yeeld vp vnto them the towne of Ceuta, and all the captiue Moores that were in Portugal. Vpon this accord D. Henry and his men were sent back, and came naked and stript to Ceuta, the Infant D. Ferdinand remaining for hostage in the hands of the King of Fez, vntill the accord were performed: But D. Henry being returned with this disarmed armie into Portugal, when as King Edward had assembled the Estates of the realme at Eбора, being much grieved at this vnhappy successe, to take some course for the deliuey of D. Ferdinand, they would neuer yeeld that the towne of Ceuta should be deliuered E vnto the Moores: but they consented to all other meanes to free D. Ferdinand: the difficulties and delays were such, together with the death of King Edward which happened, as for want of execution of that which had beene promised vnto the Moores, the Infant D. Ferdinand past the rest of his dayes in prison in the hands of Infidels, with great constancie, and a rare example of patience and religion, comforting the other captiue Christians, not onely for that they saw a Prince participate of their miseries, but he did also encourage them by godly exhortations to continue constant in the faith of our Sauour. King Edward being very penfui for this dishonorable losse, but especially for the captiuitie of his brother, going out of Eбора, where as the plague was violent, hee retired to Auis: and to ease the court, and to spare charges, hee commanded the Infants his brethren to retire to their houses. Hee came in person to Pont du Soleil, where hee caused a strong wall to be made, to assure that place from theues, then going to the Monasterie of Tomar, hee felt himselfe toucht with a sharpe and pestilent Ague, whereof hee died in September this yeare 1438. beeing fortie seauen yeares old, and hauing reigned onely fise: his body was interred in the royall Monasterie of the Battaille.

Castilians defeated by the Moores.

7
Portugal.

The Portugals
forced to accept of dishonorable conditions.

D. Ferdinand
in captivity in Barbarie.

Death of King
Edward.

By his will he left all his mooueables to the Queene Don Leonora, and made her Gouver- A nesse of their children, and Regent of the Realme.

Castille.
D. Pedro of Aragon slays
out of prison.

D. Pedro of Aragon slays
at Naples.

About that time Don Pedro Manrique a prisoner in Castile at Fuente Duegnas, slipping downe with cordes from the castle wall, he fled to Enzinas, a fort belonging to his sonne in lawe D. Aluaro of Estuniga sonne to D. Pedro Earle of Ledesma, whether presently came the Admirall Don Frederic, his brother, Don Henry and his friends, with great company. The King at one instant receiued this newes, and that of the death of the Infant Don Pedro of Arragon, who had beene slaine with a great shot, assaying the cittie of Naples, whereat he was equally grieued, but with diuerse passions: the Infants body was buried in the castle de l'Ouo. This fort de l'Ouo, and the new castle at Naples, B had alwaies held good for the Arragonois. King René was come a little before to Naples, with twelue galleys of Genoua, and was there receiued with royall pompe and state: after which hauing sent back his galleys, hee filled the city and all places thereabouts with his soldiars, hauing gathered together a great armie, he began to assaile the neighbour places, but with small effect. There came a Herald in his name to King Don Alphonso being at Castellucci in Abruzzo, with a gantlet dipt in bloud, challenging him to a single combat: Don Alphonso receiued the gantlet, and demanded of the Herald, if King René meant they should incounter in single fight, one against another, or with all their forces: the Herald answered, that the King his Maister would present himselfe C with his armie. Wherevpon King Don Alphonso replied, that seeing hee was the challenger, it was in him to make choise of the place, and day of battaile; and therefore he did choose the fields which are betwixt Nola and la Cerra, whether hee would come within eight dayes, with his whole armie, to fight as his aduersary would. At the day assigned, Don Alphonso presented himselfe vpon the place, and attended René, who appeared not, for that he had beene dissuaded by his friends and seruants, who came to lodge with his armie at that place, from whence Don Alphonso was parted, and tooke Castelluccio: Alphonso on the other side tooke Arpaio in the valley of Gardano, and so taking places, and ruining the country, hee marcht to Naples, hauing about 15000.
men in his armie, with which forces and ten galleys he held the towne besieged, where happened the death of the Infant Don Pedro, as wee haue said. But soone after, René D comming with the like, or greater forces, hee not onely preferred the city, but he forced the garisons of the new castle, and of the fort de l'Ouo, to yeeld for want of victuals.
About which time the King of Nauarre returned into Spaine, to ouer-throw those good accords which had beene made betwixt him and the King of Castile, and to trouble all Spaine, being of an inconstant and rurbulent disposition.

Returne of D.
John King of Nauarre into Spaine.

8
Castile.

D. Aluaro de
Luna the Constable, insolent, conetous and treacherous.

The enemies of Don Aluaro de Luna the Constable, relying much vpon the King of Nauarre, and his forces, had banded themselves openly against him: the chiefe whereof were the Admirall Don Frederic, Don Pedro Manriques Gouvernor of Leon, Don John Ramir of Ariellan, Lord of Los Cameros, Don Pedro of Quingones Merin Maior of the Asturia's, Don Diego of Estuniga sonne to the Earle of Ledesma. Don Roderigo of E Castagneda Lord of Fuente Duegna, and Don Pedro Mendoga, Lord of Almacan, who drew many others vnto their league, namely the Earle of Ledesma, who had his lands fronting vpon Eccia. The King called soldiars from all parts to suppress this tumult (among the rest hee was speedily serued by the Nobility of Andalusia) to whom the confederates did write very durifull and respectiue letters, intreating him to cause the Constable to dislodge from Court, before that hee grew so powerful, as hee might be preiudiciall both to him and his realme. There was in truth some reason to sup-presse the boldnesse and greatnesse of this man, who was insolent, conetous, and not very faithfull to his Prince, the which was well knowne to the King, and to many of his Councill: but hee had them all so tyed vnto him, as nor any one could attempt against F him, nor consent willingly to that which should displease him: wherefore an answer was made vnto the letter, quite contrary to that which the Noblemen of the league demanded, with whom there newly inoynd Don Lewis de la Cerde Earle of Medina Celi, and Don Pedro of Castile Bishop of Osma, who had seized vpon many places, as Don Pedro of Quingones had done of the City of Leon, so as the whole realme was full of

A of seditions and tumults, all in generall imputing the fault vnto the constable, partly with reason, and partly without. The King being at Roa, vfed all diligence to assemble forces, to be the stronger, writing letters to Toledo and other great townes, admonishing them of their duties, and to be faithfull vnto him.

In the meane time the Marshall D. Inigo Ortiz of Estuniga, brother to the Earle of Ledesma, entred into Vailledolit, with five hundred men at armes, and seized on the towne in the name of the confederate Lords. On the other side the King was aduertised that the King of Nauarre, and D. Henry his brother, were entred into Castile with five hundred men at armes, and not knowing vpon what pretext, considering the accord lately concluded betwixt them, he sent vnto them, intreating them to ioyne with him and to come to court: the King of Nauarre consented, and came to the king to Cuellar, with sixe horse onely, whereat the whole court did much reioyce. They came at the instance of the confederate Lords, and also incited with a desire to recouer that which they had lost in Castile, by meanes of the present troubles, in whose company was the Earle of Castro. The King of Nauarre beeing seperated from the rest, and come vnto the king, receiued great honour and good vsage: but the Infant D. Henry aduanced not, but staid with the troups, the which hee led to Pegnasel, where they opened him the gates, the King hauing so commanded, and soone after hee had conference with the king of Nauarre his brother at Minquela, neere to Cuellar, there beeing good corre-spondency betwixt them, although they made no shew of it: for the King of Nauarre continued with the King of Castile, and hee retired to Vailledolit, to the Lords of the League: there was much trouble, and many enterviewes of Noblemen of either part, with great leauies of souldiars to the oppression of the people, and yet there was no meanes to make an accord; the confederats insisting still that the constable should be banished from court, the which was a hard matter to effect. The Admirall and the Infant D. Henry sent to challenge the constable, and he accepted the combat, but yet they did not fight. The King did sollicit D. Henry, promising him that if he would bee of his party he would make him maister of Saint Iames, and would giue him other things, for the which the Infant gaue him thanks, letting him vnderstand, that whatsoeuer he did, was for his seruice.

D In these treaties of pacification the greatest difficulty was in the restitution of lands forfeited, the which had beene distributed to many: yea to some of the confederats, who would not restore them, at the least without recompence. Being in these garboiles and out of hope of any accord, they had newes, that D. Roderigo of Villandrado, first Earle of Ribadeo, who had some yeeres before serued Charles the seuenth, the French King, with great reputation and honour, was come into Castile, bringing with him three thousand souldiars to serue and succor King John his naturall Lord: wherefore all treaties of accord ceasing, the Kings of Castile and Nauarre went as farre as Pegnasel to meet him with some troups, to assure him from the surprises of the confederats, who sent the Earle of Ledesma with fiftene hundred horse, to attend him at a passage. This supply, and other occasions, together with the diligence of certaine religious men, who sought to reconcile these Noblemen, made the parties more tractable, so as in October 1439. a peace was concluded, vpon these conditions. That the constable D.
Aluaro de Luna should absent himselfe from court for sixe monethes, and that the king of Castile should recompence the king of Nauarre and D. Henry his brother, for the lands he had taken from them: and the processe and proceedings made against them that were in armes disannulled: that the townes and forts held by the confederats should bee restored. These things being concluded at Castro Nugno, the constable to fulfill the Article which concerned him, parted from court, leaving most of the kings counsell which fauored him, discontented. The Noblemen dimitt their souldiars, and the king parted from Castro Nugno to goe vnto Toro. In the meane time the Infanta D. Catherina, wife to D. Henry, died in child-bed.

Lands of confiscation giuen
away vnder
the peace.

An. 1439.

F There was no peace firmly settled by this accord, for the king being possit by a counsell made by the constable, was held in distrust, and the courtiers in continuall ialousie. He caused some of them, which had followed the confederate Lords, to be imprisoned at Salamanca,

lamanca, and to take Segobia from Ruy Diaz of Mendoza, who held it, he gave it to the Prince of the Asturia's his sonne. The King of Nauarre and his brother D. Henry seeing these proceedings, they went from Madrigal, towards the court, but the King sent to forbid them to come there: and to the end they should not finde him at Salamanca, he lodged and went to Bonilla de la Serra, from whence hee sent to demand a fauour-conduit of the Noblemen for Don Guttiere Gomes of Toledo Archbishop of Seuille, whom hee ment to send to treat with them, the which beeing willingly granted, the Archbishop came to Madrigal, with some of the Kings council, but they returned without any conclusion: wherefore the King of Nauarre and the Infant his brother led some troupes towards Auila, where by the meanes of Aluaro of Bracamont, and Fernando of Aualos, who had taken vpon them to defend it, they became maisters, from thence the King of Nauarre did write a letter vnto the King of Castile full of good counsel, accusing the constable of auarice, cruelty, tyranie, insolvency, and contempt of the Princes and Noblemen, yea of the King himselfe, having presumed to kill a squier in Arcualo; and a groom, to tie his fury, hauing cast himselfe at the Kings feet, as in a most assured Sanctuary, he had beaten him almost in his bosome, stretching his armes ouer the Kings shoulders, without any respect to his dignity, whom euery man (to the great dishonor of his royal person) said he had enchanted: and to conclude, if he did not chafe him away and punish him, he could not be honored nor serued by the Princes, and Noblemen of Castile, who could not endure such indignities from an vpstart, whose beginning was scarce knowne. The King knew well that many things contained in these letters were true, yet being governed by such as fauored the constable, he made no answer: wherevpon the confederats sent the Earles of Haro and Benauent vnto him, who after many Negotiations, concluded with the Kings council, that they should make an assembly of the Estates at Vailledolit, whereas the deputies of the townes and Prouinces of Castile and Leon should meet, and determine of that which should be held expedient for the quiet of the realme, so as the Archbishop of Seuille, and his Nephew the Earle of Alba did remaine at their houses. Before the execution of that which had bene concluded, the Infant D. Henry entred Toledo with three hundred and fifty knights, through the fauor of D. Pedro Lopes of Ayala the Gouvernor, and made himselfe maister thereof, hauing good correspondency with the King of Nauarre his brother, whose faction was very strong at that time in Castile, his friends and confederats holding the chiefe townes of the realme: for besides that he had vnder his command the towne of Auila, and his brother that of Toledo, the Earle of Ledesma held Burgos and the castle: Pedro of Quignones was maister of Leon: Ruy Diaz of Mendoza commanded Segobia, with the fort: D. Henry Henriques the Admirals brother had Zamora, and the castle: Salamanca was in the hands of John Gomes of Anaya: Guadalajara of D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Lord of Hita: Plaifance of the Earle of Ledesma: Vailledolit of the Earle Pedro Nugnes: other places were held by other Knights of that party, the which did much trouble the King, and his constable. To make the assembly of Vailledolit more easie, the Earles of Haro and Benauent returned to Bonille, where it was againe concluded that the Kings and the Noblemen should retire their troupes; and there was a general passport giuen to al them that should come to Vailledolit, with assurance of their goods; yea to the constable, who remained in his house at Escalano, where by an ill presage, the greatest part of the castle had some few daies before bene burnt with lightning; notwithstanding the King would haue the passport serue also for the constables person. In this assembly it was decreed that the cities and townes held by the confederats, should bee left free at the King of Castiles dispose, but there was not any thing effected, and the more to trouble the realme, D. Henry Prince of the Asturia's, perswaded by his spouse, and the confederat noblemen, began to ioyne with the King of Nauarre, his future father in law, retreating himselfe vnto the Admiral D. Frederics lodging, wherewith the court was much troubled; and the King sent the Earle of Castro, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoza to the King of Nauarre, to vnderstand the cause of this alteration; who answered that he knew it not: and withal went with them to the Admirals lodging, to vnderstand the reason. The Prince answered, that he had required himselfe therether, by reason of Doctor Perjuetez, Alphonso Perez of Biuro and Nicholas

J. Soleymer of the Constable of Castile made knowne vnto the King.

A Nicholas Fernandes of Villanar, of the Kings council, being vnworthy of that ranke, and beseeching the King that he would chafe them away, else he would retire himselfe. The King promised to dismisse them, wherevpon the Prince was pacified, and came to the Kings palace, after midnight, the King of Nauarre accompanying him. The Prince D. Henry was governed by a yong gentleman called D. John de Pacheco, sonne to Alphonso Telles Giron, Lord of Beaumont, who was preferred to his seruice by the constable, and was afterwards made Marquis of Villena, and maister of the Order of Saint James. The King at the Estates of Vailledolit, setled some order for Iustice, which was but badly executed in Castile, and some thing to pacifie the Princes and Noblemen that were mutined, and to diuert their armes, hee thought it now time to celebrate the marriage of D. Henry and the Infanta of Nauarre, being three yeeres since they were made sure, and either of them being fiftene yeeres old: the bond of consanguinity, which might hinder it, was dissolved by Pope Eugenius the fourth. The Infanta being sent for, she entred into Castile, in the yeere 1440. beeing accompanied by Queene Blanch her mother, the Prince of Viana her brother, and many noblemen, prelates and knights of Nauarre. Shee was receiued in the towne of Logroño, by D. Alphonso of Carthagena, Bishop of Burgos. D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Lord of Hita, and by D. Pedro of Velasco, Earle of Haro. From thence the Prince D. Charles returned into Nauarre with his Gouvernor. D. John of Beaumont, who in the Princes name gouerned the realme, the Queene mother being absent.

D. John de Pacheco gouerns Prince Henry.

An. 1440.

C The Princeesse with all her traine being come to Vilhorado, a house belonging to the Earle of Haro, she was entertained with sumptuous feasts, great sports and rare inuentions; and much more at Birbiefca, by the Earle himselfe. D. Pedro of Acugna did the like at Duegnas, whether the Prince D. Henry came to meet his spouse, whereas he presented her with many rich jewels, and shew him: who hauing bene some foure and twenty howers with the Ladies, he returned to Vailledolit, whether they went. There went forth to meet them, the Kings, and al the principall Noblemen of the court, who made a stately entry into the towne, and the Queene and Princeesse went to the King of Nauarres lodging, whose brother D. Henry came from Toledo to assist at the marriage, the which was celebrated with a royall pompe, D. Pedro of Ceruantes Bishop of Auila, performing the ceremony. But the vnfortunate hap of this Princeesse was such, as the Prince D. Henry proued vnable to consummate the marriage, the which she did vertuously conceale for many yeeres. To honor the marriage, the noblemen ran at tilt with sharpe pointed lances, but the sport was so dangerous, as the King was forced to forbid it, for Pedro Porto Carrero a Knight of Torroy, and John of Salezar lost their liues, and others were fore hurt in these incounters. This royall feast (which had continued many daies) being ended, the Princes and Noblemen of the court being disperced, the Prince D. Henry was conducted to Segobia by D. John de Pacheco his great mignon, who through a courtesars Ingratitude, fortified the King of Nauarres party, and that of the Noblemen confederated to ruine the constable, by whom hee had bene aduanced working so, as the Prince his maister ioynd with them, who reuiuing their old quarrels, sent to beseech the King, that without any more delay he would cause the constables processe to be made, degrading him of the honour and dignity which he held, and of the gouernment of the realme. The King was much troubled to see new seditions which he thought had bene suppressed, and wonderfully incensed against his sonne, would not make any direct answer to this demand: besides he had still some of his counsell which defended the constables cause: wherefore in the yeere 1441. the troubles began more violent then before. Mary Queene of Castile sister to the King of Nauarre tooke then his part, which she had not done before.

40 Cardinal of Saint Peter.

Marriage of the Prince of Castile and the Infanta of Nauarre.

F The Infant D. Henry, brother to the King of Nauarre, being after the marriage returned to Toledo, hee tortesied himselfe there, and receiued Pero Lopes of Ayala, contrary to the Kings commandment: where contynuing in his accustomed rebellions, he staid the Ambassadors which the King had sent vnto him, to perswade him to take a better course, yea the King being in person to Saint Lazaro, without the walles of the city, vpon the way to Madrid, onely with thirty horses of his household and traine, the Infant

Preiudges of the Earles of Ribadeo.

Infant fallied forth, and presented himselfe in battaile, vsing threats and proud speeches, A so as the King was forced to returne speedely. There was in his company D. Roderigo of Villandrado Earle of Ribadeo, who in this voiage obtained a goodly preiudge for him and his family, which was, that the roabe which the Kings of Castile put on the first day of the new yeere, should belong to him, and that hee should that day eate at the Kings table, leauing this preiudge to his posterity in the King of Castiles court. As soone as the King came to Torijos from Saint Lazaro, he beganne to proceed against the Infant D. Henry, for the detention of his Ambassadors, and so he retired to Auila. The constable and his brother D. Iohn of Crezuela Archbishop of Toledo (against whom all this warre was intended) sent to beseech the King to send some of his counsell vnto them, to the end their might be some order taken for so many inconueniences, the which being done, they concluded that the King should send vnto the confederate Lords, to ad-uise them to obserue the accord made at Bonille de la Serra, and the more to ease the country, they should dismisse their souldiers.

That to determine all quarrels betwixt them and the constable, they should choose Iudges, who should examine where the fault was, and should appoint punishment for them that were found culpable: and that if they thought it fit, there should be a generall assembly of the Estates called to that end. The Kings offred all these things to the confederats, who were for the most part in Arcualo: but they answered, that there was no meanes of pacification, if the constable who was newly come to Auila, did not dis- C lodge from court. The King hearing this answere, sought to retire his sonne D. Henry, who being counselled by the King of Nauarre, and the Queenes of Castile and Na-uarre, went to Auila, where he protested to the King his father, that he desired nothing more, then to mediate a good peace: where after some small stay, he returned to Segbia, promising that from thence he would write vnto the Queenes, touching their meeting at Santa Maria de Nieua, there to treat with them of the meanes of an accord.

*D. Diego of Valera giues
good aduice
vnto the King.*

In the meane time the King receiued letters from Diego de Valera, a wise Knight and of great experience, who had seene and frequented the courts of forraigne Princes, seeking (according to the custome of Noblemen of that age) honour by armes, at Tournayes and combats, beginning for pleasure, and ending many times with death, or some o- D ther misfortune; yet he had alwaies beene fortunate, and had wonne much honour and reputation, both in Spaine and else where. These letters contained many graue admonitions, and profitable counsell, both for the King and his Estate. Being read in open counsell, D. Guttiere Gomes of Toledo Archbishop of Toledo, without any great consideration, stept forward to answere for all the rest. Bid D. Diego said he, send vs men and money, for wee haue not any need of counsell. The King to gratesie the Prince his sonne, gaue vnto him the towne of Guadalajara, the which by this meanes he thought to wrest out of the hands of D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Lord of Hita and Buytrago: but they made resistance in the taking of possession. This hapened at such time as he came to visit the King at Auila, or a little before. The Queenes and the Prince, according E vnto that which had beene promised to the King his father, met together at Santa Maria de Nieua, where D. Iohn de Pacheco was also present: they conferred long together about the pacification of the troubles, without any great conclusion.

From thence there was sent vnto Auila, Alphonso Telles Giron Lord of Beaumont, father to Iohn Pacheco, and Doctor Valdenebro, a prior, that to make matters more easie, he should approach to Arcualo, where vnto the King would not yeeld, wherein hee was ill counselled by some, who feared they should loose their credit and authority, by the accords which might be made there.

Matters beeing broken off the confederats sent the Admirall Don Frederike, the Earle of Benaunt, Don Pedro of Quignones and Roderigo Manriques, with F good numbers of men, beyonde the mountaines, into the Countrie of Toledo, who ranne as farre as Escalona, and presented battaile vnto the constable, and to the Archbishop his brother, who came from Illesca to ioine with him, when as their enemies were retired: these Lords of the league returned to Toledo without any blowes, whether came some men of authoritie from the King, to stay them from fighting. At that time the Infant

A fant Don Henry, at the Earle of Benaunts, and the Admirals request, deliuered the Ambassadors: but he did not forbear to spoile the Constables and the Archbishops countries, putting all to fire and sword. The Archbishop abandoned Illesca in the night, going towards Madrid, whereof the Infant Don Henry beeing aduertised, he followed him with all speed, and hauing onely ouer-taken and spoiled his baggage, hee returned and seized vpon Illesca: The Archbishop saued himselfe in Madrid, where hee was receiued by the Kings commandement: the Admiral and the Earle of Benaunt after these light exploits, returned to Arcualo. About that time Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, one of the Lords of the league, hauing surprized the towne of Alcala de Henares; Iohn de Ca- rillo Gouvernor of Casoria, a Cap taine of the Archbishop of Toledos and the Constables faction, approached neere vnto the place with sixe hundred horse, and one thousand two hundred foote, which he laid in ambush in certaine valleys, and sent some to runne
in view of the towne, to draw Don Inigo forth, who failed not, yet not with such order and strength as he ought, wherefore he hemd him in, in such sort, as hauing lost most of his men, himselfe being soare hurt, hee could hardly recouer Alcala. To recompence this losse, the Infant Don Henries men, did cut some of the Constables troupes in pec-ces, in Grifmonda, where notwithstanding he lost Laurence d'Aualos his Chamberlaine, nephew to the Constable Don Ruy Lopes d'Aualos.

The Infant hearing this, went presently to field, marching towards Toledo with sixe hundred horse, ouer-running the country of Escalona, thinking that the Constable would fight with him, but hee stirred not, finding himselfe too weake: wherevpon hee sent to haue the Archbishop his brother to come, and beeing ioyned together, they went to charge the Infant at Torrijo, who then kept himselfe within his fort, and whilest
that they spoiled the Country, euen vnto the gates of Toledo, killing men, and carrying away the prey, he aduertised the King of Nauarre, and the other confederat Lords of his estate, who parted presently from Arcualo and Ontiueros, with one thousand two hundred men at armes, and light horse to succour him. The King of Castile being much incensed against the confederates, resolved to seaze vpon the lands, rents, and reuenues of the King of Nauarre, beginning by Medina del Campo, neither did the protestations and threats of the King of Nauarre and his confederates, preuaile any thing, to whom D the King of Castile made no other answer, but that they were all in armes contrary to his commandements, and carried themelues as rebels.

Don Alphonso the fift of that name, and twelfth King of Portugal.

D Vring these tumults in Castile, the realme of Portugal was not without some trof-les. After the death of King Edwara, his sonne Don Alphonso succeeded him, at the age of six years, vnder the government of the Queene Donna Leonora, according to the Fathers testament: but many townes of the realme reiecting the government of a woman, especially a stranger, they intreated the Infant Don Pedro, Duke of Coimbra, that, as the eldest brother among the Infants of Portugal, hee would take vpon him the sole government of the realme. Many others, more modest, who would not altogether breake the will of the deceased King, were of opinion that hee should gouerne with the Queene. Of the first opinion, were the Infants Don Henry Master of Christus, and Don
Iohn Maister of Saint leames, Don Pedro excusing himselfe of this charge, he perswaded
Don Iohn to gouerne with the Queene Mother, wherewith he should be well satisfied:
but Don Iohn answered him freely, that it was not for him, who was the youngest amongst the brethren, to gouerne: but that hee Don Pedro and Don Henry, should aduise to take the government of the realme vpon them, as Princes of Portugal, and worthy of such a charge, and that they should not suffer a strange woman to rule ouer them, being an infamous thing, vnworthy of the house of Portugal, and preiudiciall to the realme:
and that they must not regard that which the deceased King had ordained if it were found

it
Portugal.

Government of a woman
cause of contention.

Priviledges of the Earle of Ribadeo.

Infant fallied forth, and presented himselfe in battaile, vsing threats and proud speeches, A so as the King was forced to returne speedely. There was in his company D. Roderigo of Villandrado Earle of Ribadeo, who in this voiage obtained a goodly preuiledge for him and his family, which was, that the roabe which the Kings of Castile put on the first day of the new yere, should belong to him, and that hee should that day eate at the Kings table, leauing this preuiledge to his posterity in the King of Castiles court. As soone as the King came to Torijos from Saint Lazaro, he beganne to proceed against the Infant D. Henry, for the detention of his Ambassadors, and so he retired to Auila. The constable and his brother D. Iohn of Crezuela Archbishop of Toledo (against whom all this warre was intended) sent to beseech the King to send some of his counsell vnto B them, to the end their might be some order taken for so many inconueniences, the which being done, they concluded that the King should send vnto the confederate Lords, to ad-
uise them to obserue the accord made at Bonille de la Serra, and the more to ease the country, they should dismisse their souldiars.

That to determine all quarrels berwixt them and the constable, they should choose Iudges, who should examine where the fault was, and should appoint punishment for them that were found culpable: and that if they thought it fit, there should be a generall assembly of the Estates called to that end. The Kings offered all these things to the confederats, who were for the most part in Arevalo: but they answered, that there was no meanes of pacification, if the constable who was newly come to Auila, did not dislodge from court. The King hearing this answer, sought to retire his sonne D. Henry, who being counselled by the King of Nauarre, and the Queenes of Castile and Na-uarre, went to Auila, where he protested to the King his father, that he desired nothing more, then to mediate a good peace: where after some small stay, he returned to Sego-bia, promising that from thence he would write vnto the Queenes, touching their meeting at Santa Maria de Nieua, there to treat with them of the meanes of an accord.

*D. Diego of Valera giues
good aduice
vnto the king.*

In the meane time the King receiued letters from Diego de Valera, a wife Knight and of great experience, who had seene and frequented the courts of forraigne Princes, seeking (according to the custome of Noblemen of that age) honour by armes, at Tournayes and combats, beginning for pleasure, and ending many times with death, or some other misfortune; yet he had alwaies beene fortunate, and had wonne much honour and reputation, both in Spaine and else where. These letters contained many graue admonitions, and profitabill counsell, both for the King and his Estate. Being read in open counsell, D. Gutierrez of Toledo Archbishop of Toledo, without any great consideration, stept forward to answer for all the rest. Bid D. Diego said he, send vs men and money, for wee haue not any need of counsell. The King to gratifie the Prince his sonne, gaue vnto him the towne of Guadalajara, the which by this meanes he thought to wrest out of the hands of D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Lord of Hita and Buytrago: but they made resistance in the taking of possession. This hapened at such time as he came to visit the King at Auila, or a little before. The Queenes and the Prince, according E vnto that which had beene promised to the King his father, met together at Santa Maria de Nieua, where D. Iohn de Pacheco was also present: they conferred long together about the pacification of the troubles, without any great conclusion.

From thence there was sent vnto Auila, Alphonso Telles Giron Lord of Beaumont, father to Iohn Pacheco, and Doctor Valdesebro, a prior, that to make matters more easie, he should approach to Arevalo, where vnto the King would not yeeld, wherein hee was ill counselled by some, who feared they should loose their credit and authority, by the accords which might be made there.

Matters being broken off the confederats sent the Admirall Don Frederike, the Earle of Benauent, Don Pedro of Quignones and Roderigo Manriques with good numbers of men, beyonde the mountaines, into the Countrie of Toledo, who ranne as farre as Escalona, and presented battaile vnto the constable, and to the Archbishop his brother, who came from Illesca to ioyne with him, when as their enemies were retired: these Lords of the league returned to Toledo without any blowes, whether came some men of authoritie from the King, to stay them from fighting. At that time the Infant

A fant Don Henry, at the Earle of Benaunts, and the Admirals request, deliuered the Ambassadors: but he did not beare to spoile the Constables and the Archbishops countries, putting all to fire and sword. The Archbishop abandoned Illesca in the night, going towards Madrid, whereof the Infant Don Henry being aduertised, he followed him with all speed, and hauing onely ouer-taken and spoiled his baggage, hee returned and seized vpon Illesca: The Archbishop saued himselfe in Madrid, where hee was receiued
by the Kings commandement: the Admiral and the Earle of Benaunt after these light exploits, returned to Arevalo. About that time Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, one of the Lords of the league, hauing surprized the towne of Alcala of Henares; Iohn de Ca-villa Gouvernor of Casoria, a Cap taine of the Archbishop of Toledos and the Constables faction, approached neere vnto the place with siue hundred horse, and one thousand
two hundred foote, which he laid in ambush in certaine valleys, and sent some to runne
in view of the towne, to draw Don Inigo forth, who failed not, yet not with such order and strength as he ought, wherefore he heind him in, in such sort, as hauing lost most of his men, himselfe being soare hurt, hee could hardly recouer Alcala. To recompence this losse, the Infant Don Henries men, did cut some of the Constables troupes in pec-ces, in Grismonda, where notwithstanding he lost Lawrence d'Aualos his Chamberlaine, nephew to the Constable Don Ray Lopes d'Aualos.

The Infant hearing this, went presently to field, marching towards Toledo with sixe hundred horse, ouer-running the country of Escalona, thinking that the Constable would fight with him, but hee stirred not, finding himselfe too weake: wherevpon hee sent to haue the Archbishop his brother to come, and being ioyned together, they went to charge the Infant at Torrijo, who then kept himselfe within his fort, and whilest
that they spoiled the Country, euen vnto the gates of Toledo, killing men, and carrying away the prey, he aduertised the King of Nauarre, and the other confederat Lords of his estate, who parted presently from Arevalo and Ontiueros, with one thousand two hundred men at armes, and light horse to succour him. The King of Castile being much incensed against the confederates, resolved to seaze vpon the lands, rents, and reuenues
of the King of Nauarre, beginning by Medina del Campo, neither did the protestations
and threats of the King of Nauarre and his confederates, preuaile any thing, to whom D the King of Castile made no other answer, but that they were all in armes contrary to his commandements, and carried themselues as rebels.

Don Alphonso the fift of that name, and twelfth King of Portugal.

Dvring these tumults in Castile, the realme of Portugal was not without some trof-les. Alter the death of King Edward, his sonne Don Alphonso succeeded him, at E the age of six years, vnder the gouernment of the Queene Donna Leonora, according to the Fathers testament: but many townes of the realme reiecting the gouernment of a woman, especially a stranger, they intreated the Infant Don Pedro, Duke of Coimbra, that, as the eldest brother among the Infants of Portugal, hee would take vpon him the sole gouernment of the realme. Many others, more modest, who would not altogether breake the will of the deceased King, were of opinion that hee should gouerne with the Queene. Of the first opinion, were the Infants Don Henry Master of Christus, and Don Iohn Master of Saint Ieames, Don Pedro excusing himselfe of this charge, he perswaded
Don Iohn to gouerne with the Queene Mother, wherewith he should bee well satisfied:
F but Don Iohn answered him freely, that it was not for him, who was the yongest amongst the brethren, to gouerne: but that hee Don Pedro and Don Henry, should aduise to take the gouernment of the realme vpon them, as Princes of Portugal, and worthy of such a charge, and that they should not suffer a strange woman to rule ouer them, being an infamous thing, vnworthy of the house of Portugal, and preiudiciall to the realme:
and that they must not regard that which the deceased King had ordained if it were found

11
Portugal.

Gouernment
of a woman
cause of contention.

found vnreasonable and vniust. They that held the party of the widow Queene Donna A Leonora, were D. Alphonso Earle of Barcellos, with his sonnes D. Diego Earle of Oren and Marquis of Valencia, and D. Fernand Earle of Arrojolos, and Marquis of Villauiciosa, and with them the Archbishop of Lisbon, whose sister D. Constance, the Earle D. Alphonso had taken to his second wife; D. Nugno de Goyz prior of Saint Iohn, and D. Alphonso Lord of Cascais: who with many others their adherents, who aduised the Queene not to giue ouer the government in the which the King her husband had placed her: vpon which quarrell the Estates of the realme were called, by the Princes and Noblemen, holding the chiefe dignities, where by the diligence of the Infant D. Henry, there was this order taken. That the Queene mother should be gouernesse of her childrens persons, and of their reuenues and patrimonies, estates and Offices of the Kings house: and that the Infant D. Pedro should haue care of the defence of the realme, and of armes, and D. Fernand Earle of Arrojolos, of matters belonging vnto Iustice: This did nothing please the Queene, being desirous to command alone: wherefore the contention being greater then before, they made many new assemblies of the Estates: so as the last conclusion was, that the Infant D. Pedro should gouerne alone: the which was instantly required of all men in generall: so as the Queene was wholly dispossessed of the authority, whereof she might haue retained a good part: Being thus frustrate, with extreame griefe, she had recourse to womanish practises, complaints and accusations, as well to the Noblemen of the Realme, as to the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon her brethren: and in the end the came sorrowfull and discontented to the King of Castile, her cousin and brother in law, this yeere 1441. to complaine of the Infant D. Pedro, and to craue aide against him. She found the king at Gomes Naharra, a Borrough of Medina del Campo, troubled with the quarrels of the King of Nauarre, and other Noblemen, against the constable, so as she could not obtaine any thing.

Castille.

It was at such time when as the King of Nauarre, and the confederat Lords were gone into the Realme of Toledo to succor the Infant D. Henry, who hearing that the King proceeded against them with rigour, repast the mountaines, and came towards Medina del Campo, and Olmedo, townes belonging to the King of Nauarre, whereof he of Castile had seized. Approching neere to Medina, and wasting the time in demands and answers, they of Olmedo receiued the King of Nauarres men, whose army encreasing daily, he came to lodge within two bow shootes of Medina, into the which the constable, the Archbishop of Toledo his brother, and D. Iohn of Soto Major Maister of Alcantara, entred the night following with 1600. horse, so as for many daies there were diuerse skirmishes amongst them, in the which many good men were slaine and hurt. The Queenes of Castile and Portugall, sisters, and the Prince D. Henry propounded certaine conditions of peace, whereon there was long debate, without any frute. But whilest they were busie intreating and debating of these Articles, the King of Nauarre (who had Aluaro of Bracamont and Fernando Rejon, Knights well affected to his seruice in Medina,) delt so with them, as one night the constable and his brother beeing in gard and not caring to goe the round themselues, but relying vpon an other, they gaue him entry by a place called Our Lady of Antigua.

Medina del Campo surprised by the con-federat Lords and the Constable a most
taken.

The confederats army was then growne to be aboue fise thousand men at armes and light horse, and a great number of foote: wherefore the King of Nauarre and the confederate Lords, entred furiously into the towne with these forces, against the which there was no offer to make detence, for the King knowing well that they had no quarrell but to the constable, he commanded him, his brother, the maister of Alcantara, and others of his faction, to saue themselves by an other port, opposit to that where their enemies entred, wherein they shewed themselves nothing obstinate. These being gon, the King retired himselfe to the place of Saint Antolin, without any care or trouble for them that entred, who came presently to kisse his hands, first the Admirall, the Earle of Benauent, and other Noblemen and capitaines; then the King of Nauarre, who as a King, made onely a reuerence, but did not kisse his hand, at which time there was no signe of discontentment, but the King did looke of them all with a cheerefull countenance. The constables lodging and of the rest of his faction were sackt: and the Queenes of Castile and

A and Portugall, sisters, did aduertise Don Gomes Gutiere of Toledo. Archbishop of Se-uile, and his Nephew Don Fernando Aluarez of Toledo, Earle of Alba, the first of that house which carried that title, and Don Lopes of Bariato Bishop of Segobia, that they should retire from Court, for that they were too much affected to the Constables party, the which they did the next day, and all the Officers which had beene preferred vnto the King by the Constable were dismist. And to make a good end of these troubles, the Kings of Castile and Nauarre, and the other Princes and Noblemen which were at Medina, made a compromise in the hands of Mary Queene of Castile, Don Henry Prince of the Asturias, the Admirall, and of Don Garcia Aluarez of Toledo, who concluded as followeth. That the Constable Don Aluaro de Luna Earle of Saint Stephens, B should absent himselfe from Court for the space of sixe yeeres next ensuing, appointing him for his aboade, his houses of Saint Martin of Val d'Eglise, or Riaca: That he should not write any letters to the King, but concerning his owne businesse, whereof hee should send a coppie vnto the Queene of Castile and to the Prince her sonne.
That during the said time, hee should not make any league nor confederacie: That all Knights which had followed him should retire to their houses, and none to remaine about him but his household seruants: Notwithstanding the Constable, and the Archbishop of Toledo his brother, might retaine for the space of thirty daies after notice giuen them of this sentence, either of them fifty men at armes: And for the C execution thereof, the Constable should leaue in deposito the castles of St. Stephen, Aillon, Maderuelo, Ganga, Rojas, Maqueda, Montalban, Castle of Bayuela and Escalona, which places should remaine during the said sixe yeeres in the custody of certaine Knights. And for a greater caution, the Constable should deliuer Don Iohn de Luna his sonne and heire in hostage to the Earle of Benauent, during the said time: That after the Constable should haue accomplished the aboue mentioned conditions, the townes and places which the confederats held, belonging vnto the King, should be yeelded vp, and the garriions depart: That the King should restore priuate men to their goods, honours, and dignities, whereof hee had deprived them, by reason of these troubles. All gifts and grants made by the King, since the first of September, in the yeere D 1438. vnto this present yeere 1441. should be reuoked and held for void, except to certaine persons of respect: That all that were partisans to the Constable, should be put out of the Kings councill, who should be named by the King of Nauarre, the Earles of Ledesma and Beneuent, Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoza: That all souldiars should presently retire, and no longer hold the field: That the King of Castile should recompence him of Nauarre, for the losses he had sustained in his lands in Castile, during the seditions and that he, should pay the souldiars which the King of Na-uarre and his partisans had brought by reason thereof. These with some other Articles were concluded the third of Iuly, this yeere 1441. and were confirmed by the king of Castile, thinking thereby to end the confusions, whereinto he like a yong Prince, had plun-E ged his Estate, by fauoring and supporting his mignon to much, who was both indiscreet and insolent, to the contempt of the Princes of his blood, and the chiefe Noblemen of the Kingdome, who notwithstanding vnder collour of providing for the pub-like good, tended all to their priuate. Soone after the King beeing at Castro Xeris, the Licentiate Alphonso Ruiz of Villena came vnto him, with procuration from the Constable, who allowed and accepted of the sentence, requiring to haue men sent to receiue the hostages. Afterfall this the Kings went to Burgos, where they spent some time in feasts and sports, and to auoide all ialousie which might cause troubles and diuisions amongst the Noblemen they made an accord amongst them that not any one should F affect to be more familiar with the King then an other: notwithstanding the Admirall D. Federic began to be very gracious with the King of Castile, not without ialousie of the King of Nauarre, who would willingly haue raised some stirs, after the accustomed manner, but his impaciency was restrained by the Earle of Castro, his ancient and faith-full seruant, who gaue him to vnderstand, that it must needs redound to his proffite, and of other Noblemen of the league.

And to make a stricter bonde, hee aduised him, seeing that Queene Blanche his wife was

Nauarre.

Death of D.
Blanch Queene
of Nauarre.

Castile.

1442.

A bound as-tempt of the Constables fauours.

was newly deceased, to marry D. Joane the Admirals daughter: and he propounded vnto A him an other marriage, betwixt the Infant D. Henry his brother, and D. Beatrice daughter to D. Rodrigo Alphonso Pimentel, Earle of Benauent: these Noblemen still practising the Constables ruine, which in the end they saw.

Blanch Queene of Nauarre after that she had conducted her daughter to the Prince of the Asturia's into Castile, she parted no more thence. In the absence of the King her husband, and hers, D. Charles their sonne gouerned the Realme of Nauarre, being assisted by good counsell. She was a religious Princeesse, and much giuen to deuotion, and pilgrimage, especially to places dedicated to the Virgin Mary, whether shee made some voiaiges during the aboue mentioned troubles, wherein spending her time, it happened that she died at Santa Maria de Nieua, in the yeere 1442. It is doubtfull amongst the Spaniards where her body was interred, for there is not any marke or menumont found in Spaine, although she ordained that it should bee carried to Santa Maria of Vxue, and that the priory of Ayuar should be annexed to that Church, the which notwithstanding was not done. The Authors of the History of Sicile write, that shee died in that Island, in the Monastery of Saint Nicholas des Arenes, at the foote of Mount Etna, and that she is buried at Catania, in Saint Francis Church. By the death of this Prince the succession of the realme of Nauarre fell vnto her sonne, Don Charles Prince of Viana, who at that time was full twenty yeeres old, bred vp by the Lords of Beaumont, whereof Lewis was the chiefe, who afterwards beeing made Constable of Nauarre by King C John, was the first of that house that was aduanced to that dignity.

The Constable of Castile bearing his exile from Court with the losse of his authority, very impatiently (wherein hee might haue maintained himselfe, if hee could haue knowne himselfe) beganne to make new practises, to grow into fauour with the confederates, submitting himselfe to John de Pacheco, that hee might bring him into fauour with Prince Henry his maister: but the wound was to fresh, so as nothing was done at that time.

The Estates beeing assembled that yeere 1442. at Toro, they did graunt vnto Don John King of Castile (though with great difficulty) to furnish him with foure score millions of Marauidis, payable at two termes, that yeere and the next following. There D the confederate Lords beeing aduertised, that D. Pedro de Acunyas sought all meanes to restore the Constable to fauour, the Admirall sent to take him prisoner in his house at Duegnas, but soone after he was deliuered: and then there was an enterprise for defcouering, which made the Constable much more odious, then hee had beene: for some of his friends were so hardy, as to make a mine in Toro, the which did come vnto the Kings lodging, and to the castle, by the which hee would secretly draw in armed men, and kill, or take the King of Nauarre, the Infant his brother, and the confederate Lords, whilst they were in counsell. The Estates beeing ended, the King came to Vailladolid, where as he gaue vnto Don Pedro of Estuniga, Earle of Ledesma, the City of Plaisance, in recompence of Trugillo, which he demaunded, for that it had bene promised him by the King.

There beeing great contention growne betwixt the Earle of Castagneda, and Don Luis Lopez of Mendoza, about the limitation of their iurisdiccions, and vassals, in the lands which they held in the Prouince of Alaua by reason whereof their armed men, keeping the field, did spoile and oppress the poore people: wherevpon many Commonalties did rise in armes, against these two Lords, making sharpe warre against them, hauing obtained leaue from the King to doe it, to the end they might suppress those insolencies which were committed vnder colour of their quarrels, which they might and ought for to haue ended by iustice, and not by armes. This yeere died F Don Lobo of Crezuela Archbishop of Toledo, the Constables brother, to the great hindrance of his affaires, in whose place Don Gutierrez Gomes of Toledo Archbishop of Seuile, was chosen, by the meanes of the King of Nauarre, to whom the house of Toledo was reconciled.

At that time there was a change of the Bishops of Spaine, euery one aspiring to that which was richest and of greatest dignity; the which is the greatest care of most of the

A the pastors in these latter times. The Archbishopprike was giuen to D. Garcia Oforio Bishop of Ouidoe, Nephew to the Admirall, the Bishoprike of Ouidoe to the Bishop of Orense; that of Orense, to Doctor John of Torquemado, of the Order of the preaching friars, Cardinal of Saint Sixte, a great Doctor in the Cannon law.

At that time in Biscay there were descouered some followers of their opinion, whom they called Fratricelli, men condemned by Pope Boniface the eight, in the yeere 1290. and afterwards by John the two and twentieth, for heretikes, and followers of all impurity and abuses, hauing had their beginning at Ferrara in Italy, by one called Herman. The King of Castile sent Francis of Soria a Franciscan friar, and D. John Alphonso Cherino Abbot of Alcala the royall, one of the Kings counsell, to informe of their deeds, doctrine and manners: and it was found by the informations which they brought to Court that he which had reuiued, and newly practised this Doctrine of Fratricelli, was a Franciscan friar, called Alphonso de Mella, and that many men and women were infected with this error, in the towne of Durango and there abouts: wherefore the King ordained that they should be apprehended, sending two Prouosts thether, well accompanied, who brought away a great number, some to Vailladolid, some to Calçada, where they were burnt. The friar Alphonso de Mella, the reuiuer of this sect, escaped, hearing that they informed, and past into the Moores country, with many yong strumpets, which were taken from him, and himselfe condemned, and made a slave, where hee ended his miserable daies.

C The King of Castile being sollicitd by the Queene mother of Portugal, to be a means that the might be restored to the authority, in the which the deceased King her husband had left her by his will; he sent Ambassadors to the young King D. Alphonso, and to his vnkle D. Pedro, and to the Estates and counsell of the realme, to perswade and intreat them, to leaue the gouernment of the King and realm, to the widow Queene, according to the last wil of the deceased king Edward, whereof they did ho. selfly excuse themselves, especially the counsell, yeelding many reasons why they could not consent therevnto. At that time hapened the death of D. John of Portugal, maister of Saint James, & second Constable of the realme, being 43. yeeres old, who was a great friend to Aluaro de Luna, Constable of Castile, who was also administrator of the Maistership of Saint James in D Castile. This Infant was grandfather by the mothers side, to the Queene D. Isabella, the heire of Castile and Leon, who was wife to King Ferdinand the fifth called the Catholike.

The same yeere Ambassadors came from D. Alphonso King of Arragon, to the Court of Castile, to condole with King John for the troubles and seditions of his realme, and giuing him counsell in their maisters name, as a Prince that was his allie and friend, to loue the Princes of his blood, and to win them with fauours and good vsage, admitting them into his counsell of State, and gouerning his realmes by their aduice, and of the Noblemen of the greatest and most ancient families of Spaine.

The Ambassadors did also make him a relation of the happy successe the King their maister had in the warre of Naples: where after diuers light exploits of warre betwixt E Rene of Aniou and him, he had besieged Naples the second time, in the which Rene was: and that by the good seruice of a certaine Mason, who had bene denied iustice by Rene, he had brought into the city by an old conduit, or sinke, about two hundred Spaniards, to seize vpon some port, and giue entry to the rest of the army, who beeing descouered and pursued, had fortified themselves in a great Tower, where during the fight hee had caused a scaldoe to bee giuen, and by that meanes put so many men into the towne as hee became maister of Saint Genaios gates, which hauing forced, they drew in all the armie of Arragon: That of the men of warre of the Angeuine, party had made great resistance, yea there was Rene himselfe, fighting verie valiantly, in his owne person, euen vnto the last extremity, so as hee had like to haue bene taken prisoner, hauing bene staied by some certaine souldiars of Carrelagne, from whom hee freed himselfe, cutting off the hand of one them called Espejo, who held the Rheines of his horse-bridle, and with great difficulty hee saued himselfe in the fort of Castle Nouo, which held for him; so as Rene beeing escaped, and his souldiars retired where they could, hee remained maister of the city, and soone

Change of Bishops in Spaine.Fratricelli reuiues religion.

Arragon:

Success of the warre of Naples.

after receiued the forts of Capuana and Saint Hermo by composition; And that Rene A finding that he had need of new forces, leauing a good garrison in Castle Nouo, and a Geneuois called Anthony Caluo to commaund there, had gone to the Florentins, and to Pope Eugenius, his confederats in Italy, from whom not being able to draw any suffici. ent aide, he sent word vnto capitaine Caluo, that if he could not hold the fort, he should yeeld it with the best conditions he could, the which was done, and by that meanes the King their maister remained absolute Lord of the chiefe city of the realme, and of the castles, where he had beene receiued and acknowledged by the Neapolitans for their King, with great pompe and triumph, his aduersary being retired to Marfeilles, after that he and his wife had held that realme in suspence and troubles by the space of sixe yeeres. B These newes were pleasing to the King of Castile, who with milde and friendly words seemed to take in good part the admonitions and counsell which the Ambassadors had giuen him in the King of Arragons name. Thus King D. Alphonso remained peaceable possessor of the realme of Naples, in the yeere 1442. after that he had contended for it one and twenty whole yeeres, from the time that he was called from Corsica by Queene Ioane. And soone after this conquest, making his peace with Pope Eugenius who had need of his assistance and aide, for the recouery of the Marquisate of Ancona, the which Cont Francis Sforza held, by the meanes of Cardinal Lewis of Padoua, and of the Patriarke of Aquileia, the Pope graunted the inuestiture of the realme to him and his, making D. Fernand of Arragon, base sonne to King Alphonso Legitimate to that effect, hoping to succeed in the realme of Naples, and disanulling all other Inuestitures which had beene made by him or his predecessors Popes, to all other Princees whatsoever. In regard whereof, the King did aide the Pope with his forces, against such as opposed themselves in the Marquisate, and made him to enioy it quietly. The King of Arragons Ambassadors did admonish the King of Nauarre priuately, to keepe friendship with the King of Castile, and to doe him seruice: the like admonitions they gaue to the Infant D. Henry, hauing such charge from their maister.

Alphonso King of Arragon inuaded in the realme of Naples.

Castile.

Polley of the Bishop D. Lopes of Barrientos.

Kings of Castile and Nauarre visit the Pope.

The Noblemen of Castile hauing with such contention plunged the Constable and them of his party in a gulph of miseres, and the Courtiers hell, which is the disgrace of their Prince, and decay of their authority, they gaue him meanes by their negligence and baseness, to resolute and to returne to that dignity, from which he was fallne: for every one respecting more his priuate profit, then the publike good, or the maintenance of their league, followed that which he held to be most profitable for himselfe, beginning to iarre, and to haue factions amongst themselves, whereof the Constables friends that were in disgrace, could make vse; wherefore Doctor Pero Ianes, and Alphonso Peres of Biuro, very much affected to the Constable, had meanes to returne to Court. D. Lopes of Barrientos, Bishop of Segobia, besides that he was a very deere friend to the Constable, hauing or fearing to haue some quarrell with D. Iohn de Pacheco, fauorite to Prince Henry, hee exchanged his Bishoprike for that of Auila, with the Cardinal D. Pedro of Cerbantes, for that the Prince did ordinarily remaine at Segobia, it may bee hee would haue this exchange serue for a collour for that which he polittikely pretended, making shew to hate and flie the Prince D. Henry, when as he had most desire to bee in fauour with him, to restore the Constable, and to retire him from the King of Nauarre and the confederats league. Soone after D. Pedro Suarez of Toledo, sonne to D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo Lord of Oropesa, being fauored by D. Henry Prince of Castile, who was but of a turbulent spirit, fortified himselfe like an enemy in Talauera, the which being made knowne to the King of Castile, who was then at Santa Maria of Nieua, with the King of Nauarre, to celebrate the Annuiersary of D. Blanch Queene of Nauarre deceased; the two Kings marched thether with some troups, and hauing caused the Infant D. Henry to come vnto them, they forced them that held Talauera to yeeld, which place they gaue in regard to D. Fernand of Crezucla, Archdeacon of Toledo. From thence they went all together to Toledo, where by the way they did visit the Constable D. Aluaro de Luna, at Elca-lona where the King and Queen were his Gosspits to a daughter, who was called Ioane, the which did wonderfully discontent the Admirall D. Frederic, and the other confederate Lords. The Commonalties of the Prouince of Alaua, who had taken armes against the Earle

A Earle of Castagneda, and D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoça; did much harme vnto the gentlemen of the country, and others, ruining their houses and committing many insolencies, as a brutish people is accustomed to doe, being a meere folly to arme them, how iust so euer the cause be: yea they proceeded so farre, as they did beseege D. Pero Lopes of Ayala, Lieutenant and Gouvernor of Guipuscoa in the towne of Saluatierra of Alaua, which did belong vnto him, who seeing himselfe pressed, sent to intreat his Neighbour and kinsman, D. Pero Fernandes of Velasco, Lord of Haro, being then at a village of his, to come and succor him, who hauing seene D. Pero of Ayala letter, he endeoured with all speed to releue him, gathering together in lesse then foure daies about foure thousand footie and five hundred Launces, with which forces he marche towards Saluatierra. The Commons being aduertised of his coming, dislodged, yet not so speedily, but he tooke many, whom he either slue or carried away prisoners, hauing chased the rest home vnto their townes, and burnt many of their houses.

Dangerous counsel to arme a multitude.

Influence of the commons punished.

1434.

In the yeere 1443. D. Lewis of Guzman, maister of the Knights of the Calatrava died: so as the King of Nauarre obtained that place of the King of Castile, for a base sonne of his called D. Alphonso of Arragon: whereof the King hauing written to the Commanders (to whom the election did belong) D. Fernando of Padilla treasurer of the Order (who had great credit among them, and the greater, for that he held D. Iohn Ramirez of Guzman great Commander of that Order prisoner euer since the ciuill warre, and would neuer deliuer him, neither by the Kings commandement; nor for the threats of the Princes and Noblemen) wrought so, as without respect to the Kings letters, or to anything else, he caused himselfe to be chosen maister of the Calatrava, disappointing D. Alphonso of Arragon, and the King of Nauarre his father, of their pourture, who for that cause made great Instance vnto the King, and obtained many letters and commandements to the Commanders, to disanull this election which was fraudulent, violent and against their Orders: for this new maister being chosen, had freed the great Commander, but hee had first made him to allow of his election, and to sweare fealty and homage vnto him, as to his Superior, and maister of the Order. All this preuayling nothing, the King caused the rents and reuenues of Calatrava to be seized on, forbidding all their subiects and vassals, to obey or acknowledge D. Fernand of Padilla, who notwithstanding was fauored and supported by D. Henry Prince of Castile, & other Noblemen, who were somewhat iealous of the King of Nauars greatnesse. Moreouer the King sent the Infant D. Henry of Arragon, with an army, who did beseege this vsurper in the fort of the Conuent of Calatrava, where he spent some daies, being defended by a good garrison. At the last the war ended, by an accident which happened to D. Fernand of Padilla, who died, being shot vnadvisedly by one of his Squiers, who ayimed at the enemy. They that defended the place, hauing lost their maister yeelded vpon composition. The Infant D. Henry did write againe vnto the Commanders to choose D. Alphonso of Arragon, the which was done, but he enioyed it little.

Election freely possessed made.

Usurper enioyes his masters subptiles.

D. Alphonso of Arragon base sonne to the King of Nauarre, maister of Calatrava.

The Court removing from Toledo, to come to Madrigal, the King being at Ramaga, the Prince D. Henry his son did solicit him to imprison Alphonso Peres of Biuro, Fernando James of Xeris, Iohn Manuel of Lando, and Pedro of Luxan Grome of the Chamber, for crimes whereof he accused them, and the King of Nauarre did the like, which was an occasion to chafe againe from Court all the Constables friends, fauorers and dependants, and to change many of the Kings household seruants, yea to giue him so many gards, as he was discontented, yet he had no wil to redresse it, for he was faint-hearted, and had no royall resolution, yea hee endured that D. Henry Henriquez the Admirals brother, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoça were continually in his Chamber, to obserue what hee did, and to aduertise the King of Nauarre, and his sonne in law the Prince Don Henry. It is credible that this was the practise of Don Lopes of Barriento, lately Bishop of Segobia, and now of Auila, who sought to giue the confederats some occasion to vse the King rigorously, whereby it should appeere that they held him in vnworthy seruitude, wherewith the King, his sonne the Prince of Asturia's, and others whom hee would make friends to the Constable, might bee discontented, as it happened, for this Bishop, being a very polletike man, vsed such means, as he wonne D. Iohn de Pacheco, who was the heart of Prince Henry, procuring him to let the Prince his maister vnderstand, how vnworthy a thing it was for him to continue in their league, who intreated his father so vnworthely, who hauing chased from court by their seditious armes, the constable, and other most faithfull seruants to the crowne of Castile, vnder collour of some youth, but in effect it was for that they opposed themselves against their tyranie, which they did build vnder a shew of the publike good, they held the Kings person as it were in captiuitie, to whom it was not lawfull to speake, see, nor heare, but by their Organes, no not to conuerse priuately with the Queene his wife, nor with him his sonne, without witness and guards, who went and reported all to them that he did and said: a shamefull thing, and full of contempt, the which he should not suffer, who should be the support of his father, and the hope of all faithfull subiects, louing the greaunesse of the crowne of Castile, and the honour and reputation of their Kings; with such perswasions hee induced the Prince D. Henry to leaue the league, the which he did cunningly, as he was counselled by the Bishop; who vsed the happy endeuors of Iohn de Pacheco, and by other diuises and means, hee drew vnto the constables friendship (who was almost in despaire, and resolu'd, seeing himselfe so pursued, to passe into Portugal) the new Archbishop of Toledo, the Earle of Haro, Alba, Castagneda and Ledesma, who now intituled himselfe Earle of Plaisance, Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Pero Aluarez Osorio and other great Noblemen. The better to couer this practise, being also necessary for the Archbishop of Toledo to dissemble, hauing not yet receiued his Bulls from Rome for his Archbishoprike, hee and his Nephew, the Earle of Alba made a new league, with the King of Nauarre: but the Bulles receiued, and being in quiet possession of the Archbishoprike, they left the league, and ioyned with the constable.

The effects of the Bishops of Auilas practises beganne now to appeere, the Earle of Haro hauing complained of the subiection wherein they held the King, vsing some word of threatening that he would remedy it: going to Curiel to the Earle of Plaisance to conferre with him about it: whereupon the King of Nauarre sent after him to take him, and he had bene taken, notwithstanding that he went by vnknowne waies, if hee had not bene very well mounted, and escaped by the swiftnesse of his horse, into his owne country, where hee leaued men, and inuited all his friends to ioyne with him in so honourable an enterprise, to free the King from the oppression wherein they held him, so as within few daies hee had gathered together one thousand horse, there being ioyned with him the Earle of Castagneda, and D. Pedro Sarmiento: against whom Don Iohn King of Nauarre sent fiftene hundred Launces, led by the Admirall and the Earle of Benauent, who led Prince Henry with them, who did not yet descouer himselfe, but onely kept these two parties from fighting, making them in some fort friends, and satisfied at that time one of an other, and then hee returned to Segobia. Whilst that the Admirall and Earle of Benauent were absent in this voiage, hauing left the Kings in Tordesillas, Pero Aluarez Osorio of the Bishop of Auilas faction, came and presented himselfe before the towne, being accompanied with many souldiars, and did endeour to enter, but he could not, whereupon he retired.

These things made the King of Nauarre, and the confederats very ielous, that there was some great conspiracy against them, and not able yet to discouer who were the conspirators, to bee the better certified, they sent to intreat the Prince D. Henry to come to Tordefillas, that they might aduise what was to bee done for the totall ruine of the Constable, as they had concluded together.

The Prince hauing therein the Bishops aduice, who demanded nothing more, came with an intent to make knowne vnto the King his father the league which he had newly made, to free him from Government, and to comfort him. Arriving at Tordesillas with the Bishop of Auila, John de Pacheco and many other Noblemen, they were receiued by the King of Nauarre, with great demonstration of ioy. At that time there was no meanes for to conferre together, nor to treat of any affaires, for they were readie to celebrate a marriage betwixt the King of Nauarre,

A Nauarre, and the Admirall Henriques daughter, which were preparing with great state, at the tower of Lobaton, whither all men went.

This marriage was accomplished to the great griefe of Don Charles Prince of Viana, to whose prejudice the king D. Iohn his father, dayrned the Realme of Nauar, and wold not leaue it, although it were his inheritance by his mother, which was the cause of great troubles. This Princeesse D. Ioane was of the bloud royall of Castile, for the Admirall Don Frederick her father, was sonne to Don Alphonso Henriques, and grand-child to Don Frederick Master of Saint James, who by the commandment of Don Pedro the cruelli, his brother, was slaine at Seuille. At the same time Don Fernand of Aualos, Chamber-laine to the Infant D. Henry, was sent to bring Donna Beatrix, sister to Don Alphonso Pimentel, Earle of Benauent, to Cordoua, being promised to the Infant his master: in which citie that mariage was celebrated, of whom came D. Henry of Arragon, called the Infant of Fortune, or the Fortunate, who came to be Duke of Segorbe.

The Court being returned to Tordeffillas, they began to treat of matters against the Constable, whereupon the Prince told the king of Nauarre, that it were good all they of the league were together, to determine of matters of so great importance, the which pleased the king of Nauarre, whereupon there were letters and messengers sent to them that were absent to draw them to Court: and for that Tordeffillas would not serue to lodge fo great an assembly, the towne of Arcualo was appointed. The Bishop of Auila was very desirous, that the king and the Prince, father and sonne, might conferre freely together, the which was very difficult: for there were spies set by the king of Nauarre about the kings person in his chamber, and in all other places, who did obserue what he sayd or did, and yet the king could not helpe it: yet the bishop found meanes to aduise him, that he should faigne himselfe to be somewhat sicke, and that vpon this occasion, the Prince, vnder colour to visit him, and to do his duty, might deliuer many things vnto him which might please him. The king kept his bed for a time, whereby the Prince had opportunity to discouer the new league vnto him, and to assure him, that the Constable whom he had chased away, should yet deliuer him from the captiuitie wherein they held him: wherewith the king was so ioyed, as he could not containe himselfe, but he did outwardly shew the hope which he had conceiued, which made the gards suspect, that the father and the sonne had had some discoufse of great consequence, whereof they did aduertise the King of Nauarre, who was very ielous of the bishop. They caused the Admirall to aske the king, what good discoufse the Prince his sonne had vsed, wherewith he was so ioyed. The king wisely concealing what he knew, answered, that they were tales of the follies of youth.

This busines having succeeded wishfully for the Bishop, the Prince tooke his leave of the two kings, his father and father-in-law, and so returned to Segobia, to attend (sayd he) the time of the assembly at Arevalo: but it was the least of his thoughts, for he had a special desire to breake it if he could: whereof having conferred by the way with the bishop of Auila his Councillor, he (who was a cunning politicke man) found this expedient: he went to Arevalo, being a towne of his Diocesse of Auila, with a great trayne, and finding the lodgings alreadie marked, for the Noblemen that should come thither, he caused some to quarrell with the harbingers, and with such of the traine as were already come, so as he put the towne into a great confusion. Many of those which were already lodged, were forced to depart, and to give place to my Lord Bishop and his men, and then seeking for other lodging, there grew other contentions among them of the Court, so as the king of Nauarre being aduertised thereof, hee was much discontented, and growing more suspicious, he would not go to that assembly, fearing some practise against him. The Prince having what he demanded, he wrote vnto the king of Nauarre, complaining much that he was not come to the assembly at Arevalo: wherefore they sent the Admirall Don Frederick vnto him to Saint Mary de Nyeua to draw him to another assembly, whereunto the Prince pretending some excuses, the Admirall told him, that if he came not, it would seeme, that he meant to withdraw himselfe from the vnion of the king of Nauarre and the confederate Lords.

The Prince pretended many reasons hee had for it, but he dissembled his intent : the Admirall

14
Nauarre.
*Marriage of the king of Nauar
with D. Joane Henriques.*

Admirall intreated him for an enterview with his father in-law at Olmedo, whereof hee A excused himselfe as honestly as he could, and sent backe the Admirall very much discontented: for he spake not but as he was aduised by the Bishop of Auila, who wished him not to enter into Olmedo, nor into any place belonging to the king of Nauarre. The Bishop being vigilant and aſtiue to do any thing that might giue forme and effect to his enterprise, for the restoring of the Constable to his first fauour and authoritie, posted to Alba de Tormes, whereas he made the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and the Earle of Alba his Nephew good friends and seruants to the Prince Don Henry, aduertising them of all that had beene done, and he gaue order in Alba, that the like aduice should bee given vnto Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Lord of Hira and Buytrago, and being returned B to Segobia, he caused the Prince to write vnto him, and to promise to fauour him in the question he had with the king of Castile for the Asturia's of Santillana. During these praſises in Castile, the Infant Don Henry hauing seized vpon the cittie of Cordoua, he sought to draw the townes of Andalusia into the Confederats power, and had attempted to seaze vpon Seuille; where finding resistance, he layed siege vnto it, and did greatly presse it, at such time as the Prince D. Henry did publish his resolution openly in the citie of Auila, which was, to continue vnder the obedience of the king his father, and to seeke to free him from them that did oppresse him: wherefore they of Seuille, vpon this newes, tooke courage, and did valiantly repulse the Infant. The Earles of Castagneda and Haro, with many other Knights, hearing of this resolution, sent instantly to present C their seruice vnto the Prince.

The king of Nauarre seeing this storme approach, sought by all meanes to pacifie the Prince, promising him all that he had formerly demanded, and not obtayned, but it was too late. He that carried this message vnto the Prince for the king of Nauarre, was a wise man, called Aluar Garcia of Saint Mary, who hath written part of the Chronicle of this King of Castile. The king of Nauarre and his confederates seeing the Princes desires, and that they must come to force, they assembled men from all parts, and so did the Prince: for the Constable, the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and the Earle of Alba came presently to him to Auila, whereas they might haue some fiftene hundred horse, not sufficient to beseege Tordeſillas where the king was: wherefore they resolved to go towards Burgos, to ioyne with the Earles of Haro, Castagneda, and Plaisance, and with Don D Inigo Lopes of Mendoza: whereof the King of Nauarre being aduertised, hauing already leuied about two thousand horse, he led the king to Portillo, and hauing there left him in the guard of the Earle of Castro, he marched with his troupes towards Burgos, being resolved to fight with the Prince and his men, and he came and camped at Pampega in the territorie of Burgos. The Prince who was within the citie, and had already about three thousand horse and foure thousand foote, sallied forth, and came and lodged with in view of his father-in-lawes armie. They expected nothing but a bloudie battell betwixt these two factions: but they retired without any blowes, but only a light skirmish, the which happened, whilst they did capitulate, at the sollicitation of some good religious men: at which treatie the king of Nauarre did in a manner yeeld to all that the Prince required, leauing the king of Castile in full libertie to restore his Officers, and to do what he pleased. The king of Nauarre finding no meanes to make an accord being the weaker, he dislodged in the night, without sound of trumpet, and retired to Palenquela. The king of Castile being ill guarded in Portillo, vnder colour of going a hunting escaped from the Earle of Castro, and came to Vailledolit, whither the Bishop of Auila came presently vnto the Princes and the Confederates campe, which was neere vnto Palenquela. The king shewed the best countenance he could vnto the Bishop, and acknowledging the good seruice he had done him in his deliuerie, he made him infinit promises. The King of Nauar, the Admirall, the Earle of Benauent, D. Pedro of Quignones, and other heads of their faction, seeing themselves low, and at their enemies mercy, they resolved to retire themselves, euery one to his house, and there to attend the euent: wherefore the K. of Nauar, who for some yeares had not seen Nauar, went thither to provide men and meanes, to enter speedily with great forces into Castile, against his aduersaries.

15.
Nauarre.

King of Castile
deliuered.

King of Na.
uarrs league
dispersed.

Being come into his Realme, he first of all furnished his fronter places, with all things necessary

A necessarie, to resist the king of Castiles attempts: who had no great desire to pursue him into Nauarre, but onely to spoyle him and his, of that which they held in Castile, and first of all he tooke Medina del campo, and Olmedo: then the towne of Pegnasil was taken by force and sacked, and the castle yeelded by composition, Roa and Aranda of Duero opened their gates vnto the Prince, who with the Constable (hauing nothing that made head in Castile the old) past into Andalusia, against the Infant Don Henry, and forced him to flee into the country of Murcia, where he fortified himselfe in Lorca, vntill that the Prince was retired into Castile, and then he passed into Arragon, and so ioynd with the king of Nauarre his brother, who leuied men to returne into Castile. In the yeare 1445. dyed the Queenes Leonora of Portugall, and Mary of Castile, sisters to the king of B Nauarre, not without suspicion of payson: the Queene of Portugall was carried from Toledo, where she dyed, to the Monasterie of S. Mary of the battell: and Queene Mary dying at Villacastin a burrough of Segobia, was interred in the Monasterie of Guadalupe. Almost at the same time dyed Lope of Mendoza, Arch-bishop of Seuille, whose place was given to Don Aluaro of Oforno, Bishop of Cuenca, and his Bishopricke was conferred to Don Lopes of Barriento bishop of Auila, the which was given to Alphonso of Fonseca, such changes made the Pastors of Spaine, seeking the best reuenues. In the spring-time the king of Nauar entred into Castile by Atiença, with foure hundred horse, and fixe hundred foot: where at his first entry, he tooke Torrija, Alcala oi Henares, Alcala the old, and Saint Torquat, whither the Infant D. Henry his brother came with 500 C men at armes.

These newes made the king go from Medina into the Realme of Toledo, where hauing gathered together all the souldiers he could, hee marched that way, whereas hee thought to find the King of Nauarre, and comming neere to Alcala of Henares the towne was yeelded to him. There the King of Nauarre presented himselfe to fight, but he of Castile would not accept the battell: wherefore the King of Nauarre, and Don Henry past the port or mount of Tablada, and led their army to Olmedo, where as the gates being shut, and resistance made, they entred by force, and hauing caused informations to be made against them that were culpable, Doctor Fuente, and two other Gentlemen were condemned to dye, and were executed. The King of Castile following the king of D Nauarre, came and camped at the milles of the Abbey, within a little league of Olmedo, hauing in his army the Prince his sonne, the Constable, the Earle of Alba, D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Don Lope of Barrientos, newly made Bishop of Cuenca, and then the Earle of Haro came and ioynd with him. On the other side the Admirall, the Earles of Benauent and Castro, Don Pedro of Quignones, D. John of Tobar, being sent by the K. of Nauarre, entred into Olmedo with a thousand horse, the which being ioynd to them which the king of Nauarre and the Infant had brought, and gathered together, made about fife and twenty hundred horse.

Matters being readie to be decided by an inenitable battell, the king of Nauarre hauing no will to hazard himselfe, hee demaunded a parle of the king of Castile, of some E Knights of either part, the which being granted, the Admiral and the Earle of Benauent of the one side, and the Bishop of Cuenca, and the Constable on the other, conferred together many times, the King of Nauarre in a manner demanding no other thing, but that they should restore to him the Infant D. Henry, the Earle of Castro, and others of the league, their lands and estates: but as for the gouernement of the Realme, and quarrels with the Constable, hee made not any mention. The Bishop vsing his accustomed pollicy, prolonged this treaty all he could, knowing that D. Guttiere of Soto-major master of Alcantara, should come within few daies to the campe with fixe hundred horse, by which supply the king of Castile being euery way the stronger, he did hope to see his enemies wholly defeated, and forced to yeeld to his and the Constables mercie. The F conference being ended without any conclusion, the king of Nauarre, and the confederates, sent Lope of Angulo, and the Licentiat Cuellar his Chancellor, to the campe, to acquaint the king of Castile with the miseries and losses which do follow a battel, whereunto the Constable, respecting only his priuate interest, aspired tyrannously, for the fruits which he gaped after by the death of the best Knights of Castile: wherefore hee should do

An. 1445.
D. John of Tobar Queenes
sister, poisoned.

EA. name of
B. St. p. 100.

Confederats besieged in Olmedo.

Demand of the confederats of
the King of
Castile.

Prince Henry
made to ymagine
cruelty.

Battel of Olmedo lost by the King of Nauarre

Death of Don
Henry Infant
of Arragon.

League of the king of Nauarre
wholly dissol-ued.

do a thing worthie of himselfe, to chafe away this man, arrogant of the authoritie which he held vnworthily, and decree that they might bee heard in iustice, in some citie or other place of the Realme, whither they shold come like men of peace, not bringing with them aboue ten men vpon moyles: else they protested, that they would make their complaints vnto the Pope, and that the miseries which should follow, should be by his fault. The king answered, that he would take order, requiring to haue this demand in writing. Two dayes after Prince Henry going to view Olmedo, with certaine light horse, he was charged by the enemies who sallied out of the towne, who made him to flie shamefully to the campe, the which did so much displease the king his father, as instantly refusing to heare any more speech of an accord, he caused his Standard to be displayed, and his men to be put into battell; the Constable leading the forward with eight hundred men at armes: the Prince the battell with foure hundred men at armes, and the king the reere-ward with fixe hundred men at armes, besides the light horsemen, which were very many and diuided into these ordonances, the which hee made to stand firme aboue an hower, in view of Olmedo, to see if the king of Nauarre would come forth: who being wonderfully incensed at this bravado, although he had not equall forces to his aduersarie, yet like a couragious Prince, he would needs go forth to fight, contrarie to the aduice of many, it being late, opposing his Squadron, and that which the Earle of Castro led against Prince Henry, and the Infant his brother, the Admirall, the Earle of Benauent, Pedro of Quignones, and Fernand Lopes of Saldaigne, with the rest of the forces against the Constable of Castile: and so began the battell about two houres before Sunne-setting, whereas the king of Nauarre and the confederates, notwithstanding their endeauours, were vanquished: and it was happie for them that approaching night parted them, and kept the victors from pursuing of their enemies: so as notwithstanding that they did fight with great resolution and obitinacie, yet there were but seuen and thirtie slaine vpon the place, and about two hundred dyed after, of such as had bene wounded in the battell. The King of Nauarre and his brother D. Henry (who was fore hurt in the left hand) retired to Olmedo: the Earle of Benauent fled as farre as Pedraza: the Admirall was taken by a Squire called Peter of Carera, who notwithstanding brought him to his owne house, at the tower of Lobaton: many Noblemen and others, in number aboue two hundred were taken. Among which the chiefe were, the Earle of Castro, and a sonne of his called Don Pedro of Sandouall, Alphonso of Alarcon, D. Henry Henriques, the Admirals brother, Fernand of Quignones, Diego of Londogno sonne to Sancho Rodrigo of Aualos, nephew to Don Ruy Lopes of Aualos, sometimes Constable of Castile, and Don Pedro of Quignones, but he found meanes to escape. The rest of the confederates armie fled to diuers parts, and was not pursued by reason of the night.

The King of Castile much pleased with this victorie, sent commandement throughout his whole Realme, that they should make bon-fires in signe of ioy, and hee caused a chappell to be built vpon the place of fight, which he named the holy Ghost of the battell, and hauing the day after sent Guttiere Sanches of Aluarado prisoner to Vaileddolit, he caused his head to be cut off. Before midnight the king of Nauarre, and the Infant his brother going out of Olmedo, with such forces as they had, they tooke the way of Portillo, and by Fonte Duegna they came to Daroca, and from thence to Calatajub, where as the Infant Don Henry dyed of the wound which he had receiued in the hand, it being inflamed: his bodie was at that time layed in the chappell of D. Iohn de Luna, in that city, and afterwards transported to Poblete, whereas the king Don Fernand his father lyes. He left his wife Donna Beatrix with child, who was afterwards deliuered of a son, who was called Don Henry of Arragon, and by surname the Fortunate Infant. His death was the more grieuous to the King of Nauarre, for that it happened in an vnseasonable time, after the losse of a battell: besides, seeing himselfe depriued of such a brother, it did but increase his griefe for the late death of his two sisters, the Queenes of Castile and Poygall, there remaying not any of so many children which the deceased King Fernand his father had left, but onely he and Don Alphonso king of Arragon, who was in a manner continually resident at Naples, and had no lawfull children. By this losse the king of Nauarre was wholly abandoned by the confederate Lords of Castile, who retired home to their

Condemnation
ons against the confederates.

Constable restored to fauor & made Master of S. James.

Beginning of the kings natured against the constable.

Pardon granted to the confederates fled into Nauarre, and other places.

A their houses to settle their affaires: but the King of Castile pursued them with all rigour of iustice, causing them to be proclaymed Rebels, and forfeiting their lands to the crown, without respect of any: yet the Prince D. Henry laboured so, as the Admirall was put out of the roule of them that were condemned, but not without difficultie. In the castell of Medina of Rio-secco was Donna Theresa of Quignones, with Donna Joane wife to the King of Nauarre. The king being come thither, he receiued the place, and vied the Ladies graciously, by the Princes intercession, who persued the Admirals goods, estates, and family, vpon condition that he should returne to the kings seruice, within foure moneths: notwithstanding Queene Joane remayned in the king of Castiles power: and the League against the Constable was so disperfed, as there was not any towne or castle, but was yielded vp into the kings power, nor any man of name that durst oppose himselfe: but some retired into Nauarre, and others into remote places, and little frequented by the Court: The Admirall, the Earle of Benauent, Don Diego Manrique, Gouvernour of Leon, Don Pedro of Quignones, and Iohn Tobar, went towards Nauarre: by reason whereof the King fearing some enterprise of that side, came to Burgos. Don Aluaro de Luna, the Constable being freed from so great enemies, grew to be in greater credite then euer, and whereas he had bene but administrator of Saint James, he was made Master of that Order, which honors were but baytes of misfortune which did follow him, to plunge him in extreme miserie.

C He entertayned friendship with the Princes of Portugall as his last refuge: and in the time of this warre had procured for the king of Castile a succour of 1600. horse and the Infant Don Pedro, Regent of the Realme, a young Prince but seuentene yeares old, brought to Majorca after the battell, where they were receiued and feasted with great ioy: but for that there was no vse for them, they were sent backe payed and well satisfied. In this voyage, the Constable treated with the Portugals, to haue the King his master, (whose Queene was dead fixe moneths before) to marrie with Donna Isabella daughter to the Infant D. Iohn deceased, who had bene Master of Saint James in Portugall, where with he had not made the king in any sort acquainted, so much hee presumed of the power he had ouer him. This marriage with some other things, were afterwards the cause that the King did hate him mortally.

This Prince D. Henry, and many other knights considering how great a losse it would be, if so many great Lords and worthie men should be estranged from Castile, they delt so with the king (who of himselfe was patient and tractable) as they obtained a generall pardon for all such as had carried armes with the King of Nauarre: vnto the which these Articles following were annexed:

That a pardon was granted to the Admirall, who should returne into Castile, when he had leaue from the king, and should retire vnto the tower of Lobaton, in the which, and the limits thereof, he should remaine confined two yeares: The Earle of Benauent had the like sentence to remaine in his house at Benauent two yeares: and that he should take into his charge and guard Donna Joane Queene of Nauarre, and not suffer her after the two yeares expired, to depart without the kings commandement, and the consent of Prince Henry, and after that the Earle himselfe, and that the Admirall had taken an oath of fealty vnto the king, to serue him against all men, according to the lawes of Castile. These things being thus concluded, the King being at Burgos, he gaue the title of Marquis of Santillana, to Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, for his good and acceptable seruice: to Don Iohn de Pacheco in fauour of the Prince, the title of Marquis of Villena: the gouernement of the castle of Burgos, held till that time by the Earle of Plaisance, was giuen to Iohn de Luxan. Not onely the king of Nauarre, but his sonne the Prince Don Charles, yea Don Alphonso of Arragon, Master of Calatraua, lost at this time all they had in Castile. Don Pedro Giron, brother to Don Iohn de Pacheco, was made Master of Calatraua by the king, being at Auila, and Don Alphonso, who was retired into Nauarre with his father, depriued thereof: yet D. Iohn Ramirez of Guzman great Commander of the Order, tooke vpon him the title of Master, against D. Pedro Giron: which contention was afterwards reconciled by the Princes authority and others.

The generall History of Spaine.

Lib.19

In the meane time they did write out of Murcia to the king, that they suspected the A Moors would make some attempt: wherefore it was necessarie to provide for that frontier, but it was a briere without effect, for that King Mahumet Alien-Azar, then reigning, was forced to defend himselfe in his owne Realme, against another called Mahumet Alien-Ozman, called Coxo, his nephew, who had rebelled against him, to deprive him of his Realme, as he did, hauing intelligence with many Morish Knights of Granada, by whose meanes he seized of the citie, and of Alhambra, and tooke King Mahumet his vnckle, who at that time lost his Realme, beeing the third time, and neuer recovered it more, in the yeare, one thousand, foure hundred, forty and siue, hauing reigned thirteene yeares and three moneths.

Castile

The King of Castile went into Extremadura, and forced D. Fernand of Aualos, sonne to the sometimes Constable D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, to yeeld him vp the fort of Albuquerque and others, which had belonged to the Infant D. Henry, in consideration of some recompence which the deceased Infant his Master did owe him. The king beeing at Toledo, he tooke the Gouvernement of the cittie from Pero Lopes of Ayala, who was a partisan to the King of Nauarre, and gaue it to Pedro Sarmiento. There were many complaints made by the Officers, and lesser Magistrates of the cittie, the which the king dissembled: for that the Prince fauoured him, and was much discontented for that hee was put from his gouernement of Toledo. In the meane time the King of Nauarre, (who was also as Regent in Arragon, in the absence of King Alphonso his brother) provided money, and all other meanes to renew the warre in Castile, whereas hee yet held two strong places, Atienza and Torrijo, and by the meanes of Gaston Earle of Foix his sonne-in-law, (who had married D. Leonora his second daughter, to whom afterwards the succession of the Realme of Nauarre fell) he pretended to draw some great succours out of France. In Atienza Roderigo of Rebollo was Gouernour, with a garrison of two hundred horse and foure hundred foot: who by their continuall alarmes, killing, burning and carrying away all they encountered, whereof there came daily complaints vnto the king of Castiles eares: wherefore there were some troupes of horse sent to restrain their courses, vntill there might be a sufficient armie raised to beseege the place: and the better to attend this warre, the King reconciled certaine pettie quarrels, which the Prince his sonne did cause; and he granted libertie to the Admirall, and Earle of Benauent for their persons, restoring them to their Lands and Estates freely: and moreover he suffered that Queene Isabe, wife to the king of Nauarre, should be deliuered into her fathers hands, and kept by him, vntill that the king of Castile should determine of her deliuerie to the king her husband. D. Diego Gomez of Sandoval was also pardoned, the King retayning his forts still for two yeares: the like pardon was granted to his sonnes, and to D. John of Tobar, Lord of Berlanga: the fort of Berlanga did also remaine two yeares in the kings hands.

Siege of Atienza.

These things beeing thus ordered, the king went in person to the siege of Atienza, the which was furiously battered and assailed with engins of warre, and also with some iron Ordinance: for the casting of brasse Ordinance was not then vsed in Spaine: so as Roderigo of Rebollo, Captaine of the Garrison, seeing himselfe thus prest, gaue the King of Nauarre to vnderstand, that if he were not releued, he could not hold it long: whereupon the king of Nauarre, (who was not in case to rayse the siege) sent to propound some meanes of a truce with him of Castile, the which was granted vpon condition, that the townes of Atienza and Torrijo should be deliuered into the hands of Mari Queene of Arragon, for a certaine time limited: during the which they should conferre of the meanes to make a good peace betwixt the two kings: and if their quarrels could be determined, then the Queene should restore those two places to her brother-in-law the king of Nauarre.

Choler of the King of Castile

All hostilitie ceasing by this meanes, the king entred into Atienza, whereas moued by some vnknowne occasion, without regard of that which had bene capitulated, hee caused some houses to be sacked and ruined, and others to be consumed with fire, so as a good part of the towne was burnt: whereat the King of Nauarre was much offended, and would no more stand to the accord, nor deliuer the Castles and places to the Queene of

Lib.19.

The generall History of Spaine.

733

A of Arragon, reproching the King, that he had broken his promise, and giuing commandement to his souldiers, that they should vse all acts of hostilitie, and commit what spoiles they could in Castile, the which they did, and with such excesse, as the king of Castile sent backe in the yeare 1446. Don Charles of Arcellan, Lord of los Cameros, a great and famous Captaine, to suppress the robberies and insolencies of the Nauarrois in Atienza: and against them of Torrijo, Don Alphonso Carillo of Acugna, newly made Arch-bishop of Toledo, by the death of Don Gutierre Gomes of Toledo; either of them hauing three hundred Lances: but they of Torrijo made no great esteeme of the Arch-bishop nor of his followers, making roades daily into the countrey, and bringing great booties into their forts. They of Atienza were held more short and curbed by Charles of Arcellan.

The Arch-bishop hauing bene often beaten by the Nauarrois, and lost many of his men, the King commaunded Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, that taking the Arch-bishoppes forces, with some new that were assigned him, he should continue the siege of Torrijo, the yeare 1447. beeing well aduanced: The siege was long, notwithstanding that the towne was battered both with Artillerie and Engines, for John de Puellas who defended it, was a valiant and couragious Captaine, and of great experience: yet the continuance did so tyre him, as finding daily the want of men, victuals, and other necessarie munition, to endure a siege, and beeing out of hope of succours from the king of Nauarre, hee resolved to yeeld vp the place vpon very honorable conditions, and retired his men and baggage safe into Arragon: the towne and castle of Atienza remayning still in the power of the Nauarrois, who in despite of Charles of Arcellan, issued forth and spoiled the country; and moreover they tooke Pegna of Alcazar, a fort in the territory of Soria, from whence they did forrage, and carry away abundance of cattraile and other things, which they sent to sell in Arragon, where they had a safe retreat, as in a country belonging to their Princes brother, who was then at Naples, well aduertised, to his great griefe, of all the troubles of Castile, and the successe thereof, doing what hee could to pacifie them, both by letters and Ambassage, yet fauoring his brother D. John King of Nauarre.

This yeare 1447. the King of Castile was married at Madrigal, to D. Isabella, daughter to the Infant D. John of Portugal, Maister of Saint Iames, who was sonne to the King D. John, who was maister of Auiz. This marriage was the Constables ruine, the Queene being his enemy. The King of Nauarre being come to the Estates of Arragon, which were held at Saragozza, at that time, there to preside as Gouernor General in the absence of the King his brother, he was summoned by Doctor Surban, and a Prouost of the Court, sent Ambassadors from the King of Castile, to deliuer vp Atienza, as it had bene concluded: which Ambassadors complayned to the Estates, that they that spoiled the countrey of Castile, had their retreat into Arragon: whereunto answer was made that they would send an answer to the King of Castile by expresse Ambassadors: and soone after they dispatched Don Iames de Luna, Bishop of Tarrasone, and Don John of Ixar, who found the king at Soria, hauing charge to treat of a peace betwixt the two kings: The King of Castile appointed them to follow him to Vailledolite, whether he was prest to go, the which they would not do, and so they returned to Saragozza, without any conclusion.

In the meane time the Captaine, who had suffered Pegna of Alcazar to be surprized, beeing ashamed to shew himselfe before the King, by reason of his error, hee sought to repaire it, and surprized the fort of Verdejo in Arragon, the which he gaue to the king his master, who hauing set good garrisons vpon the frontiers of Arragon, hee went in great hast to Vailledolite.

This yeare dyed Pope Eugenius the fourth at Rome, who had bin condemned by the Councell of Basill, and in his place Amadeus D. of Sauoy was chosen, who at that time was Deane of Saint Maurice of the congregation of Saint Augustin, the hermitage of Ripaille, in the Diocesse of Geneua, who carried himselfe as Pope, all the time that Eugenius liued, notwithstanding that hee had retayned his dignitie: after whose death Nicholas the sixt being chosen at Rome, he renounced his Popedom, hauing held it 9 yeares

R r r

and 1446.

Torrijo besieged.

Second marriage of Don John King of Castile.

Amadeus of Sauoy called Pope Felix.

and five moneths, the rest of his dayes hee passed with the title of Cardinall of Santa A Sabina.

1448. The reason which drew the king of Castile in such hast to Vailledolit, was, for that hee had beene aduertised there were some knights would stirre vp new troubles: thither came Ambassadors againe to him from Arragon, in the beginning of the yeare, 1448. who hauing treated of many things, in the end they concluded a truce for seuen moneths, betwixt Castile and Nauarre: whereof the garrisons of Nauarre, beeing not aduertised in time, they continuing their hostility in Castile, they surprized the towne of S. Cruz of Campeço by scalado, it belonging to Lope of Rojas, whom they carried away, with his wife and many others. And moreouer, the Gouvernour of Albarazin seized vpon the castell of Huclamo, in the Bishoppricke of Cuenca, the which hauing beene ill guarded by the Castillans, was well worke by these, so as John Hurtado of Mendoza, recovered it by the meanes of a Castilian souldier, who was there in gouernement among the Nauarrois.

The king of Castile sent into Nauarre to summon Prince Charles in consequence of the truce, to deliuer Don Lope de Rojas, and the towne of Santa Cruz, the which was done. At that time a knight of Bourgondie called James of Lalain, did fight a combate, without any cause of quarrell, but onely to make triall of his valour, as it was the maner in those times, against Don Diego de Guzman, brother to the Lord of Torrija, at Vailledolit Don Diego was fore wounded in the fore-head with a battell-axe, after which they closed, but the King casting his staffe, parted the combate, and did great honour to the Bourguignon.

Ambition and couetousnesse, as they say, haue neither bounds nor bottome: the which shewes it selfe chiefly in such as haue the gouernement of great Estates, whereof at that time Don Aluaro de Luna, Constable of Castile was a notable president, who not content with the happinesse to haue seene a dangerous League, conspired to his ruine, by so many Princes, and great Noblemen broken, himselfe restored to the Princes fauour, and to triumph ouer his enemies, but hee would plunge them into the like miserie, as hee had escaped, and wholly gouerne the king and Realme with Don John de Pacheco the Princes Minion, and so diuide all the honours, fauours, and greatnesse of Spaine betwixt them. Don Alphonso of Fonseca, newly made Bishop of Auila, was an apt Counsellor for their desleigne, who was of opinion, that they should cause some of the great ones, who were offensive vnto them, to be committed to prison. Hauing therefore mediated an interview of the king and Prince betwixt Tordeillas and Villeverd, the Court beeing very great and stately, there were apprehended the Earles of Benauent and Alba, Don Pedro and Suero of Quignones, and Don Henry brother to the Admirall Don Frederick (who was also vpon the rowle, but beeing ill disposed, he came not to this interview) so as hee escaped, and so did Don Diego Gomes of Sandoual, Earle of Castro Xeris, who beeing either aduertised, or doubting of some practise, stayed at home: and afterwards hauing aduice, that the king came to Aguilar del campo, and the Prince to Lerma, to take the Admirall and him, they both left their houses, and retired to Nauarrete, and from thence passed to Tudela, where the King of Nauarre was, whose faction was the accusation and colour of these imprisonments: the Constable saying moreouer, that they had conspired to kill him.

The Admirall and Earle of Castro, were very kindly enterrayned by the King of Nauarre, who led them with him to Sarragossa, where it was resolved, that the Admirall should go to Naples to the King of Arragon, to acquaint him with the gouernement of Castile, and to sollicite him to come into Spayne, to ayde them to recouer their ranks, dignities and lands, or else that he would giue them leaue to vse his forces of Arragon. According to this Councell the Admirall embarked at Barcelona, and went to Naples. The king of Castile hauing no great confidence in Don Diego Manrique, who had the guard of the frontier of Nauarre, he forced him to leaue the forts of Ocon, Nauarret, and Treugno, and gaue them himselfe in guard to the Earle of Haro his Brother-in-law for one yeare. These things thus done, all the lands of them that were absent were seized on, and put into the kings hands, many Noblemen in Court beeing offen-

A combate.

Practises of
the Constable
D. Aluaro de
Luna.

A offended at these violences: but about all others they found the Earle of Albas imprisonment very strange, who had alwaies shewed himselfe a faithfull seruant to the king, and a partizan to the Constable: and euery man examined his conscience: many beeing terrified, remiembering that they had offended the King, or the Prince in some light matters: so as there were retreates made daily from Court without leaue, with other confusions, which made the king to see from whence the mischiefe came: besides, throughout all Spaine they spake plainly and boldly, that the Constables ambitious desire to raigne in Spain, had caused this tumult in Court, and so wronged the Noblemen that were prisoners. Don Alphonso King of Portugall, sonne to Donna, Leonora sister to the king of Nauarre, beeing dead in Castile, as it was thought, of payson, beganne to apprehend it: yea the King of Granado stirred in fauour of them that were so vnworthily pursued by the Constable: wherewith the king of Castile beeing moued, hee had a desire to seize vpon the Constable: yet distrusting the inconstancie of the Prince his sonne, he durst not do it.

There were some troupes of horse and foote sent to the frontiers of Nauarre and Granado, especially against the Moores, who spoyled the Countrie of Murcia, King Mahomet Aben-Ozman beeing solicited by the King of Nauarre, to do the worst hee could to this of a Christian Prince, yet vsuall among the Princes of this world, that are at warre, who oftentimes make religion a vaile to couer their couetous, and inordinate passions and affections.

18.
Moores of Granado incited by the king of Na-uarre against
Castile.

Mahomet Coxo, the 17. king of Granado.

D T His Mahomet called Coxo, beeing come to the Crowne of Granado, by the violence hee vsed against his vncle Mahomet, maintained himselfe with the like art, wheremany of the Knights of Granado beeing incensed, they retired themselves to Montefrio, a place which onely reiected the command of this tyrant, beeing held by Andalbar, who had beene high Marshall to King Mahomet the left-handed, who enterrayned an enemy to King Coxo, to dispossesse him of the Crowne, as hee had done his vncle.

It was the Infant Aben Ismael, who hauing followed the warre in the seruice of the King of Castile, had retired himselfe, with his leaue and fauour, to Montefrio, to this Marshall, and there had beene saluted for King, yet weake, and ill provided to make any attempt against Granado, and the Alhambra, the seate royall, which was held by Coxo: but God prepared him the meanes, and stirred vp occasions in time. King Coxo embracing the confusions and quarrels of Castile, which made them neglect the guard of the frontiers, and animated by the factions of Nauarre, entring into Andalusia, had taken the towne of Banamaruel by force, and carried away John de Herrera, who commanded in the place, with many other Christian prisoners, after that hee had slaine many: hee then besieged Bancalema, which was defended by Aluaro of Pecellins, the which he forced in like manner, putting all hee found in it to the sword: for which losses the Capitaines were not to bee blamed, for wanting pay they could not keepe the Garrisons of those forts full and compleat: and moreouer, hauing demanded succours from them of Izen, Vbeda, and Baeca, they could not obtaine it, by reason of the diffusions and quarrels betwixt the King and the Prince, father and sonne, which could not be so well and conveniently compounded, but vpon euery occasion they brake: so as the time beeing fauourable for the Moorish King, hee made daily and ordinarie roades into Castile, carrying away infinite spoyles of men, and innumerable multitudes of cattell and other goods, besides the taking and sacking of the Townes of Arenes, Huecar,

Exploits of the Moores in Andalusia.

Places upon the frontier of Castile abandoned by bad councils.

Velez the white, and Velez the red, with their forts and castles, all through the negligence of such as had the managing of affaires about the kings person, whereof some were so ill advised, as to give their opinions in counsell, that they should not trouble themselves for those petty places, which cost more the keeping, then they were worth, and that it was more for the profit, and the ease of his treasure, to suffer them to bee lost: for with that which should be spent in keeping them, they might fortifie other places of greater importance.

This yeare 1448. after the former losses, King Mahomet Aben-Ozman, was newly entred into the country of Murcia, making cruell spoiles: wherefore Don Alphonso Telles Giron, cousin to Don John de Pacheco, being newly made Gouvernor of Hellin and Chumilla, desirous to make triall of his good command, went hastily to field, where finding some of the Moores troups disbanded, he charged, and cut some of them in peeces, where the souldiers began presently to spoyle the dead, not caring to keepe any order or discipline, or to see if all danger were past. The Moores which escaped, and others that were not farre off, being aduertised of this defeat of their men, came vnto the place where the fight had beene, and finding the Christians dispersed like beasts, and busie at the pillage, they charged them furiously, so as most of them were slaine. Don Alphonso Telles with some few knights saved themselves by flight in Hellin, and by this route giuen vnto the Christians, the way was open for the Moores to spoyle and burne the countie at their pleasures.

Christians being victors, & lost at the spoile, are vanquish'd.

Castile.

The King of Castile could hardly preuent these miseries, beeing continually afflicted with seditious and mutinies in his Court and house, the Prince Don Henry giuing him infinite crosses, and for light occasion: the which did much displease the Constable, fearing that their discord would redound to his losse and prejudice, wherefore hee made ring that they should together at Tordeillas. At that time the Estates were held at Vaileddolit, where the King hauing declared, that hee went to see the Prince his sonne, to haue him concur with him, to the end they might punish Rebels, and reward the good, euery man hauing spoken something concerning that matter, Diego of Valera, Deputie of Cuenca, a wife Knight, did highly commend the Kings holy resolution, to seeke the vniou of his royall house, and to put in practise the act to distribute rewards and punishments in equal proportion, according to euery mans merits: but hee did aduertise him, as a faithfull vassall, that to do it without error and misprision, hee must take the course of iustice, and examine euery mans actions, and iudge with good aduice, the parties being duly called and heard, both present and absent.

The King tooke great delight in Diego's speech, and much more in a letter which hee writ vnto him afterwards vpon this subiect, full of good and wholesome counsell and aduertisements, whereof there were infinite copies taken by the Noblemen in Court, who dispersed them ouer all Spaine: but this wisdom was offensive to the Constable and his faction; wherefore Diego de Valera's recompence was, that the King took from him a pension which he before had giuen him, and moreover, hee was disappointed of his entertainment for the voyage hee had made to the Estates at Vaileddolit, with Gomez Carrillo of Albornoz, as Deputie of the Diocesse of Cuenca, to teach him to bee a Courtier, and not so zealous of the good of his Prince and country.

This good Knight was receiued into house by Don Pedro of Estuniga, Earle of Flaisance, who made him Gouvernor of his Nephew Don Pedro, supplying with his owne, the Kings ingratitude: who hauing seene the Prince, and somewhat reconciled their disioynted affaires, past to Ocagne in the Realme of Toledo, where hee was aduertised, that the Earle of Benauent had escaped out of prison from Portillo, and retired into his country, where hee had put a garrison, armes and victuals into his Castle of Benauent, and other places: Wherefore seeing himselfe engaged in a new warre, hee came discontented to Arcualo, and sent for his souldiers and vassalles to come thither, meaning to go against the Earle, who stayed not in Castile, but retired to Morgadojo, a fort of Portugall, where hee was well entertained by the commandement of King Don Alphonso, who did not greatly like the gouernement of Castile.

Ciuiil dissensions make many attempt: things against reason, and oftentimes such 19 Ciuiil warres

corrupt the best men.

as are in shew honorable, and of good conuersation, who otherwise would not undertake any thing that were dishonest: the which appeared at this time in Don Bertrand of Gueuara, Lord of Ognate, a Knight of great authority in Spain towards the North seas, who desirous to seize vpon the towne of Mondragon, in the Prouince of Guipuscoa, by reason of the seditious of Castile, he vsed such practises and meanes as hee thought would serue him: wherein he found the inhabitants contrarie to his will, incensed and supported by Gomez Gomales of Butron, a Knight of great alliance and power in Biscay, of the Ognazin faction, contrarie to Don Bertrand, who held the partie of Gambayn, who seeing himselfe disappointed of that which hee pretended, fell into such hatred of them of Mondragon, as he caused the towne to be fired in diuers parts, by some that he had set on: so as he made in a manner all to be most inhumanly burnt. Don Bertrand being apprehended by the kings commandement for this fact, and accused to haue set fire of a towne belonging to the Crowne, was in danger to haue lost his life: yet as in a time of confusion, money and fauour can do more then iustice, he had his life saved, making satisfaction to them that had beene burnt and dammified: to value the which there were arbitrators appointed, who by sentence adiudged most part of Don Bertrand's lands to the towne of Mondragon, and more they had giuen, if the foure arbitrators, chosen for the Inhabitants, had not beene corrupted with money. This towne of Mondragon endured this calamity, for that it would not bee alienated from the Crowne, for that they maintayned their liberties better so, then in beeing subiect to any subalternall Lord: and without doubt if Don Bertrand could haue seized thereon, he would haue kept it, in this time, full of reuolts and excesse, when as the confirmation or the pardon, had beene easie to haue beene obtained by a peace or otherwise. In cleargie matters this towne hath alwaies beene stout to maintaine her rights and priuiledges, still refusing to accept any Lay patron, as well in that which concernes the fruits, as the right of presentation in the towne and iurisdiction.

In the yeare 1449. the truce betwixt Castile and Nauarre beeing ended, the garrisons of Atienza and of Pegna of Alcazar went to field, and made the cruellest warre that might be. The King of Nauarre being exceeding glad that the Earle of Benauent had escaped into Portugall, he fortified himselfe with the fauour of king Don Alphonso by his meanes: and hauing drawne out of Nauarre and Arragon, and from the Moores in the Realme of Valencia, which were subiects to Arragon, a good number of fighting men, sent them vnder the conduct of Don Pedro of Vreca, Don John Fernandes of Heredia, Rodrigo of Rebollo, Don Fernand, and Don Diego, sonnes to the Earle of Castro, and of the iustice of Arragon, against the towne of Cuenca, making his base sonne Don Alphonso of Arragon, late Master of the Calatraua, Generall of this armie: the which ioyning with the troups which John Hurtado of Mendoza, and Lope of Mendoza his brother, sonnes to Don Diego, had rayfed for his seruice, for that they were entred into quarrell with the Bishop of Cuenca, and were become his enemies, might amount to fixe thousand men horse and foot: with these forces the citie of Cuenca was besieged, the which was defended by the Bishop Don Lope of Barriento, a better souldier then a Diuine, although he had some fame for that facultie in Spaine, and by Alphonso Chierino son to Fernando Alphonso Chierino, Syndic of the citie, and by Lopes and John of Salezar brethren, Captaines of the garrison, and the Inhabitants who made such resistance, as notwithstanding that the Nauarrois had taken Saint Anthones tower, at the bridge, and giuen great assaults in other places, yet they defended the place, and repulst the enemy, who despayring to take it, raised the seige, the which they did the rather, for that they were aduertised, the Constable came with great forces to succour it. Towards Requena and Vtiel, the king of Nauarre sent Don Baltazar sonne to the Earle of Huelua, with 200 horse and 500. foot, who running along the riuer of Xorquera, tooke a bootie of about 10000. head of small cattell: and the Inhabitants of Requena and Vtiel going forth to rescue the prey, they were incountred and defeated, thirty of their Knights beeing slaine vpon the place, and seuentie caried away prisoners by the Nauarrois, and the rest were all dispersed.

These were the King of Nauarres exploites, attending the returne of the Admirall

Rrr 3

Don

19.
Ciuiil warres
corrupt the best men.

Ognazins and Gambayns, factions in Gui-puscoa and Bisc-cay.

20 Exploites of war betwixt
the Nauarrois
and Castilians.

Accord betwixt the King of Castile and Na-
uarre.

Houses of strength retroais for theeues ruined
in Guipuscoa.

22
Birth of the Infanta D.
Isabella who was Queene of Castile and Arragon.

23
Nauarre.

some (who was light and inconstant) vnited vnto him, cutting off all occasions of A factions and leagues, which might distraet him, attending a fit opportunity to make the Constable feeble his iust indignation: whereist this was working, D. Henry Henriquez, the Admirall brother, escaped from his prison of Langa, slipping downe by a rope tied with many knots. The Ambassadors of the two Kings being met, it was concluded that the Admirall and the Earle of Castro should returne into Castile, to whom and to D.
Henry their goods should be restored; Iohn of Tabor de Luna should bee restored, and D. Alphonso of Arragon put againe in possession of the Maistership of the Calatrava, the which D. Pedro Giron held, against whom the King and all others would aide and support D. Alphonso, if he would not leaue it. These matters agreed vpon, were partly effecte, for D. Pedro Giron, being in possession of the places which belonged to the maister ship, and well assisted and followed, was the stronger.

In Guipuscoa, they of the towne of Montdragon, being not yet well pleased with D.
Bertrand of Gueuara, did ruine, by a Conuocation of the Commons, and the Kings permission, the tower and strong house of this Knight, which was in a meadow called Cal-diybar, which is to say, the valley of horses, whether many theeues and bandoliers retired themselves, whereby the towne was much damnified, and D. Bertrand was condemned in a thousand florins of gold, for their paines that were there assembled. The like was done vnto an other house belonging vnto the said Bertrand, neere vnto the towne of Salinas, two leagues from Montdragon. Many of Pedro Sarmientos souldiars being C laid hold on, in diuers parts of Castile, they were executed, yea a Gonner who had shot at the herauld, which the King had sent to summon the city of Toledo, who was drawne and quartered.

In the yeere 1451. Queene Isabella was deliuered of a daughter at Madrigal, who was also named Isabel, shee was Queene by inheritance of Castile and Leon, and wife to D.
Fernand King of Arragon, a Princeesse indowed with great vertues. The accord made betwixt the King of Castile and the Noblemen did not hold long, for the Prince D.
Henry had his priuate opinions, supporting D. Pedro Giron, Maister of the Calatrava, against D. Alphonso of Arragon, which made his attempts to returne into the Maistership vaine. D. Pedro at the instigation of the Toledans, seized vpon Torrijos and Orgas, D places belonging to D. Alphonso of Guzman, chiefe Marthal of Seuille. The Admirall and the Earle of Castro, finding no safety for their persons in Castile, returned into Na-uarre, and the rather for that they performed little, of many things which they had promised them. The Prince D. Henry caused the Earle of Alba and D. Pedro of Quignonnes to be conducted to the castle of Toledo, commanding they should bee well kept: for whole deliuey the people of Toledo, being turbulent, made great stirres, but without effect, yet within few daies hee deliuered D. Pedro of Quignones, making him to swear that he would follow him, and serue him well and faithfully: for they prepared to make warre against Nauarre, causing him to promise to imploy himselfe, to draw the Admirall and the Earle of Benauent to his seruice, who had either of them married a sister of D. Pedros. The Court being at Zamora, the King propounded to his Councell, in the presence of the great men of Castile, an accusation against Pedro Sarmiento, who was, by the aduice of them all, condemned as a rebell and guilty of high treason: which sentence being confirmed by the Pope, they did confiscate all his goods, and they did seize to the Kings vse vpon Salinas of Agnana, Ocio, Pont Lara, and other places of his in Guipuscoa, Alaua, Biscay and elsewhere in Castile. From Zamora the King came to Toledo (being at it seemed in good termes with the Prince his sonne) to goe and make warre against the King of Nauarre, giuing the Government of that city to the Constable, who at his departure left D. Lewis de la Cerde, one of his breeding vp there, and did accompany the Prince, who marched towards the frontiers of Nauarre.

The Castilian army entred into Nauarre by Viana which they could not force; the King of Nauarre hauing well furnished and fortified the places of the frontier, and therefore they past to Torralba, where the garrison making a furious sally vpon the Castil-lans, had almost put them in disorder, and to flight, D. Iohn of Beaumont prior of Saint Iohn in the realme of Nauarre, being Governour in Torralba. Finally he defended it so well,

A well, as they left it, and going through the territory of Berrueca, they went and besieged Estella, whereas Lope of Baquedan was Gouvernour for the King of Nauarre. There the King of Castile came and ioynd with the Prince his sonne, bringing a great power with him.

It is likely that the castle of Buradon was taken and razed at this voiage: whereat the Prince D. Charles, who with the royall counsell gouerned the realme in the absence of the King his father, was so greued, being the best fort of Nauarre, as hee held the whole realme to be lost: and they say, that as one out of hope, hee tooke a deuice of two grey-hounds gnawing of a bone, signifying, that the realme of Nauarre, figured by the bone, is scituated betwixt Castile and France, and that the Kings of these realmes, which B were the two grey-hounds did either of them deuour of his side. The city of Estella being furiously battred and assaulted, the Prince D. Charles was of opinion to goe and speake with the King and Prince, in their campe; hauing therefore obtained a passport, he was courteously receiued by them, and his well-spoken reasons so fauourably heard, as they were in a manner forced by his modesty and good behaviour to raise the sege, the which a great army could hardly haue done: so great force hath vertue, which is fashioned by good education, in a Noble disposition: and in truth, there was not to bee found (according to the report of Authors) in that age, a more generous Prince nor better taught, then D. Charles of Nauar: for besides the naturall gifts of beauty, mildnesse, C affability to al men, and greatnesse of courage at need, he was learned in the Scriptures, which gouerned his manners, hauing also the knowledge of many good & commendable sciences, by the which he was admirable in his life time, and famous after his death: Hee loued poeie, hee was well read in Histories, and a subtil Philosopher for his young yeeres: so as he translated Aristotles Ethikes into the Castilian tongue, turned into Latin by Leonard Aretin, who florished at that time: wherein hee shewed great dexteritie and iudgement, treating of that subiect in such fit termes, as without all doubt Aristotle hath not written better in Greeke, nor Aretin so wel in his traduction in Latin: this book was dedicated by him to his vncler D. Alphonso King of Arragon. Moreouer hee did write a breefe Chronicle of the Kings of Nauarre his Progenitors, beginning with the D most ancient time, vnto King D. Inigo Arista, and from thence hath continued the History vnto the reigne of King Charles his Grandfather, which Chronicle is to bee found at this day in written hand, but full of errors, made by them that haue copied it, for it was neuer printed. He did also write some verses, imploying the time which he could spare in the government of the realme, in these honest exercises: so as this Prince was cherished, beloued and blest of euery man but of his own father, of whom he demanded the realme of Nauarre, being his mothers Inheritance, which bred him great troubles, and aduersity, wherein he made prooffe of his courage and singular patience, the which was better knowne and lamented after his death.

The King of Castile and the Prince his sonne hauing raised his sege from before Estella, left Nauarre, without doing any other harme, and returned to Burgos, from E whence soone after they led an army against Palençuela, whereas D. Alphonso Henriquez, the Constables sonne, had fortified himselfe, and committed infinite spoiles round about. The sege being before this place, the Constable going neere the walles, to view the scituation thereof, a seruant of the Admirals, called Fernand Tremigno, sallied out of the towne, with thirty men well armed, who came and charged the Constable and them that were with him (being vnarmed) so sodainely, as they put them all in daunger of their liues. It behoued the Constable to shew his resolution, who like a valiant and hardy Knight (as in deed hee was) with his rapier and cloake, made head against this troupe, and the rest by his example putting themselves also in defence endured the F charge, vntill that succors came vnto them from the next lodging of the army; which made the enemies to turne head; and retire towards the towne with some losse, the which yeelded afterwards vpon composition. From thence the King went vnto Madrigal, where hee had newes that the affaires vpon the Moores frontier succeeded ve-rie well.

King Mahumet Aben Ozmen, called Coxo, that is to say, the Halting, had made offer to Moores.
the Deuice of two grey-hounds gnawing of a bone carried by the Prince

of Nauarre.

Vertues of D.
Charles Prince
of Nauarre.

Writings of Prince Charles.

The Constable
charged and in danger so bee
saue.

Moore's defeat and newe unto Arcos.

An. 1452.

An other defeat of Moore's.

24
Nauarre.

An. 1453.

25
Castile.

the King of Nauarre, to fauour his quarrels, promising that when he should inuest Castile by Nauarre and Arragon he would enter by Andalusia, and assaile the city of Cor-doua with all the power of his realme. This Moore hearing afterwards that there had beene some accord made betwixt the Christian Princes, did not forbear to make warre on his part withall violence, sending troupes of horse and foot diuers waies to spoile, whereof a band of six hundred horse and eight hundred foot were incountred nere vnto Arcos, by D. John Ponce de Leon, Earle of Arcos, who made a notable slaughter. This Nobleman beeing somewhat sickly in Marchena, had beene aduertised of the disorder which these spoilers caused by a Christian renegado, sometimes called Benedict of Chincilla, and then he was named Menfarres: wherevpon drawing together about 300. horse and 600. foot, he went that way, being led by his spy, where hauing marcht foureteene leagues that day and night, he came the next day where the Moores were, who expected him not, who hauing put their foot-men before, to recouer some place of safety, the horsemen made head against the Christians, and fought long, whilst that their footeretired: but in the end the Earle of Arcos had the victory, there being aboue foure hundred horsemen slaine vpon the place, and siue and fifty taken prisoners, with a hundred good horses offeruice. The Moores fainted not for this route, but within a while after, and the same yeere 1452. they entred by Murcia, hoping to haue better successe in that country, being six hundred horse and fifteene hundred foote, who hauing ruined a great part of the country, vsing al kinds of cruelty, they draue away aboue 40000. head of cattaille great and small, and about fifty prisoners: whereof D. Alphonso Fajardo being aduertised, hee wrote speedily to D. Diego of Ribera, Gouvernor of Murcia, Marshall of the Kings lodging, that he should come forth of the city with all that were fit to beare armes, the which he did presently, and came to Lorca with seuenthy horse and siue hundred foote, whereas D. Alphonso Fajardo met him with two hundred horse and 1500.
foote, with these forces they went to affront the Moores, and charged them, breaking them three times, but they rallied themselves twice againe together, yet at the third they were victors, with the slaughter of aboue eight hundred of their men, and twelue captaines; and of Christians there were forty slaine vpon the place, and aboue two hundred wounded: by which victory, the booty was rescued. There is no other mention made in our Histories of the deeds of this King Mahumet Aben Ozmen the Lame, but that hee was depriued of his Realme by the Infant Aben-Izmael, who kept at Malaga, being assisted and fauored by the King of Castile, but the yeere is not certaine.

D. Frederic Henriques Admirall of Castile, being retired againe to his sonne in law the King of Nauarre for that they kept not the promises made in the aboue mentioned accord, did also thinke that it was lawfull for him to say, that for his part hee would not be bound to performe to the King of Castile that which he had sworn and promised:
wherefore he led with him Queene Isabe his daughter, and deliuered her to the King her husband. This married couple being together, it was not long before the Queene was with child, she remayning at a place called Fresne in Arragon: where King John beeing exceeding glad of these newes, he caused her to goe into Nauarre, there to be deliuered.
She made her residence in the towne of Sanguessé, the remainder of the yeere 1453.
and there she applied her selfe, with the Prince Don Charles, and the Councell of the Realme, to the government of the State, the King her husband consenting therevnto, but it was not very pleasing to many Knights of Nauarre, who were affectionate ser-uants to the Prince, namely to the family and faction of Beaumont: holding that the authority of a mother in law could neither be good nor profitable for the Prince nor Realme.

The time of the Constables punishment did now approach, the measure of his villa-nies being full, whereof he himselfe did seeke Iustice, by his impudency, and vnlymited desire of reuenge. He hated D. Pedro of Estuniga Earle of Plaisance deadly, and was in like manner hated by him. The Constable laied an ambush for this Earle, to take him prisoner, which was the greatest matter he could doe to be reuenged his mighty enemies; for being once taken, it was easie for him who had the authority and force of the Realme in his power, to finde them guilty.

The

A The Earle being aduertised of this practise, he did impart his defeigne to the Prince, the Marquis of Santillana, and to the Earles of Benauent and Haro, with others: which was, to loose his life, or to make the Constable loose his. The Prince Don Henry made him no answere, as the rest did, who by the negotiation of Diego de Valera, laied a plot amongst them, that the Earle of Plaisance and the Marquis of Santillana, should send their eldest sonnes with siue hundred Launces, vnder pretext of a quarrell which was betwixt the Earle of Benauent, and D. Pedro Aluarez Osorio; and that passing neere vnto Vailledolite, whereas the King and the Constable were, they should finde means to seize vpon a gate, & drawing their men into the town, they should take or kil the Constable, publishing, that it was done by the commandement of Prince Henry. But it succeeded not, for the Constable beeing aduertised hee caused the King to dislodge and led him to Burgos. These things beeing imparted by the King of Castile to Queene Isabel, who was no friend to the Constable, she embraced this occasion, and induced the King to let these Noblemen doe what they had resolved, the which was easie to effect for that the King was already distast of his Constable.

The Queene did not only this good office, but she did sollicite the confederates to make halt, whilst the time was fit; sending the Countesse of Ribadeo vnto them, vnder colour to visit the Earle of Plaisance her vnkle, who had fortified himselfe in Bejar, carrying letters of credit, who did informe them, as shee was commanded, of the time, place, and meanes they should hold, to seize vpon the Constable, or to dispatch him. This C Ambassage deliuered vnto the Earle, reioyced him much: and for that he was lame himselfe, he presently sent D. Aluaro of Estuniga his eldest sonne, with Diego of Valera, a Se-cretarie and a Page, to leauy men in Curiel, where they could not for the shortnesse of time assemble aboue seuenthy Launces, with the which D. Aluaro went towards Burgos:
and going before vpon a Mule, with one man that did attend him, hee entred into the Castle of Burgos, commanding his men to follow after, giuing it out in the Country, that they did belong vnto the Constable, but aboue all, that they should so obserue the time, as their comming into Burgos should bee by night, and that they should not offer to come into the castle, vntill they had newes from him; the which was duely executed, and these seuenthy Knights entred into the castle on Monday at night, the first of May in the yeere 1453. whereas D. Aluaro had already drawne in the same night two hundred of his friends of the towne well armed.

The day following there was an vncertaine brute, that the Constable should bee apprehended, who had many other presages of his ruine, if hee could haue fore-seene it.
The King being priuy to all these matters, had a conceit that this apprehension could not be made without great scandale, and therefore he sent commandement to D. Aluaro, that hee should returne to Curiel, for that he could not execute that, for the which hee was come, but D. Aluaro, a valiant and hardy Knight, made answere, that vpon his life hee would seize vpon the Constable, and deliuer him vnto him, so he would be pleased to giue him a decree, or warrant to apprehend him, the which the King caused to be made in this

E forme. D. Aluaro of Estuniga, my Alguazil Maior, or Marshall, I command you to apprehend the body of D. Aluaro de Luna, Master of Saint James, and if he offer to defend himselfe, that you kill him. And moreouer the King commanded the Rectors and Aldermen of the city, to put the people in armes, according to their regiments and bands, and to keepe them in battaile in the Bishops place, at the breake of day. At which time D.
Aluaro going out of the castle, to inuest the Constables lodging, and to take him, hee re-ceiued diuers commandments from the King, that he should not fight, but onely beseege him, and set gards about his lodging, that he might not escape, which did much discontent him. Comming neere the place, his men beganne to cry, Castile, Castile, for the F Kings liberty: At which noyse the Constable came to the windoe, and his men put themselves in defence, many shot, both with bowes and harguebuses, wherewith there were some slaine, and others hurt. D. Aluaro of Estuniga sent often to intreat the King, that hee would giue him leaue to fight, for they slue his men from the windoes of the Constables lodging, but he would neuer grant it. Therevpon arriued D. Alphonso of Carthagea Bishop of Burgos, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoza Lord Steward, to whom the Constable,

Queene Isabel sues the Lords against the Constable.

Presage of the Constables end.

Warrant to apprehend the Constable.

Death of D.
John King of
Castile.

where the Queene his wife was, leauing the whole government of his Realmes, to the 2<sup>d</sup> A boue named Bishop and Prior. His sicknesse increasing, he made his testament, and left to Queene Isabel the city of Soria, with the townes of Madrigal and Arenal, and to his sonne D. Alphonso the administration of the Maistership of Saint Iames, whom hee would willingly haue made heire of his crowne, and King of Castile and Leon, if it had beene lawfull, so much he did mislike Prince Henry his eldest son, for his disobedience and lightnesse. To his daughter D. Isabella, he gaue the towne of Cuellar, with a great quantity of gold for her dowry. He did not long suruiue his Constable, but died of the violence of his quarten ague, at Vailledolit, in Iuly the same yeere 1454. hauing held the Realm 47. yeeres, being 49. yeeres old and fiue months: his body was for that time lied in B the Monastery of St. Pablo of Vailledolit, to be transported to the Carthusians of Mire-fleurs at Burgos, as he had ordained by his testament. The Constables death had reconciled the King of Nauarre vnto him, and restored all the other Noblemen to fauour, yea the Admiral D. Frederic, who was then fled into Arragon: notwithstanding hauing made to much hast to re-enter into Castile, without an ample licence from the King, hee had commandment to goe backe, and not to returne into Castile, vnlesse he were sent for, ype-on great penalties. This King had resolved to make warre against D. Alphonso King of Portugal, for the descoueries which he made vpon the Westerne coast of Affrike, beyond Cap Verd, towards Guinee, saying these conquests did belong to the crowne of Castile, but death brake of this desleigne, and continued the peace of Portugal.

27
Portugal.

The Estate of which Realme after the death of King Edward had beene governed by the Infant D. Pedro, in quality of a Regent, chosen by the Estates, by reason of King Don Alphonso young yeeres. D. Pedro had for his greatest Aduersary his brother D. Alphonso Earle of Barcellos, and his sonnes, the Earles of Oren and Arroyolos, notwithstanding which contention, King D. Alphonso beeing come to the age of sixteen yeeres, married at Saint Iren, with Donna Isabella, daughter to the Infant D. Pedro, receiuing the nuptial blessing from the hand of D. Fernand Archbishop of Braga. D. Alphonso Earle of Barcel-los, sonne to King John, had obtained in the yeere, 1448. of his brother D. Pedro Regent of the realme, although they were in quarrell, the Estate of Branganca, in title of a Dutchie, and the castle of Lotero, by the decease of Don Gonsalo, who held all those D places.

This good turne was ill required by the new Duke: for he seeing him make no shew to giue ouer his Regency, notwithstanding that the King had beene declared capable to gouerne his realme himselfe, and being married, he put a conceit into the Kings head, that the Infant D. Pedro had caused Queene Leonora his mother, to be poisoned in Castile, and that he sought to doe the like to him, that he might seize vpon the crowne. For this cause the king did persecute D. Pedro his vnkle: so as he forced him to retire to Coimbra, of which hee was Duke. Being much incensed at this iniury, hee had certaine practises with them of Lisbon, to giue him entry and support in that city, with his partisans and friends, whereof he had many, meaning to rebel against the king his Nephew. E These practises being discovered, the king gathered together all the men he could with great secrecy, to surprise D. Pedro vpon the point of the execution of his enterprise: and came and incountred him as he was comming to Lisbon, at a place called Asorrobei-ra, where hauing fought with him, vanquished, and slaine him, hee ended those troubles.
It may be the Infant was innocent of the death of Queene Leonora: but if it be true that he caused poyson to be giuen her, hee was paid with the like money, for hee was slaine with a poisoned arrow. There died many good knights in this battaile, and amongst others D. Aluaro of Almada, Earle of Abranches.

Defeat and
death of the Infant D. Pedro
Duke of Coimbra.

They did for a long time refuse to burie the Infants bodie in the royall Monastery of the battaile, an argument of the kings great harred, and of the Duke of Bragan-ca's against him: yet they had cause to lament him, for they wanted him in the Go-uernment; The duke of Braganca soone after demanded the City of Porto, and the towne of Guimaranes of the king, the which hee gaue him: Guimaranes re-ceiued him, but Porto would not in any sort: for they would maintaine themselves for the king, and so did Portalegre, which the king had giuen vnto the Earle Don Sancho

A Sancho of Logroño, brother to D. Constance, the Duke of Braganca's second wife, being sister also to D. Pedro Archbishop of Lisbon.

In the yeere 1451. Donna Leonora the Kings sister was married to the Emperor Fra-deric the third duke of Austria, and the betrothing was in the city of Lisbon, by the Noblemen that were deputed by him, hauing full power and authority, who afterwards conducted their Emperre by sea to Pisa, being accompanied by the Marquis of Valencia, by D. Lewis Contin, Bishop of Coimbra, D. Lope of Almada Earle of Abrantes, and other Noblemen of Portugal: whose marriage was celebrated at Siena, the yeere following 1452. In the which King Alphonso had a sonne by his wife, called D. John, which liued little. That yeere the body of the Infant D. Pedro, vnkle and father in law to the King, was B taken from Alberca where it had beene interred, and transported to the castle of Abrantes, or at the least his bones.

Marriage of the Emperor Frederic the 3<sup>d</sup> and D. Leonora
of Portugal

The coast of Affrike, towards the Westerne and South seas, were at that time discouered by the Portugals, who brought gold from Guinny, whereof King D. Alphonso caused a certaine coyne to be made, which hee called Croisats, by reason of the Croisadoe granted by Pope Nicholas the fifth to make warre against the Infidels. D. Aluar Gonzales Bishop of Lamego, was the bringer of this Croisadoe into Portugal. D. John the second King of Castile, being growne iealous of these nauigations and conquests, as I haue said, sought to hinder them, sending word vnto the King Alphonso that they did belong vnto the crowne of Castile, and therefore he did forbid the Portugals to goe thither any more, else he would make violent warre against him. King Alphonso answered his C Ambassadors (who were D. John de Guzman, and Doctor Fernand Lopes of Burgos) very mildly, that he had alwaies held that the conquests and descoueries of those coasts did belong vnto the Realme of Portugal: yet he would alwaies, if need were, submit himselfe to iudgement, and would desist, if it were said, that it did belong to any other: and therefore he intreated him that, without good information, hee would not breake the peace betwixt the two realmes: Herevpon the King of Castile died, in the yeere 1454.
at which time King Alphonso had a daughter borne, called D. Isabe, which was a very ver-tuous and religious Princesse.

Descouerie, of the coast of Affrike, by the Portugals
which discontented the Castilians.

In the end, the body or bones of the Infant D. Pedro, hauing remained some time in D the castle of Arantes, and removed from thence to Saint Eloy at Lisbon, they were buried, at the intercession of the Pope, the Duke of Burgundy, of the Duchesse his wife, and of the Queene D. Isabella, and of many Noblemen and Prelats, in the Monastery of the battaile: so great account they made of a small matter in these ceremonies, as the whole world must of force bee therein employed. The funeralls were celebrated with great pompe and solemnity.

The end of the nineteenth Booke.

SS 2

THE

THE TWENTETH BOOKE of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 D On Henry the fourth of that name, & nineteenth King of Castile, and fortieth of Leon: his disposition and qualities.
- 2 Forgetting of offences, rebellions, and riots past: repealing of the Lords absent from Castile.
- 3 The Government of Castile at this Kings coming to the Crowne.
- 4 Warres against the Moores.
- 5 The divorce of D. Henry the unhable King of Castile, with his second marriage.
- 6 Quarrels betweene the Prince D. Charles of Navarre, and Queene Ioane his mother in law. Partialities of Beaumont and Grammont in Navarre: warre betweene the father and the sonne.
- 7 Last deeds of the King of Arragon, D. Alphonso the fifth, his royall disposition and qualities.
- 8 Commotions in Biscay.
- 9 Continuance of the warres against the Moores.
- 10 Advancement of diuers of meane condition in the Court of Castile.
- 11 Insolencies of D. Iohn of Pacheco Marquis of Villena.
- 12 Domesticall affaires of D. Henry the unhable King of Castile, his loues, and vanities.
- 13 D. Iohn the second of that name, the eighteenth King of Arragon: troubles betweene him, and the Prince D. Charles his sonne.
- 14 Affaires of Castile: hatred and enuies of Court.
- 15 Enterprises of the Prince D. Charles against the King Don Iohn his father: his overthrow and imprisonment: and of that which followed afterward, euē vntill his deliuerie and death.
- 16 The warres of Granada.
- 17 Government of Castile, and of the affaires of Conrr.
- 18 Warre betweene Castile and Arragon.
- 19 Behaviours of King Henry the unhable, and of Queene Ioane his wife: the birth of D. Ioane the supposed Infanta.
- 20 Sedition and ciuill warre in Cattalogna, with the rebellion of the Barcelonois: and pawning of the Earldome of Rossillon to the French King.
- 21 Galton de Foix sonne in law to the King of Arragon and Navarre his behaviour towards his sister in law. Lady Blanche the heire of Navarre. Continuance of the warre of Cattalogna.
- 22 Arbitre

- A 22 Arbitrement of King Lewis the eleuenth, for the composing of the differences and disagreements betweene the Kings of Castile and Arragon; and those of Barcelona with their Prince. Enter view of the kings, Lewis of France and Henry of Castile, on the frontiers.
- 23 Murder of a lew collector of the subsidies in Guipuscoa.
- 24 Deceits betweene the Kings of Castile, Navarre and Arragon.
- 25 D. Pedro of Portugal chosen King by those of Barcelona.
- 26 Slandorous and false accusations of bloudy Monkes. Quarrels betweene the prelates in Castile.
- 27 Carelesnesse and iniustice of King Henry the fourth of Castile.
- B 28 The house of Bragança: unlucky enterprife of the King of Portugall D. Alphonso the fifth in Affrica.
- 29 Lady Ioane borne in adultery: promotion of D. Bertrand de la Cucua to the dignity of Master of Saint James. Masters of quarrell in Castile: Conspiracies and ciuill warre in that kingdome.
- 30 Dangerous enterprises and treasons of the rebels against Don Henry King of Castile, the King degraded by them, and his brother the Prince Don Alphonso lifted up to the regall dignity.
- 31 Donna Leonora Countesse of Foix, her cruell appetite and desire of government: her behaviour towards her elder sister.
- C 32 Continuance of the warre against the rebels of Cattalogna. D. Pedro of Portugal a tumultuous King in Barcelona, his exploits, and death: The taking of Tortosa by the king Don Iohn of Arragon.
- 33 The raising up againe of the king D. Henry of Castile: stirres in Andalusia by D. Pedro Giron. Agreements, recompences and gifts made and giuen by the king to his faithfull friends, and others.

Here follow the names of the Princes raigninge in Spaine in this twentieth Booke.

E CASTIL, and LEON. ARRAGON and NAVARRE.

19. D. Henry the 4. and XL.

18. D. Iohn 2. --- himselfe.

King Iohn the second being dead, his sonne Henry the fourth of that name succeeded him in the Kingdomes of Castile and Leon: who by diuers was surnamed the liberrall: for he was not onely bountifull, but a great water and prodigall, the which he did inherit from the King his father. The surname of vnhabable was giuen vnto him, by reason of his naturall weakenesse, being in the company of women, the which his Queenes had experience of: and yet those which haue written of his stature and proportion, say, that he was strong and bigge, of a manly aspect, fierce and hairy.

This Prince was light-headed, variable & inconstant: yet for all that offaire demeanure, courteous and affable to his familiar friends, in so much as he neuer said thou to any one

Stff 3

Surnames of liberrall and,
vnhabable.

Qualities and manners of the King D. Henry
the fourth.

he did euer maintaine his gravity with Princes: he was a louer of peace and did naturally put of from himselfe the managing of matters of State. Hee would at one time be bold and confident, without suspicion, and within a while after contrary to himselfe, solitary, and an enemy of company; most of which qualities he had by inheritance from his father. He did take great pleasure in hunting, in musick, and in buildings of houses of pleasure, and he did likewise erect monasteries with other religious houses: he would oftentimes sit and sing in Churches with singing men: he was a great eater, but he did neuer tast any wine. By his bounty and liberality he raised diuers to great honors and riches who were issued from base and obscure families. Thus King Henry, at the age of one and thirty yeeres was proclaimed King at Valiodolit in the presence of D. John of Pacheco Marques of Villena (his most priuate and familiar friend) and his brother D. Pedro Giron Maister of Calatrua; D. Ruy Diaz of Mendoza, great Maister of the household to the late King D. John. D. Pedro d' Aguilar, Lord of Priego and of Cagnette, the Marshal D. Diego Fernandes of Cordoua Lord of Baena, and other Noblemen which were then at the Court.

The beginning of his reigne was very plausible, by reason that he did enlarge of his owne accord, without being thereunto solicited by any one, D. Garcia Aluares of Toledo Earle of Alua; and D. Diego Manriques Earle of Treuigno, restoring them to all their former riches honours, and dignities; and hauing made a certaine speech to the Lords that were then about him, they gaue him great and humble thanks, reputing that demonstration of his clemency as an high fauour, and so with al reuerence kissed his hands. He displaced none of all those which were in any office or place of dignity during the life of his father, but received them into his seruice in the selfe same quality that they were in before. In regard whereof all men thought the Kingdome happy being fallne into the hands of so good, so courteous and liberall a Prince, and they did yeeld infinite thanks vnto God, the only giuer of so desired and necessary a fauour for the Realmes of Castile and Leon.

Diuers great Lords so soone as they heard of the death of King John, came in all hast to mourne with him for the same, to do him reuerence and to take the oth of allegiance due to the new King. The Ecclesiasticall persons were, D. Alphonso Carrillo d' Acugna, Archbishop of Toledo, D. Roderigo de Luna Archbishop of Saint James, D. Alphonso Fonseca Archbishop of Seuill, D. Alphonso de Carthagena Bishop of Burgos, Friar Lopes de Barriento Bishop of Cuenca, D. Alphonso de Madrigall, called Tostado the most renowned Bishop of Auila, D. Pedro Baca Bishop of Leon, D. Pedro of Castile Bishop of Palenca, D. Goncallo of Illesca Bishop of Cordoua, D. Lewis d' Acugna Bishop of Segobia, D. Inigo Manrique Bishop of Ouedo with diuers other prelates. The secular Lords were D. Fernand de Velasco Earle of Haro, D. Alphonso Pimentell Earle of Benauent, D. Gaston de la Cerde Earle of Medina Celi, D. Diego Manrique Earle of Treuigno, D. John Manrique Earle of Castagneda, D. Roderigo Manrique Earle of Paredes, D. Galvriel Manrique Earle of Oforno, D. Aluaro of Estuniga Earle of Plaisance, whose father was newly dead, much about the time of the Constables decease, D. Pedro Aluares Cisorio Earle of Transamara, D. Pedro d' Acugna Earle of Valencia, another D. Pedro d' Acugna Lord of Duegnas and Tariago, brother to the Archbishop D. Alphonso Carrillo, D. John de Sylus Standard-bearer to the King, and many others, who with the deputies of townes and Prouinces there assembled, swore to the Kings fealty and homage after the accustomed manner.

Now the King being desirous to suppress al fore-passed quarrels, and to settle a firme peace in his dominions, did at his comming to the crowne send Ambassadors to the King of Nauarre, who greatly complained because of the confiscation of all his goods in Castile, whereupon it was concluded that in recompence of all the wrongs that hee could pretend, he should haue certaine yeerely pensions assigned him out of the ordinary reuenue of the Kingdome of Castile, in regard of which assignation he should deliuer vp into the King of Castiles hands, the townes of Atienza, La Pegna de Alcazar: it was likewise agreed vpon that the Admirall D. Frederic, D. John of Tourar Lord of Berlanga, the children of the Earle of Castro lately dead, and all the Knights and others which were

The King of Nauarre and other Lords pacified, recompensed & repealed by the new king
D. Henry.

A were fled out of the Kingdome by reason of the late warres, should be repealed and restored to all their goods and lands. These things were soone effected, and the Admirall with the rest returned to Valiodolit to kisse the Kings hands, who received them very graciously, and yet for all that did put them in minde of the faith and obedience due to Kings, to the end they might the better remember it afterward, and so with his free pardon dismissed them. And besides all this, the better to confirme his peace on all sides with Christian Princes, he sent Ambassadors into Italy to Alphonso King of Arragon, to the end to renew the leagues and antient alliances betwixt the crownes of Castile and Arragon, who were received and entertained with great honour; a notable argument whereof was, that as the Ambassadors of Castile and the Commissioners of Arragon stood vpon termes who should be first named in the instruments and writings, the King D. Alphonso decreed that the precedency should be giuen to Castile, in regard that he himselfe reigning ouer the Arragonois was a Prince issued from the stocke of Castile, an antient race of the Kings of Gothes: so that in all the writings which did concerne the league and alliance, the King of Castile was first named, the which his Ambassadors at their returne certified to him and his counsell to their exceeding ioy and contentment.

But notwithstanding these good beginnings, if the reigne of the late King John was turbulent and troublefome, and if euer Spaine was scene to be shaken with furious tempests, it was now most of all by the miserable gouernment of his sonne King Henry, whose clemency and carelessse gentleness was the onely cause thereof, making him to forget the other part of the duty of a Prince which is Iustice, by means whereof he fell into the contempt of the great ones of his Court, and namely of his most priuate minions, so that both hee and his Kingdome fell into very dangerous streights. At the beginning he and his affaires were gouerned by D. John de Pacheco Marquis of Villena, a wise, rich, and discreet person, and one well scene in the manning of state-affaires, likewise by the Archbishop of Seuill, D. Alphonso de Fonseca, a prelate of an excellent wit, but lesse graue then befecemed the place and ranke he held; by whom for certaine yeeres space the Kingdome was well gouerned to the contentment of all men.

The first martiall enterprife attempted in the reigne of King Henry was against the Moores of Granado, ouer whom reigned Ismael, the same who had taken the crowne from Mahomet the Lame: for the execution whereof King Henry assembled the Estates of his Kingdome in the city of Cuellar, vnto whom hauing propounded what he ment to doe, D. Inigo Lopes de Mendoza, Marquis of Santillana in the the name of them all, answered him in such eloquent and discrete termes, as did highly please and content him. The warre beeing resolu'd and decreed in that assembly, every man went home to his house to make preparation, and in the beginning of the yere 1455. they began to march towards the frontiers of Andaluzia. The King parting from Segobia ordained viceroys in Castile and Leon for matters of Iustice, D. Alphonso Carrillo Archbishop of Toledo and D. Pedro Fernandes de Velasco Earle of Haro, who should keepe their residence at Valiodolit. The army being in a redinesse entred into the Moores country, being in number five thousand horsemen, and a great company of footmen making great spoile euen to the wallies of the city of Granado, notwithstanding that Ismael had bene established King by the helpe and fauour of the King of Castile D. John deceased. On the fourth day the Christian army returned to Eccia, and some few daies after went towards Malaga, burning and spoyling as before, albeit that a great company of Moorish horsemen did oftentimes present them the combat, which the King by the wise and discrete counsell of his captaines did euer more refuse, and brought backe his army in safety to Cordoua laden with all manner of spoiles.

This yere the sure begonne many moneths past betweene king Henry of Castile and Ladie Blanche of Nauarre his wife) was ended before Pope Nicholas the first, of whom hee entreated to be divorced from her, and to take another wife, because, as he said, she was barren. The Pope granting his request, separated them, albeit it was very well knowne that the fault was in himselfe, and not in the Ladie, who with great griefe returned home into Nauarre, hauing lost the title and dignity of Queene of Castile: but King Henry,

Castile preced before Arragon.

3
The contentment of a Prince, is accompanied with iustice &
mercy, a bold
heart, and his estate.

4 Moores and Castile.

5
Castile.

not

Second marriage of the K. Don Henry the 7th.

not being contented with the experience which he had made of himselfe with this Ladie, would needs make proofe of another, and by D. Fernand his great Chaplaine caused a marriage to be treated of betwene him and the Infanta Donna Joane of Portugall, sister to king Don Alphonso, and daughter to the late king Don Edward, a Princeesse of great beauty, who was betrothed vnto him, notwithstanding she had sufficient notice of the kings infirmities, yet she consented thereunto, being tickled with a desire to beee Queene of Castile. The king Don Henry without receiuing any thing with her, did endow her with an hundred and twenty thousand florens, to be leuyed vpon cite Real, Omedo, and their lands, and for her ordinarie expences, a million, and 500000. marauadis then currant. It was also agreed, that the Infanta his next wife might bring with her a douzin Ladies of noble parentage, vnto whom the King would giue husbands fitting their degrees, and of these the Ladie Beatrix de Norogno should be gouernesse, who for her part had leaue to bring with her foure yong Gentlewomen, with like hope. All these things promised and confirmed by the king, Don John de Guzman the first Duke of Medina Sidonia, and Earle of Niebla, was sent to meet the Infanta, who brought her to Cordoua where the marriage was solemnized with great magnificence: the Arch bishop of Tours being then Ambassadour in the Court of Spaine for the French king Charles the 7. performed the ceremony. All manner of pompes, shewes, and pastimes accustomed at such feasts were there performed, sauing that in the opinion of all men, the Bride remained the next day as pure a virgin as she was borne of her mother. Both King Henries Queenes were his cousin germanes once remoued, daughters, the one to the king of Nauarre, the other of Lady Leonora of Arragon his sister, cousin-germaines to his father.

About this time Pope Nicholas, by his death, gaue place to a Spaniard borne in Xatua, a towne in the kingdome of Valencia, called Don Alphonso Borgia, Cardinall of the title of S. Sixtus, who was named Calixt the 3. a man of 77. yeares of age, who had beene a Counsellor to Alphonso K. of Arragon. By him was made Cardinall a nephew of his named Rodrigo Borgia, yet he was not of the family of Borgia, but of the Lançoles, a noble family in the kingdome of Valencia, sonne to Don Jeffrey Lançol, Lord of Canales, and to a sister of Pope Calixt, he did intitle him Cardinall of S. Nicholas in carcere Tulliano, who afterward attayned the Papacie.

Ambition of D. Joane of Portugall.

Whilest that the marriage lasted at Cordoua, great numbers of souldiers were drawne from all parts of Castile into Andalusia, the number of them amounting to about foureteene thousand horse, and fourescore thousand foot, whose chiefe Commanders were the Admirall Frederic, the Duke of Medina Sidonia, the Marquis of Santillana, hee of Villena, the Earles of Alba de Tormes, Benauent, Arcos, S. Estephan, Alba de Lista, Valence, Cabra, Castagneda, Oforno and Paredes, and the Arch-bishop of Seuille, besides others of lesser note: with these forces the king entred into the Moores country, and with out dis-banding his army, or giuing aduantage, or hope to the enemy to come to battell, hee made roades vp and downe for 20. dayes space, so as it was thought, that the Moores would not be able in many yeates to gather any profit or fruit in their country, the which the king thought to be the surest and easiest way vnto the ruine & ouercome them. Hauing brought backe his army to Eccia laden with spoiles, not long after, he discharged the greatest number of them, and dismissed the Marquis of Santillana, the Earles of Benauent, Alba, Plaisance and others home to their houses, he himselfe remaining in Andalusia with the people of the country, and the town garriisons did make continuall roades vpon the Moores all that Sommer, at the latter end whereof he returned to Auila and Segobia, to giue order for the war of the yeare following.

Wars against the Moores.

Alphonso king of Portugall hauing by the marriage of his sister confirmed the peace and auncient alliances with the Crowne of Castile, determined with himselfe to vex the Moores in Affrica: the same yeare in the city of Lisbon was born vnto him a sonne, who at his christening was named Don John: the baptisme was solemnized by Don Fernand Arch-bishop of Braga, the Infant was carried by Don Fernand his vnckle, his Godfathers were the Earles of Arroyolos, and Don Vasco of Ataydo, Prior of S. Johns, and D. Payo Correa: the godmothers, the Infanta D. Catherine the Kings sister, and the Ladie Beatrix de Meneses one of the Queenes chiefe Ladies.

In

A In these times began the troubles and calamities in Nauarre, occasioned by the factions in that kingdome, after this manner. The Prince of Viana Don Charles was in his flourishing age, and in the absence of his father had, very vertuously, with great iustice, and to the liking of all men, gouerned the Realme of Nauarre, by the good counsell of the Lords of the countrey: and namely by the Lord Lewis of Beaumont: now the king his father hauing married to his second wife the Ladie Joane Henriques, daughter to the Admirall of Castile, would haue made her a partaker in the gouernment, the which was distastful by many, who did stirre vp the Prince, being lawfull heire of the Kingdome, not to suffer his mother-in-law to thrust her selfe into the command of his possessions. The desire of rule which tickleth all great and magnanimous natures: did so farre possesse the Prince Don Charles, hitherto obedient to his father, as hee declared vnto him the purpose that he had to enioy alone the right of his mothers inheritance, in which his mother-in-law had no part, and thereupon made preparation to send her forth of the countrey, and to resist the king his father, if he opposed himselfe against his determination, and in conclusion to haue by way of armes that which he purposed. From this pernicious quarrell, which proued so successeles to the sonne against the father, did spring the two factions of those of Beaumont and Grammont, which so many yeares did infect the kingdome of Nauarre, names taken from two mighty families, to wit, that of Beaumont beyond the Pirenean hills, and that of Grammont on the hither side neere vnto France, albeit that the house of Beaumont had his originall from Normandy, and was first of all called Lusa, neuertheless both of them of old issued from the blood royall of Nauarre, the which the armes of both those houses do witness, and namely, the chiefe of the faction of Grammont, who are the Marshalls of the kingdome, the Marques of Cortes, do not intitle themselves of Grammont but of Nauarre. Now the Lord Lewis of Beaumont Constable of Nauarre, being chiefe of his house, he and all his followed the Princes: on the contrarye, the house of Grammont and their adherents, did maintain the Kings quarrell against his sonne, and of this house were chiefe, the Lord Peter of Peralta, who by reason of these tumults was made Constable, and the Marshall Don Pedro of Nauarre. The sonnes reasons were, that being sonne and lawfull heire to Lady Blanche the right Queene and heire of Nauarre, he ought to gouerne, seeing that the king his father had made a second marriage, which barred him from any pretence of right or claime. On the contrarye the king sayd, that by agreement of his first marriage, it was concluded, that whether he had any children or no by his wife Queene Blanche, that he should raigne during his life: to the which article the Lords and States of the kingdome were sworn, and therefore it ought to take place.

Nauarre. Don Charles cannot endure his mother-in-law partaker with him in the regimēt.

The desire of rule, an affliction of a magnanimous nature.

Factions of Beaumont and Grammont in Nauarre.

The house of Beaumont called of old, Lusa.

The Prince disputed against this poynt, as being made to his preiudice, not good in law, and therefore of no force: for as by the lawes of the Realme, two being married, the suruiuer enioyeth the goods of the partie deceased, so long as they continue in widow-hood, but so soone as they marrie againe, they lose that right. Now the question was, whether the condition agreed vpon in the contract of marriage, in the behalfe of K. John, made against the lawes of Nauarre, and to the preiudice of the Prince his sonne, were good or no: but how iust so euer it was, they fell to armes. Queene Joane remaining in Estella, being aduertised of Prince Charles his conspiracie, gaue forth with notice thereof to the king her husband, who came out of Arragon into Nauarre with a great company of men at armes, vnto whom those of Grammont ioyned themselves. First of all he tried by messagers and ambassadors, if hee could diuert the Prince his sonne from this dishonorable pursuit, whereby (as he sayd) he did blemish the shining luster of the races of Nauarre, Castile, Arragon, and France, from whence he was descended: the question betwixt the father and sonne was brought to very good termes, by the reasons alleged by King Johns Ambassadors, had not the counsell of the chiefe of the part of Beaumont hindered it, who kept the Prince in his first resolution, to haue the absolute rule of his kingdome without any exception: and those of Grammont did incite the king against his sonne, both parts thinking (as it is very likely) to increase their honours, riches, and dignities rather by these troubles, then by the peace of the kingdome.

All treaties and negotiations of peace ceasing, the Prince assembled his forces, as well Knights

An. 1456. Knights as the common people of his partie, and carried himself asking the year 1456, A
 The Prince of Viana Don
 Charles caused himselfe to bee called king of Navarre.
 giving gifts, priuiledges, and liberties, with other royall acts, the letters and writings whereof were found in these times in the citie of Toralba, and other places of the country: he called also from Castile diuers of his friends, of whom certaine troupes entring by Logroño into Nauarre were ouerthrowne neere to Viana, by the King Don Isabell, who like a wife and a discreet Capitaine went and met them, not suffering all his sonnes forces to ioyne together, before that he had fought with them: after which exploit there were diuers encounters betwixt them with doubtfull victorie, neere to Estella, Pampelona, Olite, and Lombieri: so as the last battell of this first ciuill warre, was fought neere to the citie of Ayuar, in the which, by the prowesse and valour of Peter of Peralta, and Lopes of Castillo, and others of the faction of Grammont, those of Beaumont were vanquished, and Prince Charles taken prisoner, who was carried to Tafalla by the commandment of the king, who came thither soone after, and did labour to bring him to some agreement of peace, the which the sonne (being ill aduised) did contemne: and that which was worse, he going about to incite his neighbour kings to take in hand the defence of his cause, a packet of letters was taken which he sent to king Alphonso of Portu-gall, wherein diuers matters were discouered, by reason whereof hee was shut vp in the castle of Mont-Roy. Hereupon the factions were so fensed one against the other, as through all the cities of the kingdome, betweene neighbors and town-men, whole families did so bandie themselves, that infinite cruelties, murders, burning of houses, and other insolencies and impieties of ciuill warres were committed. The imprisonment of the Prince was so irkefome to the Lord Lewis of Beaumont, Earle of Lerin, as he did not cease by all meanes, and assurances that he offered, till that he had obtained his deliuerie of the King, for the which he himselfe (so dearly did he loue him) gaue his owne person in hostage, and remained in prison the space of seuen yeares. But when the Prince was at libertie, he wanted no counsellors to animate him to a new warre: for the desire of rule will not be bridled, especially in Kings children. Leaving then the Earle of Lerin as hostage, hee ranne to armes, and entred the field the second time, and then the factions of Beaumont and Grammont, returned euery one to his side, and made more cruell and barbarous warre then before, which the Realme did feele many yeares after. The end was, the Prince was againe defeated neere to Estella, and his people disperfed, but hee escaped by the swiftnesse of his horse, and hauing resolved neuer more to pursue this warre, he went to Naples to the king Alphonso his Vnkle, leauing his friends in Nauarre in great trouble and danger, where the seede of discord betwixt the two factions did en-crease and spring vp diuers times afterward.

Arragon.

The Prince Don Charles passing thorow France and Italy, was euery where received with great honor, and namely at Rome by Pope Calixtus a Spaniard: but chiefly his vn-cle D. Alphonso did feast and welome him, admiring his graue wisdom and kingly qualities, answerable in euery point to the report that had bene made of him: and being desirous to see him reconciled to the King Don John his father, hee laboured very much therein, performing thereby all the Offices of a louing kinsman and Christian Prince: for he did daily put him in mind of the duty of children towards their fathers, whereunto Princes are more bound than other men, in regard that their subjects do commonly fashion themselves after their examples: and on the other side, hee did write to the King
D. John, alledging all reasons that might be auaylable to induce him to loue and desire the presence of his sonne: but this good and vertuous king had not the meanes to accomplish so holy and laudable a work, being preuented by death, which seized on him in the new castle of Naples, the year 1458. hauing reigned two and fortie yeares and two moneths in Arragon, and foute and twenty yeares in Naples, in the 65. yeare of his age.

This Prince, after that Renée of Aniou had retired himself into France the yere 1442, finding himselfe master of the whole kingdome of Naples, had contention with the Venetians, in the behalfe of Philip Maria Duke of Milan, then against his sonne-in-lawe Francis Sforza, who was duke of Milan, and last of all against the Venetians, Geneuois, and Florentines in league together, in which wars he alwaies maintained the reputation of

A of a great and excellent Capitaine. And againe, in the year 1453. he had some likelihood of a future warre about his kingdome of Naples, against Renée of Aniou, who had repassed the mountaines, and was come downe into Lombardy accompanied with Lewis the Dauphin of France, with two thousand men at armes, hoping by the fauour of the duke
Francis Sforza, and the Florentines to be able to re-enter into his lost kingdome, and to driue Alphonso out of it, but that iourney proued vaine: then the King D. Alphonso being aking in peace, purchased the friendship of the Duke Francis Sforza, and contracting al-lyance with him, he caused D. Alphonso, sonne to his son D. Fernand of Arragon, duke of Calabria, to marry with Hippolita Maria daughter to the Duke Sforza: and hee did be-troth D. Leonora, daughter to his son Fernand, to Sforza Maria son to the same Duke Sforza, notwithstanding that his second marriage took no effect, for D. Leonora was after wards married to Hercules de Este, the second Duke of Ferrara. The king D. Alphonso being in league and friendship with the most part of the Potentates of Italy, Pope Calixtus a Spaniard borne in Xatua, his subiect, and one that had bene of his counsell, did euer carry a particular hatred against him, the which hee declared by the answer which hee made to the kings Ambassadors at Rome, at such time as they came to congratulate his assumption to the papall dignity: for they asking him in their masters name, how they should carry themselves one toward another: the Pope sayd; Let him gouerne his kingdome, and let me alone with my Popedom. And he did more openly manifest it alter the death of D. Alphonso: for hee did as much as in him lay, to minister all hinderances to D. Fernand his son and successor in the kingdome of Naples, disputing with him about his right therein, saying, that D. Alphonso his father could not appoint a king in the kingdome of Naples, which held of the Church, and that it was in the Popes power to inuest therein whome he pleased: and the king D. Fernand could neuer haue other remedie of him, who afterward was confirmed and established by Pope Pius his successor. Now *D.
 Alphonso* had bene absent halfe the time of his raigne out of his kingdome of Arragon, leauing his wife D. Maria of Castile Gouernor in his Realmes and Dominions in Spain, a vertuous and chaste Princeesse, assisted by his brother D. John of Nauarre. By this Lady he had no children, and he parted from her the second time in great anger, by reason of D her ielousie wherewith she was greatly possessed, the which made her to commit an act inhumane, cruell, and in no sort royall: for shee vnderstanding that the king her husband made loue to one of her Ladies, named D. Margaret of Xar, she caused her one night to be strangled in her bed, being with child in the citie of Valencia, the king being at that time for his pleasure abroad on hunting, which was a speciall cause that hee cared neuer after to liue with her. By other wiues he had D. Fernand, who succeeded him in the kingdome of Naples, D. Maria of Arragon married to the Marquis of Ferrara, D. Leonora of Arragon, Princeesse of Ruffano wife to Martin Marzan. At his death hee left for heire in his kingdomes of Arragon, Valencia, Sardynia, Majorca, Minorca, and Sicill, his brother the King D. John of Nauarre.

E The gifts and qualities of this Prince comprehended in few words, although they deserue a great volume, were these: concerning the bodie, he was of meane stature, actiue and well proportioned, of colour somewhat pale, quicke-sighted, and gracious, he had a hawke nose, a signe of an haughtie nature: hee was briefe and luccinct in his speech, but neat and eloquent, sweet and amiable in his answers, and oftentimes quicke and pleasant: few kings had their minds more disposed to goodnesse then he: the Religion according to those times, and the ceremonies belonging thereunto hee had in singular recommendation, so that it is reported of him, that being on a time at Masse, by meanes of a great Earth-quake the church wherein he was, was so shaken, as the people fearing to be slaine by the fall thereof, fledde out at the doores, hee onely remayned vnmooued and fearelesse. And seeing the priest which sung Masse readie to runne away for compa-nie, hee stayed him and enforced him to make an end of his seruice. He was liberal to all men, and magnificent in gifts, especially to Princes and their Ambassadors: Hee was a louer of iustice, and yet neuertheless mercifull, full of commiseration, and slow to condemne any man to death, the which he could temper so well, as his clemencie profited, and redounded to the benefite of diuers: yet offenders were punished and corrected, in such

The great loue of the Earle of Lerin to the Prince Don
 Charles.

Ingratitude of Pope Calixtus.

A cruell act.

Genealogie of
 Arragon.

Disposition of King D. Alphonso of Arragon the 5.

such sort, as his Realmes were neuer since his time so well gouerned, and cleansed from all manner of violence and outrage. When hee had ouercome his enemies, hee did all waies shew himselfe meeke and gentle, hee tooke delight in all excellent things, vsing alwaies great modestie therein: hee was sumptuous in moueables, in gold and siluer plate, iewels, and other ornaments of rare esteeme, except about his owne royall person, which was euer apparessed according to the common vie and fashion of his Gentlemen, not delighting in rich and costly stufes, nor new fashions: hee was stately and magnificent in martiall playes and shewes, which were frequent in his Court, and no lesse in buildings, whereof the royall pallace, the bridge, and great Hospitall of Sarragossa do make mention.

The new castlle at Naples, brought into the forme which now it is, is a worke of hishe made the fortresse of the Egge habitable and commodious: hee caused the marshes about the citie to be dried vp: hee builded shippes of no meane greatnesse, which seemed like castles vpon the sea, hee entertaigned a great number of huntsmen: but his chief delight and pleasure was in hawking. And beeing a warlike Prince, hee made two enterprises into Barbarie, the one to Zerba, anciently called the Isle of the Lotophages, the which hee tooke, and defeated in battell Butifer king of Tunis, who came to driue him thence with aboute an hundred thousand Moores: the other against the towne properly called Affrica, the situation whereof hee very well viewed, hauing a purpose to returne thither, where he burned all the shippes and vessels that he found in the haven: when hee was at peace in the kingdom of Naples, he gaue ayde and succour to the Despotto of Acarnania assailed by the Turkes, and to Seanderbeg Prince of Albania warring vpon the same nation, where his souldiers gaue sufficient prooffe of braue warriours, which did greatly redound to the Kings honour. A man would scarce beleue what honour and respect hee did beare to learning and learned men, beeing oftentimes wont to say, That a King without learning, was like a crowned Ass, the which sentence hee had read in the pre-King without learning, was like a crowned Ass, the which sentence hee had read in the pre- face before the Spanish Translation of Saint Austens booke Of the Cittie of God, and therefore hee employed part of his time in the study of letters, although hee were of good yeares before hee beganne: and hee did neuer neglect the reading of Bookes, nor his conference and disputations with learned men, how great affaires of State or warre soeuer hee had.

Learning and beloued men
Don Alphonso
Sentence of D.
Alphonso.

Beeing well stricken in yeares, hee euer had in his company an old Grammarian called Master Martin, with whome hee delighted greatly to discourse both abroad and at home, and hee did so profit at his studie, that hee did translate Seneca's Epistles, a worke very hard, intreating of morall Philosophie, into the Spanish tongue: hee tooke such pleasure in reading the holy Scriptures, as hee would often vaunt, that hee had read the old and new Testament fourteene times ouer. To shew the singular affection hee did beare to learning and learned men, hee gaue for his Deuice in armorie an open booke, and hee would say, that Bookes were Princes best Counsellors, with protection, that hee had receiued best counsell of the dead, meaning of his bookes.

In the deuastations and spoyle of Citties during his warres, hee reserued for his part of the spoyle, bookes, which were carefully sought for and brought vnto him, hee would read with great delight Titus Linius, and Casars Commentaries, so that besides the sundry reparations of Schooles and Auditories, where hee assigned pensions to the Doctors, Regents, and schollers, his Court was daily frequented with the learnedst men of his time, to wit, Bartholomew Facio, George of Trebizonde, Laurentius Valla, John Arispa, Antonio of Palermo, and others. Hee did honour the great Captaines and worthie men in the Art militarie, of what nation soeuer they were, likewise Grauers, Architects, excellent Engineers, skillfull Marriners, and generally any man of worth and desert in what art or science soeuer: so that hee left behind him the eternall and euer-during memorie of a Prince truly vertuous, valiant, bountifull, and esteeming vertue as it rightly deserued.

Learned men belong to K.
Alphonso
Court.

Now King Don Alphonso beeing dead, and his sonne Don Fernand beeing in trouble at his first comming to the Crowne, diuers citties, and some great Lords of the kingdom of Naples, did moue and stirre vp the Prince Don Charles of Nauarre to take

A to himselfe the same Crowne which they offered vnto him: but he made them such an answer, as they perceiued thereby, that he had learned to be modest, to follow equity and right, and not rashly to cast himselfe into another mans possession. And for that hee would not giue any euill suspicion of himselfe, hee went into Sicill, a Kingdome fallen by the death of Don Alphonso to the King his father, with those of Arragon, Sardynia, Majorca, Minorca, Valencia, and the Principalltie of Cartelogne, in the which by right belonging to the eldest sonnes of the Kings of Arragon, hee obtrayned in esse the principalltie of Girona; and the right of succession in all these Kingdomes afterwards: He remained and continued a while in Sicill, greatly honoured and beloued of the Sicillians, during which time hee was amorously familiar with a very fayre and beautifull Gentlewoman of a meane of Spring and parentage, named Capa, on whome hee begate two children, the one named Don Philip of Nauarre and Arragon, who was Master of the Order of Monteca, and dyed in the warre of Granado in the seruice of the King Don Fernand his Vncle: the other was called Don Iohn, who was Bishoppe of Huelca. Hee had also a daughter named Donna Anne of Nauarre and Arragon, who was Dutchesse of Medina Celi, and wife to Don Lewis de la Cerde: but it is vncertaine whether shee was borne of this mother.

Genealogie of Nauarre and
Arragon.

As the aboue-named tumults and dissentions continued in Nauarre, the Princes of Guipulcoa and Biscay beeing neere-bordering neighbours, and wrapped vp in one selfe same ayre, entred into ciuill or rather vnciuill dissentions, hauing likewise their factions of the Gamboines and Ognazines, who could not bee repressed by any forme of iustice. Therefore the King Don Henry was aduised to go thither in person, the which hee did, and there by the aduice of his Councell, and vpon information made of those troubles and outrages, he razed and ouerthrew diuers towers, and strong houses belonging to the chiefe of the Factions, which serued for places of retreat and harbour for murderers and euill-disposed persons, who committed infinite insolencies and outrages in the Countrey. In which number were the tower of Olago in the iurisdiction and confines of Elgoiuar, the house of Lescano, the house of Snigo de Saldibua in the Cittie of Tholosa, that of Fernand D'Alagarrin in the towne of Guettaria, and others in the Countrey of Anduayn, in the towne of Vergara, and else-where, as well in Guipulcoa, as in Biscay, in which journey hee tooke into his seruice in the Cittie of Durango, the sonne of an Inne-keeper, named Fernuco of Munfaras, who afterward became a man of great repute and estimation.

8.
Castile.

Strong houses in Biscay and Guipulcoa
ouertrowne.

So soone as hee came to Victoria, hee called before him out of euery towne of Biscay and Guipulcoa, two or three men depured, with whome hee intreated about the gouernement and iurisdiction of the same countrey, hee confirmed diuers and sundrie Liberties and Priuiledges graunted by the Kings his Predecessours, and left there for Gouernour and Commaunder John Hurtado of Mendoça, one of his priue Councell: Notwithstanding all these demolishments, with that of the strong and inexpugnable Castle of Montdragon, the murders, thefts, deuastations, factions, and rebellions in Biscay and Guipulcoa did continue, countries in all times infamous, because of these matters, vntill the raigne of the King Don Fernand the fifth, and Queene Isabell, who rooted out the factions of Gamboines and Ognazines: by meanes whereof iustice began to take place there.

At the Kings departure from Victoria, hee came by great iourneies to Cordoua, hauing a great desire to the warres of Granado, into the which Kingdome he made a furious entrie, finding often resistance by the Moores who kept his armie close, not suffering them to straggle, who vpon a day did surprize certaine Castilian troupes, where amongst other of note, Garciago de la Vega, a valiant Knight, and welbeloued of the king, was slaine: by reason whereof hee commanded, that all the vines, oliue trees, and all other kind of trees bearing fruite throughout the whole territorie of Granado should bee cut downe. Hee besieged and took the towne and strong castle of Ximena, and did such hurt, that King Ismael was constrained, not being able to resist, to begge a truce, and to submit himselfe to such tribute, taxation, and other conditions as should best please him.

9
Moores.

Truce between Granado and
Castile.

It was then agreed vpon that the Moore King should pay to King Henry twelue thousand A doubloons of gold for tribute, and should become his vassall: that hee should giue him yearly during the time of the truce sixe hundred Christian prisoners, and where they were wanting as many slave-Moores to be deliuered as Cordoua at a day appoynted: And that the waite should continew open on the side of Iacn: In regard of which things, and the present payment of the first yeares tribute, the Christian army discharged the residew of his army. Albeit he vsed great diligence in these warres against the Moores, yet it was not of so great importance as the wars made by his predecessors, B whether it were through the Kings negligence, who was soone weary of businesse, or through any other occasion, so as he began to fall into the contempt of his owne people, The Earle of Castagneda left vpon the frontiers, to repress the inuasion of the Moores, was a Lord as castlesse and negligent as his maister, and there-withall couetous, by the reason whereof, within a while he found himselfe very meanely accompanied which the Moores vnderstanding they laid a strong ambush for him, into the which they craftily drew him, hauing sent some to forrage the fields, who being pursued by the Earle, hee perceaued himselfe, to bee hem'd in on euery side, and so with great losse of his people he himselfe was taken prisoner, whereof the King being aduertised sent in his place another Captayne called Michael Lucas de Franço, with commission and charge to C change the truce made with King Ismaell, into a peace, provided the payment of the tribut-mony agreed vpon by the truce, the which did greatly please the Moore King: and so ended the warres of Granado, the Earle of Castagneda being redeemed with a great summe of mony.

A sword blessed by the Pope on Christmas Eve.

The King contemned by his subjects.

Gifts giuen by King Henry the fourth.

Pope Celestus taking pleasure in these warres against the Moores did about that time send to the King Don Henry a Hatte and a Sword, which they yle to bless vpon Christmas Eaue, at night, laying them vpon the Altar where they say Masse, which they terme the Masse of the Cocke: and hee did write vnto him, exhorting and animating him to pursue so holy a warre. About this time died D. Alfonso of Carthagea, Bishoppe of Burgos a Prelar highly esteemed of the Spaniards, who wrote an History of Spaine D intitled Anacephaleosis with other workes.

Now the small estimation of the King was manifest ouer all Spaine and came vnto his owne eares, which made him become suspicious, and hee began against his nature to distrust the great ones, to counterpose whome, hee advanced diuers of his seruants of base and meane degree to great honours, and authority. Hee made Gomes de Caceres and Solis, Maister of Alcantara, and gaue the City of Coria to a brother of his: he made Bertrand de la Cueva, Sonne to Diego de la Cueva of Vbeda, great Maister of his house and Viscount of Huelma, who hauing bene his page, and carried his lance, became one so greedily in his fauour, as no man so much. The office of Constable was giuen to Michael Lucas of Franço borne in Beaumont, a meane gentleman, and with that the towne of Agreda, the Castles of Verato and Volsmedian, with the Captainehip of Iacn, the towne of Andujar, with other rents and possessions: and to one of his brothers the commandery of Montizon, and that of Orjea to another: which are the best places belonging to the order of Saint James: he gaue the Priory of Saint John, to John de Valenquela, the Bishoppe-ricke of Iacn to Alfonso de Peleas, and that of Auila to Martin de Vilches, euery one of these places to bee surrendered so soone as they should be voyde.

The Marques of Santillana Don Inigo Iopes de Mendoza being dead, who was also Count de Real de Mançanares, his Sonne Don Diego Hurtado was confirmed by the King in his Fathers dignities, but hee was compelled to come and stay at the Court, and to bring thither his brethren, Don Pedro Gonçales de Mendoza, Bishoppe of Calaorra, who was since the Arch-Bishoppe of Toledo, and Cardinall. Don Inigo Iopes de Mendoza, Don Lorenzo Suarez, Don John Hurtado, who hauing killed the kings hand, were with the Marquis commaunded not to stirre from the Court.

Being

A Being at Madrid the yeare, one thousand, foure hundred, fifty eight, where hee celebrated with great cost and royall magnificence, the Funerals of the King Don Alphonso of Arragon, dead at Naples, hee committed an act in the behalfe of the Marquis of Villena, scarce well digested. This Marquis in regard of the affaires and gouernement of the kingdom had the same power, and almost equall boldnesse which the Constable Aluaro de Luna had in the time of the King Don John, and hee would let nothing fall to desire which was profitable or commodious for him or his: Now hee had a great desire to make a marriage betweene his eldest sonne Don Diego Lopes de Pacheco with the Countesse of Saint Stephen de Gormas, daughter and heire to Don John de Luna, and Grand- child to the Constable Don Aluaro, who at that time was in the gouernement of an vn- C cle of his named also Don John de Luna, Nephew to the Constable, who was Captaine of Soria, and the Marquis did not onely practise the marriage of his eldest sonne with his Neece, but also to dispossesse him of his Captainehip of Soria, with other lands which he held: For the obtayning whereof, hee caused the King to haue him in suspicion, saying, That hee was one of the conspiratours which were ioyned in league and confederacie against his seruice.

Violent marriage of the Countesse of S. Stephen de Gormas, and D. Diego Lopes Pacheco.

The King did easily and willingly belecue this report made by the Marquis, and feigning to ride on hunting, hee came to Aillon where Don John de Luna kept his residence, who did receiue and feast both him and his trayne very sumptuously, and with great magnificence, who riding amongst the rest of the companie, hee was no sooner entred into the fields, but he was arrested as prisoner, without knowing any cause or reason thereof. In the end hee was enioyned to dispossesse himselfe of Soria, and other fortresses and places of strength, and to receiue into them such garrisons as should please the king: whereunto hee must needs obey, on paine of loosing his head, so as hee did not onely yeeld vp Soria, but all that which did belong to the Countesse his Neece, and her person also: and so the Marquis had that which he desired.

The contempt of this Prince encreasing daily, Don Alphonso Fajardo, the chiefest Knight of Murcia, holding a long time Carthagea, Lorca, and other places against the Kings will, and these that ruled and gouerned him, had likewise in a manner taken D himselfe by force, the Master-shippe of Saint Lamies, and the Marquisate of Villena, committing many outrages and insolencies vpon the lands and reuenues belonging to the King and Marquis, being ayded and releued sometimes by the Moores of Granado. Against him Gonzalo de Sabañeda was sent with sixe hundred horse, by whose care and diligence, Don Alphonso lost all that which he held of his owne and other mens, and so became a poore and miserable Knight, hauing nothing left him but onely his sword and his cloake, accounting and esteeming it for a great fauour and extraordinarie kindnesse to haue his life saued.

Don Alphonso Fajardo, a contemptuous rebel chastised.

This man had his deserts, and the King continued in his carelesnesse, so as he was no more feared. About all the townes of his Kingdome, the abode at Segobia and Madrid pleased him best, because hee louing hunting better then affaires of consequence, E this Countrey being woody was very fit for it, as also abounding in victuals and provision for his Court, which was very great: for hee did daily carrie about with him, a guard of horse-men to the number of three thousand and sixe hundred Lances, with an incredible expence, wherewith his reuenues was charged to the vttermost; the which his chiefest Treasurer Don Diego Arias, like an honest and faithfull seruant, put him in mind of on a time, beseeching him to cut off so superfluous an expence: you spoake (quoth he) like Diego Arias, but I will liue like a King, and that was all the answer hee could receiue. By his bountie and liberality he was well serued and attended on by diuers, and in those dayes those of his Councell, Chancerie, and Iudges, did discharge their duties very sufficiently. In Arcualo one of his Secretaries named Pedro de Tieda was put to death, and others of his complices, for counterfeiting the Kings letters, and selling them for great summes of money. Being in the cittie of Leon, hee caused certaine Gentlemen to bee brought out of Galicia which had dispossessed a Knight of his house, hauing commanded their processe to be made, they were there for the same put to death. Such iust executions were sometimes done, but hee did greatly faile in other matters.

The Kings Guard borne thus, and Superfluous.

An answer of R. Henrys (said) King of small judgement.

T t t

The

At the end of the yeare 1458. Queene Isabe made hir magnificent and royall entrie into A the Cittie of Leon: then they came to keepe Christmasse at Escalona, where the Kings chiefe delight and recreation was in hunting, and singing in the Church, where he himselfe in his owne chappell would beare a part, which in those dayes was the best furnished with cunning and experienced Musicians of any one particular place in the whole world.

Portugall.

The same yeare Don Alphonso King of Portugall led his armie into Affricke, where he tooke the towne of Alcazar, distant fixe miles from Ceuta, his Vncle Don Henry, and his brother Don Fernand Duke of Visco accompanying him in that expedition. Alcazar was taken by meanes of certaine honest conditions, and Don Edward de Meneses bastard B sonne to Don Pedro de Meneses, Earle of Viana, who succeeded his father in the Earldome, was left there as Gouvernour. After the kings returne into Portugall, the Moores did indeauour, but in vaine, to recouer the place: for the repaying and fortifying whereof, the King caused a great quantitie of ground, betweene the towne and the sea, to be of, enclosed with a great and strong wall, defended and guarded with towers, the stone, lime, and other prouisions necessarie for such a worke of worth, was by him brought from Portugall.

Castile.
An. 1459.

The yeare 1459. the King Don Henry of Castile, sent Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza, sonne to Don Inigo, and brother to the Marquis of Santillana, Ambassadour to the Councell held at Mantua by Pope Pius the second, before times called Eneas Sylvius C Picolomini, who had newly succeeded Calixtus the third. There with great deliberation and hope, the warres against the Turkes was debated, which in the end came to nothing, and Don Inigo returned into Castile, carrying home onely a Iubile of full remission of finnes, the collections whereof were so great and inestimable, as hee therewith builded and erected the Monasterie of Saint Anne de la Pegna, in his towne of Tendilla, of the Order of Saint Jerome. The King beeing returned to Madrid, entertayned himselfe there a long time with feasts, playes, and shewes, where the Arch-bishop of Seull Don Alphonso de Fonseca, hauing feasted the King, Queene, and the Ladies, among other singularities, there was serued in after dinner for the banquet, two plates filled with rings of gold, set with rich and pretious stones for the Ladies, amongst whom Donna Guimar D was held, next the Queene, to be the fayrest and most beautifull Ladie of Spaine without compare: to her the king shewed many amorous fauours at this feast, which the Queene perceiuing, grew very iealous, and euer after vsed the Ladie vnkindly and rigorously, by reason whereof the King shewed himselfe strange to her, and appoynted her a Court and trayne aparr, not suffering her to come neere his Court by two leagues: Whereunto the Arch-bishop of Seuille, who was well seene and experienced in such busineses, did willingly employ his best endeaouours in the behalfe of Guimar: for whatsoever the king did, was but fayned and imaginarie shewes, who was so farre from beeing offended and displeased with his friends in such affaires, as hee was content to spare them his owne wife: for the common rumor was, that not beeing able to endure E men should esteeme him vnapt for venereall acts, which he reputed a great and ignominious disgrace, hee dealt with the Queene his wife to receiue Don Bertrand de la Cueva into her bed, (his base and degenerate mind desiring and consenting that this Knight should lye with her, to the end shee might prooue with child by him, and so by that meanes suppose an heire to the kingdome in his owne name, though vnlawfully begotten by another.)

Insefulness of K.
Henry the vnable.

It was credibly reported, that at the first the Queene would by no possible meanes be drawne to agree and giue her consent to so vile, detestable, and dishonorable a deede, but yet afterwards, shee had more neede to haue beene curbed in with raines and bridle, then of spurs. Now Don Bertrand de la Cueva, was a gallant and most accomplished Knight in all points belonging to an excellent Courtier, and so esteemed and beloued of the King, as for his sake, because he so valiantly, and with such an vndaunted courage, defended a passage at the arriual of an Ambassadour of Brittain: hee builded a Monasterie on the high way from Madrid to Pard, which for him was named, the Monasterie of Pas.

The

A The King the better to couer his owne naturall weaknesse, made shew of loue to diuers Gentlewomen in sundry places: for before he made loue to Ladie Guimar, he had professed himselfe seruant to another Ladie, named Catherina de Sandoval, whom he had oftentimes entertained priuately, but shee not contented with his vaine embraces, and beeing desirous to furnish her selfe with a more able Knight, shee grew familiarly acquainted with a young Gentleman named Alphonso de Cordona, whom she kept company with a long time secretly, which turned to his destruction: for the King hauing notice thereof, commanded Alphonso to be beheaded at Medina del campo. In this sort did this King behaue himselfe in his most priuate affaires, giuing occasion to all men to speake euill and vncharitably of him, which beeing reported vnto him, hee entred into distrust B and hatred against the great persons of his Realme, and oftentimes for sleight occasions he would rayse great troubles.

And not beeing pleased, that Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Marquis of Santillana should hold the cittie of Guadabajara, where hee did not onely commaund the towne and castle, as Gouvernour both in matters of State and warre; but also had authoritie and preheminance to bestow publike Offices, hee caused him to be taken by the Commander John Fernandes Galindo, who entred into the towne with fixe hundred men at armes, by meanes of intelligence that he had with one of the Marquis his Captaines, called Alphonso de Gaona, who was corrupted with money, and the Marquis was compelled to leave that Governement to the Kings dispose, hauing giuen him no iust nor C lawfull cause of offence or iniurie, and so hee retired and withdrew himselfe to Hita: Soone after, the King and the Queene came thither, and left Alphonso de Gaona Gouvernour there.

Don Iohn the second of that name, and the eighteenth King of Arragon.

D W Hilest these affaires continued in Castile, the King Don Iohn of Nauarre took quiet possession of the kingdome of Arragon, fallen vnto him by the death of his brother: vnto whom came Ambassadours from the Prince Don Charles his sonne, to beseech him that all faults past might be forgotten, and that it might please him to receiue him into grace and fauour: the which request the father easily graunted, for he was very kind and gentle to his children, but especially to the Prince Don Charles, who beeing daily sollicitated by those of the faction of Beaumont, who continued and maintayned the warres in certaine forts and strong holds in Nauarre, not beeing able without him to bring their businesse to effect, hee desired to returne into Spayne, either to helpe them to make their peace, or to defend them by force of armes.

13
Nauarre,
and
Arragon.

E Hauing then had a pleasing answer from the King his father, hee departed that yeare 1459. from Sicill, beeing accompanied with a great number of Sicilian Lords and Gentlemen, and landed at Barcelona, where beeing welcommed and receiued with great pompe, magnificence, and honour, by the Barcelonois, hee dealt so wisely, that for his sake the King pardoned those of Beaumont, and declared that his pleasure was, that all former matters of what kind foeuer, should be buried in perpetuall obliuion: those of Cattelogna beeing sureties for the sonnes faith and obedience to his father, and for the fathers loue and good-will to his sonne.

Agreement
betweene the King D. Iohn
of Arragon, &
his sonne Don Charles.

This reconciliation beeing made to the great ioy and contentment of the whole kingdom, the King D. Iohn knowing himselfe to be a mightie Prince, thought vpon fir and convenient meanes how to recouer his lands which were confiscate in Castile: for the effecting whereof, hee entred into league and confederacie with Don Alphonso King of Portugall, and agreed vpon a marriage betweene the Prince his sonne, and the Ladie Catherine of Portugall, sister to King Alphonso, and to Donna Isabe Queene of Castile: into the which league entred Don Alphonso Carrillo, Arch-bishop of Toledo,

New assignees to robble Castile.

the Admirall Don Frederic father-in-law to King John, Don Pedro Giron Master of Calatrava, and all the Manriques of Castile; with others: whereof when the King of Castile Don Henry had notice, by the advertisement of Don Alphonso de Fonseca, Arch-bishop of Seville, he was advised by his counsell, to send the bishop of Cité Rodrigo, and Diego de Ribera Ambassadors into Arragon, vnder pretence of congratulating in his name the welcome home of Prince Charles, and his reconciliation with the King his father: but they had commission to deale vnder-hand secretly with Prince Charles, to offer him all friendship, and to treat of a marriage betweene him, and Donna Isabella of Castile, the Kings sister.

The Ambassadors hauing cunningly executed their commission, possessed the mind of Prince Charles with new thoughts, and made him hope to bee able by means of his marriage with Castile, and friendship that he should gaine thereby, to obtaine his kingdom of Nauarre. Therefore hee did forsake the Infanta of Portugall, who for griefe thereof retired her selfe into the Nunnerie of S. Clare at Lisbene, where shee spent her time in Virginitie, dying soone after, when as shee was betrothed to Edward the fourth, King of England. Also this other marriage came to no effect, by reason of the shortnes of Prince Charles his life, God hauing ordayned that Princeesse to be wife to his younger brother.

Prince Charles vpon hope of ayde from Castile, began againe to encourage those of the faction of Beaumont, and to sollicite certaine of Cattelogna to begin new troubles in Nauarre and Arragon: for the mind of man being once bewitched with the desire of rule, cannot be contained in any bounds. In these times the Cardinall Bessarion learned man, a Greeke by nation, was perpetuall administrator of the church of Pampelona, by the death of the Bishop of D. Martin of Peralca.

14.
Castile.

The King Don Henry of Castile, hauing with wife counsell and discretion broken the league of Portugall, determined to persecute those of his kingdom which had any hand therein. And because hee was assured, that the Master of Calatrava was of the number, hee shewed very bad countenance to his brother the Marquis of Villena, but hee was so wise and cunning, as he soone excused himselfe to the King, and wiped out of his mind all suspicion conceiued against him. That was the occasion why the two brethren, the Marquis, and the Master of Calatrava did conceiue such mortal hatred against the Arch-bishop of Seville, who about that time obtained for a nephew of his named also Alphonso Fonseca, Deane of Seville, the Arch-bishoppricke of Saint James: but vnderstanding that Don Lewis Oforio, sonne to the Earle of Transmarara, had intruded himselfe into the same, with the fauour and support of the whole Countrie of Galicia, he made a feigned bargain with his Nephew, and resigned to him the Arch-bishoppricke of Seville, taking that of Saint James for himselfe, with this condition, that matters being pacified, they would each of them returne to their former dignities: for the vncke thought that by means of his great credite and authoritie hee should be best able to deale with Don Lewis Oforio.

1460.
An importunate manner of reforming Nunnies in Castile.

The yeare 1460. the King Don Henry did expell the Abbess of Saint Peter de las Dueñas out of Toledo, named Donna Marquesada de Guzman, a Ladie of a religious and holy life, saying, That he did it to reforme the Nunnies of that place, who had the report to liue dissolutely, and he gaue them for their Abbess and Gouvernesse, the Ladie Catherine de Sandoval his quondam Mistris, wherewith the Arch-bishop and the whole Clergie being offended, the house was interdicted, and diuers of the Clergie degraded and banished, but the King made an end of the matter.

15
Nauarre, and Arragon.

The K. of N. and Arragon advertised of all the enterprizes of Prince Charles.

This yeare running on, king John of Nauarre and Arragon did assemble the Estates of the principallitie of Cattelogna at Lerida, and assigned those of Arragon to meete at Fraga. At the assembly at Lerida, the Prince Don Charles arrived, where whilest they consulted of the affaires, a Gentleman named John Carrillo, presented letters of credit to the King, from the Admirall of Castile Don Frederic his father-in-law, and he was by him advertised of all that which had passed betweene the Prince his sonne, and the king Don Henry: adding thereunto, that those of the faction of Beaumont, incited and stirred vp by the Prince Don Charles, did prepare to armes, and addresse themselves for

A for the warres, vnto whom the Cattelans ioyned themselves, the which did greatly trouble the King who hauing had therevpon the aduice of his most priuate and faithfull counsellors, he caused the Prince to be called into a Chamber a part, and there hauing declared vnto him what he knew of his dealings and practices, he did sharply reprehend him, saying, that he thought that he had begotten a fury, who did torment and trouble his Kingdomes, falling so often into rebellion, and abusing his fatherly pity and meeknesse, but that now the time was come, wherein it behoued him to vie fit remedies to repress his madnesse, and to punish him in such sort, as the vnhappy example of a father, liuing in continuall feare and suspicion of his sonnes treacheries, should now cease in his family: wherevnto the Prince would haue replied, but he could not bee heard; and by the appointment of the King his father, being arrested, he was condemned to close prison in the castle of Mirauet: Neuertheless at the earnest request of diuers great Lords, vnto whom it seemed ouer rigorous, hee was committed vnder sure keeping to a more easie prison in the Aljaferia of the city of Saragossa, to the great discontentment of the Realmes of Nauarre and Arragon, and likewise of the King of Castile, who being in the towne of Madrid was soone after advertised of the durance of Prince Charles. With him was likewise imprisoned Don John of Beaumont, brother to the Constable Don Lewis.

Imprisonment of Prince Charles.

The Cattelans who were sureties for the reconciliation made betweene the father and the sonne at Barcelona, hearing those newes, sent speedily fiftene men of great authority in Ambassage to the King, to know of him the reason of the Princes captivity, because it seemed to them that the King therein had infringed the assurance which they had giuen for him, and that his promise was to intreat him lovingly like a father. Hauing heard by the King that it was for conspiracy and intelligences with his enemies, against his Estate and person, being the third time that he had fallen into open rebellion, they vsed many prayers and intreaties for the behoofe and deliury of the Prince: but seeing it to be in vaine, they returned with the Kings answer to them that sent them. Then the Cattelans being very much moued, added to these fiftene Ambassadors, three score more, and sent them backe to Lerida to the King, vnto whom the Abbot of Ager (being chiefe) hauing shewed with great liberty how grievously the Cattelans did take the imprisonment of his sonne the Prince of Viana and Girona, who expected to haue bene well and kindly intreated by him, vpon the promises and surety which they had giuen for him, and did hope thereby to haue bene sufficiently defended against the slanderous and malicious attempts of his Aduersaries, chiefly of the Admirall D. Frederic, who openly and by all means did labour to extirpe the eldest sonne and lawfull heire of the Realmes of Nauarre, Arragon and other Dominions annexed to the same crowne, to the end to raise and aduance to those dignities his daughters children against all right and piety, and he protested that the whole state of the principallity of Cattelogna would employ their goods, liues, meanes, and friends (which he knew to be very great in that Prouince) to defend Prince Charles from wrong, and to deliuer him from so vniust a captiuitie: wherefore he besought him to consider thereof with a fatherly affection, and at their requests to set him at liberty, and to heare how he could iustifie himselfe, and not to trust so much to his owne opinion in affaires of so great importance onely to please the Queene his wife and her father, and to prevent by wife and good counsell the great troubles and miseries which might thereby ensue. To this rough discourse, full of threats, the King answered with great grauity and moderation, concluding, that hee knew how to doe Iustice, and that hee was not determined to giue ouer his purpose in punishing his rebellious sonne, who had so often abused his clemency, for any passionate or importunate soliciting of his subiects.

The Cattelans intercede in vaine for the Prince.

A free remembrance of the Cattelans to their King.

The King of Nauarre and Arragon his answer to his subiects of Cattelogna.

F The Ambassadors hauing writen and sent backe this answer, there followed forth with a manifest reuolt of the Cattelans, who hauing leauied a great company of men of warre, and obtained by their Ambassadors, sent to Segobia, aide from King Henry of Castile, of fiftene hundred horse, vnder the conduct of the Commander Gonsalo de Saucedra, they aduanced their forces towards Lerida, with intent to seaze vpon the Kings person, and to put to death all those of his priuy counsell. And for the more easie execution execution of their enterprife, they had ſecret intelligence with diuerſe courtiers, the A chiefe of whom were Francis de Eſpla, Gerrard Ceruillon, and Iohn Agullen: but God preſerued the King and his from ſo furious a conſpiracy, diſcouered at the inſtant when it ſhould haue bene executed, and yet ſo happily as the King had leaſure to get away thorough the gate of the preaching friers, notwithstanding that D. Pedro d'Yrrea Arch-biſhop of Tarragon, one of the Ambaſſadors of Cattalogna had counſelled him not to leaue the towne of Lerida, but there to make head againſt his enemies, whoſe aduiſe was approued by all the other Lords there aſſembled. The King was ſo ſooner gon, but the conſpirators entred the pallace with intent to haue committed their purpoſed maſacre, but to their great diſcontent they found it empty. The King retired himſelfe B to Fraga, whether the Ambaſſadors determined to haue followed him, and to try once againe if they could induce him to forgiue his ſonne, hoping that the taſt and new beginning of the troubles, which he had ſcene, would make him more mild: but they altering their purpoſe returned home into Cattalogna. The rebels forces marched towards Fraga where the King was, who from thence went to Saragoſſa, and left them the ſpoile of that place.

In the meane time thoſe of Barcelona tooke their Gouvernor D. Lewis de Requeſens priſoner, thoſe of Valencia, Arragon, Sicil and Majorca, aſſiſting them, and ioyning with them for the Princes deliuey. But aboue the reſt, the faction of Beaumont in Nauarre ſhewed themſelues violent in the purſure of their enemies of Grammont which held the C Kings party, cauſing ſuch ruines and calamities in the Kingdome as can hardly be expreſſed, the mindes of the multitude of each ſide being ſo inflamed againſt their contrary faction, as they knew not vpon what termes, nor for what occaſion, they had taken arms: for if one ſhould haue demanded of thoſe of Beaumont or Grammont, wherefore they were ſo animated one againſt the other: they could make no other anſwere, but that they did it becauſe their neighbours, friends and kinſ-folkes did the ſame. The ruines and deſolations increaſing on euery ſide King Iohn feeling himſelfe touched in conſcience, as if ſuch troubles had ſalne vpon him by the iudgement of God, who would haue him to taſte and ſee in his owne Kingdomes, that which he the yeeeres before had cauſed the Realme of Caſtile to endure, he did therefore harken, to the admonitions D which were newly made to him by diuerſe wiſe men, namely by a Charterhouſe Monke of the Monaſtery of Scala Dei in Cattalogna, held at that time for a Prophet, whoſe name is ſuppreſt or forgotten by the Authors, and through their perſwaſion he did reſolue to ſet the Prince at liberty, and to giue him to the Cattelans who did ſo earnestly deſire it: He was then taken from the Aljaferia of Saragoſſa by his mother in law Queene Joane, who by the commandement of the King went with him into Cattalogna, and in the City of Villa-franca deliuered him vnto them: The common and conſtant report was, that from the time the Prince came forth of priſon, hee neuer had one daies health, but his life did daily conſume and decay, and diuerſe did impute the cauſe thereof E to Queene Joane, who (as they ſay) poiſoned him, to the end to aduance and raiſe her ſonne D. Fernand Duke of Momblancke, to the ſucceſſion of the Kingdome of Arragon and dependances of the ſame, a certaine ſtranger phyſitian being actor of ſo impious a deed, and the ſickneſſe wherewith the Queene was ſoone after afflicted, being an vicious canker ouer her whole body was attributed to the iuſt iudgement of God, who did puniſh her for committing ſo execrable an act: others, reiect this accuſation as falſe, and counterfeited by thoſe of the faction of Beaumont, who notwithstanding the Princes deliuey, continued in armes againſt thoſe of Grammont, namely in the towne of Lombier, which by Charles d'Artieda, in the name of Prince Charles, was taken: againſt whom this King ſent his ſonne D. Alphonſo of Arragon Duke of Villa Hermoſa with a great number of ſouldiers, who beſeaged the towne, and ſoone after the King came thither in perſon, with thoſe of Sanqueſſa and other townes of the faction of Grammont. Charles of Artieda perceiuing himſelfe to be ouerlaid with numbers, demanded aide of the Caſtillians, who forthwith marched thither, to meet the troupes of the Commander Gonſalo de Sabaucdra, and thoſe of Rodrigo de Marchena, who raiſed the ſeige. The King D. Iohn hauing put garriſons into Pampelona, Lerin, and other places belonging to

Don Charles Prince of Viſtina, deliuered out of priſon, but poiſoned by his ſtep-mother.

Queene Joane puniſhed by the hand of God.

A to them which he diſtruſted, came to the Eſtates at Catalajub, leauing the gouernment of Nauarre to his children D. Iohn, and Alphonſo of Arragon, fearing and foreſeeing the warre againſt Caſtile.

During theſe ſtirres in Nauatte and Arragon, the country of Andeluzia was aſſailed by Mulei Albohacen, or as ſome others termed him Hali Muley Hacen eldeſt ſonne to Iſmael King of Granada, contrary to the peace betwixt the Realmes of Caſtile and Granada, which his father King Iſmael deſired ſincerely and inuolubly to obſerue and keepe. This young Prince impatient of reſt, with ſitcene thouſand footemen, and two thouſand five hundred horſemen came into Caſtile ouer-running and burning the country of Eſtepa, from whence heeled away many Chriſtian priſoners, and a great number of cattail: to repreſſe whoſe ſpoile and robberies D. Roderigo Ponce of Leon, eldeſt ſonne to the Earle of Arcos, and Lenis de Pernia captaine of Oſuno, came in all haſt to Eſtepa, with about two hundred and threeſcore horſe, and ſix hundred choſen footmen onely; who being come to the riuer of las leguas, eſpied the Moores going vp the hills of Madrogno, who hauing diſcouered this ſmal Chriſtian troupe, they ſent out two thouſand three hundred horſe in three Squadrons to make head againſt the, commanding the reſt of their people to goe on their iourney with the priſoners and ſpoile: the Chriſtians at the firſt were amazed at their enemies force; but being encouraged by the captaines, they marched brauely againſt them, and charged them ſo valliantly as they brake them and put them to a ſhamefull flight, with an incredible ſlaughter: for the dead bodies C being viewed, there was found ſlaine on the Moores part foureteene hundred, and of the Chriſtians onely thirty horſemen and a hundred and fifty footmen. The little victorious army of the Chriſtians hauing reſted and rallied their troupes, at the fountaine of ſtone, perceiued the herds of cattail as they returned toward the places of their accuſtomed paſture, being forſaken by the flying Moores; the which they tooke and brought backe, with their booties and ſpoiles, which were great and rich: and ſo they returned home to their garriſons and houſes, bearing along with them in great toy and triumph, the colours, trumpets, and drums of the Moores: for the which victory, public & general proceſſions were made ouer al Spaine: King Iſmael on the other ſide was D much grieved for the great loſſe of his raſh and vnexperienced ſonne: but moſt of all, for the breach of the peace betwixt him and the King of Caſtile, which was the occaſion of the totall ruine of the ſtate of the Moores in Granada, as ſhalbe hereafter declared.

D. Henry King of Caſtile did graunt this yeere to diuers vallicies and places of Guipulcoa, the rights and cuſtomes of the towne of Saint Sebastian of the ſame Province, correcting and reforming thoſe which they had of olde times, as the royall priuiledge of the yeere 1461. dated at Segobia doth teſtifie, ſigned by Garcia Mendes, ſecretary to the King. I rom Segouia the Court remooued to Sepulueda, where the King reſtored D. Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Marquis of Santillana, to the rights which he claimed in Guadalajara, as he had enioyed them in times paſt, with this condition, that his brother D. Pedro Gonſales de Mendoza Biſhop of Calaterra, with the eldeſt ſonne of the Marquis D. Iohn de Mendoza, ſhould follow the court: which things were practized and brought to paſſe by the Archbiſhop of Siuil, D. Alphonſo de Fonſeca, and by D. Iohn de Pacheco Marquis of Villena. Theſe two were the principal perſons about the King, by whoſe counſel the whole Kingdome was ruled; and yet for all that they were enemies, and extremely iealous the one of the other, as it is ordinary among great men in court: as alſo for the reaſons, which we haue heretofore mentioned. Now the Marquis being deſirous to driue the Archbiſhop, his coriual, from the Court, the better to manage his affaires alone, he ſolicited the King his maſter to make warre vpon King Iohn of Nauarre and Arragon, ſeeming therein to agree with the Archbiſhop, who had counſelled the ſame E euer ſince the impriſonment of Prince Charles, which was by reaſon of the league which hee had with Caſtile. For the effecting whereof, it behoued him to take ſome aſſurance of the Admirall D. Frederic, and the Archbiſhop of Toledo, D. Alphonſo Carrillo de Acuna, who remained together at Yeſpès, making ſhew to fauour the King of Nauarre and to be of that party.

16
Moores.

The Moores deſtroyed at Madrogno.

17 Caſtile.

D. Diego Hurtado de Mendoza reſtored to his rights in Guadalajara.

The

The Queene of Castile gotten with child by
D. Bertrando de la Cueva.

18
Nauarre,
The King of Castile makes warres vpon
Nauarre.

The Marquis laboured to bring them to agreement with the King Don Henry, and A did promise that his brother Don Pedro Giron Maister of Calarraua, should bee ready to doe him all seruice; but that it did behooue him to leaue some one of great authority at Valiodolit, as Gouvernor and Viceroy, knowing very well that this charge could belayd on none other but the Arch-Bishoppe of Siuill. These things were brought to passe in Aranda of Duero euen as the Marques had deuised and aduised: for the King gave credit to whatsoeuer he sayd, and was wholly ruled by him. About this time Don Pedro of Castile Bishop of Palencia departed this mortal life, Don Gutierrez de la Cueva being promoted to the same dignity: hee was brother to Don Bertrando de la Cueva the King and Queenes chiefe minion, who at that time prouoed to be with child, to the B Kings great ioy and content, albeit hee knew very well, that Don Bertrand had done the decede, hee himselfe being altogether vnable to performe such an act.

Don Pedro Giron Maister of Calarraua arrived at Aranda with two thousand five hundred horse, which forces beeing ioyned with King Henry his great gard, made vp the list of a mighty army, wherewith the king marched towards Logroño wher hee assembled all men fit for the warres out of the Prouinces of Alaua, Biscay, and Guipus-coa, from the age of twenty to threescore yeares, declaring by his ordonances and procoas, from the age of twenty to threescore yeares, declaring by his ordonances and proclamations, that hee did vnder take that warre in his owne person in the behalfe of his wellbeloued Cousin Charles Prince of Viana, the proper heire of Nauarre. The Kings forces were so great as the Nauarros which held the part of the King Don John, being C terrefied with so mighty an army, did yeeld vp diuers places without any fight at all, specially la Garde, Arcos, and Saint Vincent: As for Viana it was furiously battered and assailed, and as brauely defended but in the end, Don Pedro of Peralta at that time Constable of Nauarre, was forced to yeeld it vp to Don Gonzall de Sahaedra generall of the Kings army at that siege, a Nobleman very expert in the art of warre: the Constable being in mourning habit went out at one gate, and at another the Castilians entred, in which place the King appointed Don John Hurtado de Mendoza to be governor; The Prince Don Charles remayned at that time in Barcelona, reuerenced and well entertayned by the Cartelans, who vnderstanding the successe of that warre of Nauarre, D sent a Gentleman of Cattalogna called John Trailas to the king Don Henry, with charge to conclude the Articles of the marriage betweene him and the Infanta Donna Isabell the kings sister: the which this knight hauing effected, beeing accompanied with the Bishop of Astorga, by the Kings leaue hee passed on to Areallo, where the Infanta lay with Queene Isabell her Mother, whom in the Princes name he visited; and so returned: but not long after, Prince Charles languishing euer since his last imprisonment, dyed, not without suspicion of beeing poysoned by the practises of his mother in law Queene Ioane, as hath beene already declared. The Barcelonois perceiuing the Princes end to draw on, did entreate him to marry La Capi his concubine, by whom hee had two sonnes, Don Phillip, and Don John, to the end that by the same marriage, they might be legitimated, and so consequently become capable to inherite after him, the which tooke none effect. There was no manner of vowes, prayers, or pilgrimages omitted for the recovery of the Princes health, but there was no remedy, natures debt must be payed, and so hee departed this life, to the great grieve of the Cartelans. It is reported that vpon his death bed he did confesse to haue greasly offended in banding himselfe against his father, vnto whom hee owed his estate, goods, and his proper life, crauing pardon of him before sundry witnesses: forgiue likewise all those which in any sort had offended him: he died in the fortieth yeare of his age, and his body was interred in the monastery of Pobleta, where the ancient Kings of Arragon were wont to be buried. A litle before his death, by agreement made betwixt him and the King his father, by the meanes of Queene Ioane his step-mother, hee had obtainned the gouernment, iurisdiction and reueneue of the principality of Cattalogna referring onely to the King, the title of soueraigne: and by the same agreement, were deliuered out of prison by exchange, Don John of Beaumont on the one part, and Don Lewis of Requesens on the other. By the decesse of Don Charles, the Principallity of Viana, with the right of succession in Nauarre, returned backe againe to the Lady

A Lady Blanche his sister the some time Queene of Castile, diuorced from King Henry then reigning, and his brother the Infant Don Ferdinand Duke of Montblanc, sonne to King John by his second wife Lady Ioane became here apparant to the crowne of Arragon.

The King D. Henry being aduised of the Princes deathe, made account to keepe B still the towne of Viana, and continuing the warre, hee went to besiege the towne of Lerin, which place by reason of the inextinguishable scizorion there, hee could not take:
wherefore hee brought backe his army to Logroño; halting lost veraine of his troupes as they foraged the country, who were incumbrd and defeated by D. Alphonso of Arragon, and other capitaines committed to the guard of Pamplona, and the country neere to Albarazán. From Logroño the King went to Aranda of Duero, where the B Queene lay, vnto whom hee gaue that towne: there hee desired letters from D. John Pa-chico Marquis of Villena by the which he certified him, that by his endeauor, the Archbishop of Toledo and the Admirall, were returned to his seruice, by reason whereof he aduised him to come backe to Madrid: to which place D. Alphonso of Bohica, Archbishop of Siuill came; beeing weary of so long absence from the Court, but finding his entertainment to bee cold, hee returned much discontented to Valliodelit: for the King had wholly abandoned himselfe as a prey to the Marquis, at whose surrey hee came to Ocagna, whither the Archbishop of Toledo came first and kissed his hand, bringing along with him all the Mamiques.

These being gonne backe to Yespes, the Admirall Don Frederic came likewise to salute the King, who receiued them all very graciously and promised them all fauour.
The Archbishop of Toledo, returned to Court to be of the Kings Council, and it was decreed that once every weeke vpon the Friday, the councillers iustice should be held in his house: which was continued a while, with great hope that iustice would flourish in Spaine more then euer: but as these Courtiers intent were not iust and pure, but only shewes and maskes to couer their enuies and emulations, this lasted not long, and the Realme was as badly gouerned and troubled as before: the Marquis of Villena and the Archbishop of Toledo practizing nothing more, then to remooue him of Siuill.

Now the King being returned to Madrid, hee sent Rodrigo of Marchena to Aranda to accompany and bring thither the Queene, to the end that she might there be deliue-red of child, whither she came with a great traine; the King and the whole Court going forth to meet her, of whom she was receiued with great ioy, and loue of all those which knew not her behauiour; which continued, till by her vndiscreet and open carriage, she discouered her filthy life. The Infant Don Alphonso and the Infanta D. Isabella were likewise by the councill of the Marquis and the Archbishop brought to Court, the go-uernment and bringing vp of the Infant was giuen to Diego de Riura, and the Infanta remained in the palace in the company of the Queene, the King making great shew of brotherly loue to them, albeit that a litle before, hee had continually placed a gard of two hundred horse about their persons.

In the beginning of the yeere 1462. the Queene was deliuered of a daughter, with E hard labour, betwene the armes of Don Henry Earle of Alua de Lista: the King, the Archbishop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena being present; for ioy of whose birth, great triumphes were made ouer all Spaine: the eight day following shee was christned in the chappell of the Kings house, by the Archbishop of Toledo, accompanied with the Bishops of Calorra, Ossa and Carthagea, and shee was called Donna Ioane by her mothers name: her Godfathers were the Earle of Armignac, Ambassador at that time in the Court of Castile for the French King Lewis the eleuenth, and the Marquis of Villena; the Godmothers were the Infanta Donna Isabel, and the Marquesse of Villena, the child was carried and held at the font by the same Earle of Alua de Lista, with great pompe and royall magnificence.

And the better to recompence Don Bertrando de la Cueva, who acted the chiefe part in this Comedy, the king, by the aduise of his councill, who knew that it was his pleasure, did create him Earle of Ledesma: the office of great Maister which hee held, was giuen to Andrew of Cabrera, a young man, very wise and discret: The new Earle was inuested and receiued into the number of the Lords of the councill, with the fauour of all

1462.
Queene Ioane deliuered of a daughter.

Don Bertrando
de la Cueva created Earle of Ledesma,

The Infanta
D. Isabella newly borne, sworne
and delivered to the kingdome.

all men: and being a noble and bountifull Knight, he kept open Court for certaine daies A with great feasting and pompous shewes. The Infanta being scarce two moneths old, the Kings pleasure was that she should be sworne and declared Princesse, and inheritrix of his Realmes in the assembly of the generall states assembled at Madrid for the same purpose; the Infants D. Alphonso and Donna Isabella his sister, being the first that did swear in this solemnity: there grew a contention at this parliament about the precedence of the cities, who should first swear: but the Kings pleasure was that Segobia should swear first before any of the rest, without prejudice to their rights and pre-rogatives. The Court remained certaine months at Madrid and Segobia, the King taking great delight to hunt in those woody countries: from thence he went to Alvaro, to treat of the affaires of Nauarre and Arragon, and hee left the Queene at Segobia three B monthes gone with child, but she miscarried soone after the Kings departure, being flied with a strange fire kindled in her haire by a beame of the Sunne, as the fate in her chamber, which burnt part of her lockes, a rare thing, but yet proceeding from certaine ointments apt to kindle, wherewith she used to die and colour her haire, a thing ordinary amongst amorous Ladies, whose only care and study is, to correct and amend the naturall forme of their bodies, with artificiall receipts, to make them seeme the more lovely: this abortiue child was a sonne.

Fire kindled in Queene Isables
haire by the Sunne beames.

Nauarre,
and Arragon.

Peace betweene Castile
and Arragon.

20 Sedition in Cattalogna.

Queene Isabe
besieged in Girona.

King Henry being at Alvaro, the Archbishop of Toledo, and the Admirall D. Frederic began to mediate a peace betweene the two Kings of Castile and Arragon: and for that purpose King Iohn came to Tudela, vnto whom the Marquis of Vallena was sent, the King of Castile hauing first taken D. Iohn of Arragon as ostage for him. At Tudela, diuerse meanes were propounded for the conclusion of the peace, which taking no effect, it was thought fit that the Marquis should goe with King Iohn and the Queene his wife to Saragossa to consult more amply of those affaires. The Marquis made summe stay there, but King Iohn had occasion to goe in all hast into Cattalogna: in the meane time the Queene did entertaine him very sumptuously, and among other fauours, she caused him to eate at her owne table, which as then was serued onely with Ladies and gentlewomen without any men at all. At the Kings returne to Saragossa, the peace was concluded, vpon the deliuey of ostages and certaine places for assurance on each side, to wit La Gardo, Saint Vincent, Arcos and Larraga by the King of Arragon, and on the part of Castile, Lorca in the Kingdome of Murcia, and Comago in the territory of Soria. The Nauarrois were discontented that King Iohn should giue any places of the Realme of Nauarre in pawne, rather then those of the Kingdome of Arragon: but of necessity it behoued them to bee content therewith. The Cattelans also were reconciled to the King and they did acknowledge by oth the Infant D. Fernand being then nine yeeres old, for heire and lawfull successor to the crowne of Arragon, who from thenceforth was intituled Prince of Girona.

This peace, betweene King Iohn and his subiects lasted not long, whether it were because they were certified of the Princes vntimely death whom they did so deereely loue, and which they desired to reuenge, or for any other occasion: but it fell so out that in the country of Rosillon, Ampurdan and other places of Cattalogna, there arose great tumults and mutinies, the Earle of Pallars being chiefe of that rebellion: there was a rumor spread abroad, that Prince Charles his ghost did nightly complaine in the streets of Barcelona, craving vengeance on Queene Isabe his step-mother, who by poison had parted his soule from his body.

The Queene to resist those disorders came to Girona, where she was forthwith besieged by the Earle of Pallars, and constrained, with the Prince D. Fernand her sonne, to fortifie her selfe with great daunger of their liues in the tower of the Cathedral Church of the same city. At the same time the Barcelonnois did driue al the Kings officers forth of their city, and as many as did loue and affect him, resolving neuer more to obey him, but to become subiects to the King of Castile. The Inhabitants of Girona did greatly fauour the besieged Queene, who vnder the conduct of Du Puy master of the order of Montesa made great resistance, but the Earle of Pallars entred the city by force, and did furiously assaile and batter the strong tower, desirous to take the Queene and the Prince her sonne: but

A but they one her side vsed such dilligence as the Earle was beaten out of the towne with great losse of his people.

The King being much troubled with the reuolt of the Cattalans, and other places also of his Kingdomes, sent into France, to intreate of King Lewis aide of men and money, vnto whom he engaged, for the summe of three hundred thousand crownes of gold for the payment of his souldiers, the Earle dome of Rosillon and Cerdagne. He obtained of him two thousand five hundred horse, amongst whom were seuen hundred Launces furnished, of which forces, Gaston Earle of Foix, and Lord of Bearn, sonne in law to King Iohn was Generall. In this warre, which was long and troublesome, diuers B Knights of the faction of Grammont did good seruice to the King, the chiefe of whom were Don Peter de Peralta, Constable of Nauarre, Sanches of Londogno sonne to the Marshall of Nauarre, Fernand of Angulo Stephen of Garro, Roderigo of Puelles, the Viscount Bertrand of Armendaris, Iohn Henriques of Lacarra, and Gyles de Aualos, James Diaz of Armendaris Lord of Cadreita, Pedro of Ansa, Iohn of Aquerra, and Sansho of Erbiti furnished the obstinate, who did beare for his motto or deuise, So, or no: glorying in that he was contentious: by reason whereof, this Knight had in his time many quarrels to maintaine. The coming of the French, caused the Earle of Pallars to raise his seige from before Girona. So the Queene being freed, ioyned with the army of the Earle of Foix, and pursued the Rebelles, causing diuerse of them to craue pardon.

C The King hauing leauied men at armes, sent them vnder the command of his sonne Don Alphonso of Arragon to ioine likewise with the Earle of Foix his forces: hee himselfe following after, staid a while in the City of Bellaguer to appease the tumultuary Inhabitants, into the which towne he entred in armes, and there receiued newes of the yielding vp of Tarraga, whether he forthwith went, but soone after he was constrained to dislodge from thence, being aduertized that Don Iohn de Agullon with certaine Regiments came thitherward to surprise him, and so he returned to Bellaguer. Those of Barcelona, moued with extreame hatred against their King, did by publike proclamation declare him enemy of their country, saying that they did iustly withdraw themselves from his obedience, he being the murderer of his own son, an oppressor of his subiects, D breaker of his faith and promise, and one that did violate their rights, priuiledges, and ancient liberties: and they sent the acts and formall proceedings thereof to Rome to the Pope then reigning, who was called Pius the second, a Siennesis of the family of Piccolomini. And by a decree of the three Estates of the country, they sent an Ambassage to the King of Castile, to the end they might be receiued, maintained and defended, by him against the power of King Iohn.

The Ambassador was a Gentleman very learned, named Copus, who in disguised habit past into Castile, and found the King Don Henry at Atienza, who came thither to recreate himselfe, after the marriage made by him of the youngest daughter of the Marquis of Santillana, with his Minion. Bertrand de la Cueva Earle of Ledesma and one of his priuy counsell. The Ambassador spake with the King, and declared vnto him the cause of his coming, which was to giue him notice of the title which hee had to the principallity of Cattalogna as also to the crowne of Arragon, the which was much better then King Iohns, because hee was issued from the eldest sonne of Donna Leonora of Arragon, Queene of Castile, whereas King Iohn and his brother King Alphonso, came of the younger sonne, and that he had now a fit occasion offered him for the recovery thereof, by the meanes of the Cattelans, iustly prouoked by the wrongs and tyrannies of the King D. Iohn. The King hauing heard these things, referred the Ambassador to his counsel at Segobia, whither he shortly came, and propounding there in the open assembly of the great Lords, and of his counsel, that which the Ambassador of Cattalogna had declared vnto him, their opinions were diuers. In the end the Ambassador was called, and being asked wherefore he came, hee told them that hee was sent to request two things, to wit, that it might please the King of Castile to receiue the Cattelans for his subiects, and to aide them with certaine number of souldiers to defend them from their enemies, shewing the charge and commandment which he had from the three Estates to take the oth of obedience to him in their names.

John of Arragon
gon purpose
Refused to Lewis the French.

D. John declared enemy by the Barcelonois, and declared his right in that principality.

Castile.

Nauarre.

The councell perceiuing that these offers did please the King, did wholly consent therevnto, and two thousand five hundred horse were appointed to succour the Cartelans, whose capitaines were D. Iohn of Beaumont, Prior of Saint Iohns of Nauarre, and Iohn de Torres a Knight borne in Soria. These forces being sent away King Henry, fauoring this warre, came to Agreda.

Thither came an Elquier of Nauarre dwelling in Tudela, who told Don Bertrand de la Cucua, Earle of Ledesma, that if King Henry would well reward him, he would de-liuer vp into his hands the city of Tudela: promise was made to this Squire of certaine lands neere to Agreda, and according to the agreement made, at an houre appointed, Pedro de Guzman was sent, with twenty braue souldiars to seize vpon one of the gates, B and by the same to let into the towne a certaine number of souldiars which should follow after him. Pedro de Guzman and his men were no sooner entred into the city, but they were all taken, whereat King Henry being greatly moued, sent his troups to spoile all the contry round about Tuleda, with commandement to burne all places, and to put the people to the sword: but this spoile soone ceased by reason that they of Tudela deliuered the prisoners.

The King Don Iohn being aduertized of all these things, fortified himselfe on e-uery side, and had in readinesse an army sufficient to assaile the rebells, with their allies and protectors, Don Iohn Archbishop of Tarragon the Earle of Prades, Don Ma- thew de Moncada, Don Anthony of Cardona, Don Guillen Arnau Cernillon and many other Cartelan Knights being ioyned with him. Therevpon hee came and beseeged Lerida, which they of Tarraga endeauoring to releue, they were defeated by Don ed Lerida, which they of Tarraga endeauoring to releue, they were defeated by Don Iohn of Arragon, who was sent by the King his father to incounter them, who led a way diuerse prisoners with him to the campe: Neuerthelesse the King raised his seege from before Lerida, being aduertised that a capitaine called Martimon came to the aide thereof with tenne thousand souldiars; and that in another place Iohn de Agullon was in field with forces, for the same purpose, and that Don Hugo of Cardona held his seege before Miralcampe, a strong towne and greatly importing the affaires of Arragon, wherefore with all speed hee hastened thitherward, but Don Hugo was departed from thence, not being able, by reason of the great heate in those parts, to continue his seege: then the King ioyned his forces with the troups of Don Alphonso his sonne, who held Iohn d' Agullon beseege in Casteldas: thither also came the Earle of Foix with the French men at armes. By these forces the towne and castle of Casteldas were so beaten, as Iohn d' Agullon was constrained, for all his propounding of diuers conditions, to yeeld himself to the Kings mercy, who caused him, with other capitaines, to be executed by forme of law at Bellaguer: and he committed the towne to the keeping of D.
Iohn de Londogno.

21 Complot betweene King Iohn and his sonne in law Gaston de Foix to the hurt
and ruine of Lady Blanche
the true wife
of Nauarre.

Gaston Earle of Foix had married Donna Leonora the second daughter to King Iohn, by his first wife Queene Blanche of Nauarre; and because the succession in that Kingdome, by the death of Prince Charles did belong to Donna Blanche her eldest sister, E who was married and diuorced from Henry King of Castile, because shee had no children, the father in law, and the sonne in law practised together, how they might keepe this forsaken Queene of Castile from marrying any more, that shee might haue no children, by meanes whereof the Realme of Nauarre should fall to the Lady Donna Leo- nora and to the house of Foix: wherefore she was deliuered into the hands of Earle Gas- ton her brother in law, who sent her into France to the towne of Lescar, vnder the power and keeping of the Countesse Leonora her sister.

Among the capitaines which did serue the King Don Iohn, there was a Castilian called Iohn of Sarauia, who did greatly annoy the enemy, who found a time to surprise him: for vpon a day as hee spoiled and ouer-ranne the country neere to Cervera, hee was charged by Hugo of Cardona, accompanied with about foure thousand men as well horse as foote, so as hee was constrained to leaue his booty, and to assure himselfe in the castle of Rubinate, where hee was furiously beseege and beaten with store of Artillery and Engins: hee fearing to be forced to yeeld vp the castle, found meanes to aduertise the King of his necessity, who came thither with all his forces: F
by

A by reason whereof Don Hugo hauing left five hundred of his people at the seege of this castle, retired himselfe to a strong hold; from whence euery day he offered the King barraile, being come to fight the victory remained for a while doubtfull on either side, but at the last it fell to the King: there died as well in this incounter, as in the skit mis-es of the seege, more then fifteene hundred of the enemies, and very neere as many on the Kings part: so as hee had small occasion to reckon this victory in the number of his happy ones. From thence the Kings army marched to the aide of the Archbishop of Tarragon whom those of Lerida and Cervera held beseege in a place very discom-modious, who freed him from thence. In another place Don Alphonso of Arragon obtained a great victory neere vnto the towne of Saint Colomba, with whom the Kings B army ioyning, that place yeelded: besides this the towne of Ceriall was taken by force, and all the country thereabout whilst the Queene and the Earle of Foix in another place, tooke the towne of Moncada by assault, with many other places which for feare yeelded vnto them.

Whilst the affaires of King Iohn succeeded well in Cattalogna, the King of Castile made open warres vpon the frontiers of Granada, since the defeat of the Infant Haly
Mah-Hacen, wherein Don Iohn de Guzman the first Duke of Medina Sidonia, sonne to Count Henry of Niebla, who was drowned before Gibraltar, made excellent proofe of his valor and good conduct, and he had the good hap to subiect the city of Gibrat-tar to the crowne of Castile, which his father had attempted in vaine. The newes of C this conquest were so pleasing to King Henry as amongst his other titles hee would bee called King of Gibraltar: for this city had bene the chiefe in the Kingdome of Abomelech the Infant of Marocco, sonne to King Albasen of the kindred of the Merins. This happie exploit was accompanied with the taking of the City of Archedona by the Maister of Calatraua Don Pedro Giron, brother to the Marquis of Villena. The keeping of Gibraltar was committed for that time to Pedro de Poiras.

About this time diuers Princes and Potentates sent their Ambassadors to the King of Castile, namely from his cosin King Fernand of Naples, from Pope Pius and the Colledge of Cardinals, and from the Venetians, who desired his perpetuall friendship and confederacy. The Geneuois offered him fealty and homage, and withall to become his subiects: but King Henry contenting himselfe with his owne estates, not being D by nature ambitious, did not desire to meddle in those forraigne businesses, albeit there wanted not diuers of his councell to animate him thereto.

King Iohn hauing at Moncada, ioyned his army with that of the Queene his wife, and his sonne in law the Earle of Foix, the councell thought it fit to send to beseege the City of Barcelona, and it was so concluded, notwithstanding that the King was of a contrary opinion. The Barcelonois had receiued the aboue mentioned aide from Castile, and resoluing neuer more to obey the King of Arragon, they had set vp the banners of Castile: the city was very rich, and greatly furnished with men and munition, E very strong in their wallles and towers, and excellently wel provided of all things belonging to the sea, by reason whereof they made sundry sallies and skirmishes with the Kings army, to the great losse and hinderance thereof as well by land as by sea: and namely they gaue chase to capitaine Vilago, who kept the sea from them with eight Gal-lies of Arragon: so as the King thought it the best way to raise his seege, after that hee had bene before it by the space of twenty daies, causing his sonne Don Alphonso of Arragon to spoile the country round about the city. From thence the army marched to Villa-franca, which was taken by force: and there the King caused to be executed by order of law foure hundred of the Inhabitants, being prouoked thereto by the death of two French capitaines which were slaine at his entry into the towne, which be-F came such a terror to the rest of the townes thereabouts, as diuerse yeelded, without any resistance at all.

They beseege the city of Tarragon, which at the first made resistance yet neuer sallied forth of their wals: but when they beheld their fields burnt, and the continual battery and assaults of the enemies, their courage began to shrink, especially when the aide, which was sent them from Barcelona, was at their landing constrained to flie backe to their Gallies;

A bloody fight
betweene the Kings army,
and that of D.
Hugo de Coodona.

Moore.

Gibraltar taken by the Cas-tilians.

Castile.

Nauarre,
and Arragon.

Barcelonereceiues the banners of Cas-
tile.

Tarragon recei-ued to the King.

Gallies, then with very easie conditions they yeclded to the King, who left Roderigo of A Rebollo for their Gouvernor, he himselfe going backe to Ballaguer.

The Cattellans thus distressed, sent new Ambassadors into Castile, one of them was the Archdeacon of Girona, who being ioyned to the Ambassador resident with King Henry, made new offers of submission and full obedience vnto him, beseeching him to intitule himselfe King of Arragon and Earle of Barcelona, seeing that hee was assured that those dominions did by all diuine and humane right belong vnto him, and that now the voluntary consent of the people did inuite him therevnto, requesting moreouer aide of fouldiars. The King of Castile, beside this publique Ambassage, was solicited therevnto by sundry Lords, and other cities of Valencia and Arragon; and to speake truly, hee did greatly incline to their demaunds; but the Archbishop of Toledo and the Marquis of Villena, the Kings chiefe counsellors, after whose appetite the whole affaires of the Kingdome were gouerned, were of a contrary opinion, and peraduenture they had intelligence with King John of Arragon, but it was not certainly knowne whether it were so or no; wherefore the businesse beeing debated on by the counsell, the Ambassadors receiued this answere, that if they ment to haue any aide of fouldiars, it did then behoue them to bring store of money with them, and as for the title to the crowne of Arragon, and county of Barcelona, King Henry would consider thereon with more mature deliberation.

The Ambassadors replied, that if it would please the King to take their cause in hand, C and to shew himselfe openly in their defence as his subiects, they would venture their heads, if within threescore daies after, they did not bring into the Kings coffers the summe of seven hundred thousand florins of gold. This seemed a dreame to the Archbishop and the Marquis, for the summe was exceeding great for those times; and they two hauing an other purpose, wrought so well, as king Henry not onely refused their offers, but withdrew himselfe wholly from the warre of Arragon: giuing them to vnderstand, that he had rather with the helpe of the French King, mediate a good peace for them.

Now the Marquis and the Archbishop did purpose, and hope to deale in such sort, as the Realme of Nauarre, or a great part thereof, should by the treaty of peace fall D to the crowne of Castile: To giue a certaine forme wherevnto, they sent word to King John and to the Earle of Foix, to send vnto them certaine French captaines, of thole which were in Catalogna, to conferre about meanes of agreement with the King of Castile; and they vsed other practizes to giue the French a distast of that warre, seeking their owne profit, vnder collour of making an agreement betweene the King of Arragon and his subiects: whilest the broiles continued in Catalogna, the Earle of Pallars, and the Lord of Cruillas, with a great number of fouldiars, hauing againe beseged Girona, were ouerthrowne and put to flight by Peter of Roquabertin Gouvernor of the City, and they lost many of their people with their baggage. The French marching E towards Morella, brought diuers places on the coast of Vrgel vnder the Kings obedience, but meeting neere Ixar with the Castillians, hauing good meanes to charge them, it is said that they gaue them to vnderstand, that in regard of the friendship and perpetuall confederacy betweene the Kings of France and Castile, they would couch their Launces against the Castillian standard, and thereof they excused themselves to the King of Arragon, saying that they were so commaunded to doe, and therefore besought him to take in good part, if they went about to appease the differences betwixt them.

The King of Arragon fashioning himselfe to their aduice, and hauing great hope in the good iudgement of the French king in those busineses, hee did consent that one of the French captaines should passe into Castile to the towne of Mountagu, where the king Henry should meete to conferre with him about fit meanes to compole all those differences: the Archbishop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena brought the king thither vnder collour of hunting; and it was agreed vpon, that the French king should be entreated, to send an Ambassador into Castile, to cause the warre to cease. The captainie being returned, related to the king of Arragon and to his sonne in law the Earle

The King of Castile attempts to receive the Barcelona, and king John likewise.

The French refuse to fight with the Castilians

A Earle of Foix, what hee had concluded with the King of Castile; and at their entreaty the French King Lewis the eleuenth, sent an Ambassadour to the King of Castile, who found the Court at Almazan; and hauing had audience, a day was taken for the interview of the three Kings of France, Castile, and Arragon, vpon the frontiers betweene Fontarabie, and Saint John de Luz: and in the meane time there was a cessation from armes on all sides; the Cattellans were excluded from this accord remaying doubtsfull betwixt hope and feare, attending the issue of that interview.

The King Don John allowing all these things, came to Saragossa, with intent to meet at the day appointed for the Kings interview. The Earle of Foix, the presumptiue heire of Nauarre in the right of his wife went thither, being very honourably receiued, B especially of the Beaumonts faction.

Now the time of the interview being come, the King of Arragon, for diuers reasons, could not, or would not appeare, relying in the Archbishop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena, with the King of Castile, and vpon his sonne in law Gaston of Foix, who knew very well how to maintaine his honour and to increase his profit with the French King. About the end of March in the yeere 1463. the King Don Henry arriued at Saint Sebastians in the Prouince of Guipuscoa, and king Lewis came the same time to Bayonne, vnto whom were sent as Ambassadors from the king of Castile, the Archbishop of Toledo and the Marquis of Villena, with Aluar Gomes of Ciudad-reall, his principall secretary (they hauing so councelled him) to the end to treat with him about the agreement and pacification of the troubles betweene the kings of Castile and Arragon, the vncle and Nephew, and betweene the king of Arragon and the Cattellans his subiects. It is reported, that the Marquis of Villena made an agreement with the French king, being by him recompenced with a yeerely pension of twelue thousand crownes.

The Marquis of Villena, being commeth pensioner to the King.

Matters beeing then thus handled by them, king Lewis as Iudge and arbitrator betweene both parties, set downe his sentence in this manner: That King Henry of Castile should wholly abstaine from meddling in the businesse of the Cattellans; that within twenty daies hee should call all his fouldiars out of Cattalonia and that for the D expences which hee had bene at in the same warre the King of Arragon should giue vnto him the towne of Estella with all the demaines belonging therevnto, which is one of the fve members of the Kingdome of Nauarre, with a certaine summe of doubions of gold, all which he should be bound to performe within sixe monthes, in which meane time, Queene Isabe of Arragon should bee held as ostage in the towne of Larraga vnder the safe keeping of the Archbishop of Toledo: That the Cattellans should become obedient to their King, vnto whom a generall pardon should bee graunted of all that was past; for assurance whereof King John should giue them sufficient ostages. This sentence, hurtfull to the Kingdome of Nauarre, odious to the Cattellans, and little to the King of Castiles honour, was allowed of and receiued by the three E Ambassadors aboue named, who wrote to King Henry, aduising him to set forward with his Court and traine to Fontaraby, and at that instant the Marquis of Villena arriued, bringing along with him the Earle of Comminges Admirall of France, who came from the King his Maister to entreate the King of Castile that they might see one another vpon French ground; the which they had before concluded vpon at Bayonne.

King Lewis beeing come to Saint Iohn de Luz, the two Kings met at the riuer of Vidalo, which in that place parteth both the Kingdomes: the which riuer (as the Spaniards say) which all that which the flowing of the sea couers, belongs to Spaine. King Henry with diuerse great Lords and Knights beeing in diuerse boates did passe F the riuer, amongst whom were Don Pedro Gonzales of Mendoza Bishop of Calaoarra, Don Iohn de Pacheco Marquis of Villena, Don Gomes of Caceres Maister of Alcantara, Don Iohn of Valençuela Prior of Saint Iohns, Don Lewis de Acugna Bishop of Burgos, Don Bertrand de la Cueva Earle of Ledesma, with others verie brauely and richlie appointed: The French King and his Courtiers beeing meanly clothed, were by the Spaniards derided and scorned. These two great Princes hauing lously saluted and imbraced one another vpon the shoare, with diuerse kinde speeches A and ceremonies vsuall at such times; King Henry speaking first, they went to a village called Endaya belonging to the French King, where in the presence of the two Kings, the arbitratie sentence was read by the Secretary Aluar Gomes, the Ambassadors being present: and after sundry complements, and friendly speeches, they departed the one from the other with great content, and so returned each of them into his owne territories.

Interview of King Lewis the eleuenth and King Henry the fourth of Castile, at Endaya.

The Cattelans
complaine of the sentence
and treachery
of the king of Castile.

23
Castile.
A few collector to the king's revenues
suing in Gui-puscoa by the nobility.

24.
Nauarre,
and
Arragon.

The king of Castile, thinking to deceive,
is himselfe de-ceiued.

King Henry being come to Fontaraby called the Ambassadors of Cattalonia into his presence, who had followed him in that journey, and declared vnto them the contents of the sentence, and that which they were bound to doe by the same, whereat they were B much amazed and discontented; so that being ouer-come with impatience, by reason of the indignity which they thought was offered them, they vttered in choller many proude and high words, prefiging misery and future calamity to the Realme of Castile, accusing the King of carelesnesse, for consenting to the same sentence, and his counsellors and Ambassadors of treason. According to this sentence, the King withdrew his souldiars from Cattalonia, and did wholly giue ouer the warre.

Whilest the King remained at Fontaraby, it happened that a certaine Jew named Ga- on, who was a farmer of his reuenues, coming from the towne of Victoria where he dwelt, to exact, by reason of the kings presence, the tribute called Pedido, in the Prouince of Guipuscoa (which was euer denied and resisted by the nobility of the country) was C slaine in the city of Tolouse, the gentlemen being moued to commit such an outrage, to the end it might serue as an example to other exacting receiueurs, not to attempt vp-on their ancient liberties and priuiledges: whereat the king was greatly offended so as after the interview, he came to Tolouse with diuers men at armes being resolu'd seuerely to punish such an act: the Inhabitants being very fearefull, left the city and retired themselves into the mountaines giuing place to their Princes fury, who at his first arrivall into the towne, commanded that the house wherein the Jew was murdered, should be o-uerthrowne to the ground: but proceeding on, hee was fully and certainly informed, that the tribute, then in question, was a thing not due, nor neuer paid by the gentlemen of that country, so as hee conuerted his wrath into clemency, and gaue a generall pardon to them all, decreeing, after the example of the Kings his predecessors, that from thence forth on account should be made of such like money; and hee did for euer acquit his receiueurs, treasurers and exactors of his reuenues, of any such receipt.

Having ordered the affaires of that Prouince, he went to Segobia and the Archbishop of Toledo came to Larraga, a towne in the Kingdome of Nauarre, there to receiue the Queene Donna Ioane, who, according to the sentence of King Lewis, was to remaine in his keeping, till the King of Arragon her husband had fully performed all that which by the same hee was bound vnto. The Estates of Nauarre were much displeased with the alienating of the towne of Estella, it being a portion of the Kingdome: E but they knew not the drift thereof, for none of the parties did gaine so much by the sentence, as the king of Arragon, who held himselfe assured of the King of Castile, by meanes of the good offices which the Archbishop of Toledo and the Marquis of Villena performed for him, they being wholly at his deuotion: in so much as hee tooke no great thought for the committing of the Queene his wife into their hands. As for Estella, he neuer ment to giue it to the King of Castile, and the better to couer his intent, he caused the whole body of the Estates to protest against that sentence, as giuen by an incompetent Iudge, the parties being not heard, and directly preiudiciall to the patrimony of the crowne of Nauarre: Therevpon Don Pedro of Peralta, who was Constable of Nauarre, seized vpon the towne and castle of Estella, F as though it had rebelled against the King: then the king of Castile beganne to bee very highly displeased with his counsell, and in some sort to discouer their practices, greatly repenting that hee had forsaken the Cattelans. The Archbishop of Tole- do and the Marquis of Villena hauing had experience of his choller, thought for to redresse all by giuing the king and the Archdeacon of Girona (who was one of the

A the Cattelan Ambassadors) to vnderstand, that all was well, and that now there was greater hope of good successe, then at any time before: Wherefore the Arch-deacon was sent away to carry that newes to the Cattelans, and to encourage and assure them in the King of Castile name, that they should shortly receiue greater ayde from him then they had done in times past: but the Arch-deacon arrived too late: for the Estates of Cattelogna being greatly discontent, that King Henry had so deceiued them, had abandoned all hope of helpe from Castile, and put themselves vnder the protection of the house of Portugall, electing Don Pedro, Constable of that Realme, for their king, who was grand-child to King John the first, and sonne to the Infant Don Pedro Duke of Co- imbra, being descended by the mothers side from the kings of Arragon, for his mother B was daughter to Lames Earle of Vrgell, and to Donna Leonora of Arragon, daughter to King Peter of Arragon the fourth of that name.

Don Pedro of Portugal, all descended of
Arragon.
Descent of Portugal.

The Marquis of Villena on the other side, acquainted King Henry with the reuolt of those of Estella, and with the difficulties which hindred the execution of the sentence, propounding other recompences to be made, rather then to fall out vpon so slight an occasion: the which the king did not very well taste, yet for all that being desirous to play with least losse, hee sent into Nauarre Don Bertrand de la Cueva, Earle of Ledesma, and Don Pedro Gonçales of Mendoza Bishop of Calaoorra, who afterward was Cardinal, and Arch bishoppe of Toledo, to deale with King John, and the Queene his wife about C these matters, who excused themselves by reason of their subiects rebellion, which (as they sayd) was the cause why they could not performe that which they had purposed:
they discouering these dissimulations, aduertised King Henry thereof, who aduised them to negotiate as well as they could; who after diuers conferences returned without doing any thing at all, disposing the King of Castile to a truce, which soone after was effected.

The King of Castile being at Madrid, an obseruant Friar named Fernand de la Place, 26 with other of his zealous companions, did greatly trouble him and his Council, by gi-uing forth, that diuerse Christians of his country were become Apostata's, forsaking the holy Catholicke faith, and were become Iewes: whereof if hee would make diligent D search, the crime would be auerred. And this audacious Monke did constantly affirme in one of his Sermons, that hee had in his keeping more then an hundred fore-skins of Christians children, which had bene circumcised, crying out, that the king ought to punish them very grieuously: the King caused him to be brought into his presence, and commanded that he should deliuer vp those fore skinned: the Friar sayd that hee had them not, but that he was so informed by diuers of good name and place, the king willed him to tell their names, the which he could not, or would not doe, and so was dismissed without any other punishment, then to be held a notorious liar.

The Arch-bishop of Toledo Don Alphonso Carrillo of Acugna, and the Marquis of Villena, being returned from Nauarre, where they had left Queen Ioane at libertie, per-E ceuying that the King did finally fauor them, beganne to fore-see some future mischief to light vpon their states, honor, and persons: to preuent which, they entred into leagues, which the king vnderstanding, did dissemble, committing in the meane time the gouernement of his affaires to Don Bertrand de la Cueva, and to the Bishop of Calaoorra, whose Neece Don Bertrand had married. The Court being at Seuille was very much troubled with a popular tumult, occasioned by two Prelates, namely, the old Arch-bishof the same citie Don Alphonso of Fonseca, and his nephew, who had made betwixt them a fained exchange of the Arch-bishopricks of Seuill and S. Iames, for the reasons before mentioned, the nephew being at that time in possession of that of Seuill, the F which he ought to haue yeilded vp to his vnckle, who had caused him peaceably to enioy that of S. Iames, till then held by D. Lewis Oforio and his faction: Now Alphonso of Fon- feca hauing brought all matters to the passe which he promised, thought to re-enter into his former dignitie of Arch-bishop of Seuill: but the nephew, who found himself well at ease, would by no meanes leaue it, albeit that the Pope vpon paine of Excommunication had enioyned him so to do, so as thereupon arose a very dangerous sedition, each of them hauing his partakers amongst the Nobility, Clergie, and the common people, the Contentions and seditions caused by two Arch-bishops, the vnckle and the nephew.

27
An outrage of a Moore committed in Seuil unpunished.

the vulgar sort in generall held with the Nephew, and had seized vpon the great church A and other strong places of the cittie, holding it against the Gentlemen, and the Clergie, who fauoured the old Arch-bishoppe, and the rascall multitude had well-neere gained the haue with the Galleys that lay there, intending to fight both by sea and land, had not the King speedily preuented it, who hauing made inquirie of the matter, apprehended fundry of the Rebels, who were seuerely punished: the Nephew Arch-bishop was committed to prison in his owne house, and within sixe dayes after, the old Arch-bishop was restored to his former See, and diuers of the offenders were hanged out at the windowes of their owne houses, and some others sent to receiue punishment at Madrid. An other outrage was there committed at the same time, which did incite and stirre vp di-uers against the king: for his Court beeing greatly frequented with Noblemen Moores, whome he did highly fauour, one of them named Mosarras, (who did lodge in the house of an honourable Citizen called Diego Sanchez of Orihuela) was so farre transported with a libidinous appetite, as his host and hostesse beeing absent, hee rauished and carried away with him into Granado a very beautifull daughter of theirs; keeping her with him so long as he pleased. The sorrowfull father and mother at their returne home finding their house disturnished of their best ornament, accompanied with diuers of the best Citizens, went to make their complaynt to the king, who told them that the fault was their owne, in leauing their daughter behind them, and so put them off with this impertinent answer: whereunto the parties grieued did reply, craving iustice, but the King beeing displeased with their importunate exclamations, commaunded that they should be thrust out of his gates, set vpon asses, and publicly whipped vppon and downe the Cittie: this vniust sentence should haue bene executed, had not the Earle D. Gonzal of Guzman, gone to the King and asked him, what reason the Officer should giue to the multitude for the whipping of those innocent people: then the King finding his owne errour, was ashamed thereof, and went into his chamber, making him no answer at all, the Moores fault remayning unpunished, to the great scandall not onely of that Cittie, but of the whole kingdome.

Not long after, the King made a iourney to Gibraltar, newly conquered and sacked, where he gaue another prooffe and testimonie of a mind little fauouring of equitie, for he tooke away the gouernement thereof from Pedro de Porras, whome hee had placed there at the request of the Duke of Medina Sidonia, who had taken the same cittie, and did giue and appropriate it to Don Bertrand de la Cueva, Earle of Ledesma, who placed there for Gouernour Stephano de Villacreses, who had married an Aunt of his: the which the Duke tooke very impatiently, and so it continued all the time of the troubles of the kingdome, vntill he had brought it againe vnder his owne power and iurisdiction, and ioyned it to the other possessions belonging to the house of Medina Sidonia, who hath alwaies enjoyed it, till the entire conquest of the kingdome of Granado: at which time it was for euer annexed to the Crowne.

The same time the King Don Alphonso of Portugall making warre vpon the Moores E of Affricke, came from Ceuta to Gibraltar at the intreatie and perswasion of King Henry, where these two Princes remayned and continued together the space of eight dayes, eating at one table, and shewing great tokens of loue and brotherly friendship one to the other.

28
Portugal.

This yeare 1463. the Infant Don Henry of the house of Portugall, the kings Vnde, Master of the Order commonly called of Christ, of the age of three-score and seven yeares, dyed in the cittie of Sagres in Algarbe, who was buried in the Church of Lagos, and afterwards translated and carried away from thence to the Abbey of Battayle, built by his father king Iohn the first, and they report in Portugall, that this Prince dyed a virgine: he out-liued all his breethren that were legitimate, to wit, Don Iohn Master of Saint Iames, Don Fernand Master of Auiz, and Don Pedro Duke of Coimbra: their elder bastard-brother Don Alphonso Duke of Bragança dyed also not long before, leauing behind him for his successours in the Dutchie, his sonnes Don Fernand, Earle of Arrojos, and the Marquis of Villa viciosa, who was (by lawfull succession, and by the right of inheritance) the second Duke of Bragança, begotten on Donna Beatrix, daughter

House of Bragança.

A daughter to Don Nugno Aluares Pereyra Earle of Barcellos, and first Constable of Portugall: Now the losse of these great personages was very grieuous to the King Don Alphonso, who at that time by reason of his warres against the Moores, had great need of their helpe and Council: hee had conducted a great army into Affricke against the city of Tanger, beeing followed by all the Nobility of Portugall, namely, by his brother the Infant Don Fernand Duke of Visco, his brother-in-law Don Pedro the third Constable of Portugall, sonne to the Infant Don Pedro, Duke of Coimbra aboue-mentioned, D. Edward de Meneses Earle of Viana, Don Gonzal Coutin the first Earle of Marialua, the Earle of Villa-reall, and other great Lords: but Don Pedro the third, Constable of Portugall, was at that time solicited by the Cattelans to name himselfe King of Arragon, for the reasons heretofore declared, who consented thereunto, and went with the Ambassadors of Cattelania to the cittie of Barcelona, where he was proclaimed King of Arragon, and Earle of Barcelona, vnto whom the Estates were sworne: but hee had to deale with a boysterous aduersarie, passing ouer his dayes in difficult warres, and finishing them by poyson (as it was thought) as shall be hereafter more at large declared. After the departure of the Constable Don Pedro, the King Don Alphonso came to Gibraltar, and in his absence his people receiued an ouerthrow as they went about to scale the towne of Tanger, where diuers men of worth were slaine and taken. Among the prisoners were the Earle of Marialua, and Gomes Freyra, who were afterward redeemed for great ranfomes.

Expedition into Affricke against the city of Tanger.

C After his returne from Gibraltar into Affricke, hee entred in person into Penaea, a mountainous and woddie cuntry, from whence hee was constrained to retire to his great losse, where he left behind him D. Edward de Meneses Earle of Viana, who to saue the kings life being in great danger, lost his own. The Earle of Villa-reall did at that time, by his valour, saue the army, fighting brauely in the rere-ward, defending it against an infinite multitude of Moores: infomuch as the king beeing desirous to acknowledge his prowesse, did publikly prayse him, and gaue him the honor of beeing the shield and defender of the faith the same day: or to speake more properly, Gods instrument for the deliuerie and helpe of the Portugals. These aduerser fortunes caused King Alphonso to returne into Portugall with small honor, where he applied himselfe to vovew and pilgrimages, thinking hereby to appease the Saints, patrons and conductors (as he thought) of his vnhappy and disastrous enterprises.

King Alphonso's misfortune in his expedition into Affricke.

D King Henry of Castile at his departure from Gibraltar, came to Eccia, where he gathered together all the cauallerie of the garrisons and countreies neere about, ioyning them to his great armie, which he commonly carried about with him, wherewith he entred into the territories of Granado, where the Ambassadors of king Ismael the Moore met with him, and presented vnto him the tribute, with fundrie other gifts, so that he passed on no further, but dismissed his forces, and came to Iuen, whose Gouernor was the Constable Don Michael Lucas d'Irançu. At Iuen remayned Don Pedro Giron, Master of Calatrava, who beeing desirous to offend the Earle of Ledesma, and to set him at variance with the Constable Don Michel Lucas, he told the King that he heard say, that he meant to bestow the Mastership of S. Iames, (which the Infant Don Alphonso held onely in name) vpon the Earle of Ledesma: and thereupon shewed him diuers reasons to perswade him to giue that dignitie rather to the Constable, who was a valiant Knight, and one greatly affected to his seruice: but the King seemed to giue no eare to his speech, knowing very well whereunto it tended. Don Pedro perceiued by many other reasons, that he was not very welcome to the King, who (as he supposed) did suspect him to bee of the league with the Marquis of Villena his brother, and the Arch-bishop of Toledo: wherefore he returned thence, and then began they to treat of great leagues and confederacies, to the preiudice of the estate of Castile, prefaged by great tempests of wind, which at Seuille did ouerthrow a great quantitie of the city walls, and did blow away a great bell out of the Church of S. Augustine, aboue a bowes shot from the place where it did hang, tooke vp into the ayre a payre of Oxen yoked together at the plough, and plucked vppe by the rootes diuers sorts of trees, scattering them here and there in very fearefull manner: In the ayre was scene the proportion of armed men fighting, and three 29

Castille.

Prodigious winds and other tokens of future calamities.

Eagles

Eagles striuing together, with great furie fell downe dead to the ground. Matters standing in these tearmes, the King returned to Madrid, where he continued still carelesse of that which concerned the good of the Realme: there was no audience nor admittance for petitioners, nor any administration of iustice: he permitted his porters, and those of his guard to offer indignities to such as he did not loue and to those that did sue vnto him, and he would winke at them when as many times they would shut the gates against the Arch-bishoppe, and the Marquis of Villena, who were oftentimes sent from thence with many iniurious speeches. These things with other of greater importance would he giue ayme to, so as he willingly made a readie way to the greatest miseries and calamities that could be imagined. And hearing that the king Don Alphonso of Portugall was entered into Castile to visit, for deuotion sake, the Monasterie of Guadalupe, he departed from Madrid with the Queene his wife, and the Infants his brother and sister, and went to meet him at a place called the Arch-bishoppes bridge, not making the Marquis of Villena, nor the Arch-bishop of Toledo acquainted with any thing to be treated of in that interview.

Interview of the kings of Ca stile and Por tugall at Gua dalupa.

There were newly strengthened and confirmed the auncient leagues and allyances betweene the two kingdomes, by the agreement of future marriages with the king Don Alphonso who was a widdower, and Donna Isabella sister to the king of Castile, and betweene the Infant Don John of Portugall, eldest sonne and heire to that Crowne, of the age of eight yeares, and the Queene of Castiles daughter, who was tearmed the Princeesse Joane. These things promised and agreed vpon, the king of Portugall returned to Guadalupe to finish and performe his vow, and from thence into his owne country. In the meane time the Arch-bishop and the Marquis beeing forewarned by the tokens of disgrace, which they well perceyued, and by their own consciences, absented themselves from the Court, fearing to be taken and punished, and with-drew themselves to Alcala of Henares, where they sollicit their friends, and strengthened their league, into the which, by the meanes of the Arch-bishop, entered very secretly the Admirall Don Fredericke, the Earle of Benauent, Don Alphonso Pimentell sonne-in-law to the Marquis, Don Roderigo Manrique Earle of Parcdes, Don Inigo Manrique Bishop of Coria, with all his breethren: on the other side the Marquis of Villena went in person to draw into their league Don Garcia Aluarez of Toledo, Earle of Alua de Tormes, and Don Aluaro of Estuniga, Earle of Plaisance, whom he drew into the number. In like manner the Master of Calatraua played his part thorough the whole countrie of Andalusia, with great secrecie: for their desseigne was to get the Infants, Don Alphonso, and Donna Isabella from the Court into their power, to serue for a colour to their proceedings, not caring at all for Donna Joane, who was tearmed the Princeesse of Castile, whom they all held to be begotten in adulterie by Don Bertrand de la Cueva of the Queene. The king wanted no aduertisement and information of the progression of these matters, but he was negligent and carelesse.

D. Joane borne in adulterie, shee subject of all the Kings in
Castile.

At his returne to Madrid hearing of the Arch-bishoppes and the Marqueses retreat, hee beganne to thinke vpon their dangerous practises, and sent to commaund them to come to the Court, to vnderstand what hee had agreed vpon and concluded with the king of Portugall, but they excused themselves, and desired to talke with the king in a place and companie not suspected. The King and the Marquis did see one another, and talked and conferred together betweene Madrid and Alcala of Henares, without any conclusion.

Soone after it was decreed, that the Marquis of Santillana, and the Earle of Haros sonne should be giuen as hostages to the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo for the Marquis of Villena his safe-comming to the Court, who gaue the king to vnderstand, that he would not come, vnlesse hee would commit the Arch-bishop of Seuille Don Alphonso of Fonseca to prison, for the reasons which hee had shewed vnto him: endeavoring by his persecution, to keepe the rest of the kings seruants in suspition, the which came to passe: for the King who did already distrust the Arch-bishoppe of Seuille, sent John Fernandes Galindo, Governour to the Queene to take him, who beeing aduertised thereof by the Marquis himselfe, who played with both hands, escaped, whereat all the Lords of the Councell,

A Councell, and others which were employed and negotiated in matters of State, were greatly offended: and then the violences and tyrannies which did afflicke the kingdom during this kings life, began to appeare.

After this trick the Marquis came to Court, and with him the Earles of Benauent and Parcdes, and Don Alphonso Henriques, eldest sonne to the Admirall, euery one of them well accompanied with their acquaintance, friends, and seruants, with intent and purpose to seize vpon the persons of the King, the Earle of Ledesma, and the Infants. The King, as ill aduised as he was, did distrust them, and therefore caused the Infants to be shut vp in the tower of homage, with sufficient guard: and as hee was doing hereof, the confederates, who should execute that enterprize, came hastily to the Pallace, and violently breaking open the gates, entered into the hall: then the King fearing and distrusting what might happen, withdrew himselfe by a priuie way, with the Earle of Ledesma, hauing made the Infants safe. The Marquis who was wise and subtil, perceiuing their proiect and purpose to faile, with a stedfast and assured countenance, as though he had had no hand therein, presented himselfe to the King, and was one of those that did sollicite him rigorously to punish such an offence, which the King might easily haue done in himselfe, if he had bene possessed with an heroicke spirit: but all that hee sayd vnto him, was: How now Marquis, do you thinke that this which is attempted in my house, is well done? assure your selfe that I will be now no longer patient. The Marquis who was thoroughly acquainted with his humour, found meanes to appease him, and so returned to his lodging. But this senselesse King thought that he should be sufficiently reuenged if hee should giue sharper spurres to those who were already to much gauled with enuie and emulation to see the Earle of Ledesma so honored, aduanced, and enriched.

His determination then was, in despite of all his enemies, to honour him with the Mastership of Saint Iames, which was kept, since the death of the Constable Don Aluaro de Luna, by the King Don John, and by this King Don Henry his sonne, as an appendix to the Crowne, with the dispensation of the Popes Nicholas the fifth, and Calixtus the third, vntill that time. And for to obtaine the consent and Bull of Pope Pius the second, he dispatched one of his Chaplaynes called Suero de Solis to Rome, who caried with him fourteene thousand golden Henryes, to get expedition. Before this Chaplayne returned, the Secretarie Aluar Gomez, who had writen the Kings letters to the Pope, went and reuealed it to the Marquis, whose familiar friend and partisan he was, the which did the more enflame the confederates to the ruine of the King, his Minion, and the whole kingdom.

The Marquis who was very expert in all points belonging to a cunning Courtier, perswaded the King to remooue to Segobia, saying, that there the affaires in hand might be better managed then at Madrid: but the truth was, he did it of purpose to haue him neerer vnto the countries of the Confederates, if the matter should happen to come to strokes. And he dealt in such sort, making so great a shew of distrust, as the Bishoppe of Palenca, brother to the Earle of Ledesma, was giuen in hostage to the Master of Calatraua, and kept in the towne of Pegnasel. When they were all come to Segobia, the Marquis fained to beare a great grudge to the Earles of Plaisance, Alua, and others: in which meane space arriued the messenger from Rome, bringing with him the Popes Bull for the Master-shippe of Saint Iames for the Earle of Ledesma, whereat the king greatly reioyced, and told the Marquis that now he must needs allow and tolerate the Popes graunt to the Earle: who answered, that hee was well contented so to do: neuertheless hee shewed vnto him diuers reasons of the manifest and apparent wrong done therein to the Infant Don Alphonso, the which the King sleightly passed ouer, and did not regard: and the day following hee did inuest the Earle in that place and dignitie, giuing and willingly surrendring vnto him the Ensignes and Ornaments thereunto belonging.

This deed did so highly displease the Marquis, as from thencefoorth hee did sollicite the Confederates to arme themselves, and to practise how they might take the king, Queene, her daughter, together with the Infants Don Alphonso, and Donna Isabella, and against the K.

Conspiracie
Queene, her daughter, and
D. Bertrand,
de la Cueva.

and to kill the new Master of Saint Iames: and the better to execute their plot, they A dealt with a Captaine of the Kings named Fernand Carrillo, that his wife (who was one of the Ladies attending on the Infanta Donna Izabella) should in the night open a doore of the Queenes lodging: and it was decreed amongst them, that the Earle of Paredes should take the King, the Earles of Plaisance and Alua should seize vpon the Queene and his daughter Ioane, the supposed Princeesse, the Marquis should leade away the Infants, and his brother, the Master of Calatraua should dispatch the Earle of Ledesma. These matters thus concluded, they were discovered and reuealed to the King some three howers before they should haue bene executed, who was as slacke in redressing this, as other former matters, for if he had so pleased, hee might easily haue taken or slaine the Marquis beeing in the Court: but he sayd, that he would keepe the promise which hee made him, and so he onely sent Gonzal of Sahauedra, and the Secretarie Aluaro Gomes vnto him to reproch his trecherie, which did much trouble the Marquis, who neuerthevnto him to keepe the same, and not intending any more to enter into the Cittie, so that if the king meant to talke with him, it behooued him then to come forth willingly and meete C him.

The Confederates perceiuing this enterprife of theirs to prooue vaine and of no effect, did intreate the King to heare the Marquis speake, and to come forth of the cittie into some place not suspected, but their intent was to seize vpon him abroade in the Countrey, since they could not bring it to passe in the cittie: The King consented, and appointed to meete them betwene Villa Castin, and the Monasterie of Saint Peter de las Duegnas, to the which Monasterie the King came, but he had there notice given him of two things: the one, that the Admirall Don Frederick had in Vailledolit erected banners in the name of the Infant Don Alphonso, naming him king, and that the towne had withstood it, and in such sort resisted the Admirall, and his people, as they had driuen D him thence: The other was, that hee should by no meanes go on to meete with the Marquis of Villena, because the Master of Calatraua, and diuers of the Manriques were in the fields with fixe hundred horse to take him.

The king beeing highly moued at these practises, did prouide a remedie in time: for hee dispatched Gonzal of Sahauedra with five hundred horse of his owne Guard for to succour those of Vailledolit, and for the present danger, he sent the Bishop of Calaorra to Villa Castin, and the Licentiat Diego Henriques del Castel, his Councillor and Chronicler to the Earles of Plaisance and Alua, to discover that which was done there. These hauing met with others, who came to waite the king of the selfe same danger, they se- E parated themselves, and the Licenciante returned with speed to the Monasterie, to cause the king to dislodge, who at that instant departed from thence and returned to Segobia, entring into the cittie with five thousand men gathered together from the places thereabouts. The Bishoppe went on, and met with the Earles, who marched in Armes and military Order, with whome he had some speech and conference to no purpose, and so returned to Segobia. The new Master of Saint Iames, besides his owne people, hauing with him the kings Guard, came neere to the Master of Calatraua, beeing in a place fite for a fight, and was resolu'd to charge him, if the night had not hindred him, notwithstanding that he had commandement from the king not to do so, wherefore he brought backe his troupes to Segobia.

The knights of the League seeing their enterprises to bee discovered, marched towards F the Cittie of Burgos, the Castle whereof was vnder the command of Don Aluaro of Estuniga, Earle of Plaisance, one of the Confederates. The Cittie being moued with these strange newes, would not consent to ought that they propounded: but Don Iohn de Pacheco Marquis of Villena, could so well set forth the iustice of his cause in eloquent tearmes, as they did belecue that hee and his complices were in the right, but diuers of Treason discovered: but not punished.

Burgos in the power of the confederates.

A the inhabitants who were of good iudgement, did very well perceiue, that each of these confederate Lords, was carried away with enuie, hatred, ialousie, and other diseases of Court, and with a desire of their owne priuate good, rather then that of the Common-wealth.

Now at the request of the Marquis certaine chiefe men of the cittie met together, who signed the letters which they wrote to the King, which contained foure principall accusations, which they required to haue redressed: The one was, that the king kept ordinarily in his Court Moores which were enemies of the faith, whome hee did animate to commit infinite out-rages which were vnpunished: as the rape of the daughter of Diego Sanchez of Orihuela d' Seuill. Again that the places of Iudges with other Offices were bestowed vpon persons wholly vnworthy of them, by meanes whereof diuers exactions and tyrannies were committed: Thirdly, that to the manifest contempt and hinderance of the Infant Don Alphonso, vnto whome that dignitie did belong, he had bestowed the Master-ship of Saint Iames vpon Bertrand de la Cueva Earle of Ledesma: The fourth, and most important, which could not be excused, was, that hee caused Donna Ioane to be sworne vnto, as Princeesse and heire of the kingdomes of Castile and Leon, whome hee very well knew to be none of his daughter, highly wronging the Infants Don Alphonso, and Donna Izabella, by depriving them of their patrimonie and inheritance: to remedie which, it was requisite to cause the Estates of Spaine to make a new oath, in the behalfe of the Infant Don Alphonso, and to restore to him the Master-ship of Saint Iames. These C reasons were indeed of great moment, if they had bene prosecuted by lawfull and iust meanes, and with a true zeale of the good and reputation of the Crowne of Castile, but there is seldome any good order kept in such rash proceedings.

The letter was presented to the King at Vailledolit, whither he was come with a great traine: but notwithstanding that most of the articles containd matter of truth, wherein his honour was highly touched, he neuerthelesse made such small account thereof, as most of his Councill, and seruants were greatly ashamed thereof: yet for all that he had then about him forces sufficient to dissolue and scatter that league without any danger at all: but it was Gods will to punish both the king and the people. The chiefe poynt D that the Confederates stood vpon, was, that Donna Ioane the supposed Princeesse, wrongfully reputed Princeesse of Castile, should be declared to bee the daughter of Don Bertrand de la Cueva.

The opinion of the Bishop of Calaorra, of Friar Lopes de Barriento, of the Master of Saint Iames, and others which were present at the reading of the letter, was, to go presently and find out the rebels, and to offer them battaile, alleading diuers reasons, as namely the small forces which they had then together: but the King would not consent thereunto, desiring perhaps to bee reputed meeke and gentle, rather then warlike and valiant: wherevpon the Bishoppe of Calaorra, told him plainly, that hee very well perceyued, hee did not desire to raigne peaceably, seeing that hee made so small account E of the defence of his honour, in not reuenging the wrongs and injuries which were done vnto him, and that for his part he did verily belecue, that hee would neuer leaue behind him the fame and report of a generous and magnanimous King, but that he was assured, that hee would become the most vnhappy King that euer reigned in Spaine, and that he would repent his cowardize when it was too late. Notwithstanding this free admonishment, hee remayned cold, and gaue eare to the agreements which they offered him: Hee sent word to those of the League to meete at Duegnas, the which they did, and thither came the Admirall, and the Arch-bishop of Séuill. There they beganne to treat of diuers matters: but the better to conferre, it was thought fit and conuenient, that the King should come to Cabeçon, and the Confederates to Cigales: and places thereabouts, which beeing done, the King and the Marquis of Villena spake and conferred together in the open fields, each of them beeing accompanied with three persons, and fiftie horse on each part, to discover, visite, and make sure the Countrey round about.

After long conference together, it was concluded, That the king within twelue daies after, should deliuer into the Marquis his hands, the person of the Infant Don Alphonso, who

X x x

Accusations propounded by the colleagues.

The king reproached with the adulterous birth of Donna Ioane.

The King will rather seeme meeke than rigorous.

Sharp speeches of the Bishop of Calaorra to the king.

who should be acknowledged for Prince and heire of the kingdome of Castile, and oath A made vnto him in that natur at the same instant according to the custome of Spaine, by the Lords and Deputies of the townes and Prouinces that should be there present: and that the Lords and Knights should promise, that the Infant Don Alphonso, who was then eleuen yeares old, should marrie Donna Joane the Queenes daughter, so soone as shee should come to age: againe, that the Earle of Ledesma should giue ouer the Mastership of Saint Iames, the which should be restored to the Infant Don Alphonso: That for the gouernement of the affaires of State, and other great busineses of the kingdome, two Knights of each side should be chosen, Don Alphonso of Oropeça Generall of the Iero- nomites should be as vmpire betweene the two parties: on the Kings part for the assu- B rance of the deliuerie of the Infant, should be giuen in hostage for the kings fidelitie, the Master of Saint Iames, and the Earle of Benauent for that of the confederates.

These things beeing agreed vpon, the King came to Segobia, in the castle of which cittie, the Queene and the Infants lay, and he caused the Infant Don Alphonso to depart thence to be deliuered to the Lords of the League, albeit it was fore-told him, that the Infant should be declared King of Castile: but the Secretarie Aluar Gomes, who was wholly at the Marquis his deuotion, assured him of the contrarie: vnto whome the charge to conduct the Infant to Sepulveda was committed, where he deliuered him into the hands of the confederate Lords. The King returned to Valiodolit, from whence the next day, he returned to Cabeçon. The confederates on the other side, brought the Infant into C the fields, where he was sworne vnto, and acknowledged Prince and heire of those kingdomes, being eleuen yeares of age.

The Prelates and Knights of the league which were present at this ceremony, were D. Alphonso Carrillo of Acugna, Arch-bishop of Toledo, Don Alphonso of Fonseca Arch-bishop of Seuille, Don Inigo Manrique Bishop of Coria, Don Frederick Henriques great Admirall of Castile, Don Aluaro of Estuniga Earle of Plaisance, Don Garcia Aluaro of Toledo Earle of Alua, Don Rodrigo Manriques Earle of Paredes, the Earles of Saint Marra and Ribadeo with others, who promised that the marriage betweene the Infant, and Donna Joane should be accomplished. And on the Kings side to consult vpon the administration of the affaires was chosen, Don Pedro of Velasco, eldest son to the Earle D of Haro, Don Pedro Fernandes of Velasco, and Gonçal of Sahauedra: the Confederates appointed the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Plaisance: and for a third person Friar Alphonso of Oropeça was named.

The King beeing come backe to Valiodolit, did handle the matter so with the Earle Don Bertrand de la Cueva, as he for quietnesse sake renounced the Master-shippe of Saint Iames, and yelded it vp into the Popes hands: For which deed of his, the King vsing his accustomed bountie, gaue him in recompence the towne of Albuquerque, with the title of Duke, with the townes of Cuellar, Roa, Molina, Atiença, la Pegna d'Alcaçar, and besides all this, three millions and five hundred thousand Marauidis of yearly rent, to be leuied vpon Vbeda, Baeça, and other places of Andalusia: we will therefore hereaf- E ter call him Duke of Albuquerque, and Earle of Ledesma.

Those things beeing accomplished, the king went to Olmeda, and the Iudges or arbitrators which were chosen to Medina del campo, where whilest they conferred and disputed about the affaires, the Confederates had inuented new meanes to continue the troubles. The Arch-bishop of Toledo, and the Admirall Don Frederick made shew to be displeased with the Marquis, and made a craftie reconciliation with the King, making him beleue, that they had both will and meanes to ruine the Marquis: the King recey- ued them very fauourably, and for ioy thereof sent to Don Gomes of Cacetes, Master of Alcantara, and to Don Pedro Puerto Carero Earle of Medellin, whome hee very much F trusted, to come to him with as many souldiers as they could leaue. Thereupon hee was aduertised, that the arbitrators had giuen vp their sentence, by the which there remay- ned nothing to him but the name of King onely: for the Marquis beeing a man very wife, eloquent, and well experienced, did so handle the other Deputies, as he made them to condescend to whatsoever he pleased, hauing the Secretarie Aluar Gomes wholly at his deuotion, by whose meanes he drew Gonçalo of Sahauedra to his party.

The

A The King being greatly troubled therewith, sent for Aluaro and Gonçalo to come and speake with him: but they beeing kept backe with shame, and their owne euil conscience, durst not appeare in his presence, but secretly tooke an other way, where by chance they met with the maister of Alcantara and the Earle of Medellin who were going to the King with a thousand horse, whom these two run-awaies made beleue, that the King had giuen charge to take them, and that he did greatly distrust them, and therefore adui- sed them not to shew them-selues vp in a place from whence they could not escape at their pleasures.

They knowing the king, by many like examples, to be apt enough to do such a mar- ter, did easily beleue what the secretarie and Gonçalo had told them, and at their intreaty B they went altogether and ioyned them-selues with their confederats, the which did won- derfully trouble the King, who had great cause to complaine of the ingratitude of Aluar Gomes de Cité Reall about the rest, because hee had trusted him with his greatest secrets, and had highly aduanced him, hauing giuen him the Lordshippe of Maque- da, and enabled him, by meanes of his fauour, honours and offices, to purchase Saint Siluester and Torrejón de Velasco, and other waies aduanced him: although hee were of no Noble parentage. Apprehending then this treason of Aluaro, hee confiscated all his goods, and gaue the towne of Torrejón de Velasco, to Pedro Artur de Auila, sonne to Diego of Segobia, his high treasurer. And afterward made an edict, whereby hee C declared the deputies and arbitrators, assembled at Medina del Campo suspect, and ene- mies to his crowne, reuoking, and declaring their sentence to bee of no force. After- that, hee came to Segobia, and the confederates went to Playfania, carrying with them the Prince Don Alfonso.

Matters being broken of, the Maister of Calatrava went into Andalusia to drawe the Lords of that country into the league. In the meane time the Arch-Bishoppe of Toledo and the Admirall, the better to assure the king of their fidelity, remayned in their houses, making no shew of cleauing to any side in those latter tumults, and they sayd, that they stayd there expecting when the King would send for them: Now the King, the better to oblige them to his seruice, had promised to giue vnto the D Archbishop la mora of Medina del campo, and the City of Auila, and to the Admirall the Captenthship of Valiodolit, and of Val de nebro, with a certaine summe of Henries of gould to pay their soldiours, to weete the Arch-Bishoppe foureene hundred Launces, and the Admirall eight hundred, the which they obtained within few daies after. The king hauing left in Segobia, with a good and sure guard, the Queene his wife, with her daugh- ter, and the Infanta Donna Isabell, hee went to Madrid whether the Arch-Bishop came as it were flying, because, (as hee sayd) the Marchiones of Villena had caused him to bee pursued by the commandement of her husband, and the other confederates: beeing re- ceaued and welcomed by the whole Courte, the King, the day following, held a counceill, wherein hee complained of the disobedience and rebellion of the Marquis E and his confederats, who had made sundry attempts against his person, & the welfare & quiet of his realmes, which was wholly diuided in armes, & was so troubled, that without a fit and speedy remedy, both he himselfe, who was King, & the Lords, Citties, and other estates, should bee exposed to the appetite of such as gaped after their liuings, places, and dignities: wherefore hee craued aduice what was to bee done in a time so trouble- some, wherein hee himselfe, with his faithfull friends, and counsellors, were ready to fall into extreame daunger.

The Arch-Bishop as a Prelate of greatest authority, & who was the mouth of the rest, answered, and gaue the King counsell to demand the Prince Don Alfonso of the con- federate Lords, saying that hee should liue better according to his dignity, beeing with him than in their company, seeing that the troubles were encreased by means of his deliuey vnto them, were as peace and quietnesse was expected: and if that they should refuse to send him, that then the King should proceed against them by rigor of armes, as rebels and guilty of treason.

This counsell was receyued and allowed of them all: and therefore the King went to- wards

Articles agreed vpon for the pacification of the troubles.

Don Alphonso
the kings brother acknowledged heire to the crowne.

The King betrayed on all sides.

Aluar Gomes
perfidious and disloyall to his King.

The King dis-trusts the arbitrators (sentence for the peace.

King Henry ill advised giueth
his enemies meanes to way
vpon him.

Don Bertrand
de la Cueva,
created Duke of Albuquerque

The Earle of Alua forsaking the League, reconciled to the King.

wards Salamanca, supposing to take the Rebels vnprovided. By the way, the Earle of Alua, who was in his house, lodged and enterdayned the King and his Court very sumptuously, and with great magnificence, and did sincerely reconcile himselfe vnto him, vtterly forsaking the League, vnto whome the King promised to forget what was past, and to great fauours in time to come: The fourth day after hee went from thence and came to Salamanca, with the Arch-bishop of Toledo, the Bishop of Calorra, the Duke of Albuquerque with others of his priuie Councell, from which place he did write to the confederate Lords, according as he was aduised by the Arch-bishop of Toledo. Then did the Arch-bishop sollicite the King to giue vnto him and the Admirall, Auila, and the other places, with the money promised for the leauing and payment of their men at armes: But the King promised him the places, and willed them in the meane time to assemble their forces.

The Lords of the League who were at Plaifance, hauing receyued the Kings commandement, answered him, that they would serue him no longer, and there-withall aduised him not to marrie the Infanta Donna Izabella to the King of Portugall, without the consent of the three Estates of the Kingdome. The letter beeing read, diuers told the king that he should well consider the tenour thereof: for albeit the Confederates sayd, that they would no longer serue him, it was euident by the discourse thereof, that they did not intend to sequester themselves from the seruice of the Crowne, but onely from that of his owne person, and that they would for a certaine elect his brother Prince Don C Alphonso for their King. And moreover, they did aduise him not to trust ouer much to the Arch-bishop of Toledo; for they were sufficiently aduertised, that the Admirals intent and his was, so soone as they could get the castles and places, which they demaunded, in their owne power, to retire then with all their forces, to his enemies: but the King who was not suspicious, but by accident, and by nature credulous, did for all that giue the Arch-bishop whatsoever he demanded. And moreouer, they did aduise him, that A-reuallo should bee beseged, a citie belonging to the Confederates, who before they would loose that place, would perhaps come to any honest agreement: this being so let downe, the Arch-bishop was sent away to gather his forces together, with commande-ment, that he himselfe and the Admirall should with their troupes meete before Arcualo: in the meane space the Bishop of Calorra, and the Duke of Albuquerque remayned at Salamanca, to giue order for things necessarie for the sege: that beeing done, the King departed thence accompanied with the horse-men of his guard toward Medina del Campo, but before his coming forth of Salamanca, there arose so terrible a tempest of wind, as blew vp the whole rooffe in the great place there, bearing it more then a stones-cast from thence, the which was held prodigious by the Mathematicians and Astrologians of the same place.

Prodigious wind.

The King caused the Queene his wife, and the Infanta Donna Izabella, to come to Medina del campo, and Donna Ioane his supposed daughter was left in the castle of Segouia, vnder the keeping of Perucho of Musarras, Gouvernour and Captaine thereof. The King came from Medina del campo to the campe before Arcualo, and perceiuing that the Arch-bishop came not, he sent one of his Secretaries to bid him make hast. This Secretary called Fernand Badajos, found the Arch-bishoppe with his troupes going towards Auyla, where after he had deliuered his message, the Arch-bishop sayd vnto him, Tell your King from me, that I am wearie both of him and his affaires, and that shortly the true King of Castile shall be knowne. The Secretary hauing reported these speeches to the King, at the same instant newes came, that the Admirall Don Fredericke, had made himselfe Master of Vailladolid, where he had openly proclaimed Don Alphonso King: and that the Marquis of Villena, and all the Lords which were in the citie of Plaifance, there to make the Prince Alphonso King. Then this miserable and infortunate King Henry, being touched with the feeling of his offences, and acknowledging the iudgement of God, all sorrowfull and humbled with-drew himselfe apart, (as the Licenciare Diego Henriques who wrote his life and deedes doth report) kneeling vpon the ground, and lifting vp his hands to heauen, he prayed in this manner:

O Lord

The Arch-bishop of Toledo betrayseth the king his master

K. Henry distressed with humane helpe, hath recourse to God.

A O Lord God vnto whome belongeth the defence and protection of Kings, and by whome they raigne, I recommend my cause vnto thee, and commit my life into thy hands: I yeeld thee infinite thanks; for that it hath pleased thee to punish mee in this sort for mine offences, which are worthie of a sharper scourge, and I confesse that the same which I suffer is very small in respect of my delerts: May it please thee (O Lord) that these troubles may diminish the paines which are due to my soule in regard of my sins, and if it be thy will that I shall passe thorough these miseries and afflictions, I beseech thee from the bottome of my heart to giue me patience to endure them, and reason and vnderstanding to guide my selfe in them.

This prayer beeing ended, he commaunded to sound to horse-backe, and rode to Medina del campo, from whence hauing taken the Queene his wife, and the Infanta, hee came backe to Salamanca. At the same time the Arch-bishoppe was busied in taking of Auila, whether the confederates came, to wit, the Marquis of Villena, the Master of Alcantara, the Earles of Benauent, Paredes, Plaifance, and Medelin, with others. There in a playne field without the citie a great scaffold was set vp, vpon the which was placed an effigie or picture representing King Henry in a mourning habite, sitting in a regall throne, the Crowne vpon his head, the Scepter in his hand, and the sword laid before him. Into the same fields the Lords and Knights of the league came, bringing the Prince Don Alphonso with them: the Marquis, the Master of Alcantara, the Earle of Medelin, Gonsalo of Sahuedra, and the Secretarie Aluare Gomes, stood a great space from the scaffold: the rest went vp, and standing round about the statue, a certaine writing was read, by the which King Henry was degraded, and condemned to loose his royall dignitie; contayning foure chief points, according to which, and as each of them were reading, the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, did first take the Crowne from his head, as deferring to bee deprived from the dignitie of King: then the Earle of Plaifance rooke away the sword, when they read the Article, that he was no more worthy to administer iustice: afterward, the Earle of Benauent, euen as the Cryer pronounced, that he was vnfitte to gouerne the kingdome, took the scepter out of his hand: and finally, when they came to the chiefe point, which did deprive him of his royall throne, the statue was thrown down from his seate, with many vnworthie and outragious speeches, by Diego Lopes of Suniga, or Estuniga brother to the Earle of Plaifance. After that this ceremonie was ended, the other Lords drew neere with the Prince Alphonso, and mounting the scaffold, they tooke and lifted him vp on their shoulders, and began to cry, Castile, Castile for the king Don Alphonso: then the trumpets did sound, and they all were to kisse his hand, as their King.

King Henry shamefully degraded in effigie before Auila.

D. Alphonso the king: brother declared king of castile.

This was done in the moneth of Iune, in the yeare 1465. which when King Henry vnderstood, he tooke it very patiently, and rehearsed the verse of the Prophet Esay: I haue nourished and brought vp children, and they haue despised me: but although these trecherous and disloyall seruants, haue so wronged and scorned me by the statue which they haue degraded, and throwne away all respect and duty which they owe vnto me: yet they cannot keepe me, who am the true king from hauing strength and courage to chastise and disperse them: for I hope in our Lord Iesus Christ, which is the iust Iudge of Kings, that their wickednesse shall be destroyed, and my innocencie made knowne to the whole world. Then he wrote to the three Estates, citties, and communalities of Castile, concerning these disorders, and leauied men at armes from all parts, promising exemptions, liberties, priuiledges, and recompences to such as would serue him in that extremity; for he knew very well, that Toledo and Burgos had erected Don Alphonso's banners, and that the Master of Calatrava, who was strong in Andalusia, had caused Seuille and Cordoua to rebell, and had drawne the Duke of Medina Sidonia, the Earle of Arcos, and Don Alphonso of Aguilar, with many others, to their league: wherefore this poore vnfortunate King would oftentimes say: Naked I came out of my mothers wombe, and the earth must receiue me naked: no man can become so poore as he was born: and if God do now chastise me for my finnes, he will comfort and preserue me hereafter, for his infinite power killeth, and giueth life, hurteth and healeth, giueth kingdomes, and taketh them away, listeth vp kings, and throweth them downe againe euen as he pleaseth.

as patience of King Henry.

Xxx 3

Whilest

31 Arragon.
and Nauarre.

Whilest that Castile was thus troubled, the kingdome of Arragon was not at rest: A for King John hauing made a truce with the King of Castile, since the yeare 1464. being contented to liue at peace on that side, albeit he was deprived of that which was adiudged him by the sentence of the French King Lewis the eleuenth, he did notwithstanding since continually presse the Cattelans, and other Rebels by force of armes, to the end to reduce them to their former duties and allegiance: This truce was sworne vnto by Commissioners on either side, namely, by Gaston the Earle of Foix, in the name of the king John his father-in-law, and by Donna Leonora his wife, heire to the Crowne of Nauarre, who to obtaine the right of succession (if we may beleue the Spanish Authors) was not affraid to cause Donna Blanche, the Queene of Castile, her eldest sister, to be poysoned, B who was kept for a time by her and her husband prisoner at the towne of Lescar in the Countrey of Earne, by the consent of King John her father, to the end to keepe this poore Princeesse from marrying any more.

A cruell appe-tise of rule in the Countesse
of Foix

32 Continuance of the warre of Cattlogne.

As concerning the warres of Cattlogne, the estates of that Country did not faint; although they were forsaken by the King of Castile, nor abated any sort of their hatred against their Prince, but reiecting him as a wicked murderer of his owne sonne, they chole (as hath bene already sayd) Don Pedro the third Constable of Portugall, sonne Don Pedro Duke of Coimbra, vnto whom for the same effect they sent Ambassadors to Ceuta, where he remayned with the King Don Alphonso of Portugall, warring vpon the Affricane Moores: whilest they attended his comming, (the Spaniards sent to their ayde by the king Don Henry, not being yet departed) the warre continued cruely in the countries of Cattlogne and Arragon with variable successe.

The Knights of the Order of Montesa taking the Kings part, did greatly trouble the towne and countrey of Tortosa, and tooke the cittie of Esmereta, which the Castillans had wonne in the last warres, who had given many ouerthrowes to those of Tarrassona and Borja, and others which were on K. Johns side. Those of Barcelona, being masters of the sea, and strong enough by land, did obtaine sundrie victories, and defeated the Prior of S. Iohns. Those of Lerida rebelling againe, constrained the king to besiege their towne, wherein commanded as chiefe Pedro de Deza, who dared to offer the king battell, where they fought so valiantly, that albeit the king obtained the victorie, yet hee lost more men then the beseege, who made diuers furious sallies vpon the Kings armie, leaving still behind them bloudie marks: but in the end being constrained by famine, they yeelded with condition, to haue their liues and goods saued, which the king graunted them, because he would not appeare ouer rigorous, and to the end that hee might bring others to do the like, by that example of clemencie. John de Lazcano a Knight born in Guipuscoa was left Gouvernour of Lerida; the army marching against Ceruera, to inuest which place Don Alphonso and Don John of Arragon the kings bastard sons were sent before. In the meane time, D. Pedro of Portugall being arriued, receiued, and crowned King at Barcelona, according to the vsuall ceremonies of Arragon, hee determined with the forces which he found in Cattlogne, those which he had brought from Portugall, and with certaine Castilian Knights who of their owne accord remayned in that countrey, to succour Ceruera: but being come to Igualada, and vnderstanding by his spies, that his forces were not sufficient to raise Kings Johns army from before that place, he returned to Barcelona with great difficultie. Afterward to diuert the Earle of Pratas, who did furiously batter the towne of Tarraga for King John, he brought his army into his countrey, where he tooke Pratas, and committed diuers spoyles there, which king John hauing notice of, he caused the Earle to depart from before Tarraga, and sent him more souldiers, conducted by his sonne Don Fernand, with commaundement to meete with Don Pedro, whose armie consisted of fixe thousand and fise hundred men at the most, being Cattelans, Portugueses, Nauarrois, Burgondians and others: with these forces he came forth of Pratas, and met with the enemy about Calaf. As both the armies were in sight, an infinite multitude of storks appeared flying in the ayre, which troubled the minds of all men on either side, reputing it as prodigious: The battayles being ioyned, D. Pedro was ouer-come, and saued himselfe by fauour of the night in Pratas, where he had left a sufficient Garrison.

Don Pedro of Portugal crowned king at Barcelona.

Don Pedro and the Cattelans
defeated neere to Calaf.

To

A To this battaile of Calaf came Don Henry of Arragon, sonne to the Infant D. Henry, and Lady Beatrice Pimentel who was surnamed the fortunate Infant. D. Pedro who intitled himselfe King, left Pratas; and retired himselfe to Manresa, from whence he sent a captaine named Bertrand of Almendrades, to the succour of Ceruera, and he himselfe entred into the Prouince of Ampurdan, where he fortified his campe with new succours from the towne of Besalu; he battered and tooke Tibrana, and came to beseege Bisball, the which hauing beaten to no purpose, and spent many great shot, hee raised his leege, and came to Poblin: thither on euery side came King Johns people in such numbers, as D. Pedro was constrained to fight againe, where againe he was ouercome, and lost a thousand foot men, and two hundred and threescore horse.

D. Pedro and the Cattelans
againe defeated before Poblin.

B As these exploits were performed in Cattalonia, the Earle Gaston de Foix who gouerned Nauarre, with his wife Donna Leonora, called the Princeesse of Viana, by the aduise of those of his counsell, resolved to enterprise something vpon Castile, in counterchange of the townes of La Garde, Arcos and Saint Vincent, which the Castillans had withheld since the last warre, against the sentence giuen by the French King. Hauing then with great diligence and secrecy assembled great forces, he forced easly and without losse of his people, the City of Calaoarra to yeeld, wherein he did a thing very pleasing and agreeable to the confederate Knights against King Henry, which were within Auila with Prince Don Alphonso, whose Ambassador remained in the Court of Nauarre.

Calaoarra taken by Gaston de Foix from the Spaniards.

C This being done, the Earle was aduised to send to the King of Castile, to giue him to vnderstand, that what he had done, was not to breake the peace betweene Castile and Nauarre, but onely in manner of reprisall, in steed of the aboue mentioned townes, which hee withheld, belonging to the Kingdome wherevnto he had right: and if it might please him to lend some one or other to him, to agree vpon some good composition, according to right and equity, he would then submit himselfe therevnto. King Henry sent forthwith thither the licenciati Diego Henriques, who spake proudly and audaciously to the Earle and the Princeesse his wife about the taking of Calaoarra: They were chiefly ruled by the counsell of Nicholas, of Echaurri Bishop of Pampelona, and by his aduise Diego Henriques was sent backe, and with him an other of the same coate, to intreate King Henry to redeliuer the three townes of La Garde, Arcos, and Saint Vincent and that Calaoarra should be forthwith restored backe: and besides, that the Earle and the Princeesse should aide him with forces from Nauarre against his owne rebels, and would in no sort fauor nor aide them. This Ambassage deliuered to the King of Castile, at Segobia, did much content him, and he sent backe the licenciati Diego with the Ambassador of Nauarre to accomplish these restitutions, so that for assurance of what the Earle and the Princeesse should promise, they should giue their children D. John and Donna Mary for hostages: The two Ambassadors being on their way, he of Castile staid at Logrogno, and he of Nauarre came to the Earle, vnto whom hee gaue account of his charge: and according to that which was set downe, the Earle and Diego Henriques met since in a certaine place, yet they agreed vpon nothing, the Earle of Foix being importuned to the contrary, by the league of Castile.

The Castilian Ambassador foreseeing that the Earle ment to beseege Alfaro, hee gaue order speedily, that a hundred horsemen, with store of victuals, should enter into the same towne: within a while after, the Earle being at Tudela, he sent for the Castilian Ambassador, to the end to treat againe with him about an agreement, and he caused the Bishop of Pampelona, and Martin de Peralta to deale with him; but there was lesse done at this meeting then before, for the Bishop vsed many inuiolous speeches against King Henry, so as all men were ashamed of him: but the Ambassador of Castile did carry himselfe so modestly, and did refute the Bishops words with such good reasons, as in the end he made him to acknowledge his fault, and to excuse himselfe. In conclusion, the end of their diputation, was, that the Earle would not send his children, and that if the King of Castile would not yeeld vp the towne, which hee held in Nauarre, he would then beseege Alfaro: with this resolution the Ambassador departed, and in foure daies space that he remained at Alfaro, he caused it to be fortified with rampiers and defenses, as much as his short stay would giue him leaue : from thence he went into Soria, and lea- A uied souldiers there, for the defence of the same place. Alfaro being beseegeed and furiously battered by the Earle, did hold out, notwithstanding that it is situated betwene Calaoorra and Tudela, wherein were great garrisons of French-men and Nauarrois, so as within the space of twelue daies, the succors of Castile appeared, consisting of one thousand three hundred horse, and five thousand footmen, conducted by Alphonso de Arellan Lord de los Cameros : by reason whereof the Earle raised his seige; and brought backe his people to Tudela : and soone after he receiued newes that the Inhabitants of Calaoorra had massacred the French Garrison there, and returned to the obedience of their Prince King Henry. These disorders did greatly displease the Earle, the B Constable Lord Peter of Peralta, and others, who laide the whole fault vpon the Bishop of Pampelona who was the cause that the townes of La Garda, Saint Vincent and Arcos, which of old times belonged to Nauarre, haue euer since remained in the power of Castile.

as

King John after the victory, which his sonne had obtained at Poblin, receiued diuerse Inhabitants of the Prouince of Ampurdan, which yeelded to him, some willingly, others for feare. And desiring straightly to beseege Ceruera, a strong place by nature, hee sent thither the troupes of D. Alphonso, and those which the Queene held before Valde-cona, a towne seated within a mile of Tortosa : but D. Alphonso, before he marched to the C campe, vnderstanding that the Inhabitants of Igualada were at dissention among themselues, some of them cleauing to the new King D. Pedro, the others to King John : hee drew nere to it, and found meanes to take it whilst they were at variance: Having gotten in, he vsed them kindly that held with King John, the others hee seuerely punished:
 then he went to Ceruera, which was so speedily battred and assailed, as in the end it yeelded vpon composition to haue their liues and goods saued, and their priuiledges entirely maintained: the which was graunted. The gouernment of that place was giuen to John de Carraxona, then they went to Pratas, where the new King D. Pedro had left a garrison, he himselfe being retired to Barcelona : Pratas was yeelded, and Rodona likewise vpon conditions, and the army passed on to Tortosa, the Prince D. Fernand conducting the D foremost troupes, who beganne to encampe before Amposta, hauing with great difficulty passed the riuer Ebro, hich was greatly swelled and risen. The seige of Ampo-sta was long and difficult, winter drawing neere, which proued that yeere so exceeding cold, beyond the custome of the country, as it is reported that wolues came into the sol-diars tents and cabanes as though they had beene tame: and great numbers of sundry sorts of snakes were found in the fields, which did no hurt at all, which did greatly amaze the souldiers who held those things for strang prognostications: so as King John was constrained to comfort and animate his people with orations and friendly speeches, wherein a Sicillian Gentleman named Scipio Patello, who was wife and eloquent, did him good seruice. By the great labour of the souldiers, and extreame diligence of the captaines, Amposta was taken by force, where the King executed some of the principall E Inhabitants, and pardoned others, as namely the Gouernor who with diuers others had taken the castle.

After this they beseegeed Tortosa which the King greatly desired, who sent thither D.
Alphonso his son, to shut in the Inhabitants, and to prepare things in readinesse to batter it. The townes-men perceiuing it was in good earnest, sent forty of their Citizens to the King, to perswade him to desist from that enterprize, and to assure him that Tortosa would not rebel against him, if the other townes of Catalonia would compound and yeeld: therefore they entreated him to go to some other place, and to leaue them in peace; other-wise, he should thinke, that if the taking of Amposta cost him so deere, that Tortosa, which was much stronger, and greater, would stand him in no lesse. The King knowing that the Tortosans were none of the valiantest, answered them, that if they did not submit themselves to his obedience, he would seuerely punish them: which they refusing, the warre beganne to be very sharpe in euery place about the City, with the day-ly losse of many on either side: the towne was battered with great fury on all parts, and the beseegeed made diuerse braue sallies vpon the enemies. D. Pedro who named himselfe

The B. ship of Pampelona
 causeth the townes of La Garda, Saint
 Vincent and Arcos, to re-maine under the power of Castile.

Igualada surprised by meanes of the discord of the Inhabitants.

A cold winter.

Snakes among the army in the dead of winter.

Amposta taken by King John.

A himselfe King, did desire to succour Tortosa; but being with his forces on the way, he died by poison (as it is reported) in the City of Granol, five miles distant from Barcelona. King John being aduertized of the death of his enemy, did not dissemble the ioy that he felt, nor the Barcelonoiis their griefe and sorrow: but those of Tortosa were especially greued for the hope of succor which they expected from him: so as being out of hope of helpe, and extremely beaten euery day, they yeelded vpon reasonable termes.

These things were done in Catalonia, at the same time that the Prince Alphonso was proclaimed King of Castile at Auila, and King Henry degraded by the confederate Lords, vnto whose seruice and readuancement, from sundry parts of the Realme diuers Noble men resorted: but Don Garcia Aluarez de Toledo Earle of Alua de Tormes was he that shewed the greatest loue and affection towards him; for he brought to his aide one thousand footmen, three hundred men at armes, and two hundred light horse or genets: he dwelt nere to Salamanca. The King sent the Earle of Alua and his troupes to Zamora with John Bernand Galindo, who had command of the residew of the army:
 he himselfe with the Queene, and the Infanta Isabella, went to Ledesma; where he was sumptuously entertained and feasted by the Duke of Albuquerque for the space of eight daies: from whence hauing assembled three hundred men at armes and two hundred genets, they accompanied the King to Zamora. The Queene and the Infanta Isbell went into Portugall to request aide of the King, whereof there was great need, but their labour was in vaine. At Zamora daily arriued great numbers of souldiers for the Kings seruice. The Earle of Translamara brought thither two hundred men at armes, and two hundred genets, the Earle of Valencia, a hundred men at armes, and two hundred genets, others brought more or lesse according to their habilities. The King sent three hundred Launces to Segobia, to accompany the Lady Joane his supposed daughter to Zamora, where with great pompe hee entred the City vnder a canopy and in a Kingly habit.

In the meane time the Maister of Calatraua, stirred vp all Andalusia for the contrary part, and drew some by perswasions, guifts and promises, & others by threatnings, force D and violence. Hauing done his best (but in vaine) to enduce D. John de Valençuela to ioyne himselfe with the confederate Lords, he tooke him prisoner and would not release him, till he had snatched diuers fortresses from him, with the which not being satisfied, he tooke from him all the places belonging to the priory of Saint John, and gave them to D. Aluaro de Estuniga third sonne to the Earle of Playfance; He dispossessed also the Bishop of Iacn, the Kings faithful seruant, from all that he held, notwithstanding that he vsed his goods and houses, boldly and familiarly as his guest. The Constable of Castile D. Michael Lucas de Irançu, D. Pedro de Cordoua Earle of Cabra and his children, the Marshall of Castile D. Diego; the Commandor de Estepa D. Martin, and Martin Alphonso Lord of Alcaudete, did oppose themselves against the Maister of Calatraua. The intent of the confederate Lords was to goe and beseege Simancas, and being gone from Valiodolit for the same purpose with great store of men and munition, by the way they tooke Pegnaseur: where whilst they were busied, the King caused John Fernandes Galindo to enter into Simancas with three hundred horse: and not long after the towne beeing inuested by the enemy, it was a hard matter to say, whether the be-seegers or the beseegeed were in most feare.

In the meane space whilst they lay before that towne, the knauish boies and lackies which were within the same did gather themselves together vpon a day, and in derision of the league, they made an image representing the Archbishop of Toledo, which they named the new D. Opas the Apostata, in the daies of Count Julian, who brought the F Moores into Spaine against King Rodericke: then they made one amongst them a Iudge, who sitting in a seate, commanded the image should bee imprisoned: and afterward he pronounced sentence, which was, that Alphonso Carillo Archbishop of Toledo, following the steps of the old Bishop Opas, the ruine of Spaine, for that he had be-traied the King his naturall Lord, rebelling against him, and detayning his money, townes and fortresses which he had committed to him, was condemned to be drawne vp
 and

D. Pedro of Portugall soysoued.

Tortosa yeeld-
 ed to King
 John.

33
 Castile.

D. Pedro Gyran, Maister of Calatraua, stirrs in Andeluxia against the King.

The Archbishop of Toledo
 chiefe of the rebels derided.

and downe the streets, and publike places of Simancas, a trumpet going before, who A should proclaime, that the King did command this iustice to bee done to the traitor O. pas, as a recompence due for his treacheries and treasons, and that then it should bee burned. This sentence being pronounced aloud, the image was carried forth of the towne, accompanied with more then three hundred boies and lacquies, and burned nere to the confederats army and in their sight. The Lords of the league perceiuing that they could not take Simancas, did raise their seege and brought their forces backe to Valiolidit.

The Kings army which was assembled at Toro did daily encrease, to the which they ioyned the Earle of Medina Celi, with five hundred Launces, the Marquis of Santillana B with seuen hundred, D. Pedro de Mendoza, Lord of Almazan, with two hundred, and a great number of footmen; diuers others also came thither, so that there were reckoned to be foure score thousand footmen and foureteene thousand horse, as well men at armes as light horse; who were all of them very desirous to fight and to doe the King good seruice, who by the aduice of the Lords and capitaines of his army, caused the campe to dislodge, and to aduance towards the enemies, the Earle of Alua de Tormes leading the vanguard, and the battaille was conducted by D. Pedro Gonçales de Mendoza Bishop of Calorra.

The army marching neere to Tordeillas, a capitaine of the Vanguard, named Garrí Mendes of Badajos, disbanding with about two hundred horse, met neere to C Valiolidit with John Carillo, a Knight of the Admiralls, leading a band of fifty horse, whom he fought with, vanquished, and tooke, John Carillo prisoner, being grievously hurt, who was brought into a Chappel thereby, where hee entreated to speake with the King before he died, for he felt himselfe wounded to the death. The King at the intreaty of his friends came to visit the prisoner, whose end drew neere: he craued pardon of the King for beating armes against him, and told him that he was come from Valiolidit the same day, by the commandement of those that had power ouer him, to finde meanes to kill him; and he did moreouer reuale to the King sundry other vilde practises; the King said, that he pardoned him with all his heart, and prayed God to pardon him likewise, and he enquired further of him, who those were which fought his life, and which did D set him a worke; he entreated the King to send away them that stood by, and then in great secrecy he told their names, which could neuer after be knowne, for the King neuer told it to any man living: the next day after John Carillo died of his hurts. The King being at Simancas, his great and mighty army stretched it selfe euento the gates of Valiolidit, where the confederats did remaine; neuertheless the affaires were drawne out at length, without any matter of note. Thither came the Queene Donna Ioane, with the Infant Donna Isabella, who were returned from Portugall, where they had obtained nothing at all for the good of Castile: for notwithstanding that they had endeauored for to renew the treatie of marriage mentioned at the interview of the Kings at the Archbishops bridge, neuertheless the King Don Alphonso did abhorre E to marry his sonne to Donna Ioane, whose was begotten in adultery, of the Queene of Castile his cosin, by the Duke of Albuquerque Don Bertrand de la Cueva.

These things standing at a stay, the King and the Marquis of Villena did see one an other, and by the aduice of Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Marquis of Santillana, and of Don Alvaro of Estuniga, chiefe Iustice of Castile, called and chosen on both parts, it was concluded, that every man should lay by his armes and returne to his owne house: and that during the truce, which should continue for the space of some five monethes following, they should treat of a peace, and of the meanes how to giue content to all men; but chiefly, to cause the Prince Don Alphonso to renounce his royalty. This was proclaimed; through the campe, neere to Montejo F in the territory of Arevalo, signed and sealed by the King, the Archbishop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena, and vnderneath by the secretrary Garcia de Arcarefo de Montdragon.

The King had small reason to yeeld to these things, hauing an army of a hundred thousand fighting men; whereas his enemies were very weake in respect of him, and vnprovided

The King
hauing not time to profit
himselfe by his great forces.

A vnprovided of money, victuals, munition and other things necessary for such an enterprise, but God would haue it so. The King being come backe to Simancas, dismissed his souldiars with liberall payment; then at Medina del Campo, whether hee came soone after, he recompenced the Lords after this manner: He gaue to D. Pedro Gonçales de Mendoza Bishop of Calorra the thirds of Guadalajara with the reuenue thereof: to his brother D. Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Marquis of Santillana, he gaue the towne of Saint Andrew, ioyning to the lands of his Marquisat, with a yeerely pension of seuen hundred thousand Marauedis: to the other brother D. Inigo de Mendoza, and to Don Lorenzo de Suarez Vicont of Torreja, and to D. John Hurtado de Mendoza, pensions according to their degrees, to D. Lewis de la Cerde Earle of Medina Celi, the City of A B greda with the territory: to D. Garcia Aluarez de Toledo Earle of Alua, Carpia, with sundry places nere to Salamanca: to D. Aluar Peres Osorio Lord of Villalobos and Earle of Translamara, the City of Astorga with the title of Marquis, to D. John de Acuña Earle of Valencia, the Earldome of Pravia and Gijon, with the title of Duke of Valencia: to D. Pedro de Mendoza, Lord of Almazan, a yeerely pension of 300000. Marauedis, assigned him, on the hill of Mountagu: to D. Alvaro de Mendoza, capitaine of his men at armes, the City of Requenna, with the reuenue and profit of the port and hauen thereof. Other gifts and recompences did the King make to his Knights, the which, or at least the most part of them, haue euer since remained in their families.

Recompences
made by the King to the Lords that followed him.

The end of the twentieth Booke.

THE

THE ONE AND TWENTYTH Booke of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 Continuance of the troubles in Castile.
- 2 The unworthy marriage of the Infanta Donna Isabella, agreed upon by her brother King Henry, and hindered by the sedaine and unlooked for death of Don Pedro Giron.
- 3 Societies of Castile, union of the Provinces and communalities holding together for the administration of justice.
- 4 Assembly at Madrid: tumults in the same towne: Behaviour of those of Mendoza: The Marquis of Villena promoted to the Mastership of Saint James. Battaille of Olmedo.
- 5 The Pope useth all diligence to procure the peace of Castile. Censures, the rebels appeale to a future Counsell. The taking of Segobia. The King D. Henry forsaken.
- 6 Agreement betwixt the King and the confederate Lords. Evil behaviour of Donna Ioane Queene of Castile.
- 7 Strife for the Bishoprike of Siguença. Murthers at Burgos.
- 8 Seditions in Toledo: magnanimity, and equity of the Infant Don Alphonso chosen King.
- 9 D. Alphonso de Pimentel, Earle of Benaventes, enterpriseth against his father in law Don Iohn de Pacheco Marquis of Villena.
- 10 Practices of those of Toledo against the Infant Don Alphonso in the behalfe of King Henry: Rashnesse of the Bishop of Badajoz, and of Donna Maria de Silva and of that which happened.
- 11 Death of the Infants D. Alphonso: wisdom of the Infanta Donna Isabella: Peace betwixt the King and the confederate Lords.
- 12 Infamous life of Donna Ioane Queene of Castile: the Lords of Mendoza practice against the peace: the Infanta Donna Isabella declared Princeesse of the Asturias, and presumptive heire of Castile.
- 13 Continuance of the warres of Barcelona: Renee of Anjou chosen King of Arragon by the Barcelonois. Exploits of the French in Castalonia: death of the Duke of Calabria.
- 14 Gaston Earle of Foix desirous to reigne before his time, stirreth up troubles in the Kingdome of Nauarre.
- 15 Queene Ioane of Arragon dies, and confesseth her fault.
- 16 Gaston of Foix the younger dies at Liburna. Beginning, and continuance of the house of Foix.

17 Conte-

- A 17 Covenants betwixt King Iohn of Arragon and his daughter the Countesse of Foix heire of Nauarre.
- 18 Assembly at Ocagna: New designs of King Henry of Castile.
- 19 The King of Castiles iourney into Andalusia.
- 20 Marriage betwixt the Infanta Donna Isabella, and the Prince D. Fernand heire of Arragon, Sicill, Naples &c. Articles and covenants of the same.
- 21 A rash act of D. Alphonso de Aguilar against the Lords of Cabra. The taking of Simancas, with other outrages.
- 22 Spanish superstitions.
- B 23 Practices, pursutes and quarrels betwixt the Lords of Castile. Alma erected into a Dutchy.
- 24 Muley Alboacen King of Granado, whose posterity remaineth in Spaine till this day.
- 25 Treaty of Marriage betwixt King Henry of Castiles supposed daughter and the Duke of Guyenne, brother to the French King Lewis the eleventh. Lands of Infanta Isgo giuen to the house of Mendoza.
- 26 Donna Isabella Princeesse of Castile disinherited: King Henry forswears himselfe Donna Ioane and the Duke of Guyenne betrothed together by Ambassadors. The duke dies.
- 27 The Archbishop of Toledo raiseth new troubles.
- C 28 Quarrels betwixt the Earles of Haro and Trensigno.
- 29 African expeditions, and other affaires of Portugall.
- 30 Enterview of the Kings of Castile and Portugall.
- 31 End of the warre of Barcelona.
- 32 Rash and successefull enterprize of the Princeesse Leonora Countesse of Foix against the city of Pampelona, and those of Beaumont.
- 33 Second marriage of the Marquis of Villena Master of Saint James.
- 34 Roderigo Borgia Cardinal and legat in Spaine.
- 35 New Christians massacred at Cordoua and Iuen, where the Constable of Castile Don Michael Lucas of Irançu was murdered: The same dignity giuen to the house of Velasco.
- D 36 Enterprize of the Master of Saint James against D. Andrea de Cabrera: D. Pedro Gonzalez de Mendoza made Cardinall.
- 37 Parliament at Madrid, determinations thereof. Outrage and insolency of the Master of Saint James: Enterview of King Henry of Castile, and of the Princeesse Donna Isabel his sister, and likewise of Prince Fernando her houseband. Priuiledge of the Earle of Ribadeno. Suspicious banquet.
- 38 Death of Earle Gaston de Foix husband to Princeesse Leonora of Nauarre: her titles: hard suspicions of her chastity: the Bishop of Pampelona murdered.
- 39 King Iohn of Arragon and Lewis the eleventh the French King, quarrel about the Earldome of Rosillon.
- E 40 Quarrels betweene the houses of Mendoza, and Pimentel.
- 41 Death of D. Iohn de Pacheco Master of Saint James: Three maisters of the same Order contend together at one time. Last acts of king Henry of Castile.

Yyy

THE

The one and twentieth Booke of the History
of Spaine.

Notwithstanding the agreement made at Montejo, the Kingdome of Castile was neuer the more at quiet: for the Infant Don Alphonso called himselfe King neuerthelesse; and in his writings and letters patentes (diuers of which are to be seene in Spaine at this day, as namely at Valiodolit and Arcualo) he named himself King of Castile, Leon, Toledo, Galicia, Siuil, Cordoua, Murcia, Iacn, Algarua, Algezire, and Gibraltar, and Lord of Biscay and Molina: neither did the confederate Lords lay downe their armes, according as they had sworne and promised: perceiuing very well that all King Henries great forces and meanes would come to nothing through his negligence and carelesnesse: by meanes whereof the Realme of Spaine grew infamous through the robberies and oppressions which the souldiars did dayly commit in euery place without any punishment at all.

I It happened on a day as the confederates went out of Valiodolit to Alfaro, they were no sooner out of the towne but the Inhabitants shut their gates against them, putting themselves againe vnder King Henries obedience, and did driue all those out of their city which had any correspondence with the league. The King being aduertized thereof, came sodainly thither, where hee was received with great ioy. In recompence of the losse of Valiodolit, the confederates made an enterprife vpon Simancas, thinking to haue taken it by scalado, but they themselves were taken, and diuers of them sent backe to Valiodolit, where they were cut in quarters. The King did for all this hearken to the agreement which had bin resolved among them, and did bend his care to whatsoeuer was propounded by the Marquis, whose onely drift was to take him, if hee could haue but drawne him into any place fit for the purpose: but the King hearing thereof, stood still vpon his guard, and when at any time there was any occasion of meeting to conferre, he alwaies sent the Bishop of Calaoorra and Iohn Fernandes Galindo vnto them. They concluded vpon nothing, so that many Lords which followed the Court, tooke their leaues, and returned to their owne houses. There remained continually with the King the Bishop of Calaoorra the Marquis of Santillana and his bretheren; the Earles of Haro, Valence, and Cabra, the new Marquis of Astorga, the Constable D. Michael Lucas de Irançu, and the Duke of Albuquerque.

2 The King hauing left a good garrison in Valiodolit, returned to Segobia: at the same time the affaires of the confederates, were in bad termes, and if the King or they which were neere about him had truly vnderstood themselves, he might very easily haue dissolved that league, for the Marquis through want of meanes, was very badly: and vnwillingly followed by those which were about him.

The Prince Don Alphonso distrusting the end of their enterprises, would willingly haue made an atonement with the King his brother: but they held him very short, and threatned him, that if hee made but the least shew to bend that way, to present him with a cuppe of poison: therevpon by meanes of the Archbishop of Siuil, a very vnseemely agreement was made, to the which neuerthelesse the King gaue care willingly: which was, to marry the Infanta Donna Isabella his sister to Don Pedro Giron Maister of Calatraua vpon condition that hee should promise to cause Prince Alphonso to giue ouer the title of King, and to furnish a certaine summe of money with

1 Most of Valiodolit free themselves from the confederates submission, and submit to the King.

2 The Prince Don Alphonso chosen King, in miserable expectation in the keeping of the confederates.

An other agreement was vnwillingly made.

A with three thousand launces for the Kings seruice: besides this, it was concluded that the Bishop of Calaoorra and the Duke of Albuquerque should leaue the Court, who forthwith without any contradiction did so. The Infanta Donna Isabella was wonderfully afflicted with griefe when she vnderstood these newes, considering the inequality of the marriage, and the indignity offered her by the King her brother, and like a noble and courageous Princeesse, she determined rather to kill her selfe then euer to yeeld vnto it: but first of all, shee thought it fit to trie all possible meanes how to ridde this new husband of his life: shee had a very trusty Gentlewoman named Beatrice of Boadilla, who offered with the help of her husband Andrew de Cabrera, to kill the Maister vpon the wedding night, as soone as hee should offer to lye downe by the Princeesse: this Lady was by the Infanta at her coming to the crowne of Castile created Marquesse of Moya.

B These things being thus plotted; it happened that as the Maister D. Pedro Giron was on his way to the Court to solemnize his marriage, bringing with him great numbers of horsemen, he was taken with a greivous sicknesse, whereof hee died at Villa-rubia, hauing held the Mastership of Calatraua one and twenty yeeres: whether this happened accidentally, or otherwaies, it remains doubtfull; but his death was very displeasing to the King, who thought by meanes of this marriage to giue an end to all the miseries and troubles of his Kingdome, and to re-enter into his former authority and quiet. In his place, his sonne Don Roderigo Tellez Giron was chosen Maister of Calatraua, by vertue of a grant which he obtained from Rome, who was the last Maister of that order sauing one: a brother of his called Don Alphonso Tellez Giron succeeded in the Lordship and Earledome of Vruena, both of them remaying vnder the government and protection of their vncke D. Iohn de Pacheco, Marquis of Villena. These things happened in the year 1466. at which time there were seene in Castile such huge numbers of Storms, as they did darken and hinder the light of the Sunne, the which did greatly affright the people, who did interpret it for a signe of misery and mishap to the kingdome.

C In these times liued D. Roderigo Sanches of Arcualo, who was very familiar with Pope Paul the second, and by him made capitaine of the castle of Saint Angelo, where he wrote an History of Spaine, which at this day is common with euery man, and is called the Palentine History, because a Bishop of Palença was author thereof, and it was dedicated to this King Henry. The city of Victoria, for that it had, during all the troubles, remained faithfull to the King, did obtaine this yeere a free market, once euery weeke vpon the Thursday, whose priuiledge was despatched by the Secretary Pedro Arias: it is one of the most frequented markets in the whole country.

D After the Maister of Calatraua's death: the troubles were a little calmed, by reason that no man was resolved what to doe: the Earle of Benauent acknowledging the offence which hee had committed against the King, did secretly withdraw himselfe from the league, and returned to his seruice: the King to recompence him, gaue him the towne of Portillo, which hee had taken a little before his reconciliation. About the same time, the Prince Don Alphonso, who was termed King, accompanied with the Archbishop of Toledo, and many other Knights, came to Portillo, where being received, hee was lodged in the castle, and the others in the towne: on the morrow as the Archbishop and the other Lords came to waite vpon the Prince at his rising, they found the gates shut against them, and they were willed to get them thence, for that Don Alphonso did no longer regard their company, whereat the Archbishop was greatly troubled, and from that time did conceiue an extreame hatred against the Earle, who had put that trick vpon him, the better thereby to insinuate himselfe into the Kings fauour: yet for all that the Marquis of Villena, who was very wise and subtil, and did desire for to maintaine the league vnited, vsed diuerse meanes to reconcile them, and to applie a plaister to that wound, which in some sort did heale outwardly.

E The Earle in recompence of the good seruice which hee had done to the King, demanded of him the Maistership of Saint Iames, at that time vacant, the which was granted to him: but perswading himselfe to make vse of the Marquis of Villena's fauour, who

Y y 2

Magnanimity of the Infanta D. Isabella.

Death of Don Pedro Giron Maister of Calatraua.

An. 1466. A Prodigie.

who was his father in law, whom he made beleue that he was still of his side, he inwardly found the contrary.

The continuall robberies and outrages committed ouer all Spaine by these Lords and their followers, not onely suffred in the country, but euen in townes and houses, by reason the warres did constraîne the Inhabitants of the townes and cities to make societies, and fellowships, to oppose themselves against these tyrants and robbers; and the better to bring it to passe, they drew certaine chiefe points and Articles, and chose places to meet at, at daies appointed, the King backing and assisting them therein, notwithstanding that sundry of his followers, as well as of the league, did goe about to hinder so profitable an enterprise, whereby the Realme was defended from many euils; it being Gods pleasure that the King should persist in his determination to maintain his communalities, and to doe Iustice, which beganne to be sincerely administred. The conclusions of these societies were assembled, where that of Guipuscoa, most of all shaken by the factions of the Gamboins and Ognazins, did receiue the greatest benefite. They did establish captaines and gouernors ouer each of them: these are the Hermandades or brotherhoods (as they call them) who in some sort may be likened to the Prouincial prouost Marshalls in sundry places of France; but that they execute their duties with greater care.

During the assembly at Tordeillas, the King remained at Coca, a towne belonging to the Archbishop of Siuill, conferring with the confederates vnder the Bishops safe-conduct: but there was nothing of worth concluded on; so as the King returned to Segobia, and the league to Arcualo. An other assembly, at the request of diuers, was assigned at Madrid, the same towne being for sixe monthes giuen to the Archbishop of Siuill, to the end that euery man might come thither in safety and without suspicion: The King Henry, the Marquis of Villena, and the chiefe Lords of either faction did meet: the Prince D. Alphonso remained in the meane time at Ocagna, whether the Archbishop of Toledo (who was reconciled to him) had brought him: This other conference was as fruitlesse as the former. The Lady Leonora Pimentell Countesse of Playfancia came to Madrid, being called thither by both sides to mediate the peace: this Lady was held to be greatly affected to King Henrys seruice. The Lords being busied about these affaires, the Marquis being desirous to entertaine the troubles and to excheat discord from discord, went about to corrupt Pedro Arias de Auila the Kings good seruant: finding him firme and constant, he handled the matter so, as the Archbishop of Siuill, by slanderous and false reports, did excite the credulous King in such sort against him, as he committed him to prison being sore hurt, and caused him to bee shut vp in the base court of the castle of Madrid. And not contented therewith, the King went expressly to Segobia, thinking there to surpris the Bishop of the same City, called Don Iohn de Arias, brother to Don Pedro, but the Bishop hauing notice of what was done to his brother, retired himselfe thence: wherefore the King seeing that he was escaped, dissembled his intent; neuertheless all honest people were greatly offended to see the King without discretion to oppress his faithfull seruants, and not dare to lay hand vpon rebels.

The Deputies of the townes, and the captaines of the communalities made meanes for Don Pedro's deliuerance, which the King granted, all men being pleased therewith, except the confederates, who neuer left practicing with the King till they drew him to condescend to goe along with them to Playfance, there to conferre with more ease and better commoditie: which being allowed of by diuers of his counsell, hee would needs depart thence with the Queene his wife, the Infanta Donna Isabell, and Donna Iohane his supposed daughter, vpon the safe-conduct of the Earle of Playfance. This resolution being vnderstood by others of the Kings faithfull seruants, which were not made acquainted therewith, they assembled in the Church of Saint Gines, where it was resolved, that seeing that the King would needs goe on to his destruction, the lower Colonells or Captaines of the communalities, with foure other of his owne seruants should bee sent vnto him, to aduertize him of the daunger of such a conference, at the place

Hermandades, or brotherhoods in Castile, union of the Prouinces and communalities holding together for the administration of iustice.

Assembly at Madrid.

King Henry oppressed his trusty seruants, and dares not touch the rebels.

Tumult at Madrid.

A place whether he ment to goe and if he would persist in his determination, then to protest, that they would hinder his journey by armes. The King tooke this message in good part, and feigning to consent thereto, debated againe with those which did allow of that journey: wherefore holding his purpose, there arose such a tumult in the City as the Archbishop of Siuill and the Countesse of Playfance, fearing that the people would fall vpon them, in all hast ranne out of the towne, and waited for the King on the other side of the riuer, right ouer against the castle, accompanied with three hundred horse: the King being ready to come forth, the mutiny did so increase, as the people and those of the Court who were discontented with that journey, running to arme themselves, went out of the towne, crying out, kill those traitors that lead away the King, whom they compassed about and withheld by force. The Archbishop and the Countesse being in great feare, fled to Illesca, where the Infant Don Alphonso lay, with whom they passed ouer the mountaine, and retired to Arcualo. King Henry being brought backe to his lodging, received a garde to prevent the praizes of the confederates. The Court soone after remoued to Segobia, whether Pedro of Montibero was sent, by the league, hauing in charge to trie if hee could draw Pedro Arias de Auila to their party, but he lost his labour: and where force could not preuaile, treasons and deceits were set on foote of all sides, for Pedro de Silva captaine of Olmedo deliuered vp that place to the confederates, who presently lodged therein: by reason whereof the King sent to will the Marquis of Santillana to lie with five hundred horse at Saint Christofers, a Bourrough halfe a mile distant from Segobia. The King at the request of the Marquis, committed Donna Iohane, whom he maintained for his daughter, to the keeping of D. Inigo Lopez de Mendoza Earle of Tendilla his brother, who vnder good garde, placed her in the castle of Buytrago: the Marquis of Santillana, the Earle of Tendilla and the Bishop of Calaoarra brethren, were at that time of the counsell of State and did rule the Kingdome.

Those of Medina del Campo, being continually vexed by the garrisons of the confederats which held La Morte; demaunded aide; wherefore the King in their behalfe drew neere to Cuellar. Thither came secretly D. Pedro de Velasco, eldest sonne to the Earle of Haro, by the commandement (as hee said) of his father, who craued pardon of the King for offending him, protesting euer afterwards to become his faithfull seruant, and to bring seuen hundred horse to his seruice, three hundred of which should bee gennets; and a certaine number of footmen for the succour of Medina. The King, who of his owne nature was but to milde, and at that time had need of men, did freely pardon him, and sent him backe for those men which hee offered. Other Noblemen were also sent for by the King, namely the Earle of Alua who made no great hast.

Don Pedro de Velasco being returned with the seauen hundred horse, all the forces came to Cuellar. It is reported, that Don Pedro vsed these speeches to the King, Sir, the Earle my father hath commanded mee to present this writing vnto you (it was a gift for the tennts at sea) beseeching you to signe and grant it, and to receaue from him this ayde of horse and foote: and if you shall refuse him this grant, hee hath put it to my choyce to doe as I shall thinke good. The King did very easily yeeld to his request, considering what great need hee had of his seruice. By this time the Kings Armie was very stronge, and diuers of the great Lords of the Kings Counsell, being tired with such toyles which were to no purpose, and would neuer bee ended, vnlesse some violent proceedings might be vied, were of opinion to seeke meanes to come to blowes, and therefore they drew neere to Olmedo, prouoking the confederates (who had there assembled their forces) to battaile: the which was resolved and determined, albeit the King withstood it.

As the army marched to Olmedo, there arriued in the Kings campe a King at armes, sent by the Archbishop of Siuill to D. Bertrand de la Cueva Duke of Albuquerque, to giue him to vnderstand that there were forty Knights of the confederates of Prince Alphonso's traine, that had vowed vpon the daie of battaile to seeke him out in the middelt of the ranks, and to kill him: wherefore hee wished him to fight that day in disguised armor.

The king will be led by force and kept from the annoyances of his reuels wherinto hee beading ran.

The house of Mendoza at this time, gouerned the kingdome of Castile.

This valiant and generous Knight, whom King Henry with better reason might have made a sharer in his Scepter then in his bed; answered the Herauld, that he did highly thanke the Archbishop for the good will which hee seemed to beare him, but yet neuertheless he would not disguise himselfe: then he lead him vnto his lodging and shewed him the armour and coate of armes which he ment to weare on the day of battaile, saying that he esteemed his honour before any daunger, and therefore he intreated him to view and make dilligently the fashion of his armes, and the blason and deuices about them, to the end hee might make the better and more certaine report thereof to the forty Knights, who by that meanes should be sure to know him in the battaile: then giuing him a garment of silke with a good handfull of duckats, he dismissed and sent him backe, who did not faile to relate what he had seene, or heard the Duke say: Beside this, as King Henrys army drew neere within two small leagues of Olmedo, D. Garcia of Padilla being come forth of the towne, with fifty light horse to discouer their forces, the Duke sent to speake with a certaine Knight of that troupe who was borne in Vbeda, who with his capitaines leaue came and talked with him.

The Duke of Albuquerque desirous to come to battaile.

The Knight being come into the Dukes presence, was by him questioned what the confederate Lords in Olmedo ment to doe, and whether that to his knowledge they would come to fields to offer battaile: he answered him, that he did not onely beleue it, but that he did assuredly know, that if they came nere the city, they would then present them battaile: the Duke againe asked the same question, and was againe by him answered in the same manner: and if they doe so quoth the Duke, I will giue you ten thousand Marauedies of yeerely rent. The Knight accepted the offer, and gaue him great thanks, and was staied there, vntill the Kings whole army arriued, to the end that he might see it: Now the Duke had notice, that halfe the confederates forces were not ioyned, and therefore he was the more curious to vnderstand their resolution: but soon after there came vnto them the Admiralls troupes, with those of the Archbishop of Siuill, of the Earle of Playfance, and his daughter the Countesse of Belalcazar, they themselves remaining at home in their owne houses, whilest these things were a doing, the Marquis of Villena, who was a great vndertaker and very polittike in all his enterprises, hauing drawne the prior of Vdes and the thirteene Electors of the order of Saint Iames to Olmedo, he caused himselfe to be chosen Maister of the same order, in canonicall manner, without the counsell aduise or consent of King Henry, Prince Alphonso, nor the Sea of Rome, and without any approbation of the Estates of the Kingdome, and intituled himselfe Maister of Saint Iames, to the great admiration of the Earle of Benaunt, who laied claime therevnto by reason of the Kings promise: yet in processe of time the Marquis Don Iohn de Pacheco was confirmed therein by the Pope.

The Marquis of Villena D. Joaõ de Pacheco causeth himselfe to bee chosen Maister of Saint Iames.

The confederate Knights who were within Olmedo, with the Infant Don Alphonso, being assured that the Kings army came vnder the wallles of Olmedo with intent to giue them battaile, if occasion were offered, came forth to fields to make resistance, and then diuers messages and negotiations for peace were sent from side to side, but to no purpose.

The battaile of Olmedo.

Amongst those which endeauored to pacifie matters and to keepe them from fighting was Don Pedro of Peralta, Constable of Nauarre, whose daughter was married to Truyas Carrillo of Acugna sonne to the Archbishop of Toledo: all treaties ceasing, the two armies made themselves ready to fight, being deuided (as the manner then was) into sundry squadrons, the one following the other, the King was not there in person, but the Infant Alphonso appeared armed at all points, mounted vpon a strong braue courser, riding from troupe to troupe encouraging his army. The Archbishop of Toledo did weare vpon his armor a white stole, powdered with red crosses, leading a squadron of three hundred and threescore horse, where Alphonso standard stood, and that day hee approoued himselfe a better souldiar and man at armes then an Ecclesiasticall pastor, for he was hurt in the left arme, and yet for all that hee would not giue ouer fighting so long as he could sit on horse-backe, the battaile being cruell and furious for the space of three houres, inclining to neither side.

On the other side the Duke of Albuquerque behaued himselfe verie valiantlie; but

A but if he had not beene rescued in time by his father-in-law the Marquis of Santillana, he had remayned a spoyle to the Knights which had conspired his death, who did furiously pursue him: but he freed himselfe very nobly, and slue with his owne hand D. Fernand of Fonseca, who dyed within foure dayes after.

Those which write of this battell fought in the yeare 1467. two and twenty yeares and three moneths after another fought in the same place, do not certainly affirme whose side got the victorie: for they of the Kings part tooke Don Alphonso standard, with Don Diego de Mela that carried it, who was sore hurt: the Standards of the Earle of Plaisance, and his daughter the Countesse of Belalcazar, those of the Arch-bishop of Seuil, and Don Garcia of Padilla, who conducted the troupes of the Marquis of Villena, Master of Saint Iames then absent, fell likewise into the Kings power, diuers Knights of these bands were slayne, and about threescore and tenne taken, among whome was the Earle of Luna, and likewise Don Henry Henriques, third sonne to the Admirall Don Frederick. The Confederates also tooke King Henrys banner, although it was not displayed, but found wrapt vp among the baggage, a great part whereof they brought to Olmedo, and besides that, they tooke seauen other standards, they slue two hundred and eight horse-men, and tooke more than foure hundred prisoners, and yet for all that, the one side as well as the other, published the victorie for his owne, and bone-fires were made in token of ioy, as well at Medina del campo, as at Olmedo. All men affirme that they fought there in great disorder, and in manifest contempt of all martiall discipline: the footmen on either side were rascally people, who thought vpon nothing but pillage, or flight.

1467.
An vncertaine victorie.

The King who was absent from the Battell, hauing gathered his people together, made the same night a triumphant entrie into Medina del campo, giuing rest to his souldiers who had need thereof, the guard of the towne being committed to the inhabitants, against those which held la More. The Ensignes and Standards which were won, were carryed by the counsell of the Bishoppe of Calaoarra, against the Kings will, into the Church of Saint Andrew and there left.

The victorie published and beleueed generally to bee on the Kings side, drew diuers Lords to his seruices: neuertheless others did ioyne themselves with the Confederates, in the number of whome was the Earle of Alua, whome the King had a long time expected in vaine, hoping to meet him at that encounter, who receiued of the Arch-bishop and the Marquis the townes of the Arch-bishops bridge, and Montalban, for the which he was greatly blamed. The Master of S. Iames, who was absent from the battell, being come from Ocagna to Olmedo, was greatly discontented that they had fought, and did greatly complaine of them that had giuen consent thereunto.

Certaine dayes after, Antonio de Veneris Bishop of Leon arriued at Medina del campo, sent as Legat from the Pope and the Consistorie of Rome, with ample authoritie, but no way limited, especially to treat about the pacifying of the warres of Castile: King Henry receiued him very honorably, and with great modestie and reuerence to the Sea of Rome from whence he was sent, he did answer his Legacie, telling him neuertheless that he doubted his iourney would proue fruitlesse, because of the rebels obstinacie. First of all the Legate enioyned both sides vpon paine of excommunication, to lay by their armes for one whole yeare, to the end they might the better treat of peace: but the Confederates thinking that these State-matters and temporal differences were no game for the Pope, made no account of Ecclesiasticall censures in that point. It was thought fit that the Legate should conferre with the confederate Lords betwixt Medina and Olmedo. The appointed day being come, the Legate came to the place, where with great insolencie, he was compassed about with about three hundred horse of the league, which did greatly amaze him, for he was none of the stoutest Prelats. Presently after, Don Iohn de Pacheco, Master of Saint Iames, the Earle of Luna, the Bishop of Coria, with other Lords of the same faction came in place, vnto whome the Legate shewed his faculties and authoritie, to do in Spaine what he thought good: Whereupon the Master of Saint Iames made him this answer, that those which had informed the Pope, that hee had any power or authority to dispose of the estate of the Kingdomes of Spaine or Leon, had deceived

5
The Pope sends a Legate to treat of peace.

The confederate Lords, contemne the censures.

The Master of S. Iames contradicts the Popes authoritie over the temporal States deceyued him: for that did belong onely to him, and to the other great Lords of the same countrie.

appeale from the Pope to the next generall council.

Infolenzie as gainst the Le-gate.

At this meeting, nor yet at another which was made nere to Montejo de la Veja, was there any thing concluded on: Wherefore hee beganne to proceed against the Confe- derates by Ecclesiasticall censures; but the Lords of the League did appeale to the first generall Councell, the Licentiate John d'Alcoer, and the Doctor Alphonso of Madrigal throwing in their appeales. The Legate perceyuing his labour to bee lost, would haue gone backe to Medina, but diuers of the Rebels followed after him, crying out, Wee ap- peale, we appeale, and with great outrages brought him backe to Olmedo: the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, and the Master of Saint Iames seeming to bee discontented there- with, tooke vpon them to defend him: Whilest the Legate was thus handled, the Con- federates practised how to draw to their side Pedro Arias of Auila, and the Bishop Don John of Segobia his brother, who beeing already offended with the wrong, which the King had offered them, (whereof wee haue spoken heretofore) were easily perswaded thereunto: the chiefe doers in this businesse were Lewis de Mesa, Pedro Arias his familiar friend, Perucho of Munfaras Captaine of the Castle of Segobia, Fryar Rodrigo of Mesa Abbot of Partal, and brother to Lewis, with other Monkes and Church-men, who did lay a plotte to deliuer the cittie of Segobia to the Confederate Lords.

The city of Segobia deliuered to the confederate Lords.

Queene Joane, Donna Isabella, with other Ladies and Gentlemen of great place, were lodged in the pallace of the same Cittie, where they had notice of this practise, some of them with great feare beganne to dislodge: the Queene withdrew her selfe into the Cathedrall Church, where thinking her selfe not safe enough, shee entreated to bee re- ceuyed into the Castle, with the Dutchesse of Albuquerque and other Ladies: but the Infanta Donna Isabella had no will to remooue: for beeing incensed against king Henry Infanta Donna Isabella had no will to remooue: for beeing incensed against king Henry her brother, shee had intelligence with the Prince Don Alphonso, and did wholly adhere to the Confederates, who entred into the Cittie in armes, through a false port of the Bishoppes lodgings, and made themselves master thereof without any resistance, to the great griefe of the Inhabitants.

The King forsaken of his people.

The Lords of the League went directly to the pallace to salute the Infanta, who com- mitted her selfe wholly into their hands. The king hauing notice hereof, departed very melancholy from Medina, with such troupes as hee could get about him, and marched towards Cuellar, where in the mid way, the Castle of Iscar was assailed (at the intreatie of the Earle of Treuigno) in which Castle the Earle of Plaisance kept the Earle of Treuigno's mother in dishonest manner: the place beeing taken, the Countesse was sent a- way prisoner by her sonne into his countrie. The losse of Segobia did much grieue the King: for his abode there pleased him aboue all other, as well because hee was brought vp there from his infancie, as for the wood of Balsain, and other places there- abouts fitte for hunting, and also in regard of his treasure which lay in the castle thereof: and the griefe and feeling of his aduersities, did so oppress him, as beeing desperate and almost besides himselfe, he was contented to be drawne by the deuices of the Master of Saint Iames to the towne of Coca, vnder the promise and assurance of the Arch- bishoppe of Seuille, not telling, or making it knowne to any of the Lords or Knights of his trayne, and taking but a very few of his household seruants with him.

Diego Henriques King Henries Chronickler

Wherefore all men beeing discontented with these courtes, which did manifestly tend to the ruine of the King, and of those which did him seruice, they with-drew them- selves discontented to their owne houses. The Kings Officers and household seruants see- ing themselves forsaken and left in so pittifull and miserable estate, were ashamed to tell vnto whome they did belong, when they came to any place.

The Licentiate Diego Henriques, the Kings Chronicler, hauing obtayned a safe con- duct, came to Segobia, where hee had a house, wherein were diuers goods and papers of great consequence: but neuertheless he was taken, and ill intreated, his goods sto- len, and his writings scattered abroad, to the great danger of his person, if God had not drawne him out of their hands: for the Rebels were greatly moued against him, be- cause that in his written memories and chronicles hee had set downe the truth of their proceedings.

The

A The king beeing come to Coca, they changed the place, and their opinion was to conferre at Segobia, in the castle of which cittie hee was lodged and entertained by the Earle of Alua, and the Master of Alcantara, albeit that Perucho de Munfaras, Captaine of the place, was not well contented therewith.

The King and the Master of Saint Iames meeting afterward in the great Church, after diuers reasons on either side, it was agreed, that the king should consent, that the fort of Segobia should remayne vnder the command of the Master of Saint Iames, the kings treasures and moueables to be kept safe and restored to him, who should send them to the castle of Madrid, the Captaine-ship of which, with the keeping of those things, the King should graunt to Perucho de Munfaras: Moreover, that the Queene should bee gi- uen in hostage and left in trust with the Arch-bishop of Seuille for fixe moneths, within which time the King should be restored to all his former honour and dignitie. These ar- ticles were afterward performed, the treasures transported to Madrid, and Queene Joane was sent to the castle of Alaejos, where holding on the course of life which the King had taught her, shee fell in loue with a certaine young man, by whome shee had two chil- dren, which was the cause of many vnworthie outrages, as shall bee hereafter declared. After this treatie, the King beeing in as lamentable an estate as before, went vppe and done his kingdome, no otherwise than if hee had beene a poore Gentleman. In this meane equipage, he arriued in the territories of Don Aluaro of Estuniga, Earle of Plai- sance, who with the Countesse his wife did intertaine him very honorably, according to his degree, much compassionating his miseries and aduersities, wherewith beeing moo- ued, they comforted him as much as lay in their power: but it stood him in no stead against the power and obstinacie of the Master of Saint Iames.

Other agreement betwixt
the king and the rebels.

Exill life of Queene Joane
of Castile.

This yeare 1468. died Don Fernand of Buxan, Bishop of Siguença: the Deane of the same Church, named Don John of Madrid, seized both vpon the goods of the partie deceased, and vpon the Cittie likewise, and hauing learned that a good Bishoppricke is a thing worthe to bee desired, hee caused himselfe to bee chosen Bishoppe by the Chapter, strengthening himselfe with the partie of Don Alphonso, and the Confederates: but Pope Paul the second reiected this election, and gaue the Bishoppricke to the Car- dinall Don John de Adella Bishoppe of Zamorra, who pursuing the possession thereof by armes, (the Deane not obeying, and appealing from the Pope to a Councell) dyed. Then the Pope bestowed it vpon Don Pero Gonçales of Mendoza, Bishop of Calaoarra, the kings loyall and faithfull seruant, and excommunicated the Deane and his Chanons, graunting their benefices and Prebendships to others. For all this the Deane would not yeeld, but made greater resistance than before, notwithstanding that the King offered him, if he would leaue the Bishoppricke of Siguença, to giue him that of Calaoarra with the Abbey of La Huerta to boot.

An. 1468.

7 Contention for the Bishopricke of Siguença.

Now seeing that neither right, force, threatnings, nor kind and louing proffers would preuaile with this Deane, a politticke deuise was thought vpon: for they practi- sed with an household seruant of the Deanes named Gonçal Brane, who on a night shold find meanes for Pedro d'Almaçan, Captaine of the Castle of Atiença, to scale the fort of Siguença, where the Deane and his brother were taken and brought to Atiença. The Bishop Don Pero Gonçales hauing notice hereof, posted thither in all hast, and made himselfe Master of the cittie and fort: the King confirmed to Pedro of Almaçan the Cap- taine-shippe of Atiença, and the Pope gaue him a good Channonrie in the Church of Siguença in recompence of the good seruice which hee had done to the king and the Apostolike see of Rome.

In the meane space that these Ecclesiasticall businesse were managed with such vio- lence, the Earle of Plaisance had oftentimes treated with the Marquis and the Confe- derates in the Kings behalfe, that the matters agreed vpon at Coca and Segobia might be performed, but they had no desire thereunto: Wherefore hee sent vnto them a gen- tleman of his, named Pedro d'Ontiberos to draw them to some conclusion, beeing then at Arcualo with the Prince Don Alphonso. This Gentleman brought backe no answer: for after that hee had negotiated with the confederate Lords, as hee returned towards Plaisance, hee was vpon the way assailed and slaine by Gyles of Biuero, the quartell beeing

Garcia Mendez de Badajos slain in Burgos.

becing about their wiues, and at the same time Garcia Mendez of Badajos, one of the Kings Captaines, was slayne at Burgos by the people, for as he had made warre vpon the inhabitants, who held the part of the League, his friend Pedro de Maçuelo drew him into the towne to conferre together about the peace: his death did greatly displease his friends, and other good men, but the rude and tumultuous people could not be contained within any bounds.

Pope Paul hauing notice of the small respect which the Confederates in Castile had made of his Legate Don Antonio de Veneris, Bishoppe of Leon, was highly displeased therewith: but hee wrote neuerthelesse to King Henry, aduising him to pardon his rebels if they did acknowledge their faults, and returne to his obedience, comforting him besides, concerning his aduersities, by examples drawne from the holy Scriptures to the same purpose: he sent likewise a brieffe to the Confederates, enioyning them, vpon paine of his curle, no longer to call Don Alphonso King, but to acknowledge King Henry for their naturall and lawfull Prince, and to craue his pardon: The Confederates sent the Abbot of Paraces, and the commander Fernand d'Arce, the Infants Secretarie to the Pope, to giue him reason for what they had done, and to informe him of the iustice of their cause: but for certayne dayes space, the Pope would not suffer them to enter into the Cittie of Rome. At the last, vpon their great and earnest intreaties to haue audience, they were permitted to enter, vpon this condition, that they should haue a speciall care, in any of their speeches, not once to name Don Alphonso King. Hauing deliuered their message, they were by the Pope sharply reprehended, who threatened them and the Confederates more bitterly than hee had done by his brieffe, and it is reported, that in a Prophetical spirit, hee declared the death of the Infant Don Alphonso to be neere, after which hee told them, they would find themselves greatly perplexed: with such like speeches the Ambassadors returned into Spayne.

8 Sedition in Toledo.

The Cittie of Toledo taking part with the League, the Secretarie Aluar Gomes of Cité reall commanded therein, who stood excommunicate, by reason that hee was one of the chiefe of the League: it happened vpon a day, that he came into the great Church, at such time as the Priests sang diuine seruice, who perceyuing him, presently left off their singing: but hee sent vnto them, and commanded them to go on, which they refused, sending a certaine Clarke to him, who vsed many proud words, wherewith a souldiar of Don Aluars trayne, being moued, drew his sword, and thrust him thorough the bodie, so as hee fell downe dead in the place: wherupon arose such tumults and seditions in the Cittie, as after diuers murders, burnings, and other execrable outrages, the Clergie and their partakers remayned masters of the cittie, chasing away and banishing the opposites. Then they sent the Licenciate Don Fernand Calderon with a message to the Infant Don Alphonso, to intreate him to allow of that which they had done, and to request him to graunt vnto them the goods which they had seized on, and taken from those which were slayne in the tumult.

*Misanimities
and iustices of Don Alphonso.*

The Prince hauing heard the demaunds of those of Toledo, albeit hee was but very young, made them a noble and iust answer: First he shewed the Licenciate, that it did very ill become him, who was a learned man, and therefore ought to be wise, to be employed in such a message: then detesting the outrages of the Toledains, he told him freely, that hee would neuer authorize their wickednesse, nor giue away other mens goods so vniustly: the Licenciate replied, and told him, that he vnderooke that message with a desire to do him seruice, and for to acquaint him with the good affection which those of Toledo did beare vnto him, who would not fayle to revolt from his obedience to the King his brother, if hee graunted not their request: Whereunto hee answered, that therein they might do as they pleased, for he was resoluéd neuer to commit so vnreasonable and dishonest an act, hatefull to God and man, and that they ought to bee satisfied and contented, that their offences were winked at and not punished, which perhappes time would bring to passe.

*The Infant
persecutes in being iust.*

9 Desire to be rich, taken away all naturall and ciuill refuge.

Wee haue shewed heretofore, how that Don Alphonso Pimentell Earle of Benauent, had bene disappoynted of the Master shippe of Saint Iames, wherunto he layd claime by his father-in-law Don Iohn de Pacheco, Marquis of Villena: from thence arose deadly hatred

A hatred against them, which prouoked and stirred vp the Earle to lay diuers traynes to take away his life: and this yeare the Earle missed very narrowly of his purpose and determination, in the Infant Don Alphonso's house at Areualo, but the Marquis hauing intelligence thereof, did cuer after stand vpon his guard, and went abroad secretly, and well accompanied.

The Earle neuerthelesse dissembled, and spake kindly to his father-in-law, as though he had no such intent at all, still wayting for a fit time and place to dispatch him: then departing from Areualo, hee came to Plaisance, where King Henry did lye, and was there well and kindly enterrayned both by the King, the Earle Don Aluaro, together with the Countesse his wife. There the Arch-bishoppe of Seuille, the Earles of Plaisance, Benauent and Miranda held a councell: for they had discovered how that the Marquis of Villena, Master of Saint Iames, sought by all meanes to deceiue the King, and namely, that hee practised with Pernucho of Munsarras, who was Captaine and Keeper of the Kings Treasures in the Castle of Madrid, to deliuer vp the place and treasure into his hands. In this Councell it was concluded, that they would all go thither, and carrie the King along with them, to disappoynt the Marquis of his desseigne. The Captaine who had some doubt, that they meant to bee ridde of him, stood vpon his guard, and would let the King come but seldome, and with a small company attending vpon him into the fortress.

A practise against the Marquis S. James

C In the meane time, the Clergie of Toledo and their Faction, bearing no affection to Don Alphonso, because he was too iust, and did looke for greater modestie in them, then there was, practised among themselves to deliuer vppe the Cittie to King Henry. Wherefore they gaue order to Don Pedro de Silua, Bishoppe of Badajos, who dwelt amongst them, to trie if hee could winne or induce Don Pero Lopes d'Ayala, Gouvernour of the towne, who had married Donna Maria de Silua his sister, to lend a helping hand to their proceedings.

*10
The Clergie of Toledo deliuer
the city to K.
Henry.*

The Bishop hauing sundrie times, with great pollicie, conferred with his sister thereupon, and thee being wholly gouerned and ruled by his councell, they two sent Fernand de Rinadeneyra to King Henry (not acquainting Don Pero Lopes of Ayala with any matter) to aduertise him what they had determined for his seruice, and to aduise him for the better effecting of their purpose, to come secretly to Toledo. Now their intent and determination was, to bring the King secretly into the towne into the Bishoppes house, and then vnder colour of other businesse, to send for Don Pero Lopes of Ayala, and to cause him to come suddenly into the Kings presence, thinking by that meanes to make him easily to graunt whatsoever the King would demaund: The King leauing the Arch-bishoppe of Seuille, the Earles of Plaisance and Benauent in Madrid to looke vnto his Castle and treasure, came to Toledo, where hee entred by night disguised, by the gate called Cambron: but as hee went toward the Bishoppe of Badajos house, who dwelt in the Monasterie of Saint Pedro Martyr, of the Order of the Fryars Preachers, a seruant of the Marshall Payo de Ribera, who was greatly affectionate to the seruice of Don Alphonso, knew him, and went and told his master of it. The Marshall went instantly to find out Don Pero of Ayala, and gaue an alarme thorough the towne: the people put on armes, and came running in a confused manner to enuiron the house and Monasterie, where the King did lye, who was in great danger, and without all doubt hee had bene taken by the mutinous people, had not Fernand de Rinadeneyra employed his best inducements for his safetie and deliuerie: Then the Gouvernour sent his two sonnes, Pero of Ayala, and Alphonso de Silua, with Peralfan of Ribera, sonne to the Marshall Payo, to intreat the King to depart the Cittie, and to auoyd the present danger, assuring him that shortly matters would bee brought to better passe, and the Cittie restored vnto him: Whereunto the king yeelding most willingly, they found meanes about mid-night to put him out of the towne; and those three Knights kept him companie awhile vpon the high way to Madrid.

*Meanes deuised by the Bishop of Badajos
and his sister,
to bring the king
en-vance into Toledo.*

Indiscretion of King Henry.

*VV'sedome of the Gouvernour
Don Pero Ayala.*

Now before hee came forth of his lodging, the King who had ridden sixteene miles that day vpon his owne horse, intreated Peralfan de Ribera to lend him that which hee rode vpon, and to take his which was wearie, but hee like an vniuill and discourteous Knight,

VV'mannerlinesse of Peral-fan de Ribera.

Knight, refused it, which the two breethren of Ayala vnderstanding, lighted on foote, and besought the King to take both their horses, one for his owne person, and the other for his Page, the which he thankfully accepted of: then these two brothers went with him out of the towne on foote, with Fernand de Riadeneyra, who would not go with him to Madrid, but told him that he would carrie at Toledo, where he would liue and dye for his seruice.

As soone as he was come backe into the cittie, the Gouvernour Don Pero Lopes of Ayala, committed him prisoner in the castle, and commanded the Bishop of Badajos to depart out of the cittie within an howers space: by these diligent meanes, hee like a wife and discreet person did appease the tumultuous Toledans. Not long after the king sent a graunt to the two brothers of Ayala, who had giuen him their horses, of a perpetuall pension of three-score thousand Marauidis, in recompence of their loue and loyalty towards him.

When all men had layd downe their weapons, and the citie at quiet, the Gouvernour returned home to his house, where he found his wife almost besides her selfe with griefe, for that the King, hauing come to Toledo by her perswasion, had bene so vnreuerently vsed and receyued, and constrained to flie away by night: but like a discreete woman shee gathered her spirits together, and did in such sort put her husband in mind of his dutie, as shee perswaded him to inuent some fitter meanes to reduce that Cittie vnder the obedience of King Henry, their true and lawfull Prince: which Don Pedro much affecting, after that hee had vnderstood the minds of the Sheriffes and Iurates of the Cittie, the first day after the Kings departure, hee commaunded the Marshall Payo de Ribera and his sonne, to get them home to their owne houses: Whereunto they yielded without any delay, and forth-with the whole Cittie beganne to cry, God save king Henry, and let the Rebels bee destroyed, so much power hath the presence and authoritie of one onely man to appease or stirre vp a multitude. The castle gates, bridges, and other strong places, being seized vpon by the Gouvernour, and furnished with people at his deuotion for the Kings seruice, Fernand of Riadeneyra being likewise set at libertie, the morrow after, the king came to Toledo, and was lodged in the Gouvernour Don Pero's house, where he gaue Donna Maria of Silua great thanks for the good seruice which shee had done him, and called backe the Bishop of Badajos, who was principall author of thar enterprise. After dinner, sundry mechanicall tumultuous fellows, two thousand in number, came before the kings lodging, crauing confirmation of the citties priuiledges, and to be freed from the tribute called Alcauales: the king desirous to be ridde of this insolent crew, graunted their petition.

The next day, the selfe same raskally companie returned, asking other confirmations of writings, gifts, graunts, and liberties: wherewith the king being moued, the Gouvernour who had assembled men at armes, by reason of the former dayes tumult, ioyned them with the officers of iustice, and ranne vpon the multitude, who after they had hurt and ouerthrowne diuers of them, and put the rest to flight, certaine of the principall were committed to prison, and afterward vpon enquirie of the matter, according to their deserts, some of them were hanged, and the residue lost their eares, and were whipped. This tumult being appeased, there remayned yet in the tower or steeple of the great Church, the Abbot of Medina, and other Channons, who took the part of the Arch-bishoppe Don Alphonso Carrillo of Acugna, who were beseeged by the Gouvernour, and enforced by famine to yeeld themselves, their liues being fauld.

All troubles being ended, the King confirmed Don Pero Lopes in his gouernement, enioyning the Toledans to obey him as his owne person, and so returned to Madrid, where hee beganne to thinke anew vpon the castle and his treasures, which were in the power of Captaine Perucho of Munfara, whome hee did not greatly trust, and not without cause: for the Master of Saint Iames, and the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, had wonne him to deliuer vp that place into their hands: But the king vpon a time finding meanes to enter into the castle, being well accompanied, Perucho was constrained to giue place, who notwithstanding that he had slayne the Porter, and begunne to rayse a mutinie, was neuertheless taken, and forced to begge pardon; the which, the king

A being mild and gentle, graunted vnto him, and gaue him leaue moreover to carry away what he would, and bestowed summes of money vpon him, sending him home to his owne house. These newes did greatly trouble the Infant Don Alphonso, who was termed King: but about all, the losse of Toledo did amaze the Marquis, and the Arch-bishoppe with their Confederates: Wherefore they departed from Arevalo, and tooke the ready way to Auila, giuing out that they went to beseege Toledo. The Infant Alphonso being arriued at Cardenoga, a towne neere to Auila, hee was stricken with the plague which infected the whole country, whereof hee dyed the fift day after, which was vpon the fift of Iuly, in the yeare 1468. hauing bene declared King three yeares before, hee dyed not without suspicion of poyson, the which was prodigiously published and beleued thorough the whole Realme three dayes before it was true: indeed by this accident Pope Paulus Prophecie was verified: for the Confederates at that time found themelues in great perplexity, and wonderfully destitute of counsell: his bodie for that time was kept in Arevalo in the Monasterie of Saint Francis, and since transported to Burgos to the Abbey of Mirefloure, where his father King John was buried.

The confederate Lords consulting vpon what was best to bee done, now that they had lost the Prince Alphonso, all of them in a manner were of opinion, that King Henry was to be resisted, and that Donna Izabella his sister, was to bee proclaimed and crowned Queene of Castile in her dead brothers stead: the Arch bishop of Toledo being depicted in all their names to go vnto her to exhort her, to receiue this honour and dignitie, who in a well-compofed Oration, hauing propounded vnto her the aduice of all the Lords of the League: the Infanta, who was endowed with great iudgement and singular pietie, made him this answer, that shee could not entertaine in her heart any desire of rule which might preiudice her brother King Henry, vnto whome both by diuine and humane lawes the Kingdome did appertaine: the which God had manifestly declared, confirming him therein, as well by the victorie of Olmedo, as by the death of the Infant D. Alphonso: neuertheless, shee did greatly thank them for their loues, which shee could feelee with more profite, and lesse labour, if it would please them, by agreeing with the King his brother, to procure him to declare her heire to his Kingdomes after his decease, and to commaund, that oath should bee made vnto her to the same effect, according to the custome of Spayne: the which shee propounded vnto them, not so much for any desire that shee had to raigne, as by that meanes to keepe the kingdome of Castile from falling into the hands of strangers, and into any other blood then that of Castile, meaning thereby Donna Isaune, who was borne in adulterie.

This wife and vertuous answer, was of so great waight and consequence, and so admired by all the Lords of the League, as changing their minds, they resolved to follow the Infantes aduice, and to trye if they could winne the King to condiscend thereunto, the Master of Saint Iames taking vpon him the managing of their businesse, and presuming to bring it to passe: for (quoth he) I know the kings nature, who doth easily forget things that are past, and I doubt not but he will accept of this condition, for to liue in peace, and to recouer his former dignitie, and will graunt a generall pardon for all that is past.

Vpon the newes of the Infant Don Alphonso's death, the Arch-bishop of Seuille, the Earles of Plaisance, Benauent, and Miranda, with others which were neere the kings person at Madrid, did make a new oath of allegiance vnto him, and messengers were dispatched to the Lords of the League, to admonish them to desist from their wicked practices, and to submit themselves to the Kings obedience: the confederates answered, that they would send some man of authoritie to the king, and soon after they did write to the Arch-bishop of Seuil, intreating him to come to Auila, to treat vpon the meanes of agreement, who with the Kings good liking went vnto them. In the meane season the citie of Burgos, by the meanes of Pedro of Velasco, returned to the Kings obedience. It was concluded in Arevalo, that the Confederates should intreat the king, that the Infanta Izabella might be sworne vnto, and acknowledged Princeesse and heire of his kingdomes, all other oathes made to the contrarie notwithstanding: Which being done, euery of them would willingly obey him: these things being related at Madrid by the

II
Death of the Infant Don Alphonso

II
Izabella receives the title of Queene of Castile.

D. Isabelles wife answer breaks the League, and procureth the peace of Castile.

The citie of Burgos yeelds to the king.

The Gouvernour D. Pero of Ayala putteth Toledo in the kings power.

Courtesie fully recompensed.

Arch-bishop of Siuill, the King called a Councell thereupon, where the opinions A were diuers, some affecting Donna Ioane, whom the King still called his daughter: but the Lord Steward Andrew de Cabrera, could so well ioyne reason to his opinion, as it was refused to graunt what the Confederates requested: then did they set downe these Articles:

Articles of peace agreed upon

The Lords of Mendoza and Colindres called to the Council of peace.

12
Queene Ioanes dishonest life.

That the Infanta Donna Izabella should bee declared Princeesse of the Asturia's, and sworne vnto, as eldest heire to the Kingdomes of Castile and Leon: That pardon should bee graunted to the Master of Saint Iames, and to the other Lords his Confederates, for whatsoever they had committed against his royall Maiestie, and free and safe access should be giuen them to come to Court, with restitution of all that had been taken from them: That the King within foure moneths after should send backe his wife Queen Ioane, and Donna Ioane his daughter into Portugall, and to be diuorced from her by the Popes authoritie: and that the citties of Auila, Vbeda, with the townes of Medina del campo, Olmedo, and Escalona, and the Lord-shipp of Molina, should be giuen to the Princeesse Donna Izabella, who might not marrie with any one without the consent of King Henry her brother, whereunto she did sweare. Into this councell were not admitted the Marquis of Santillana, nor his brother the Bishoppe of Siguença, who were come to court to kisse the Kings hand, vpon the newes of the death of the Infant Don Alphonso, for they fauoured and much respected Donna Ioane, who was resident in the Castle of Buytrago vnder the keeping of the Marquis: therefore they returned male-content to Guadajara.

The Queene remayning in the Castle of Alacjos vnder the power of the Arch bishop of Seuille, (as hath beene sayd before) became enamoured on a young man, who had charge to keepe her, and as some say, hee was the Bishoppes nephew, called Pedro, by whome in time shee had two children, namely, Don Fernand, and Don Aposol, who were brought vp in the Cittie of Toledo, in the Monasterie of Saint Dominick the royal, by the Abbess of the house, who was Aunt to their father Don Pedro: and it is reported that the King hauing notice thereof, caused Don Pedro to be taken, to the end to punish him as he had deserued, but that the Queene shed so many teares, as shee saued his life, and begged him of the king, who in those matters was the most carelesse person D liuing.

Now these Lords of the house of Mendoza beeing departed discontented from the Court, thinking themselues to be disgraced, and on the other side, fauouring Donna Ioane, it happened that the Queene, hauing secret intelligence with certaine of her guard within and without, with Don Lewis Hurtado of Mendoza, sonne to Ruy Diaz, escaped from the Castle of Alacjos, causing hir selfe to bee let downe in a basket from the Castle walles: but the rope beeing too short, and those which let her downe, thinking that shee had beene neere to the ground, did let her fall a good height, so as shee hurt her face and one of her secte, indangering also her life: neuerthelesse Don Lewis, who was at the foote of the wall, tooke her vp, and layed her in a litter, standing there readie for the same purpose, and so brought her away, the next day, to the Castle of Buytrago, where her daughter remayned, who was called all ouer Spayne, La Bertraneja, because shee was reputed and supposed to bee the daughter of Bertrand de la Cueva, Duke of Albuquerque.

Donna Izabella declared Princeesse and heire of Castille.

The Arch-bishoppe of Seuille thought himselfe highly wronged by the violent and fraudulent deliuerie of the Queene, therefore hee hastily perswaded and procured the agreement to the Articles aboue-mentioned, and there was a place appoynted and determined, where the parties should meete, betweene Zebreros and Cadahalso, at a place called La venta du Tor de Guisando, neere to a Monasterie of Saint Hierome, the Arch-bishoppe beeing much displeased and discontented with the Queene. These met at Cadahalso vpon the day appoynted and set downe, the King, the Arch-bishop of Seuille, the Earles of Playfance, Benauent, and Miranda, together with others of the Councell on the one side: and the Infanta Donna Izabella, with the Confederates, mette at Zebreros, the chiefe of whome were, Don Alphonso Carrillo Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, Don Lewis of Acugna Bishoppe of Burgos, Don Inigo Manrique Bishop of

A of Coria, and the Master of Saint Iames, Don Iohn de Pacheco, euery one of these, on the nineteenth day of September, the same yeare, one thousand, foure hundred, sixtie eight, in the presence of the Popes Legate Antonio de Veneris, who afterward was Cardinall, with great solemnitie in the place aboue-mentioned, tooke the oath of allegiance and obedience to the King, and then they did sweare to, and declare, the Infanta Donna Izabella, Princeesse of the Asturia's, and eldest lawfull heire to the kingdomes of Castile and Leon, with all the dependances, reuenues, and lands annexed and ioyned therunto, the Legate Apostolicke dispensing and absolving all contrarie oathes, which had beene made in that nature before, and confirming the present.

B Great numbers and multitudes of people came running ioyfully, and with wonderful applause, from all parts of the Country to this solemnitie, hoping that peace and quietnesse should be established and planted in Spayne, and that all factions and oppositions of outrageous and ciuill warres ceassing, Iustice should euery where flourish. That beeing done and finished, the king with the Princeesse his sister, and the reconciled Lords came to Cadahalso, the Arch bishoppe of Toledo excepted, whose mind beeing not at quiet, returned to Zebrero, with the Bishoppes of Burgos and Coria. The King passing on, left his sister the Princeesse, and the whole Court at Casa Rubias, and went with the Master of Saint Iames to Pard, and to Ra'cafria; beeing come thither, hee caused Pedro Arrias of Auila, together with the bishoppe his brother, to leaue the cittie of Segouia, which greatly moued and discontented them, the gouernement whereof was giuen and made ouer to his Steward Andrew de Cabrera, one newly come into Castile, and borne at Barcelona, sonne to Iohn Fernandes, and Grand child to Andrew de Cabrera: Neuerthelesse for that time, hee commaunded no where but in the towne, for the fort remayned in the power of the Master of Saint Iames, and because the plague was very horre within the Cittie of Segouia, the King, nor the Master would not come into the towne, but retired and went backe to Casa Rubias, whither came Don Lewis of Mendoza, with a procuracion from Queene Ioane, as Protectresse of her daughter, in whose name hee protested, that the oath made to the Princeesse Izabella was of no force nor efficacie, and appealed to the Pope from the dispensations made by the Legate, but small D account was made thereof.

Now did the Master of Saint Iames consider with himselfe, that the discontentment of the Marquis of Santillana, and the other Lords of the house of Mendoza, with Pedro de Velasco, might produce and bring forth some bad effects: Hee who seemed to bee borne to commaund, tooke in hand to appease and qualifie them, and did inuite them to meete at Villarejo, belonging to the Order of Saint Iames, there to confule and determine about the affaires of State with the Kings Commissioners. Thither came Don Pero Gonsales of Mendoza, Bishoppe of Siguença, and Don Pedro Velasco on the one side: and the Arch-bishoppe of Seuille, the Master of Saint Iames, and the Earle of Plaisance on the other: They did conclude, that the Princeesse Izabella should marrie with E Alphonso King of Portugall who was a widdower: and Donna Ioane with his eldest sonne, called Don Iohn heire to the Kingdome, and her coulin-germaine: with condition, that if the Princeesse Izabella by this marriage should haue no children, that then the issue of Donna Ioane should succeed in the Kingdome of Castile: for the conclusion and confirmation of which marriages, there should be an interview of the King and Queene of Castile, and the King of Portugall. This agreement did not please the Ladies: for the Princeesse Izabella had no desire to marrie with a widdower, and the Queen feared, that vnder color of this meeting the should be cast off, and sent home to Portugall, according to the treatie at la Venta du Tor de Guisando: wherefore both of them resisted this determination with all their power, by reason whereof the Lords of Mendoza and Velasco were F very angry with the Queene and her daughter. The Master of S. Iames solicited K. Henry to send Ambassadors into Portugal, to request the king to meet, thinking by his coming to win the Princeesse to condescend thereunto. And not long after, the bishop of Siguença, and Don Pedro de Velasco beeing with the king, perswaded him, notwithstanding the Queenes obstinacy, vnder hand to fauour D. Ioane, not acquainting the Arch-bishop of Seuille, nor the Princeesse Izabella therewith.

New treaties of marriage, set a foot by the Master of S. Iames.

These busineses beeing managed with such inconstancie, there arriued daily messengers at Court, who complayned, for that the King had caused this new oath to be made to his sister, which most men thought to be a beginning of greater troubles than before, and also because that diuers other great Lords of the Kingdome were not called to determine vpon a matter of so great consequence. And indeed all those which were discontented therewith, did ioyne themselves in league with the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, who thought himselfe to bee ill dealt with, for that he had not the Princeesse Izabella in his keeping, as in time before.

In the meane time, disorders were still committed in diuers Prouinces, especially in Andalusia, where this yeare Don Iohn de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia, and Earle of Niebla dyed, in whose goods, lands, and dignities Don Henry de Guzman his bastard-sonne succeeded. It hapned at the same time neere to Toledo, that as an husband-man of the countrie called Pero Moro, did reape a corne-field, at the very first stroake which hee gaue with his sickle, great quantitie of bloud issued forth of the stalkes, the which his sons perceyuing, who were at worke in the same field, came running vnto him, thinking that he had hurt himselfe, but seeing he had no harme, they returned to their labour, and cut downe the corne in the same place where their father wrought, and at euery stroake they fetched, great store of bloud issued, which they signified to the Lord of the place, who caused it to be recorded for a strange prodigie.

13
Arragon.
and Nauarre.

Whilest the affaires of Castile stood vpon these tearmes, King Iohn of Arragon being ridde of his enemy Don Pedro of Portugall, did labour by all meanes, after the taking of Tortosa, to reduce the Barcelonnois to their duties: but they, like obstinate enemies to their Prince, would not hearken thereunto. Great were the alterations which they had among themselves after the death of this Portugois: Some were of opinion to bring their state into the forme of a Common-wealth, like Genoa, Venice, and other places of Italy, and others counselled to returne to the obedience of King Iohn. Each of these opinions being reiected, they elected for their King Renée of Anjou, Duke of Lorraine, and Earle of Prouence, a Prince of the royall blood of France, who being already old and decrepite, yet neuertheless desirous of the title of King, did accept the offer, and hauing (with the consent of King Lewis the eleuenth) leauied souldiers in France, sent his sonne Iohn Duke of Calabria or Lorraine into Spaine, who at Manreça ioynd with the Cattelans: and hauing drawne diuers of the County of Rossillon to his deuotion, he went and besieged Girona, where Peter of Rocabertin was Gouvernour, who forthwith aduertised King Iohn thereof, who by reason of his indisposition and blindness, could not come thither in person to ayde them, but sent his son Prince Fernand, accompanied with diuers Lords and Knights, vnto whom, about all other things, hee recommended the Princes person: beeing on his way from Tortosa towards Girona, Queene Joane his mother, who loued him dearely, followed him the next day after: vpon the newes of the Princes comming, the Duke of Calabria raysed his seege, and retired himselfe to Denjat, from whence he went to Barcelona, and then returned with succors in great secrecie, and no lesse danger. The Prince D. Fernand, desirous to looke vpon the enemy, being come neere to the place, and prouoking the French-men to battell, they, being fortified with a great number of men at armes which K. Lewis had sent them vnder the conduct of the Earle of Armignac, came forth into the fields, and fought and vanquished the Arragonnois, the Prince Don Fernand narrowly escaping from beeing taken, who had good meanes offered to saue himselfe, thorough the indeauours of Rodrigo of Rebolledo, who was taken in his stead, and brought to Barcelona, and afterwards redeemed for tenne thousand Florens. The King Don Iohn hauing notice of this defeate, came by sea with a great army alongst the coast of Ampurias, blind as he was, who no sooner set foote on land, but miraculously he receiued his sight. Hauing ioynd his forces with those of the Prince his son, he marched courageously against the French which were in the towne of Denjat, who putting no great trust in the place, nor yet to the inhabitants thereof, they dislodged, and withdrew themselves to Perpignan, which by reason of engagement, was at that time in the possession of king Lewis, where the Duke of Calabria hauing left his army, returned into France to make new leauies.

Renée of Anjou made king
of Arragon.

The Arrago-
nois defeated
by the French.

A The King of Arragon lodged his armie round about Figuera, and there wintered. These things were done in Arragon, at the same time that the battayle of Olmedo was fought betwixt King Henry of Castile, and the Lords of the League aboue mentioned. The Duke of Calabria beeing afterward returned to Perpignan with a fresh supply of ten thousand men, obtrayned from King Lewis the eleuenth, marched forth with his forces to assaile the enemies.

King Iohn on the other side departed from Figuera, and presented himselfe in order of battaille within two miles neere to the French: but it is not knowne vpon what occasion he departed thence, to beseege the towne of Peralta, where hauing begunne a furious batterie, and already made a large and sufficient breach to assaile it, the Duke of Calabria came suddenly, and vnlooked for, vpon him in the night, not being heard nor perceyued by the Sentinels which slept, who cut in peeces the first court of guard that he mette with, and entering furiously into the quarters and lodgings of the besiegers, he did strike such a terrour amongst them, as euery man leauing all that hee had behind him, they all betooke themselves to flight in great disorder. The King escaped bare-headed, gallowing apace towards Figuera: neuertheless there were some which put themselves in defence, by whose valour the artillerie and munition was saued, and the Frenchmen beeing retired, they held a forme of a seege, vntill that the King with greater forces was returned to Peralta, the which in the end he tooke. The Authors do greatly prays the valour of a certaine Knight of Guipuscoa named Don Iohn de Gamboa in this nightly skirmish, who with his own hand slue three French-men at armes, who hauing his horse slayne vnder him in the presse, did yet notwithstanding saue himselfe, hauing receyued eleven wounds. Lewis of Mudar, a Castilian Knight, is likewise remembered for his valor in this fight, where Scipio Patella the Sicillian, mentioned heretofore, beeing a wife and valiant Knight, was slayne, fighting courageously. The French beeing victorious, not caring for Peralta, returned to the seege of Girona, which without any difficulty they tooke. After this, Duke Iohn of Calabria beeing come to Barcelona to take order for the affaires of the warres, was tormented with a burning pestilentiall feauer, whereof hee dyed this yeare 1468. to the great griefe of those of Barcelona, and extreame trouble of their affaires.

Arragonnois surprised by the French.

An. 1468.

D Now let vs returne to Castile, where the Princeesse Izabella beeing discontented with the marriage which was treated of betwixt her and the King of Portugall, solicited hereunto by the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, shee came to speake with him at Yepes: where by the perswasion of her master-Pantler named Don Gutierre de Cardenna, he consented, that shee should marry Don Fernand, Prince of Girona, the eldest sonne of Arragon, and heire to the same Crowne, who was by the King his father, in fauour of that marriage, entitled King of Sicill, much about the time of the Duke of Calabria's death, whereby the affaires of King Iohn beganne to prosper the better: for the French hauing lost their head, retired themselves to Perpignan, by meanes whereof the armie of Arragon had leysure to scoure the coast of Ampurias, the Castle of which towne, with other places yielded themselves: so did Girona and Don Iohn Ferrier Bishoppe thereof, with the Vicount of Cabrera, Martorella, and soone after Saint Felix, Palamos, and Vergnes, with diuers Lords and Prelates, who demanded and obtrayned pardon for their rebellion. Whilest King Iohn was in the same countrey, Don Alphonso of Arragon, his Bastard sonne, did greatly molest the Barcelonnois, foraging their territorie with a thousand horse, and fise thousand foot-men.

Castile.

At this time the Estate of Nauarre was not very quiet: for the factions of Grammont and Beaumont raigning in the countrey, the Earle Gaston of Foix, husband to Donna Leonora heire of the kingdome, who did gouerne it, perswaded himselfe, that hee ought to enioy the kingly title, with all other rights and preheminences of the same, wherefore strengthening himselfe with the Beaumontois faction, whilst his father-in-law King Iohn was busied in the wars of Cattelogne, he posselt himselfe of diuers strong places of Nauar, and newly besieged Tudela, whereof K. Iohn being aduertised, vpon the good hap of his affaires in Cattelogne, he brought his army thither, which was well exercised in the former wars, to succor those which took his part, but before he came thither, Don Lewis

Treaty of marriage betwixt
Donna Isabell and Don Fernand.

feized vpon the Cittie of Pampelona, the Inhabitants whereof were for the most part A followers of those of Beaumont.

Diuers histories, of small authoritie, make mention, that this Earle of Lerin made sharp warre not onely vpon the Nauarrois of the other Faction, but also vpon the Arrago- nois, running on euen to Iaca and Exea belonging to the Knights: hauing for compa- nion in his counsells and enterprises, Charles of Artieda, hee tooke from the Constable Don Pedro of Peralta, the towne of Andosilla, and from Don Luigo of Estuniga, Earle of Nieua, that of Mendauia: then hee tooke Arraxona and Olito, with many other pla- ces, and did many other great exploits, by reason that hee held the cittie of Pampelona, disposing of it, as if hee had bene Lord and master. At the same time also there was B

Sancho Rotta,
a famous Destroyer of Joane of Arra-
gon.

mention made of a famous theefe called Sancho Rota, whose retreat was in a moun- taine neere to Tudele, called las verdinas del Rey, who with thirtie horse that hee kept, ranne into the country of Arragon, bringing from thence great store of pillage, vntill all such well as hee tooke prisoners. To suppress the insolencies done as well by him, as by the Earle of Lerin, the people of Iaca, and the Nobility thereabouts, made shew of entering into Nauarre: but the Earle of Lerin sent a great number of souldiers to meete with them, conducted by Charles of Artieda, Machin de Gongorra Lord of Ciordia, John d'Ayane, and Fernand d'Aranc, who meeting with the Arragonois neere to Sanguesla, at a certaine bridge vpon the riuer of Arragon, they lighted from their horses, thinking C to fight with greater aduantage on foote: and comming to handy-strokes, they did hin- der the Arragonois passage, and contrayned them to returne into their owne territo- ries. Now King Johns comming with his army, being knowne in Nauarre, encouraged those of Grammont, and did greatly amaze the Beaumontois, who knew very well that they should not be able to resist such great forces: wherefore taking counsell about the affaires with the Earle of Foix, they aduised him to make an agreement with the King his father-in-law, who had already resolved, after his death, to leaue the kingdom to his daughter Donna Leonora, and to permit him to enioy it awhile, who by reason of his ex- treame age could not hold out long, therefore he should be content to haue patience, and to suffer the King to enioy the title of King of Nauarre, the small time he had to liue. The Earle was easily drawne thereto, for he saw no hope of victorie, if hee should haue pesti- fied in his rash enterprise by armes: then they began to capitulate, setting downe arti- cles, which shall bee hereafter mentioned. Before the finall conclusion whereof, King D John being already returned to Tarragona, to view his forces, and to take order for the warre of Barcelona, his wife Queene Joane, being a long time tormented with a canker, which consumed her, drew neere her end. It is reported, that when shee knew shee must needs dye, fetching diuers sighs and grones, remembering her son Prince Fernand, shee sayd, O my son, thou hast cost me deare: and it is constantly affirmed, that shee did confesse to haue procured and hastened the death of Prince Charles: wherewith the king was so highly offended with her, as he would neuer afterward looke vpon her: yet neuertheless her an- bition gaue her this content, to see before her death, her son Prince Fernand made king E

Queen Joane
her last confession.

Death of the younger Gaston de Foix at Li-borne.

An. 1469.

this time in the yeare 1469. hapned the lamentable death of Gaston of Foix the younger, eldest son to the Earle Gaston, and to the Princessse Leonora, who should haue succeeded them in the kingdom of Nauarre. There was a great assembly of Princes & Knights at Liborne neere to Bourdeaux, who there met to honor & accompany Charles of France, brother to Lewis the 11. newly reconciled to him, and promoted to the Duchy of Guy- enne after the ciuill war: this young Knight Gaston, running at tilt, which was performed in most costly and sumptuous maner, was run with the splinter of a lance into the brayres, wherof he dyed, to the great griefe of as many as knew him, but especially of duke Charles whose sister he had married, whose name was Magdalen, she being likewise sister to Lewis by whom he had two children, to wit, Francis Phæbus, who was king of Nauar, and Earle of Foix, and Catherine his sister, who succeeded her brother dying without heires. Happi- ly, it shall not be amisse to set downe here the succession of the house of Foix, which hath inherited the kingdom of Nauar, fetching it as far as Histories make mention thereof, to the which (as we haue sayd) the Segneury of Bearn was vniued, about the yeare 1286. We

A Wee finde that the countrey of Foix was erected into an Earledome about the yeare 1462. by Raymond, Earle of Tholoufa, who inuested therewith Bernard, yongest sonne to Roger Earle of Carcasone, and to Adela his wife: of this Bernard, and of Beatrice, daughter to the Earle of Beziers, was borne Roger, who was second Earle of Foix, who begat an other Roger his successor in the Countie of Foix, second of that name, father to Roger the third, whom he had by Eximena his second wife, hauing first of all married a Lady of Prouence called Estinetta. Of Roger the third, and of Cicely, daughter to Earle Raymond of Barcelona, was borne Raymond Roger, who married a Lady called Phillip, by whom hee had a sonne called Roger Bernard, who succeeded him in the Earledome B of Foix, and a daughter called Esclermonde, married to the King of Majorca. This Raymond Roger caused his lawfull wife to suffer many indignities, at the request of a Concu- bine, who was of the religion of the Albigeois. Roger Bernard was then Earle of Foix after his father, the sixt in number, about the yeare 1223. and was surnamed the great. Hee married Brunixenda daughter to the Earle of Castellbon, by whom hee had Roger called Rosfer Earle of Foix after him, Esclermond wife to the Vicount of Cardona, and Cicely, wife to the Earle of Vrgell. Roger Rosfer seauenth Earle of Foix, and sixt of the name, married Brunixenda, daughter to the Vicount, on whom he begat Roger Bernard, the sixt of that name, and eight Earle of Foix: of him, and of Manigarda of Narbona, were borne an other Roger Bernard, who succeeded in the Earledome, Agnes who was C wife to Esquibas Earle of Bigorre, and Phillip married to Arnold of Spaine, Vicount of Conserans. Roger Bernard, leauenth of the name, and ninth Earle of Foix, came to the Earledome after the decease of his father, about the yeare 1262. who married Marguerite, daughter to Gaston de Moncada Lord of Bearn, and of Martha de Foix, by whose meanes he came to vnite the Lordship of Bearn to the Earledome of Foix, by the consent of the estates of Bearn, to the preiudice of the Earle of Armagnac, who had married the elder daughter of Marguerite, whom Gaston disinherited, in disdaine that her husband the Earle of Armagnac did not helpe him in certaine warres that hee made, as well as his other sonne in lawe the Earle of Foix. Now Roger Bernard had by his wife Margue- rite of Bearn foure children, to weet, Gaston the elder, who was Earle of Foix after his father, the tenth in number, and the first of that house, who enioyed the Lordship of Bearn, Brunixenda wife to Helie of Perigort, Constance married to Anthony de Lcui, Lord of Mirepoix, and Joane who married Peter, sonne to King James of Arragon. Gas- ton then the first of that name, Earle of Foix, and Lord of Bearn, married Joane, daugh- ter to Lewis of France Earle of Eureux, and of Marguerite of Artois, from whom issued Gaston heire to the Earledome, Roger Bernard Vicount of Castellbon, father of Mathew, and of Isabell of Castellbon, who succeeded one after an other in the Earledome of Foix, and Robert Bishop of Vaur. He had also a bastard sonne named the Wolfe, Lord of Ara- uath, who begat Blanche wife to John de Gaulti, or Grailhij Capdau de Buch. Gaston the se- cond, the eleuenth Earle of Foix, and second Lord of Bearn, of this family, had by his E wife Elenor, daughter to the Earle of Comming, Gaston Phæbus, who succeeded his fa- ther, in the yeare 1344. the fourth of that name, and hauing married Agnes, daughter to King Philip of Nauarre, had by her one onely sonne, whose murthrer hee was, hauing found about him a box of poison, which his Vncle King Charles of Nauarre had giuen him to kill the Earle his father, with whom he was offended, the child being in no fault at all, for he knew not what drugges it was: wherefore at his death, hee left behind him no lawfull children, but diuers bastards, as Iobbaire who was one of those which were burnt at the Mummery of King Charles the sixt, at the banquet of Saint Marcen, and Gratian, and possibly that Bernard of Foix, who was married into Spaine to Lady Isabel de la Cerde, a Princessse of the blood royall of Castile, the stem of the house of the Dukes of Medina F Celi, if he were not sonne to Gaston the second, this mans predecessor. Then the successi- on of the Earldome of Foix and Lordship of Bearn, fel to Mathew of Castellbon aboue- named, who had no children by his wife Joane, daughter to the King of Arragon, where- fore his sister Isabell inherited his Lordships, who was wife to Archambald de Grailtry Capdau de Buch, from which marriage issued John the elder, the fiftene Earle of Foix, Gaston Capdau de Buch, from whom descended the Lords of Capdolat and Candale, Arch-

Original and continuance of the house of Foix.

Archambald Lord of Nouailles Peter a friar of Morlas, since Bishop of Lescar, in the end A Cardinall and founder of the Colledge of Foix at Tholouza, and Mathew Earle of Com-minges: Iohn the fifteenth Earle of Foix (as hath beene said) and first of that name, had to his first wife Mary of Nauarre, who dying without children, he married Isane de Albret, of whom was borne Gaston his successor in the Earledome of Foix and Lordship of Bearn. The house of Foix hath beene much ennobled by the deeds of this man: for during the wars betwixt the French and the English, in the daies of Charles the seventh, this Earle Gaston was he that made prooffe of his valor against the English armies which held the Duchy of Guyenne, where he twice tooke Saint Seuer chiefe of Gascony, and won Dax by force of armes, with great slaughter of Englishmen, who did valiantly defend those places: he did succor Tartax besieged seven monthes by the gouernor B of Bourdeaux. He restored his vnckle Mathew into the Viscountie of Comminges, being dispossessed by the French King, who had installed a Spaniard therein, called Roderigo de Vil- landrada Earle of Ribadeo, where he ouerthrew the castle of Rocheford, he made means for the liberty of the Earle of Armagnac, who was in prison for hauing intelligence with the English, and caused his goods and lands to be restored to him. Being afterwards made Gouernor of Guyenne by King Charles, he made such cruell warre vpon the English as in short time he in a manner dispossessed them of all there forces in the same Prouince, so as Bourdeaux, the chiefe city and seat of the warre, was constrained to yeeld to the French King, in the yeere 1451. and soone after the city of Bayonne, so as the English were wholly excluded out of all Guyenne. Afterward when the city of Bourdeaux rebelled against the Earle of Clermont Iohn of Bourbon, the English being recalled by them (albeit they had possessed themselves of diuers places) were by the valor & good conduct, chiefly of the Earle Gaston beaten back and repulst, Cadillac being the last place that hee tooke from them: In all which warres, hee was faithfully and diligently accompanied and aided by his brother Peter de Foix Viscount of Lautier, the original of the renowned house of Lautrec, father to Iohn de Lautrec Posthumus, from whom did spring Odet de Foix, he that was the famous capitaine in the warres of Lombardy and Naples. André de Asperaut, and Thomas called L'Escut: Henry de Lautrec was sonne to Odet. Charles the seuenth did so greatly fauor the Earle Gaston de Foix, as he gaue in marriage to his eldest sonne, called Gaston, like him, his daughter Magdalen. At the arraignment of the Duke of Alençon at Vandosme by King Lewis the eleuenth, he supplied the place of the Earle of Tholouza in the ranke of the Peers of France, the which preeminence hath remained vpon such occasions in the house of Foix, the Lordships whereof were by him encreased with the Vicountie of Narbone, and with the lands of Capdolat & other purchases, and in the end with the crowne of Nauarre, by his marriage with Donna Leono- ra of Arragon, daughter to King Iohn, of whom we now treat: of this man issued the posterity which followes: Gaston who should haue succeeded him, who (as we haue said) died at Liborne at the tilting which was made at the coming of Charles Duke of Guy-enne, brother to King Lewis the eleuenth, left heires behind him, Francis Phébus, and Catherine his children: then Iohn Lord of Narbone from whom issued Gaston Viscount of Narbone, and since Duke of Nemours, who won the battaile of Rauenna, where ne-uertheless he died, and Germain, second wife to Fernand King of Spaine: of Gaston and Elenor were borne, the third sonne named Peter who was Cardinall, and the fourth, James, a valiant Knight, who died in the seruice of King Lewis the eleuenth: more five daughters, Mary, wife to William Marquis of Montferrat, Isane wife to the Earle of Armagnac, Marquise wife to Francis Duke of Brittain, mother to Queene Anne of France, Catherine married to the Earle of Candale, who had three children, the eldest of whom was Earle of Candall, then an Archbishop of Bourdeaux and a daughter called Anne married to the King of Hungary: the fifth daughter of Gaston and Elenor, was called Elenor, who died unmarried.

Genealogie of
Nauarre.

17 Covenants betwixt King
Iohn and D.
Leonora his daughter.

No vlt vs returne to the controuersie betweene Gaston de Foix, father to these, and his father in law King Iohn. Hee following the good aduice of his friends and seruants, and hauing acquainted the King with his intent by message, the King and D. Leonora his daughter, met at a day appointed at Olita, Gaston being absent in France, where they agreed

A agreed vpon these Articles following: First, that the townes, cities, communalities of Nauarre, nobility and others of what Estate and condition soeuer, should without contradiction acknowledge and obey King Iohn as their King during his life. That the Earle Gaston and the Princeesse his wife should promise to maintaine the priuiledges, lawes and liberties of the Kingdome, as they had beene in times past. That the three Estates should take the oth of allegiance, and doe homage to the Princes the husband and wife, and acknowledge them for their naturall King and Queene after the decease of king Iohn, notwithstanding any other act to the contrary: that the married couple should irreuocably be perpetuall gouernors of the Kingdome during the Kings life, their go-uernment onely to cease, when the King in person should bee in the Realme: That neither the King nor the married Princes should ingage the Kingdome in whole, nor in part: That the three Estates should endeavor that the King and the Princes should accomplish and keepe all that had beene concluded, and oppose against them that should infringe them.

The same promise should be made and sworne to by the King and the Princes, and that for the peace of the Kingdome, all crimes and offences, how heinous soeuer, should be generally pardoned that had beene committed til the Kings present coming into the country, re-establisshing by full power and royall authority, euery man in his honors, goods, and reputation, reuoking and annulling all sentences and proceedings made to the contrary. That all places, townes and castles, which had beene taken from one other, all offices as well Ecclesiasticall as secular & vsurped since the taking of the castle of Morillo, should bee restored to the first lawfull possessors thereof, within the terme of leuen monthes, excepting the moueables and frutes which were spent, reiecting al gifts, grants and engagements made by the King, Princes, or any other: Neuertheless herein was not to be comprehended the differences betwixt the Earle of Lerin, and Lord Iohn of Beaumont, and Charles de Artieda, against D. Pedro of Peralta Constable of Nauarre, and the Marshall of Nauarre, who were enioyned to submit themselves to the Kings obedience, within twelue daies after the publication hereof; to the end to determine those strifes by way of Iustice, vpon paine, doing the contrary, to be held as contumelious rebels, and for such to be pursued and punished, as disturbers of the publike quiet: That all those who had beene wrongfully imprisoned, since the surceance made by the Archbishop of Saragossa the Kings sonne, in his name, and the Princes, should bee released and set at liberty, paying their charges: That the truce granted by them or their captaines should bee kept as well to strangers as the naturall subiects, both in their persons and goods. That whatsoever had beene taken, and retaken, to the preiudice of the same truce, should be restored and deliuered without other ranfome then paying their expen-ces: that the promises and obligations made in writing, or by word of mouth, betwixt the naturall subiects, by reason of such prises made since the surcease, should be of no effect; and the Ecclesiasticall ordinaries should bee admonished to absolue them from their othes made in that behalfe, enioyning euery one to set the prisoners at liberty within fifteene daies, and not to ganefay this present treaty, vpon forfeiture of two thousand royalls of gold to the Kings coffers: As concerning the castle of Leguin, belonging to the Prior of Rounceual, which had beene taken before, with great store of goods belonging as well to the prior as the Monastery, they who had taken the same goods were enioyned to restore them, or the value thereof, seeing the Prior had alway been a faithfull seruant to the King and the Princes: That the King and the Princes should solemnely sweare to cause all the heads and Articles aboue mentioned to bee effectually obserued and kept in euery point.

These things agreed vpon were published in the castle or pallace of Olita vpon
Thursday the thirtieth day of May in the yeere 1471. and were receiued by the secretary
Iohn of Saint Lordi: the Bishop of Oleron taking the oth, with promise made by the Princeesse Donna Leonora, to cause the Earle her husband to confirme these Articles, an authenticall copy whereof, sealed with the Earles scale, she would send to the King her father. At which were present the Bishop of Oleron, Pedro Lord of Ros the Earles Ambassador, Frier Bernard, Hugh de Rocabertin, capitaine of the Castle of Amposta, Roderigo

Roderigo de Robollo, Gomes Suares of Figueroa, and John Payes the Kings Vicechancel- A
lor. After that, the Princeesse, having ample procuration from her husband, dated at the Bathes of Caudes Aigues in the valley of Dofan, sworn in his name to the Bishop of Oleron to obserue the aboue named couenants, in the presence of the capitaine of the castle of Amposta, John Payes the Vicechancellor, and D. Fernand of Baquedan vic-kar general of the Church of Pampelona. All these capitulations were not of force to ceale the troubles of Nauarre, which continued along time after.

18
Castile.

As concerning the affaires of Castile, King Henry, after resolution taken about the marriages of the Princeesse his sister, and of Donna Ioane in Portugall, beeing desirous to set downe some good forme of gouernment in his Kingdome, called a Parliament B at the city of Ocagna, where the deputies of the townes and communalities did meete, except those of Andaluzia, the great Lords of which Prouince were not well pleased with the dealings of the Maister of Saint Iames, whereat the King was much moued, but most of al, whē he vnderstood of the marriag which was intended, against his wi, betwixt the Princeesse his sister, and the new King of Sicill, Fernand of Arragon, which made him now more then before, desirous to aduance Donna Ioane, whom hee felt ill aduved for his daughter, notwithstanding he hated the Queene her mother, by reason of her bad life, which he himselfe had taught her: wherefore with his owne hand hee wrote a letter to the Pope, intreating him not confirme the succession of the Kingdome of Castile, sworne to the Princeesse Isabella, but to grant it to Donna Ioane: Hee wrote also to his a- C gent at Rome, Doctor Roderigo de Vergara, borne in Logroña, and likewise to King Al- phonso of Portugal, to the end that he should make the like request to the Pope: this was not done so secretly, but that the Archbishop of Siuill had notice thereof, who had it not beene for feare of the Maister of Saint Iames, who delt in this businesse, would willingly haue dashed that matter. The King leauing Ocagna came to Madrid, where hee found John Fernandes Galindo, capitaine and gouernor of the fort of Madrid, and keeper of his treasures sicke to death, at whose entreaty, hee gaue the charge of the fort, and of that which was in it to Andrew of Cabrera his Steward, whom hee did dayly aduance, and made partaker of his greatest secrets. The city of Leon, about that time, had like to D haue beene surprisid by Diego Fernand de Quignones, Earle of Luna, but the practice being discouered, Aluaz Garcia, Citizen of the same towne, with whom the Earle had intelligence, was taken and beheaded as a traitor. At the intreaty of the Maister of Saint Iames, the King returned to Ocagna, where hee gaue the title of Marquis of Villena to Diego Lopes Pacheco his eldest sonne, a braue knight, who soone after Married the Countesse of Saint Stephen de Gormis, daughter to Don John de Luna, Earle of Saint Stephen, and grand-child to the Constable Aluaz de Luna, who was in the keeping of the Maister of Saint Iames, who was at the same time confirmed in his Maistership by the Pope and possessed more riches then any Lord of Spaine. The King of Portugall solicited by King Henry about the marriage of the Princeesse Donna Isabella, sent his Ambassadors, the Archbishop of Lisbon, and two other Lords, who were at the Court more then E twenty daies without concluding any thing by reason that the Princeesse had placed her affection vpon Prince Fernand, and so returned home, leauing the King highly displeased with his sister, who dissolued the Parliament at Ocagna, not suffering the peeres to sweare to his sisters succession in the kingdome.

Diego Lopes de
Pacheco sonne
to the Maister
of Saint Iames,
made Marquis
of Villena.

19
The King of Castile voyaged into Andaluzia.

The assembly at Ocagna beeing broken vpe, the king beeing very desirous to pacifie the Country of Andaluzia, which was full of diffentions, hee went thither in person, leauing for Viceroyes in Valliodolit, the Earle of Benauent and Don Pedro de Velas-co, with the President and Chauncery, the Princeesse Donna Isabella remaying at Ocagna, who promised not to dispose of her marriage till the returne of the King and the Councell.

There went with the king, the Mr. of St. Iames, the Archbishop of Siuill, the Bishop of Siguencia and others of the councell, but the Archbishop remained sicke at Ciudad-real:
the king came to Iacn, where hee was receiued & entertained by the Constable Michael Lucas d' Irançuy, who protested to him that he would not suffer any one of the rebels in his traine to come into the city: wherefore, the Mr. of St. Iames fearing to be accounted one of
the

A the number, staid at Osuna; but Roderigo of Villosa, beeing more foolish hardy then the rest, receiued the disgrace to be rudely repulst by the Constable, who couched his launce against his brest sending him thence with many bitter speeches: this Constable was very faithfull to the King his Maister, and was a liberall and generous Knight. To Pedro Gonzales de Mendoza Bishop of Siguencia, and to the whole house of Mendoza, who entered with the king, the Constable gaue openly a singular testimony of their fidelity with a loude voice as they passed thorow the gate. The King and the Lords of his traine, were for the space of three daies feasted at Iacn, from whence he went to Castro del Rio, where D. Pedro of Cordoua Earle of Cabra met him with a thousand horse, bringing with him his children, and Martin Alphonso Lord of Alcaudete his sonne in law, who were all of them faithfull and good seruants to the King: With this company the King went to Cordoua, wherein remained Alphonso de Aguilar, one of the faction of the Maister of Saint Iames, the city gates were opened to him, and Alphonso in recompence receiued certaine pentions: betwixt whom and the Earle of Cabra had beene old grudges, but the King went about to make them friends: the Gouernment of Cordoua, which in times past did belong to the Earle of Cabraes predecessors, was giuen vnto him, and the office likewise of Marshall. Vpon a seditious petition presented by those of Cordoua, mentioning that Peter Earle of Cabra, and Martin Alphonso his sonne-in-law, and Al- phonso de Aguilar, should deliuer vp certaine places belonging to the city and commu- C nality of Cordoua held by them during the troubles, it was determined that they should giue caution for the deliuey of them by a certaine day: this was a trick of Don Al- phonso de Aguilar, who stirred vp the people to constraine the Earle, and his sonne-in-law, to restore that which they had vsurped, hee himselfe perceiuing, that he could no longer hold the places, which hee had taken during the trouble, the which did greatly nourish and increase the hatred which the Earle and his sonne-in-law did beare vnto him.

Whilest the King lay at Cordoua, there arriued Ambassadors from the French King
Lewis the eleuenth, the Cardinall of Albj, beeing the chiefe: the effect of his message was, to breake the league betwixt the King of Castile and the English, which was very D prejudiciall to King Lewis his Maister: After audience, he obtained what he demaunded, the Maister of Saint Iames working the matter, who perhaps was a faithfuller seruant to the French King, then to his Maister the King of Castile. This yeere 1469. died Friar Lopes of Barjentes Bishop of Cuenca, the Bishoprike of Leon beeing likewise voide, Anthony de Veneris the Popes Legat had that of Cuenca, and that of Leon was giuen to Doctor Roderigo de Vergara, the Kings agent at Rome.

The Princeesse Donna Isabella, during the Kings stay in Andaluzia was ruled by the advice of the Admirall and the Archbishop of Toledo, and forgetting the promise which shee had made to the King her brother, shee inuented meanes to surprise the towne of Areualo, held in the name of the Earle of Playfance by Aluaz de Beacamont, with E whom shee practized: but shee was disapointed of her purpose, which was discouered by the Earle, who preuented the Princeesse, and committed the captaine to prison. The Earle posselt this place, as a pawne, engaged vnto him for a certaine summe of money, when the Infant Alphonso was chosen King. The Princeesse being deceiued in her hope, came to Madrigall, and from thence to Valliodolit, vnto whom the King sent the Cardinall of Albj the French Kings Ambassador, and the Archbishop of Siuill, to possesse her with a distaste of Fernand King of Sicill, which marriage did highly displease him, fearing that by reason of the warres of Cattalonia, and former matters betwixt him and King John of Arragon his father, some great losse might happen to Castile by that match.

F The Cardinall, and the Archbishop did their best, and made offer of a marriage betwixt her and Charles Duke of Guyenne, brother to the French King, but shee made no account thereof, persisting in her first resolution, wherefore they returned backe without effecting that which they went about: the king iourning thorough Andaluzia, was continually solicited by the Maister of Saint Iames (vnto whom he could deny nothing) to remoue and displace the captaines, gouernors & other officers of townes and castles,
to

D. Michael
Lucas de Fo-
rança Constable of Castile, a free and Generous Knight.

This Maister of Saint James goes out to displace the capitaine of the Garrison in Antiquera, and to place another, which was at that time done.

to the end to place therein such as were of his owne faction, which was granted to him at Eccia, where hee displaced Martin of Cordoua and put in Doctor Garcia Lopes of Madrid, one of his counsell, and Frederick Manrique, and to recompence Martin, he assigned him certaine pensions hard to be recouered. And thinking to doe the like to Hernandes of Narbaez, the old Gouvernor of Antiquera, he found himselfe deceived, for the Gouvernor would not suffer the King to enter into his Fort with about fiftene men, and the residew of his traine were constrained to take vp their lodging in the country villages thereabouts.

These things did not displease the King, who albeit he knew very well, that it was an vnjust thing to displace the captaines that had bene faithfull vnto him, at a traitors motion, yet he had not the courage to reiect the importunities of the Maister, who would haue had his friend Alphonso de Aguilar to haue commanded in Antiquera. The King being come to Archidouna had conference with a Moore of Malaga called Alquizeote, an enemy to the King of Granada, who presented him with certaine Barbary hoeses and other Moorish presents, vnto whom the King promised fauour and assistance against the King of Granada, as to his vassall. From thence he came to Carmona, where he remained a space: In the same towne there was three castles, two of which were at the commandement of the Maister of Saint James, but the third was held by Gomes Mendes de Sotomajor, a Knight wholly leagued with those of Siuill, whom the Maister had a great desire to dispossesse, and did greatly importune the King to consent therevnto, and hee did promise Gomes Mendes a large recompence, the which hee refused, saying, that hee could not leaue that place without the consent of the Knights of Siuill, vnto whom hauing declared the wrong that the King would haue done to him (onely to satisfie the Maister of Saint James) the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and Roderigo Ponce of Leon, Pedro de Estuniga, & Alphonso Henriquez Gouvernor of the frontiers, sent to aduertize the King, that they could not consent to so vnreasonable a matter, hurtfull to the crowne, as to alienate from the same, the town of Carmona; which the King at that time tooke in good part, but afterward hee was ouer-ruled by the Maister of Saint James, and would haue constrained Gomes Mendes to haue left the same place: wherefore the Duke of Medina, and the other Knights with the Inhabitants of Siuill, armed themselves, and assailed the castle of Triana, from whence hauing driuen Hernandes Arias of Sahaedra, they placed therein another captaine, then, their power increasinge, they came into the field, giuing the King and the Maister of Saint James new matter to thinke on, who with the whole Court left Carmona and came to Alcala de Guadaira, and from thence the King sent to command the Duke to disarme himselfe and to send away his people: who answered, that hee had taken armes for his seruice, as also to defend himselfe from his enemy the Maister of Saint James: The Maister fearing that this fire would kindle to his owne hurt, sought meanes to conferre with the Duke, which the other Lords and Knights, with those of Siuill would not agree vnto, saying that the Maister was a crafty wicked man, and that their talke would come to no good effect, and so sent backe to the King, intreating him not to alienat Carmona from the crowne, and to confirme Gomes Mendes in his captainship. The King, to auoide farther mischiefs, made means himselfe, that the Duke and the Maister might talke together betweene Siuill and Cantillana. At this meeting it was onely determined, that the King should enter into Siuill, and that the Maister should stay at Cantillana, where they should agree vpon those things.

The King being receiued with great ioy into the city of Siuill, whilest hee remained there, about the appealing of those differences, the Princeesse Isabella his sister, being continually sollicitied by her Maister Pantier Gutierrez of Cardegna to harken to the marriage of Fernand Prince of Girona, the heire of Arragon, and to reiect that of Portugal, and Duke Charles of France, with the King of Englands brother who was another sutor, at the last she gaue her full consent therevnto: wherefore the Archbishop of Toledo and the Admirall D. Frederike, wholly addicted to the seruice of this Princeesse, and likewise to Prince Fernand King of Sicill, thinking that this marriage was most convenient and profitfull for the affaires of the Kingdome, did consent and conclude therevpon, causing the Bridegroom in a disguised habit to come into Castile, whether hee was con-

A conducted by D. Pedro Manriquez Earle of Treuigno, who afterwards was Duke of Nagera, and others, who brought him to Valiodolit. Where beeing presented before the Princeesse amongst others, very few (nor yet she her selfe) did know him: but her faithfull seruant Gutierrez of Cardegna shewed her him, saying in his Spanish tongue, Esse es. This is he: to whom the Princeesse readily replied and Esse shall be thine armes: for this cause, the house and posterity of this Knight, beareth yet to this day, amidst there blazons and deuises an S S: The royall aspect and graue countenance of Prince Fernand did soone certifie the Princeesse that it was he, therefore without any more delay, the marriage was solemnized and accomplished at Valiodolit, the eighteenth of October 1469.

B In the house of John de Bizarro, whereat this day the Kings Chancery is kept, King Henry not knowing thereof, who would rather haue hindred it then otherwise, for the small good which he wished to King John of Arragon his father.

These newes were presently carried to the Maister of Saint James, who wrote to the King that he should forthwith without delay come to Cantillana, the which he did, not knowing the cause why he was so hastily sent for: there, to his great grieve, he vnderstood of his sisters marriage: wherefore vpon the instant hee departed out of Andaluzia, leauing those of Siuill some-what mooued, vntill they knew the cause: and taking the ready way to Trugillo, hee was there staied, by the refusall of Garcia de Sese captaine of the fort of that city, who would not yeeld the same place vp vnto him, the which hee ment to haue bestowed vpon the Earle of Playfance, in recompence of the good seruice which hee had done vnto him. This captaine had agreed with the townes-men (who had foreseene the Kings intent) to hold out and not to permit the same to be alienated from the crowne, and giuen to a priuate Lord. The King perceiving that hee could not gratifie the Earle with Trugillo, confirmed vnto him, and left for Inheritance to him and his heires for euer the towne of Arcualo, which was pawn'd vnto him, with title of Duke, doing thereby manyfest wrong to the widow Queene Isabella, vnto whom that towne did belong.

Being at Trugillo, Gomes de Caceres Maister of Alcantara came vnto him, and craued pardon for his offences, the which hee freely obtained: and besides that hee was confirmed in the gouernment of Badajos, and Caceres, which hee had vsurped during the reuolts: and at his intreaty, and of the Maister of Saint James, hee gaue to his brother Gutierrez de Caceres the city of Coria, with the title of Earle. To Alphonso Monroy, who had bene faithfull vnto him, and followed the warres at his owne charges, hee gaue many great gifts: so this King did good both to his friends and enemies. At the same place of Trugillo, hee receiued letters from the Princeesse his sister, by the which shee gaue him reason for her marriage with Prince Fernand, and for her refusall of the others, intreating him to beleue that it was done, for the good quiet and commodity of the Kingdome of Castile in time to come, and to assure him both of her good will and her husbands, who would for euer remaine his affectionate seruants, without inclyning to any thing that should displease him, beseeching him to consider with what hearty affection shee loued and honoured him, seeing that when it was in her power to take vpon her the regall dignitie, which was offered her, by the decesse of Prince Don Alphonso, shee had refused it, and exhorted the confederate Lords to serue and honour him as their King: complainyng besides of many other greuous wrongs offered as well vnto her selfe, as to the widow Queene Isabella her mother yet liuing. The letter being read before the counsell, the messenger receiued this answer, that the King would be shortly at Segobia, where all matters should be debated on with reason and equity, and indeed the Court remooued thither presently after, where the Ambassadors of the Princes Fernand and Donna Isabella did arrive, who were Don Pedro de Baca, and Diego de Ribera, who had brought vp the Infant Don Alphonso deceased: and on the Archbishop of Toledos part, Lewis of Antecana, who besought the King to approoue the marriage, and to excuse the Princes, for that they had not acquainted all the great Lords of the Kingdome therewith, who by reason that they were deuided into diuerse factions, could not choose thereby but nourish greater occasions of discord: As for themselves, they wished wished nothing more, then to be obedient vnto him, and for such to be reputed, desiring A to imploy themselves for the maintenance of the peace of the Kingdome, and administration of Iustice, which in a manner was chased away, in steed whereof al manner of outrages, extortions and confusions did reigne. Lastly they entreated him to appoint some place where the Princes might come and visit him, to the end to certifie him in person of their sincere affection and desire to doe him seruice.

Besides these demands, they declared vnto the King the Articles and Couenants, wherevpon this marriage was contracted, which were these.

1 First of all, Prince Fernand King of Sicill did promise to be a deuout and obedient sonne to the Sea of Rome, and to honour and well intreat the Ecclesiasticall Persons and Ministers of the same.

2 That hee should honour and acknowledge King Henry for his King (if it pleased him to accept thereof) and should imploy his person and meanes to cause all his subiects to doe the like.

3 That he should likewise honor the widow Queene Isabella, mother to the Princeesse.

4 That he should cause Iustice to be established, and should assist the King therein, observing the lawes and good customes of the Kingdome.

5 That he should endeauor, with his vttermost power, to maintaine the peace betwix the King, Himselfe and the Princeesse.

6 That hee should not depart out of the Kingdome of Castile, nor carry away the Princeesse, nor the children that God should send them, especially the Prince his heire, without expresse deliberation and consent of the councill.

7 That in the letters and royall charters, the Prince and the Princeesse should be named both together, as well in those which concerned Castile and Leon, as those in the Kingdomes and Lands which the Prince now possesseth, or may enioy hereafter.

8 That the naturall borne of the Kingdome should be admitted into the council and offices of either of them, with consent of the Princeesse.

9 That the Princeesse should receive the othes of homage and fidelity, and should haue power to place officers, captaines and guards, in the cities, castles and fortresses of the Kingdome, as well by her presently possessed, as in others, which might hereafter fall vnto her, placing therein persons borne in the Kingdome of Castile, and appurtenances thereof and none others.

10 That all gifts and pensions granted by the Princeesse, should bee approued and confirmed by Prince Fernand.

11 That he should not procure the hurt of any one of the Kingdomes of Castile and Leon for the occasion of the warres, quarrels, and outrages past, betwixt Castile and Arragon.

12 That he should not enterprize, nor make warre, league, nor confederacy, with any neighbour King, Lord or Knight of this Kingdome, without the consent of the Princeesse, and her councill.

13 That for the increase of the Princeesse dowry, he should giue to her Borja and Magallon in the Kingdome of Arragon: and in that of Valencia, Elche and Euillen: and in Sicill, Siracuça and Caranea, according as those places had beene assigned and giuen from time to time to the Queenes of Arragon.

14. Besides, that the Princeesse should every yeere, during her life, receive the rents & reuenues of one towne in the said Kingdoms which she should best like of, provided that it were not a capitall or chiefe towne of the Kingdome, or principallity, the gouernors and officers whereof should neuertheless be natives of the same country.

15 And if the Prince should happen to die first, the Princeesse should neuertheless, during her life, enioy those places; after whose decease they should returne to the crowne, and to the heires thereof.

16 And if it should be found, that greater dowries, profits, lands, authority & preeminence had bin giuen to Queene Ioane of Arragon the Princes mother, or to Queene Mary wife to King Alphonso, daughter to King Henry the Princeesse grand-father, that the Prince should supply that defect within two monthes after.

17 That

Matrimoniall
Articles betwixt Fernand of Arragon, and Isabella of Castile.

A 17 That within the terme of foure monthes he should giue to the Princeesse in ready money a hundred thousand florins of the coyne of Arragon for hir expences, and to bestow as she pleased.

18 That if any warre or strife should arise in the Kingdome, the Prince did oblige himselfe to serue in person with foure thousand Launces til the war were ended, and if he should not furnish so many launces, that he should then pay with his owne money, such forces as should serue vnder him.

King Henry hauing heard the Ambassadors, answered, that the businesse being of great consequence, it was requisite to aduise thereon with mature deliberation, and that after he had consulted with the great Lords of his Court and councill, hee would then answer their message, and so sent them backe.

In the meane space a notable Insolency was committed in Andaluzia, which caused great stirres: for albeit that through the Kings meanes and authority it seemed that the Bishop of Siguença, had made an agreement and pacified Alphonso de Aguilar with the Earle of Cabra and his children, neuertheless their hatred slept not in their hearts, so as Alphonso vpon a time hauing inuited to a banquet in the towne-house of Cordoua called Casa del Cabildo, Diego the Marshall of Cordoua, eldest sonne to the Earle, who held the place of Alguazil Major of the same city, hee kept him there prisoner, and sent him away with great indignity, with a sure guard, to his fort of Cagnete, he tooke also

C his brother Sancho, and kept him prisoner likewise, hauing the Magistrates of the city at his deuotion: whereof complaints being made to the King, he did write in great choller to Alphonso, commanding him without delay to release the brethren; otherwise hee would come in person into Andaluzia and enforce him to doe it, punishing him as a rebellious person: wherefore the Marshall was released and sent to Baena, who resenting this iniury, wrote a letter to the King full of accusations, crauing leaue of him to defend his enemy, and to prouoke him to single fight, thereby to constrain him to re-paire and satisfie his honour and reputation: The King hauing heard the messenger and read the letter, would by no meanes allow of the combate, because sundry disorders arise thereof; as also for that those matters of Duell or single combate, are contrary both to diuine and humane lawes, especially betwixt subiects belonging to one and the selfe same Prince, who hath hath power and authority, to bring them to reason by way of Iustice: herevpon the Marshall published infamous libels and declarations, against Alphonso, and he obtained free liberty of the King of Granada to enter the combate in his country, assigning Alphonso to meet in the plaine of Granada, and sending him a safe-condukt from the Moore King: The day appointed for the fight beeing come Alphonso would not appeare: wherefore after that the Marshall had made the acts and protestations which are accustomed in in such cases, about the setting of the Sun, he tooke a picture representing Alphonso de Aguilar, and hauing tied it to his horse taile with the face to the ground, he gallopt vp and downe the plaine, dragging it after him;

E crying aloud: This is the traitor Alphonso de Aguilar, who durst not meet me in single fight, nor venture his body against mine: Then the King of Granada adiudged him a victor, and condemned Alphonso: diuerse draughts of that picture were afterward sent to sundry Lords and Knights of Spaine to Alphonso's great disgrace.

The city of Simancas, with the castle thereof, were in this meane time surprised against the Kings authority, by the Admirall, wherewith the King was greatly troubled, in regard that the Maister of Saint Iames was very sicke, without whom he was not able to negotiate or resolue vpon any matter of importance: This yeere King Lewis the eleuenth, demanded Donna Ioane in marriage for his brother Charles Duke of Guyenne, whose Ambassadors were put in good hope that it should be accomplished. F An other Ambassage was sent to King Henry from the same King Lewis, to induce him to ioyne with him about calling of a councill against Pope Paul the second: but his councill was of opinion that the King should not medle in a matter so displeasing to the Pope, by whom, and by the Sea of Rome his progenitors had beene alwaies fauored, wherefore the Ambassadors were answered in this manner, that the King would notarken to their request, and that hee did with King Lewis to desist from his purpose, and to assure

Ambassad of Alphonso de Aguilar against the children of the Earle of Cabra.

Ambello granted by the King of Granada to Diego of Cordoua
against Alphonso de
Aguilar.

The Admirall
of Castile surpriseth Simancas.

assure him that al the meanes of Spaine should be employed for Gods vickar, vnto whom A King Henry, besides the dignity which hee held, was particularly obliged, for that he had aided and comforted him in his troubles. At the same time the Knights of Alcantara, conducted by the treasurer Alphonso de Mont Roy, rose in mutiny against their Maister D. Gomes de Caceres, and pursued him to death: so as after they had taken from him Badajos, Alcantara, and Valence of Alcantara, they fought with him and ouercame him in batraile, so as hee could neuer after raise himselfe againe: his brother Gutierre Earle of Coria, hauing for his succor demaunded souldiars of the Earle of Alua D. Garcia Aluares of Toledo his father in law, engaged to him the city of Coria for money to pay them, who being gathered together in great numbers, their passage was hindred at the riuer of Taio by the diligence of Alphonso de Mont Roy, and the other Knights his aduersaries, who brake all the bridges, and sunke all the boates, so as they could not passe: wherefore they returned without doing any thing, and Coria remained to the Earle of Alua. By this euill hap, the Maister wholly ruined and in dispaire, died soone after in great pouerty and misery: the Maisterhip whereof was begged of the Pope, by Donna Leonora Pimentel, Countesse of Playfance, for her sonne D. Iohn de Estuniga. The King did willingly consent to the pursue of the Countesse, whom he honored aboue all others, and allowed and confirmed the Popes Bul. And albeit that the treasurer, Alphonso of Montroy, and the Knights did oppose themselves against such an irregular election, the Countesse who had more then a womans heart, tooke Alcantara with other places by force, and delt in such manner, as her sonne posselt the Maisterhip: and was the last that had the title of Maister of that Order.

Donna Leonora Pimentel Countesse of Playfance a woman of manly courage.

22 Spanish Superstitions.

The people of Ognate Superstitions.

Roderigo Bishop of Zamora at that time florished in Spaine for his learning: but whilest the Prelats and Gouernors of the Church gaue themselves ouer to worldly greatnesse, and to nourish and sow discord and diuisions, Religion it selfe was mannaged according to euery mans deuotion. There is in the Prouince of Guipuscoa in the mountaine of Aloya, in the territory of Ognate a Couent of Friars, the original, whereof began about this time: for it is reported that a certaine herdsman called Roderigo Balcaste who dwelt in Vribarri, keeping his goates vpon that mountaine, went down the same hill into a rocky place, which was nere to no high-way, where he found by chance an Image of the Virgin Mary vpon a green thorn. This seemed vnto him a wonderful matter because of the desertnesse of the place: therefore he fell to saying his Aue Marias, and other such like praier as he had beene taught: then night drawing on hee couered the Image with boughes and other things, and went home to his village, and told this great wonder: The rumor thereof being spread thorow the towne of Ognate, the Ministers of Iustice, the Clergy, and the common people, being guided by the shepheard, went to the same place, where they found in a hedge a very little Image of the Virgin Mary, holding her Sonne in her armes, before which they all kneeled downe and beganne to sing many songs and hymnes, thanking God that had sent them so pretious a ieuell, thinking it a great miracle to haue found it in so desert and remote a place: wherefore they consulted together about building a Chappell there, and whilest prouision was made for the manner and matter of that building, they resolved to enclose it with boords, notwithstanding it was seated very discomodiouly, they not daring to vndertake to transport it from thence, nor to build an house for it in any other place then where it first appeared, and they named it the hermitage of our Lady of Arançaçu, which is to say, of the thorne; the which in short time was held for a very religious place, beeing visited, and indowed by diuerse deuout people. Wherefore those of Ognate and Mondragon, which are the neerest places to it, seeing that great numbers of pilgrims came thither, they beganne to make the waies plaine; and to cut the rocke to make the passage thither more easie. Vpon this beginning, grounded vpon the simple credulity of a sort of rude people, it came to passe that this Image beeing famous and greatly visited, certaine of the religious of La Merced were greatly desirous to build a Couent there, wherein one of them named Frier Peter of Ariaran did greatly imploy himselfe, whose mother was so superstitious, as shee dedicated her whole life to the seruice of this Couent: but these fathers being kept there a certaine time, as well by the almes of the good people of the country

A country thereabouts as also by the bounty of the pilgrims, in the end by reason of the extreame cold of the winter, and barrennes of the place, they grew weary and left it: in whose roomes came certaine religious people of the third Order of Saint Francis, or Tercecones (as they call them) who did enlarge the Couent begonne by the Friers of La Merced, who were by the Popes prouided of diuerse pardons and indulgencies for those which should visit it, and doe them any good: now, in the reigne of the Catholike King and Queene Fernand and Isabella, vpon the occasion of reforming the religions of Spaine, these Friers Tercecones were admonished by this Obseruantines to turne to their rule: which is, say they, the true rule of Saint Francis, which they refused, and being vrged therevnto by way of Iustice; these fathers resolved to giue ouer their first religion, and did put on the habit of the Iacobins, or Friers Prechers of Saint Dominike: then there arose an other strife betwixt the Friers of Saint Francis, and the Dominicans, about the possession of this Couent, the Friers saying that it belonged vnto them, and to none others, seeing that the brethren of their Order had held it so long a time without contradiction of those of La Merced: Therefore they beganne by ordinary and extraordinary meanes to contend about this possession, and at the last fell to blowes: but the Dominicans being vpheld by the Inhabitants of Ognate, the friers withdrew themselves, not attempting it any more by such meanes, then they beganne their sute about it at Rome, whether they sent for their soliciter, a frier called Martin Garibay, who vsed such diligence, as the right was iudged to the brethren of his order, and the Couent restored to the Obseruant friers: So at the returne of friar Martin into Spaine, who brought with him the execution of that sentence, the Dominicans came forth, and left the possession to their aduersaries, who at this present doe enioy it, and haue greatly augmented it with building; and it is said, that it is an harbour and retreat for many afflicted people specially of Marriners, who come thither to pay their vowes: to the great commodity of the friers: these exercises of religion are greatly vsed in Spaine: but in the yeere 1552. vpon the sixth of December, the whole Cloister, with the lodgings and other buildings were burnt downe to the ground by casualty: but the fire touched not the Church which they account for a great miracle.

Friars transferred to Iacobins.

D This yeere 1469. died Don Pedro Fernandes of Velasco Earle of Haro who was reputed to be a Knight that led the most Christian life of any other of his time, in testimony whereof the Spaniards write that hee did build the Monastery of Pomar, where hee made three of his daughters Nunnes, with an hospitall where twelue Gentlemen, false into pouerty, should be honorably entertained, and a Chappell for the buriall of him and his: liuing afterward very retiredly in Medina de Pomar, eschewing the daungers and troubles of this world: these religious workes are praized in Spaine, by the great Lords that are rich, when they are become old and haue many children. Now his sonne Don Pedro of Velasco, oftentimes named in this History, succeeded in the Earledome.

Religious deeds of Pedro Fernandes de Velasco, Earle of Haro.

E But returning to the History of King Henry, who beeing come to Segobia, the absence of the Maister of Saint Iames, who was extreame sick of a quartan feuer, did greatly trouble him, for without him hee could doe nothing: therefore it was thought fit, that for their better conferring together, the King should come to Madrid, whether the Maister beeing very weake was brought, the King and the whole Court going forth to meet him, not without the wonder of diuerse, which thought it a strange matter to see this Prince, so much to abase himselfe to Iohn de Pacheco, who notwithstanding that hee was sick, yet all matters passed thorough his hands, and nothing was concluded on without him. About the same time died Don Lewis de la Cerde, who had held Escalona all the time of the troubles, and appointed at his death, that his people should yeeld it vp to the King: the Maister of Saint Iames, demaunded this place and obtained it: and because the souldiars of the deceased, did say that they would not deliuer it to any other but to the King himselfe, hee came thither in person, and receiued the towne, and gaue it forthwith to the maister of Saint Iames: so as all that which had beene taken from Aluar de Luna, Maister of Saint Iames, fell to this man.

23

Contempt of Justice in the Castile.

Conclusion of the marriage
betwixt Quays
Duke of Guen
and D. Joane.

The townes of the Infantaſgo
giuen to the Marquis of Santillana.

Francisco of Estuniga, accompanied with those of the family of Chaues of Trugillo with a great company of souldiers, to make reprisall of these Ladies for certaine prisoners, Kinsfolks, and friends of the Chaues, who were kept by the Countesse of Medellina: wherefore Don Francisco hauing ouertaken them at Guadalupe, D. Alphonso Ponce, who conducted them, thought to get the franchise of the Monasterie of Guadalupe, where hee was beſeeged, and the Ladies, with those that conducted them, and the Monkes of the same place, did suffer many outrages, notwithstanding that the King thought to remedy the matter, by sending thither the Licenciate Don Henriquez, who could do no good: in the end Don Francisco of Estuniga and his people hauing broken vp the gates of the Couent, enforced Don Alphonso to yeeld himselfe, and to deliuer the Ladies into his hands, whom they ledde away with them. Now the marriage beeing concluded betwixt Donna Ioane and the Duke of Guienne, to the great discontent of diuers Spaniards, the King and the Ambassadors went to Segobia, there to receiue Donna Ioane, who was at Guadalupe, and also to apply to themselves the pardons of the Iubile, which the Pope graunted this yeare, vnto such as would giue money for them: to wit, the richer sort, the foure royals of plate, those of the meauer sort, three, and the meanest of all, two, the third part whereof was to bee applied to the sea of Rome and chamber Apostolicke, and the other two thirds towards the building of the Cloister of the great Church of the same citie, whereunto the King furnished abundantly to that which was wanting, and gaue vnto it certaine Coapes of cloath of gold. Donna Ioane was in the keeping of the Marquis of Santillana, who in recompence of his paynes, and cost, bestowed about her entertainment, receiued in gift from the King, the three townes of the Infantaſgo, namely, Alcozer, Valoliuas, and Salmeron, the which did belong to the Countesse of Saint Stephen, wife to Don Diego Lopes de Pacheco, Marquis of Villena: but shee was recom-penced foure fold, for the King gaue her the towne of Requegna with the rights of the port thereof: the Master of Saint Iames, father to the Marquis, beeing hee that did order and dispose of all matters after his owne pleasure and profite.

There arose about the same time a great tumult in Vailliodolit betwixt the old and new Christians, the old beeing fauoured and vpheld by Iohn de Biuero, a rich Cittizen of the same towne, and very affectionate to the seruice of the Princes Don Fernand, and Donna Izabella, who vpon this occasion came from Duegnas, where they remayned, to Vailliodolit, and were lodged in Iohn de Biuero's house: the which did so stirre vp the mutinous people, as they came running in armes to force that house, the Princes were in danger to haue beene taken, if the Bishop of Salamanca, who was President of the Chancerie, had not suddainly put them out of the towne, and caused them to returne to Duegnas.

The King hauing notice of this tumult, came to Vailliodolit, confiscated Iohn de Biuero's house, and gaue it to the Earle of Benauent with the Captaine-ship of the towne, and hauing pacified the people, he returned to Segobia, where his chiefest and most pleasing aboad was, the fortresse of the which place, held for a certaine time by the Master of Saint Iames, was a little while before yeelded vp vnto him, where hee made Adrew de Cabrera Captaine.

Certaine dayes after, the King remooued from Segobia, and came to lye in the Monasterie of Paular in the valley of Loſoia, bringing with him his wife Queene Ioane, D. Ioane her daughter, the French Ambassadors, and others, the Dukes of Arenal and Valence, the Master of Saint Iames, the Earles of Benauent, Miranda, S. Martha, the Arch-bishop of Seuille, with many other Lords, Knights, and Prelates: but the Lords of the house of Mendoza, did chiefly accompany the Queene and her daughter, namely, the Marquis of Santillana, the Bishop of Siguenſa, the Earles of Tendilla and Crugna, and Don Iohn Hurtado, the which Lords and Ambassadors, beeing by the Kings commandement assembled in an open field, vpon the banke of the riuer which runneth thorough the same valley, where from all parts of the Countrey, great numbers of people of all sorts were gathered together.

The Licentiate Antonio Nugnes of Cité Rodrigo was commaunded by the king to reade a writing signed with his hand, and sealed with his seale, contayning in substance, that

A that whereas he in times past, at the intreatie and request of the great Lords of his kingdom, and for to pacifie the troubles and ciuil warres of the same, had declared his sister Donna Izabella his heire, and successer in the State and royall dignitie of Castile, and procured the Lords, Prelates, and Communalities of the kingdom to swear vnto her, vpon condition, that she should be obedient vnto him: she notwithstanding reiecting all respect and duty due vnto him, who was her king, father, and elder brother, had married her selfe without his knowledge, and against his expresse commandement, to Don Fernand king of Sicill and Prince of Aragon: in regard whereof, hee did at that present manifest and declare her to be fallen from all the right which shee might pretend there-vnto, and did disinherit her, disannulling all promises, declarations, and institutions made vnto her in that behalfe: commanding all his subiects, that from thence forward they should not acknowledge her for Princeſſe, but obey (with a follemne oath) his daughter Donna Ioane there present: This writing beeing read openly with a loud voice, the Cardinal of Albi, the French Ambassadour, came to the Queene, requesting her to affirme by oath, whether Donna Ioane were truly the daughter of the king, her husband or not, whereunto she answered, that vndoubtedly she was: then he made the like request to the king, namely, whether he did stedfastly beleue, that Donna Ioane there present, were his daughter, the which he affirmed, saying, that he had alwaies reputed and accounted her for his owne naturall daughter: euer since shee was borne: then presently, the Prelates, Lords, and others which were present at that act, came and kissed the Infanta's hands, and following the Kings commandement, they tooke the oath of fidelity vnto her, after the manner accustomed to the eldest sonnes of the kings of Castile, all of them calling her Princeſſe and heire, the Marquis of Santillana, the Bishop of Siguenſa and his other brethren excepted, who excused themselves, saying, that they had alreadye at another time taken the same oath, which was not now needfull to be reiterated. After these things the Earle of Bologne hauing exhibited the authoritie which hee had from the Duke of Guienne, the Cardinal tooke Donna Ioane, and the Earle by the hands, and betrothed them, with all the vsuall ceremonies and solemnities: and then the drummes and trumpets sounded, and all sorts of signes of ioy and gladnesse were made by the assistants.

D This done, the Ambassadors returned to Segobia, where by the way they were so beaten with a violent tempest of wind, raine and hayle, as they were in danger of their liues, and diuers of their traine perished, which was an euident token, that the miseries of Spayne were not yet at an end. From Segobia, the King caused the Bishop of Siguenſa to accompany them to Burgos, from whence they returned highly contented to France: but the Duke of Guienne his death, who liued in continuall discord with his brother king Lewis, hindred the accomplishment of this marriage.

The Arch-bishop of Toledo was then at home in his house, contriuing of new troubles, and held the party contrarie to the Master of S. Iames, who did wholly possesse the King, to the great indignation of the great Lords, who vpon that occasion left the Court, and retired themselves home to their houses, the kingdom beeing opprest with miseries, plagues, famines, murthers, and falshood in all things, especially in mony, to the great hurt of the people, who wanted the administration of iustice. Baſco de Contreras one of the Kings captaines, had taken the fortresse of Perales from this Arch-bishop, the which caused new troubles: for the Arch-bishop beeing desirous to recouer it, assembled forces, and came and beſeeged it: the King on the other side sent him commandement to withdraw his souldiers, threatening, if he refused, to fall vpon him and his, and was already come to Madrid, with troupes of horse and foote. The Arch-bishop perceyuing himselfe inferiour in strength, obeyed the Kings commandement, and brought backe his people to Alcalá.

F The Princes Don Fernand and D. Izabella, remayned at Duegnas, beeing counselled and fauoured in all things by the Arch-bishop of Toledo, and his faithful companion Don Iohn of Arias Bishop of Segobia, by reason whereof the King complayned to the Pope by his Ambassadour resident at Rome, of both these Prelates, accusing them of committing many things to the preiudice and contempt of his royall Crowne. The Pope vaderstanding so much, sent to the Bishop of Segobia, commanding him within

King Henry
of Castile his false oath.

The Lords of Mendoza refuse to kisse the hands of D.
Joane.

The Duke of Guienne his death, breakes
this marriage.

27
New troubles
by the Archbishop of Toledo meanes.

Proceedings
against the archb of Toledo.

the terme of ninety dayes to make his personall appearance at Rome. And hee appoynted that the Lords of the Kings Councell, should cause the Arch-bishop to be summoned and exhorted by foure Channons, according to the forme of law, to returne to the obedience due vnto the king, which if he should refuse to do, they should then thunder out his proceesse, and send it to Rome, that the Pope might see it, to the end to proceede against him, and chastise him as a rebellious Prelate. The Popes Briefe beeing declared in the Chapter-house of Toledo, there came to the Court at Madrid, Fernand Peres of Ayala, bastard-brother to Pero Lopes of Ayala, who had bene Earle of Fuenfaldia, Diego del Gadillo, Marco Dias, and Don Francisco of Palencia, Prior of Arrochio, Chanons of the same church, who hauing shewed to the King, how highly their Prelates disobedience did displease not onely them, but the whole Chapter, they offered themselves to performe whatsoever the Kings Councell should thinke fit to bee done for his seruice, and for reducing the Arch-bishop to his duty to his royall Maiestie. Now, because the King and his trayne were at that time in the Dioceffe of Toledo, and fearing the Arch-bishops censures and interdictions, they defended themselves with an appeale, putting themselves vnder the protection of the Sea Apostolicke: and then a Knight and a Doctor was sent to giue the Arch-bishop notice of the Briefe, and to commaund him to returne to the Kings seruice, and to abandon the Princes, whom the King desired to chase out of the Realme. The Arch-bishop excused himselfe, and answered, that heretofore by the Kings commaundement he had sworne to the Princeesse Donna Izabella, as to the eldest heire of the Crowne, therefore he could not acknowledge any other but her: and he besought the king to deale no farther in that businesse, because such was his determinate will and purpose. The King vnderstanding this answer, commanded to proceed against the Arch-bishop with all rigour: but the Master of Saint Iames, who managed the affaires with more cunning, was of a contrarie opinion: he aduised the King to send the Licentiate Diego Henriquez vnto him, to offer him, if he would adhere to the Kings partie, and forsake the Princeesse, three thousand tennants, and two forts for his two sons Trailo Carillo of Acugna, and Lope Vasques of Acugna.

The Arch-bishop reiected these temptations, and would by no meanes forsake the Princeesse seruice. This notwithstanding, the Master caused all proceedings against her to cease, and the foure Channons were sent backe to Toledo discontented enough, three of them were taken by the way, and brought to Torrejon de Velasco, by Pero Arias of Auala, who by the Arch-bishops commaundement lay in ambush to surprise them. Fernand Peres of Ayala, onely saued himselfe in Canales. The King beeing very much displeased herewith, sent diuers horse-men to field, who tooke diuers friends and seruants of the Arch-bishop, and among others, Don Diego of Gueuara, a Channon of Toledo, in exchange of whome the three Chanons were deliuered. And so the matter passed on betwixt the King and the Arch-bishop for that time.

In the meane time, the Master of Saint Iames intending his owne profite, and beeing assured of his credit and power, had taken the cittie of Alcaraz, which imported him very much, beeing neere to his Marquisat of Villena, and was easily confirmed in the possession and reuenue of the same by the King, which discontented diuers: for by his example, the Earle of Benauent, seized vpon Villalua, and deposing Pero Nugno from his office of Merin major of the cittie of Vallidolit, he gaue it to his brother Don Pedro Pimentell. It was then an ordinarie trick in Spayn, for those that were able to seize vpon any place to do it, without caring for robberies, murders, and other hainous crimes, which they by such attempts afforded matter and occasion too, beeing assured that if they had any little fauour in Court, to possesse their booties without controule. It happened euen so to the Earle of Arcos, Don Rodrigo Ponce of Leon, who hauing taken, during the furies of the League, the cittie of Cales, he obtayned the fame in full proprietie, with title of Marquis thereof, by the meanes and furtherance of the Master of Saint Iames his father-in-law.

If two Lords were at strife, without any respect of the Royall Maiestie, they would strike vp the drumme, and raise forces to ruine one another, as if they had bene Soueraigne Princes, which had held of none but of God and the sword (as they say.) Vpon these

Disorders in the gouern-
ment of castile

A these tearmes stood Don Manuel Ponce of Leon, brother to the Earle of Arcos, and Don Fernand of Velasco, brother to the Earle of Siruela, who were in the field, accompanied with great number of horse-men readie to come to battaile betwixt Madrid and Alcala, neere enough to the Court: wherefore the King to hinder them, sent thither his great Master Andrew Cabrera with sufficient forces. Cabrera vsing great diligence, and gallowing pace in a dustie high way, his horse raising a great cloud of dust, hee was not perceived by those which followed him, but was ouerthrowne, and so troden vnder the horsefeete, that beeing well-neere bruised to death, hee was brought backe speechlesse to Madrid, where after he had bene well visited by the Chirurgions and Phisitions, hee

B recovered at leysure.

There was a quarrell betwixt the Earles of Haro and Treuigno, about certaine words of contempt vttered by the Countesse of Haro, the Earle of Treuigno strengthened himselfe with Pedro Abendagno, and Iohn Alphonso of Muxica, chiefe of the Mutins of Biscay and Guipuscoa, who were banished not long before by the Earle of Haro, committed by the King for the ordering and pacifying of those Prouinces. The Earle of Treuigno then hauing giuen them entrance into the countrey, against the Kings leaue, and contrarie to the sentence: and beeing confederated together, they ioyned to their league Don Pedro Lopes of Padilla, Gouvernour and Captaine of the frontiers of Castile, riding vp and downe, and commanding in the Countrey without any feare at all: wherefore C the Earle of Haro, by the Kings commaundement, came to Burgos, and there leauied certaine forces in haist as well hee, as the Earle of Salines Don Lewis, and Don Sanchez of Velasco his breethren, and brought them into Biscay, beeing most of them horse-men.

The Earle of Treuigno and the Gouvernour, did the like on their parts, vnto whome were ioyned with great numbers of foot-men leuyed in Biscay and Guipuscoa, the heads of the faction aboue named, to encourage whome the Earle of Treuigno vsed a policy. My companions in armes (quoth he) is it possible that you can indure, that this Earle Pedro of Velasco, with his credite and fauour gotten by flatterie, should henceforth command ouer you as your Lord, and separate you from the Crowne of Castile, into D the which your Predecessours were incorporated with so great affection? Will you againe subiect your selues to follow those priuate passions, which haue so often troubled the generall state of the Kingdome, and exposed the subiects to extreame miseries, whereof you haue so many recent examples before your eyes? I do not thinke that the ancient valour of the Biscans is so farre degenerate, as euer to consent to submit themselves to any subalterne iurisdiction, especially when at this instant, an occasion presents it selfe to be reuenged vpon him, who is the oppressour of your liberties: For if wee do not fight valiantly, and cut this Earle of Haro in peeces, assure you that hee will become your Lord: For hee hath without all doubt obtrayned of the King (who respects not the worthinesse or vnworthinesse of those hee doth good vnto) the Lordshippe of E Biscay, and hath Letters patents thereof, the which I haue scene and read: Wherefore it remaynes then in your prowes and valour, to set free your selues from this inconuenience.

The Biscans animated by this speech, beeing come to blowes, neere the towne of Mugnia, in streight places and aduantageous for foote-men, as they were, against horse-men, did fight so furiously, as they put them to flight, with great slaughter, & taking of diuerse persons of worth, among whom were ledde away the Earle of Salines, and Don Lewis of Velasco. The King hauing notice that these Lords were in armes, was come as farre as Burgos to hinder their fight, but hee came not soone enough. Wherefore hee went to Odugna, and from thence sent commaundement to the two Earles to lay downe their armes, and to retire themselves to their owne houses, enioyning the Earle of Treuigno, vpon paine of his indignation, to deliuer the prisoners: then hee caused them to make truce, the better to reconcile them, and make them friends. In this encounter, the valour of one Iohn de Leyna was noted on the Earle of Treuigno's partie. On the other side Don Pedro Manrique sonne to the Earle of Paredes, beeing accompanied with certaine base fellows, surprized the City of Alcarraz, and enforced Iohn de Haro, who was

28 Quarrell betwixt the Earles of Haro
and Treuigno.

Gouernor

In an encounter made betwixt Seuille and Alcalá de Guadaira, two bastard sonnes of the Duke of Medina were slayne, and other disorders followed thereupon: for the redressing whereof, the King sent Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Earle of Tendilla, to Seuille, who by his diligence and good counsell, caused them to lay downe their armes, and made those two Lords friends, and the Duke had his towne of Medina Sidonia, and the fortresse of the same restored vnto him.

At Toledo Pera Lopes of Ayala newly made Earle of Fuenfaldá, was sollicitated by the brother of his deceased wife Donna Maria de Silva, to wit, the Bishop of Badajoz, who was desirous to bring againe the Earle of Cifuentes, and his Vncle Don John de Ribera into Toledo, to giue his eldest daughter Donna Leonora in marriage to the Earle of Cifuentes, seeking by that meanes to reconcile and make them friends, which the Master of Saint James did likewise procure, building some desseignes vpon the same city: but the king being aduertized thereof, sent forth with the Licentiate Diego Henriques to aduertise the Earle of Fuenfaldá by no meanes to make that marriage, and not to suffer the Earle of Cifuentes nor Don John de Ribera to enter into Toledo, because he was assured, that as soone as they should set foot within the cittie, they would driue him thence.

The Earle giuing more credit to the Bishoppe, then to the King, was very willing to agree vpon the marriage, by reason whereof the Earle of Cifuentes, and Don John de Ribera, were no sooner entred into the cittie, but contrarie to their oath and promise, which was not to attempt any innouation, nor stirre vp any troubles, they put themselves in armes, and bandied themselves in such sort, as there was nothing to bee scene but daily and continuall skirmishes, fights, murders, robberies, and other miseries, vtual in diuided Citties, the common people of this towne being more mutinous and apt to enter into factions and leagues, then any other Cittie of Spaine: Wherefore the King, the better to redresse these inconueniences, being at Madrid, sent the Bishoppe of Burgos, together with the Licentiate Diego Henriques, who for a time caused those insolencies to cease.

The King comming afterwards thither, tooke away, against all reason, the gouernment of the cittie from the Earle of Fuenfaldá, and put it against his will, into the hands of Doctor Garcy Lopes of Madrid, with charge of an assistant, and with great authoritie, onely to please and content the Master of Saint James. The dispossessed Earle went home to his owne house, and the Earle of Cifuentes afterward had no desire to accomplish the marriage with Donna Leonora, alleading certaine lets and hinderances, by reason of their neere consanguinitie, and so soone after married else-where. The Earle of Cifuentes, and Don John de Ribera, tooke Doctor Garcy Lopes, committed him to prison, and made themselves masters of the Cittie gates, and other strong places, and besieged the Castle, the which they had taken, with the absolute command ouer the whole Cittie, had not certaine Channons resisted them, who fortifying themselves in the great Church, held out till such time as the Marshals Fernand de Rinadeneyra, and Perañan de Ribera were come to their ayde, who caused the Earle and his people to with-draw themselves.

The Master of Saint James, who was at that time in the territorie of Leon, making his progresse vp and downe about the ordering of the affaires of that Prouince, being aduertized of that which had befallen Garcy Lopes, came in great hast to Toledo, from whence hauing driuen the Earle of Cifuentes, Don John de Ribera, Lope of Estuniga, with Arias de Silva, and other of their complices, hee left the Cittie in quiet. The King not long after came to the Monasterie of Silla, halfe a league distant from the Cittie, but hee did in no sort touch any of the seditious, because all the mischief had beene procured by the Master. As hee thought to returne to Segobia, hee found the Cittie in a mutinie, and reuolted from the Corregidor or Gouernour of the same, by the meanes of certaine Gentlemen, who were taken, and sent with yrons vpon their legges to the Castle of Madrid, where they remayned a long time after.

Now if temporall matters were so ill gouerned, it is to bee supposed, that spirituall affaires were farre worse: for what good could happen to the people, whose Pastors, neglecting their ecclesiasticall functions, had no other care but to heape vp worldly riches and

People of Toledo
do mutinies.

C

D

E

F

A and honours, making themselves heads of Factions, and by their couetousnesse and ambition, did themselves most of all trouble and disquiet all Kingdomes and Commonwealths.

Whilst these miseries troubled the Realme of Castille, King John of Arragon did still endeauour to reduce the Rebels of Catalonia to his obedience, and after that hee had ended the question betwixt himselfe and his sonne-in-law Gaston of Foix about the kingdom of Nauarre, hee did send his sonne Don Alphonso of Arragon, with the Earle of Prades, who was returned to his seruice, into the confines of Barcelona, who encamped themselves alongst the riuer of Beson, and made courtes euen to the Cittie gates, but by rying and spoyling, houses, gardens, and other places of pleasure of that countrie. Then they went to batter a strong castle seated vpon the riuer, which the Barcelonnois being desirous to succour, James Galliot, Gouernour of the cittie, came into the field with a great number of horse-men, and foure thousand foot, bringing with him Don Denis of Portugall, and Gustian of Aguirre, who presenting themselves before the enemy, with intent to fight, were so rudely receyued, as within awhile they were defeated, with many of their people slayne, hurt, and taken prisoners, in the number of whom were James Galliot, and Denis of Portugall: part of those which fled, came backe to the cittie, and the rest retired themselves into the woods and mountaines. This losse did so daunt the courage of those of Barcelona, as despayring of their affaires, they all began to hearken vnto peace, whereunto they were the rather incited by the Kings comming, who ioyned himselfe soone after with the forces of his sonne Alphonso, taking the towne of Valdenzellas, hee made shew as if he would beseege the Cittie both by sea and land, the which being filled with great feare, and yet neuerthelesse trusting to the Kings clemencie, they sent Commissioners vnto him, to craue his pardon, and to offer him the keys of the Cittie, submitting themselves to his mercie.

These men being come into the kings presence, did by the mouth of Lewis Setenti a Florentine, confesse the Cittizens fault, and did implore his mercie, presenting him with the keys, the which the King holding in his hands, re-delivered forth-with to the Commissioners, contrarie to the expectation of all his followers, who thought, that in regard hee had bene so many yeares troubled and disquieted with the obstinate and cruell warres of the Barcelonnois, hee would haue executed seuerer vengeance vpon them: but hee on the contrarie, with a singular mildnesse, did not onely pardon them, and their Confederates, for whatsoever they had committed against him, but confirmed them in their goods, liberties, priuiledges, exemptions, and auncient rights. The next day following, the Cittizens had prepared a triumphant chariot for him, that he might make his entrie with great pompe and magnificence, the which he would not accept, but was contented to enter into the Cittie riding vpon a white Courser, by Saint Anthonies gate of the same cittie, which hee found vnprouided of all manner of vtuals, where-with he caused them presently to bee furnished, so as without the aboue-named defeat, where necessity would haue enforced them to haue yielded.

By this peace which happened so opportunely, the miseries of Cattalonia were ended, which had troubled the whole State of Arragon for the space of tenne yeares. He which shewed most prowesse, and performed the notablest exploits in this warre, was Don Alphonso of Arragon, Duke of Villahermosa, a Prince worthie of great prayse, and high commendation, who dyed afterwards in the seruice of his brother King Fernand reigning in Castile, at a place called Linares, leauing his sonne Don Alphonso of Arragon, heire to his Duchie of Villahermosa, who was Knight of the Order of Saint James, and a Daughter called Donna Maria of Arragon, who was married to the Prince of Salerne. Hee had out of wedlocke Don John of Arragon, Earle of Luna, Captaine of the Castle of Amposta, Don Alphonso of Arragon, who was Bishop of Tortosa, and afterward Arch-bishoppe of Tarragone, Don Fernand of Arragon, Prior of Saint Johns of Cattalonia, together with Donna Leonora of Arragon, wife to the Earle of Albayda.

This peace was no sooner concluded, but the King had newes of a new rumult, raised in Nauarre, whereinto the Princeesse his daughter voluntarily had runne herselfe with great

31
Arragon.

The Barcelonnois
defeated.

The city of Barcelona yeelds
to the mercies of the King.

King John
clemency.

Don Alphonso of Arragon his posteritie.

32
Nauarre.
great

Bbbb 2

the Princes Don Ferdinand and Donna Isabella, did not appeare at this assembly, in the number of whom was Don Inigo Manrique Bishop of Coria, who requested the legat to come to Valiolidit, saying, that they were to conferre with him about matters touching the succession of the kingdomes; but the King perswaded him to the contrary, accusing the Princes and their followers of many matters. The Legat neuerthelesse went to Alcala to visit the Princes, who remained there with the Archbishop of Toledo, by whom he was sumptuously receiued and with great pompe, as also in Guadaluja, the Marquis of Santillanas house, where hee remained a certaine space, with the Marquis and the Earles his bretheren.

35 Enormous sins cause those newly conuerted to returne
to Iudaisme.

Misſacre of the new Christians.

The Constable
Don Michael Lucas de Iran-su, murdered
by the people.

D. Pedro de
Velasco made Constable of Castill.

Pride binders
the Infant Don Henry from his preference in Castill.

The impieties, superstitions, thefts, rapines, and other insolencies vsed at that time among the Christians in Spaine, namely the Prelates and Church-men, were so scandalous to all men, as diuerse newe Christians, who were conuerted from Iudaisme to the profession of Christianity, being constrained more by the rigor of the lawes, then perswaded by wholesome doctrine, and good examples, began to returne to Iudaisme, not being able to beleue by humane reason, that the religion professed by such detestable people, could bee the true. The remedy applied to this mischief was the same which arrogant men and such as hate correction, and are desirous to liue in their errors and corruptions, doe commonly vse, namely the sword, massacres, and all manner of excesses. For in the City of Cordoua, instead of bringing back these straites by meeknesse, holinesse of life, and such like examples, which is the duty of the ministers of the Church, they did let loose the bridle to the rash mutinous people, who made a cruell slaughter of them, and spoiled their goods.

Those of Iden followed this example, against whom the Constable Michael Lucas de Iranſu opposing himself, was most inhumanly murdered in the Cathedral Church by the enraged multitude. The like cruelties and robberies were committed in Andujar and other places of Andaluzia, wherewith King Henry was extremely discontented, but being faint-hearted and of no courage in these matters, hee did no more punish the murderers, then the Pastors were diligent in seeking out fit Christian meanes to bring back these Apostata's into the right way. The office of Constable was giuen to Don Pedro Velasco Earle of Haro the Kings great Chamberlaine, at the intercession of the Maister of Saint James his Sonne in law, the which dignity hath euer since, euen till our time, continued in that family: The King like-wife gaue the scales of his Chancery, to the Bishop of Siguença.

The King finding that Donna Joane his supposed daughter, had very ill success in her treaties of marriage, resolved to bestow her vpon Don Henry, Sonne to the Infant Don Henry who was Maister of Saint James, & brother to Don Ferdinand Infant of Castile, which was King of Arragon, who at the same time, remayned in the City of Barcelona, from whence hee caused him to come secretly into Castile. This Prince, who by the commandement of King John his vnckle, was called in his dominions, the Infant of Arragon, and by some others the fortunate Infant, was very proud, the which hee shewed in Castile before his time, which did greatly hinder his aduancement, in that Kingdome. Hee with his mother Donna Beatrice Pimentell, Aunt to the Earle of Benauent, arrived at Requena, from whence afterward, (the King having furnished them with all things necessary for their calling, and place which they held) the Maister of Saint James caused them to come to the Castle of Garcy Nugnos, sending two of his Gentlemen to accompany them thither. During the time that this Don Henry remayned there, sundry Lords and Knights came to visit him, diuers of whome because they would bee reputed ciuill and courteous, offered to kisse his hand, thinking that hee would not haue suffered it, but hee keeping a great grauity presented his hand freely vnto them: but one amongst the rest taking him by the hand, sayd to him in derision, my Lord you haue a very faire hand, and so without kissing it let goe his hold, whereat D. Henry was much offended.

The Maister of Saint James remayned at that time in Madrill, being discontented with an accident hapned at Segobia: Hee had sundry times solicited the king to commit the Castle and gates of the city to his keeping, allcading that in that place Queene Joane

A Joane and her daughter, might lodge more safely then any where else, and that he should by no meanes giue the charge thereof to Andrew de Cabrera, because he was assured that Beatrice of Bouadilla his wife, was drawne to the Princeſſe party, and besides, that he being a Cartelan, was an affectionate seruant to Prince Fernand, all which was very true. The King yeelded to the Maisters request; But Andrew de Cabrera refused to dispossesse himselfe of the castle: whereat the Maister being highly offended, practised his ruine, and thought to effect it by this practise: He caused Diego Tapia and certaine other Gentlemen to come into the city, giuing them charge to stirre vp the people, whom he knew to be desirous to fall vpon the new conuerted Christians, and to spoile them of their

Enterprife of
the Maister of Saint James against Andrew de Cabrera
captaine of the castle of Segobia.

goods, as they of Cordoua and other places of Andaluzia had lately done; and they appointed that during the tumult, some band of souldiars should force the Kings house and take both him and Andrew de Cabrera, his Steward, to make him deliuer vp the castle: Diego de Tapia needed not to vse much labour to stirre vp the people who were ouermuch addicted to mischief: wherefore it was concluded that at the ringing of a larum bell in the Church of Saint Peter de los Picos, they should assaile the city in fiewe sundry places, on a Sunday after dinner, namely in the quarter of Saint Olalla, in that of Saint Colimba, Saint Martin, Saint Iohn, and that of Saint Michael, appointing a Squadron to goe vp and downe, and to discouer in euery place of the city. But it was the will of God, that this complot came to the knowledge of the Legat, who lay then at Guadaluja, who forth-with reuealed it to the King, the King sent word thereof to Andrew de Cabrera, captaine of the fort, to the end he should stand vpon his gard, & preuent this danger in the city; Cabrera hauing secretly armed many souldiars, and all the Conuerſs which were fit to beare arms, did so preuent his enemies, as he slew and defeated most of them, and Diego Tapia was shot through the body with an arrow. The Maister hauing failed in his enterprife, and fearing least some euill might betide him, departed the same night from Segobia, and came to the Monastery of Parral, to goe from thence to Madrid: the King tooke the paines to come and visit him in the Monastery, and vsed all the entreaties that he could to bring him backe: but the Maister said vnto him, that he had no confidence in Andrew de Cabrera nor his wife, and that hee would neuer set foote in

The Maister of Saint James
sailes of his purpose.

Segobia vntill such time as hee were posselt of the castle: wherefore the King returned to Segobia to pacifie and appease the tumult. It is most certaine that the enterprises of the Maister, being preiudiciall to an other, were very dangerous to himselfe: for his sonne-in-law the Earle of Benauent, still bearing in minde how hee had preuented him of the Maisterſhip of Saint James, did keepe armed men in his house, who were appointed to haue slaine him in that tumult, wherefore hee did wisely to goe to Madrid, whether neuerthelesse, all matters being appeased, the King and the whole Court came, and namely the Earle of Benauent: and thither were also brought the Queene, and D. Joane her daughter. At Madrid there arrived a messenger from the Pope, who aduertized the King that D. Pero Gonſal de Mendoza, Bishop of Siguença, was created Cardinal of the title of holy Croſſe, the which did greatly please the King, who commanded him to be called the Cardinall of Spaine, the which title hee vsed during his life, and receiued many honors of King Henry.

D. Pero Gon-ſal de Menſa Cardinal of Spaine.

In these times beganne the Order of the Religious of Saint Francis of Paul, who was a Calabrian borne at a place called Paul, who was drawne into France by King Lewis the eleuenth, and died at Tours; his Order called the Minims of Saint Francis, was approved by Pope Sixtus this yeere 1473, and afterwards at the request of King Francis the first, of Queene Claude his wife, and of Donna Louise of Sauoy his mother, the Author was canonized by Pope Leo the tenth, in the yeere 1529. of this Religious Order there are many Monasteries in Spaine, diuided into two Prouinces.

An. 1473.
Order of Saint Francis of Paul.

F King Henry being desirous to consumate the marriage, betwixt Donna Joane and his cousin the Infant Don Henry, tooke counsell therevpon of the Bishop of Siguença chosen Cardinall, and of others of his counsell, and caused the Infant with his mother to come to Xetafa, betwixt which place and Madrid, he did see them, and would willingly haue brought them to Madrid, but the Maister of Saint James, who did not allow of this marriage, delt in such sort as they came not thither: afterward, the king hauing founded

*Marriage of D.
Joane supposed daughter of Henry of Arragon, broken by the Maister
of S. James.*

37 founded the maister concerning this match, hee did openly diswade him from it, saying, A that he ought not to marry his daughter to any other then to a King or a mighty Prince: and that if he were determined to giue her to Don Henry, it behooued him then to leuie men of warre, and to appoint for their pay, more then twenty millions of Marauedis; the King (who had treasures in the Castle of Segobia) said, that hee would not want money; and therefore, hee sent the Maister, and the new elected Cardinall to Segobia, to take out of the Castle such summes as hee appointed: but the Capitaine Andrew de Cabrera, delayed them many dayes, saying, that hee would cause the money to bee told out, but yet they did it not; for indeed hee was seruant to the Princes, and wholly contrary to the Kings will, as concerning Donna Ioanes marriage; and besides that hee would haue nothing to doe with the Maister, whom hee deadly hated, fearing that all that hee went about tended to no other end but to dispossesse him of his Governement. In the meane time the Earle of Benaunt (who was cousin Germaine to Don Henry,) perceiuing that chiefly by the practises of the Maister, the marriage was delayed, and incensed with an old hatred against him, about the Maistership of Saint James, had bitter words with him, telling him that hee should better haue considered of matters, and not to haue procured the Infant Don Henry to haue come into Spaine, in a manner to deride him, and vnder colour of lyes to abuse the King, the Realme, and the great Lords, with many other bitter words, which the Maister endured with patience.

The death of Don Aphonso of Fonseca, Archbishoppe of Siuill, did promote Pero Goncales of Mendoza Bishop of Siguença to that dignity, vnto whom almost at the same time that his Bulls were dispatcht from Rome, was the Cardinals Hatte presented. And the King beeing sollicit to prouide for the troubles and miseries of his kingdom, hee did the same yeare one thousand, foure hundreded, seuentie and three, call the Estates to Saint Mary de Nieua, whether came the Deputies of the Communalities and cities of Castile, and Regions annexed to the same. There were sundry exactions abolished, which had beene leuied vpon the poore people by the Kings officers, and by subalterne Lords following his example, as payments for the Portes, bridges, taxes, watching and warding, and other such like impositions, leuied without any lawfull cause, vpon wayfaring men, passengers, and the inhabitants of places. There was also granted to the King a certaine Subsidie of money: At this parliament the Infant Don Henry, and his mother Donna Beatrice Pimentell were present. And then the Maister of Saint James bethinking himselfe of another pollicy, by meanes whereof hee might get the city of Segobia into his hands, hee counselled the King to remooue the assembly of the estates to Segobia, where more commodiously the affaires of the kingdom might bee managed, and Donna Ioanes marriage concluded vpon: the which assembly should bee there in safety, vnder the faith and safeguarde of the Marquis of Santillana, whom hee perswaded to demand, for the same purpose, the Keyes of the gates of Saint Iohn and Saint Martin, of the same city, of Andrew de Cabrera: but Cabrera perceiuing very well wherevnto it tended, and beeing resolu'd couragiously to oppose himselfe against the Maister of Saint James, found many probable excuses, and delayed the matter, till some other determination was taken, wherein hee was supported and fauoured by the new Archbishop of Siuill, and Cardinall of Spaine, who had secretly vnited himselfe to the Princes, and was wholly against Donna Ioane. In this manner the Maister was disappointed of his purposes to his great grieffe, who in like manner sought to surpris the castle of Toledo, and raised such a tumult there, as the King was faine to goe thither in person to appease it: but hee caused no enquire to bee made for the ring-leaders to that mischief, to punish them according to their deserts: by reason whereof euery man almost committed what mischief hee pleased, without any feare of the lawes.

Whilest the king remained at Toledo, the Marquis of Villena, sonne to the Maister of Saint James, came to doe him reuerence, whom hee receiued with extraordinary kindnesse, the Maister beeing then at Pignasiell with his wife the Dutchesse of

*Taxes leuied
by usurpation vpon the poore
people abolished.*

*The Maister of
S. James his counsellousnesse cut short.*

Impunity, the nurse of all disorders.

A of Escalona. And when the King returned to Segobia, the Marquis of Villena followed him, but he lodged without the city at the Monastery of Parrall, because of the quarrels betwixt his father and Andrew de Cabrera: the King went often to heare masse at this Monastery, and to visit the Marquis.

As these matters passed, the Princeesse D. Isabella hauing intelligence with the Inhabitants of Aranda de Duero, tooke that place which belonged to the Queene, whereat the King merueilously storming, Andrew de Cabrera put him in minde of the great tyrannies of the Maister of Saint James, and of his insatiable couetousnesse in getting of townes and cities; and how hee had continually, without any respect, hurried and tired his royall person, as hee himselfe very well knew: and therefore hee perswaded him to be pleased, that the Princeesse his sister might safely come to the castle of Segobia, where they might see one another, and conferre together, which could not choise but bee exceeding profitable for the Kingdom and for all good men. The King, who was tender hearted, and easie to bee carried away, was pleased therewith, and after that hee had heard the opinion of the Cardinall of Spaine, and of the Earle of Benaunt, hee was more desirous of it; and Donna Beatrice of Bouadilla, wife to Andrew of Cabrera, disguised in the habit of a country-man, and riding vpon an asse, went her selfe to Aranda to cause the Princeesse to come to the castle of Segobia, who beeing accompanied with the Archbishop of Toledo, and others, came thither, and entred the castle in a morning before day, where she was courteously entertained. Her coming was on the sodaine, the King being absent at that time from Segobia, hunting in the Forrest of Balsain, who was hastened by Cabrera, who did greatly suspect the stay of the Marquis of Villena at the Monastery of Parrall, fearing that hee remained there to make some practise vpon him. Now as soone as the Marquis of Villena knew that the Princeesse was come to the castle of Segobia, hee dislodged in all hast, and neuer left galloping till hee was arrived at Aillon, fearing to be taken.

The Earle of Benaunt, and Cabrera, rode forthwith to the Forrest to giue the King notice that his sister was come, who returned to Segobia, and after that hee had dined, he came to the castle to see the Princeesse, to whom hee vsed all signes of loue and friendship: and sitting downe, one neere to another, they talked a long while together, and at last the King tooke his leaue of her with many courteous ceremonies, seeming to bee highly pleased. The Maister of Saint James hauing intelligence of all these matters, thought to prouide for his owne safety whatsoeuer should happen, and therefore hee went to Cuellar to talke with D. Bertrand de la Cueva Duke of Albuquerque, whether, at his intreaty, came the new Constable Don Pedro de Velasco Earle of Haro his father in law, and there they made a league and confederacy together: afterward they began to sollicite the King, to put the Princeesse his sister forth of Segobia; wherevnto (being bewitched by the Maister) hee consented, but his councill therein was diuided. The Princeesse, the better to order her affaires, was of opinion to cause the Prince her husband to come to the castle of Segobia, thinking by his presence the King would be sooner brought to reason, and all matters concluded with more facility. The Prince beeing come, the King saw him, and receiued him with a cheerefull countenance, and they rode together on horse-backe thorough the city, to the great contentment of the people, and likewise of the Courtiers, though not of all. The great Maister Andrew de Cabrera made them a Royall banquet in the Bishops house, at which the Earle of Ribadeo, by priuledge from his ancestors, did eate at the King and the Princes table. The feast being ended, with store of musike and other delights, the King grew sicke and complained of his side, and was carried into his lodging, where after a while, hee recovered, but not without hauing certaine reliicks of rheume, fluxes of blood by vrine, with vomitings, and other such like mortall accidents: The Princes did hourly visit him, and caused others to sollicite him to declare the Princeesse his sister heire to the Kingdomes, wherevpon there passed diuerse strang and bitter words betwixt those which managed this businesse on either side: but nothing being concluded, the Princeesse resolu'd not to leaue Segobia. The Maister of Saint James was aduertized of all that passed, by the King himselfe, who went about on a night to put certaine companies of souldiars into the city, who should

*Entertainment
of King Henry and the Princeesse Isabella his sister.*

Prince Ferdinand comes to Segobia.

Priuledge of the Earles of Ribadeo.

seize

seize vpon certaine Townes, Churches and Houses, to the end to giue entrance to him A and other greater troupes, with which forces he would take the Princes, and Andrew de Cabrera prisoners. The Maister had as bad successe in this plot as in the former: for God who had predestinated the Princes Fernand and Isabella to reigne in Spaine, suffered this practise to be discouered, by meanes whereof the daunger was preuented, the Princess stood vpon her gard, and the Prince retired himself in time, and went into Arragon, whether he was called by warres and troubles which there happened.

38
Nauarre,
and
Arragon.
Death of Gaston de Foix.

Titles of D.
Leonora of Na-
uarre.

King John of Arragon, his father, was in his old age oppressed with crosses, as well in Naurre, by the seditions of his subiects, as on the frontiers of France and County of Rossillon. In Naurre, soone after that the Princess Donna Leonora failed in heren- B terprise of taking Pampelona, her husband the Earle Gaston of Foix, returning out of France into Naurre, fell sicke and died at a place called Roncevaux, in the yeere 1472. leauing heire of his Lands and Lordships of Bearn and Foix his sonnes sonne, Francis Phabus a child of the age of fife yeres, who remayning vnder the gouernment of his mother Donna Magdalen of France, and of the Princess Donna Leonora his grand-mother, was likewise, after her death, heire to the Kingdome of Naurre. Donna Leonora was then, Princess, heire of Naurre, Infanta of Arragon and Sicill, and Lieutenant General for the King her Lord and father in the said Kingdome of Naurre.

After the decease of Gaston Earle of Foix, this Princess making her abode in the C city of Tafalla, called there a Parliament, to the which the great Lords came, and especially the chiefe of the faction of Grammont and Beaumont, who inflamed with enuy were still desirous to ruine one another. It happened (as it is easie amongst those that are of troublesome and enuius dispositions) that diuerse bitter speeches passed betwixt the Earle of Lerin and the Constable of Naurre Pedro de Peralta, which caused great contention: into the which quarrell Nicholas de Echaurri, Bishop of Pampelona, did so farre enter, as the Constable thinking himselfe greatly iniured by him, threatened him that it should cost him his life.

Suspicion of love betwixt
the Princess
D. Leonora,
and the Bishop of Pampelona.

This Bishop was suspected to bee more familiar with the Princess Donna Leonora then honesty required, which caused him to be hated of diuerse men, who were ialous of their Princess honour, taking it more heinouly at his hands, who was a prelat and ought to giue good example, then if it had beene any other. The Bishop, after this threatening, being fearefull, would by no meanes come forth of his house. The Princess, either desirous to pacifie this quarrell, or else not able to endure him long out of her sight, sent diuerse messengers to him, to bring him vnto her to the Monastery of Saint Sebastian of the Order of Saint Francis at Tafalla, where shee accomplished a nine daies vowes which shee had made, for shee vsed great deuotion to those fathers, and bestowed many benefits vpon them: but the Bishop still fearing to bee met with by the way, prayed her for to excuse him. At the last shee sent vnto him one of her familiar friends called Fernand de Baquedan with an other Knight named Sir Hughe, who promised to conduct him safely thither, wherupon hee mounted on his Mule, and rode in their company towards Tafalla, where of the Constable being aduertized, hee was so farre transported with rage, as leaping on horse-backe, hee met with the Bishop on the way, and slew him hard by the gates of Tafalla, not respecting or regarding the Princess word, nor yet his Episcopall dignity, for the which inhumane fact he remained diuerse monthes together excommunicate.

The Bishop of Pampelona
saine by the Constable.

This mans death did greatly offend diuerse both in Naurre and in King John of Arragons Court, but especially the Princess. Don Alphonso Carrillo a Spaniard, was promoted to that dignity in his sted, being in number the fortieth Bishop of that Sea.

On the other side, King John being then threescore and tenne yeeres of age, was engaged in a tedious quarrell with the French, vpon this occasion: The Earledome of Rossillon was ingaged vnto King Lewis the eleuenth for the summe of three hundred thousand crownes, who kept therein Gouernors and Officers which did oppress the people, and committed diuerse insupportable outrages, where the inhabitants daily com-

A complained, requesting their King to protect them, wherewith the Frenchmen were displeased: in regard whereof King Lewis sent Ambassadors to King John, who summoned him to make payment of the three hundred thousand crownes, and to receiue his Earledome, or else to appropriate it vnto him for the same summe, or if hee were not pleased with these two motions: that then hee should giue him suerties in France, for the payment of the money at a certaine time. This did greatly trouble King John, neuertheless, with great modesty hee made answere, that hee would request King Lewis not to vrge him at so vnseasonable a time, after his long and chargeable warres made against his subiects, to repay the said summe, which as then was impossible for him to doe, much- B lesse to sell the Earledome vnto him, and wholly to alienate that which did belong to the crowne of Arragon: And as for the suerties which he demaunded; hee did not thinke it a reasonable request, nor yet becoming him, who had (God be thanked) wherewith to pay his debts in time: with this answere the Ambassadors were not satisfied, as also by reason that those of Perpignan, impatient of the French yoke, beganne manifestly to rebell against them: wherfore King Lewis sent forces into the county of Rossillon, to chastise those of Perpignan, who had constrained the Frenchmen dwelling amongst them, to retire themselves into the castle, from whence they shot into the towne with the Canon, doing great harme therevnto. King John came thither in hast to appease this fire, and endeauored by all meanes to perswade the people to obey the French, promising them shortly to deliuer them from that trouble: but they answered him boldly, that they had rather suffer death then returne to the subiection of such Lords.

During these disputations King John was on a sodaine besieged in the towne by the French army, which the Spanish Authors number to bee forty thousand, who hauing enuiored it on euery side, beganne to batter it without, and within to assault it from the castle, so as it behoued the besieged to be couragious, and valiantly to defend themselves, the Kings presence seruing them greatly to that purpose. The sege continued foure monthes: in the end, at the report of Prince Fernand comming, who vpon the newes of the French mens arriual, had leauied souldiars both in Castile, Arragon and Cattalonia, they raised their sege and retired themselves into France. King D John and the towne being deliuered from this danger, all men went out to meete the Prince, and the father and the sonne embraced one another with great ioy, who came together into Perpignan. The King did againe entreat the Inhabitants to obey the French for a short time, till he could otherwise dispose of his affaires, assuring them that he would pay the French King his money, and take them againe to himselfe. They being obstinate refused it, and requested him, to giue King Lewis other pledges, or else to suffer them to depart thence, for they would willingly giue ouer their houses, goods, yea and their owne liues, rather then to submit themselves to the vild vsage of the French: King John seeing them so resolued, left D. Lewis de Requesens for the Gouernor, and with the Prince his sonne returned to Barcelona.

E Before the Princes departure out of Castile, there arose a great quarrel betwixt the Marquis of Santillana, and the Earle of Benauent, because that the Earle (possessing the towne of Carrion, by the Kings permission, the which hee had held during the former troubles, had vildely and iniuriously intreated certaine Gentlemen which dwelt in the same towne, who were neere in blood and parentage to the Marquis, who hauing notice thereof sent vnto him, and desired him in regard that those Gentlemen did belong vnto him, that hee would for reuerence due to the boanes of his ancestors spare and respect them: the Earle made him a proude answere and said, that hee would cause his ancestors bones to be taken vp, and send them vnto him in baskets, to the end he might bestow them safer with himselfe at Guadalajara amongst the rest of his progenitors. The Marquis being iustly moued hereat, conspired with the Earle of Treuigno, and others his friends and kinsfolkes, to take that place from the Earle, who had builded a new fort there; the Earle of Treuigno hauing intelligence with the wronged Gentlemen (his lands lying neere to Carrion) he entred the towne with souldiars, and besieged the fort and soone after the Marquis arriued with troupes of horse and foote, as well of his owne tenants as those of the Constable Pedro de Velasco, the duke of Albuquerque and others, who

The Earle-
dome of Rossil-lon, original of all the wars betwixt
France and Spaine in our daies.

40
Castile.
Quarrel betwixt the houses of Medina-si, and Pimentel.

The Marquis of Santillana
surpriseth the towne of Carrion.

who supported him in this quarrell. The Earle of Benauent hauing notice of what the Marquis had done, and ment to doe, came in speedily to Valiodolit, and gathered his friends together, so as with the helpe of the Maister of Saint Iames his father in law, who in this tooke his part, hee found himselfe able to offer battaile to his aduersary; but the King being accompanied with the Cardinall of Spaine brother to the Marquis, and with the Maister, father in law to the Earle, did put himselfe betwixt them, and handled the matter in such sort by the Cardinalls meanes, as he hindred them from ioyning battaile: and it was agreed, that the towne of Carion should returne to the crowne, and the Earle should haue the towne of Magaua in recompence, which belonged to the Cardinall, who to make them friends was content to dispossesse himselfe thereof, and receiued other recompences for the same. Prince Fernand when this quarrell beganne, was ready to depart into Arragon, and had leauied certaine companies of souldiers, the which with his owne person hee offered to the Marquis who gaue him humble thanks, saying that he was strong enough to incounter a greater Lord then the Earle of Benauent: and therefore hee besought him to preferue his person in safety, that hee might in time to come reigne in Spaine, and not to hazard it now when there was no need.

The Marquis afterwards returned to Guadalajara, and went to Saint Christoferto visit the Princessse Donna Isabella, who went forth to meete him: hee offered her his seruice, and all aide and assistance for the obtaining of her right, after the King her brothers death. The Earle of Benauent returned into his owne possessions, the King with the Cardinall to Segobia, and the Maister likewise, came to Madrid, where by the Maister his Counsell it was thought fit that the Cardinall should returne to Segobia to treat with the Princessse, and the Maister brought the King to Trugillo, to cause the fort of the same city to be deliuered vnto him, which hee had so importunately a long time begged: but the Gouvernor of that place whose name was Gratian de Sese would not consent therevnto, nor obey the Kings commandment; yet neuerthelesse hee hauing bene sollicit by the Maister with promise of great recompences hee beganne to negotiate about the deliuey thereof: but the matter being delaied, the King, who since his last sickness decayed in his health, was constrained to returne to Madrid, there to take his rest: In the same place remained Donna Isabella in the keeping of the Marquis of Villena: as for the Queene, she was else where, and lead a pleasant life without any shame at all. In the meane time the Maister of Saint Iames, who remained at Santa Cruz de la Sierra, delt in such sort as captaine Gratian of Sese deliuered him the fort of Trugillo, being recompenced with the Lordship of Saint Helice de los Gallegos, where shortly after he was cruelly murthered and stoned to death by his owne tenants. About the sametime the Maister of Saint Iames D. Iohn de Pacheco fell sicke of an Impostume in his throte, which caused him to void great quantiry of putrified blood at his mouth, which in the end strangled him, he died in the threescore and fourth yeere of his age, hauing more credit and authority in Spaine, then any Lord in his time: his death was kept secret by his seruants, vntill the fort of Trugillo was yeelded vp, which was forthwith done, and then it was openly declared to all men: his body was carried to Parrall neere Segobia, a Monastery of Saint Ierosme, founded by King Henry then reigning for his place of buriall, and the Maister was buried in the chiefe chappell with great pompe and solemnity. Great was the Kings sorrow for the Maisters death, to whose sonne and heire Don Diego Lopes de Pacheco Marquis of Villena, he did not only confirme the gifts of the townes, cities and castles, granted to his father, but bestowed likewise vpon him the Maistership of Saint Iames, and sent a messenger to the Pope to obtaine the confirmation thereof, not respecting the Knights of the same Order, who began to murmur and strongly to oppose themselves against it, and they did not onely bandy themselves against the Marquis of Villena, who was not chosen according to the rules of the Order, but they likewise fell at variance amongst themselves: for D. Roderigo Manrique Earle of Paredes Commander of Segura, said, that the election of the new Maister ought to be made in the Couent of Vcles, according to the ancient custome: On the other side, D. Alphonso de

Death of D.
Iohn de Pacheco Maister
of Saint
James.

A de Cardegna great Commander of Leon, affirmed, that it stood with great reason that the election should be made in Saint Marks of Leon, in regard the deceased Maister died in the confines of Leon: wherefore each of them standing firme in their allegations, and hauing their factions and parties, those two were chosen and saluted for Maisters, in such sort as the Order of Saint Iames, had at that time three heads, like unto Carberas, the three headed dogge of Hell: The Marquis of Villena, besides the Kings fauour, did hope that the Earle of Osorno, great Commander of Castile, would take his part, and because he had the keeping of Donna Isabella, the Kings supposed daughter, it made the King more bound vnto him, and inuolued by reason thereof the King did greatly aduance him: the which gained his seruants to the Princessse Donna Isabella, who were ialous to see his sonne, who had done them so much mischief in so great credit and authority.

The Cardinall of Spaine hauing bene a certaine time at Segobia with the Princessse, came backe to Madrid to the King; with the Constable Don Pedra de Melasco, who ioynly spake to the King with great boldnesse touching the succession of the Kingdome, beseeching him to take in good part, that which they should say vnto him vpon their consciences, which was, that he ought to maintaine the Princessse Isabels right, because he knew better then any that this Donna Isabella was not his daughter: and they requested him, in the name of God, not to be the cause of so great miseries which would C oppress his Kingdome after his decesse, if hee should dissemble in that behalfe, but to speake the truth, for his peoples sake, in declaring his sister the Princessse his true and lawfull heire: wherevnto the King without any trouble made answer, that Order should be taken for them both; neuerthelesse hee delaied all hee could from meddling in that businesse. In the meane space the Marquis of Villena, who promised to him selfe the Maister-ship of Saint Iames, thinking to practise with the Knights of Castile, and chiefly with the Earle of Osorno, the great Commander, came to Villarejo, in which place the enterview of him and the Earle was agreed vpon: but the Earle feigning himselfe sicke, sent thither his wife, well accompanied with men at armes, by whom the Marquis, at his lighting from his horse was seized vpon, and carried away prisoner into the D castle of Fuente Duegna.

King Henry
takes no care for the succession of his Kingdome.

The Marquis
of Villena
taken prisoner
by his competitor.

The King being aduertized hereof, did presently take horse, notwithstanding he was very sicke, and came to the Earle of Osorno, who shewed himselfe sterne and obstinate, without respect or reuerence, wherefore the King returned highly displeased to Madrid. By the way he met with the Archbishop of Toledo at Villa Verde, who offered him his seruice, and therevpon, to please him hee beseeged out of hand the castle of Fuente Duegna, whether the King likewise came in person. The siege lasting long, Lopes Vazquez de Acugna, brother to the Archbishop, making shew of ending this strife as a friend, found meanes to bring the Countesse of Osorno to a parley, who comming abroad with a sonne of hers, was deceiued in the same manner as she had beguiled the E Marquis, and the mother and the sonne were brought prisoners into the castle of Hueta.

This pollicy did highly please the King and the Archbishop, and was the cause that the Marquis was deliuered: the Cardinall and the Constable made an end of the matter, and the prisoners were set at liberty on either side: the Archbishop of Toledo returned to Alcala, and the King, being much afflicted and weake, to Madrid, where Catarres, vomitings, and other mortall accidents brought him to his last houre. The physicians hauing told the Cardinall of Spaine, the Constable, the Marquis of Villena, the Earle of Benauent and other Lords of his Council there present, that his sickness was mortall, they caused Frier Peter Maguelo, prior of Saint Ierosme of Madrid, his confessor, to put him in minde of matters belonging to his soules health, and the peace of his Kingdome. Hee had long discourse with the prior in confession; then hee made his will, appointing the Cardinall, the Duke de Arcualo, the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Benauent for his executors; and hee commaunded that his seruants should bee paide and well recompenced with his treasure and iewells, and declared Donna Isabella to bee his lawfull daughter, and true heire to his Kingdomes; the Cccc which

The Countesse
of Osorno, and her sonne taken, the Marquis of Villena set at liberty.

which will was written by John de Oniedo, one of his secretaries: neuertheless, diuers A authors affirme, that he made no will, and say, that as he was in the agony of death, those that were present, asked him whom he would declare to be his heire, to whom hee made none other answer, but that John Gonçall his Chaplaine knew his minde therein, vnto whom he referred them, naming the foure aboue mentioned for the executors of his last will and testament, and ordained his body to bee buried at Guadalupa. Vpon this doubt, whether the King made a will or not, were afterward great troubles raised, but that which is most likely to be true, is the testimony of the Lieutenant Diego Henriquez his Cronicker and Counsellor, who saith, that he did make a will, and in deed his testament was found the yeere 1504. thirty yeeres after his death.

In this manner King Henry the fourth, ended his vnfortunate daies, and his reigne full
An. 1474. of troubles and disgrace, the yeere 1474. the one and fortieth yeere of his age, and twentith of his reigne, being in his latter daies so leane, drie and meager, as hee represented rather an Anatomy of bones, then a man, by reason whereof, his Physitions had no need to enbalme him: his body was kept for a time in the Monastery of Pas in Madrid: and afterward transported to Guadalupa and buried in the chiefe Chappell there, where three and fifty lampes of silver doe continually burne for him day and night, two and fifty whereof haue rent assigned them for the expence of the oyle.

The end of the one and twentieth Booke.

THE

THE TWO AND TWENTIETH Booke of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

- 1 Don Fernand the fifth of that name, and Donna Isabella King and Queene of Castile by her, twentieth in the Order of the kings of Castile, and forty one of Leon: their dispositions and qualities. Estate of the affaires of Castile, at their coming to the Crowne.
- 2 Warre betwixt the French and the Arragonois in the county of Rossillon.
- 3 Contention betwixt King Fernand and Queene Isabel, about the government of the Kingdom, and order taken for the same.
- 4 Disfensions in Castile: practizes of certaine Lords in Portugall to the preiudice of king Fernand and Queene Isabel.
- 5 Alphonso the fifth King of Portugall entresth Castile with an army: treaty of a marriage betwixt him and Donna Ioane, supposed daughter to the late King Henry the fourth, and progresse of the warre in the confines of Zamora, Toro, Burgos, and else-where.
- 6 Alliances betwixt France and Castile broken: the French army enters into Guisuscon, vnder the conduct of Monsieur de Albret.
- 7 Continuance of the warre betwixt Castile and Portugall: Battaille of Toro lost by the Portugalls.
- 8 The Estates at Madrigall, where Donna Isabella, daughter to King Fernand and Queene Isabel, was sworne vnto, as Princeesse and heire of the kingdomes &c.
- 9 Practizes to ioyne the Kingdom of Nauarre to that of Castile.
- 10 Bishops forbidden to enter into Biscay, by an ancient priuiledge.
- 11 Continuance of the warre betwixt France, Portugall, and Castile. Dilligence vsed for the renning of the alliance of the two Realmes of France and Castile: warre of Voies against the Marquis of Villena.
- 12 Faine practices of the king of Portugall, in France, in pursute of the warre of Castile.
- 13 The Spaniards first voiage into Guyney.
- 14 Toro surpris'd by the Spaniards, and the league of the confederate Lords dissolved.
- 15 Election of the Maisters of Saint Iames, in king Fernands power.
- 16 King Fernand and Queene Isabella at Toledo: the building of the Monastery of Saints Iohn of the kings, vnder the name of Badajos.
- 17 Donna Isabella reformeth the Estate of the Citties and Country of Andalusia.

- 18 Enter view of the Kings D. Iohn of Arragon and D. Fernand of Castile father and sonne, A at Victoria. Cutting off certaine cities of the Realme of Nauarre in fauour of Castile.
19 Nauigations and conquests of the Spaniards in the Ocean sea.
20 Institution of the ordinary inquisition of Spaine against the Iewes and Moores.
21 Troubles raised by the Archbishop of Toledo.
22 Seditions of prelates, and other petty tyrants punished.
23 Exploits of warre on the frontiers of Extremadura, and at sea betwixt the Portugals and Spaniards.
24 Treaty of peace betwixt Spaine and Portugall propounded by D. Beatrice, Dutcheffe of Visco.
25 Vnion of Castile and Arragon in D. Fernand the second, the nineteenth King of Arragon.
26 D. Leonora of Nauarre the saure and shirteenth, in the order of the Kings of Nauarre, succeedeth King Iohn her father: but shee dieth almost as soone as he; her children and posterity.
27 D. Francis Phæbus, first of that name, the foure and thirtieth King of Nauarre; seditions at his commings to the crowne by the factions of Beaumont and Grammont.
28 Estates of Castile assembled at Toledo: their decrees and ordonances.
29 Affaires of Nauarre. Estates assembled at Tudela. Feigned reconciliation of the two families of Beaumont and Grammont. Impieties, prisons, murders.
30 Execution of the decrees of the Estates of Toledo.
31 Spanish army in Sicill.
32 Rigours of the Spanish inquisition: iurisdiccions and tribunalls thereof.
33 A great quarrel betwixt D. Ramir Nùgues de Guzman, and D. Frederike Henriques, in the Court of Castile.
34 D. Iohn second of that name, and thirteenth King of Portugall.
35 Contentions betwixt the Pope, and the Kings of Castile, for the election to benefices: agreements betwixt the Pope, King Fernand and Queene Isabella.
36 King Francis Phæbus enters into Nauarre: pronounces and orders for the quiet of that Kingdome.

Order and continuance of the Kings reigning in Spaine, written in this two and twentieth Booke.

CASTILE. LEON. ARRAGON. PORTVGAL. NAVARRE.

20. D. Fernand the 5. and Queene Isabella 41. 19. the same Ferdi 2. 13. D. Leonora the 1.
34. D. Francis Phæbus 1.

D. Fernand the 5. King 20. of Castile and 41. of Leon, and Donna Isabella the 4. a woman which inherited the Kingdome of Castile, and the 5. which inherited in Leon.

A

At such time as the Princes D. Fernand, and Donna Isabella came to the crowne of Castile, and Leon, by the decease of King Henry the fourth, then did iustice and peace beginne to smile vpon Spaine. And it seemed that for the quiet, honour and exaltation of the Spanish nation, God had chosen, and defended them, in the midst of so many straits and difficulties, wherein they were oftentimes plunged, as well during the reigne of the Lord King Henry, as afterward: adorning each of them for that purpose with royall qualities, and heroike vertues, both of body and minde. For, as well Don Fernand as Queene Isabella, were of meane stature and proportion, yet well composed, faire and pleasant aspect, gracious in their speeches and of such Maiesty in the gesture and motion of their bodies, as was requisite for such great Princes: they were sober and moderate in their diet, and all other their actions, deuout and religious, as they had beene instructed, but yet for all that a little too much couetous of glory and honour which made them oftentimes stumble, and transported them out of the right way of equity, especially D. Fernand. To loue, and desire honour and glory, is in deed an affection befitting great persons, and without the which they can hardly giue themselves to any laudable exercise: but the excesse thereof, which men call ambition, is alwaies accompanied with the greatest vices: They were also maintainers of iustice in Spaine, the which they executed in such sort, as their severity did not deprive them of the praise which they deserued by their mildnesse and clemency. The plaies and pastimes which King Fernand vsed in his youth, were Cardes and Chess; but afterward he became inclined to hunting and hawking, to the exercise of armes, and he did prooue excellent in all kindes of horsemanship: he loued learned men: but his euil hap was, not to be instructed therein in his youth, which was thorough his fathers negligence, who was also himself in a manner wholly vnlearned: King Fernand did greatly delight to heare learned men talke, and to vnderstand of the laudable actions of great men, but especially of his ancestors.

Queene Isabella, for her part, tooke great pleasure in learning the Latin tongue, and profited so well therein, as in lesse then a yeere, she was able to vnderstand what her selfe did reade, or what was spoken vnto her in the same language: her continency and chastity was rare, and it did appeere in all her actions, speeches, attire and countenance. Shee kept ordinarily in her house young men and women of noble parentage, whom shee brought vp, and also Ladies of great place, who were honoured for their vertue and honesty: She would willingly haue had the King her husband like her selfe, of whom shee was extremely iealous, and if at any time shee perceiued him familiar with any of her Ladies or Gentlewomen, she presently sought meanes to quench those vnlawfull fires yet without scandall, either by marrying them, sending them away, or admonishing them, or by some other honest and discreet meanes, desiring that the Ladies of her traine should be rather vertuous then faire.

It is noted of her, that in her trauaile of child, what paine soeuer she indured, shee did neuer fetch one sigh or groane, and at that time she would cause her face to be couered. Charms and enchantments shee abhorred as became a Christian: shee did greatly loue learned men, who were of good conuersation; especially prelates of an holy and religious life, doing more good vnto such, and sooner preferring them to liuings and dignities, then others of greater houses, who made more shew of the fame and glory of their ancestors then of their owne vertues.

These Princes being thus qualified, obtained the crowne of Castile and afterwards, that of Arragon, not without paine, trauaile and great oppositions (as hereafter shall appeare) which being by them surmounted and passed ouer, they established iustice, gaue peace to the Spaniards, quenching all forepassed ciuill warres, and did zealously labour about the ordering of religion, wherein they wanted good helpe: this at the leastwise redounded to their honour, that they did roote the Moores out of Spaine, and made conquests in Affrica, they did quicken vp the Spaniards spirits, and incited them to all excellent artes and sciences, ordaining great stipends to learned men, namely

Cccc 3

benefices

Qualities of the Princes Fernand and Isabel.

benefices and Ecclesiasticall reuenues: they made diuerse good and profitable lawes, A and by their authoritie and meanes, the inhabitants of a new world came to the knowledge of those Regions, the which hath for all that in diuerse sorts redounded to the hurt of man-kinde: not by these Princes occasion, but by the couetousnesse and cruelty of those which came after them.

The Princeesse Isabell (as hath bene already said) was at Segobia, at the time her brother King Henry died, whither the Princes and Lords, which tooke his part, did come, after the Kings obsequies were finished, which lasted nine dayes, and there they saluted her as Queene of Castile and Leon, taking the oath of fealty, and dooing her homage after the accustomed manner. There were present when this was done Don Alphonso B Carillo & Acuna Archbishop of Toledo, Don Pero Gonçall of Mendoza Archbishop of Siuill, called Cardinall of Spaine, and the Bishop of Sigüenza, Don Pedro de Velsco, Constable of Castile, Don Alphonso Henriques Admirall of Castile, by the death of his father Don Frederick, newly deceased, and Vnckle by the mothers side to the new King, Don Garcy Aluarez of Toledo, Duke of Alua, Don Bertrand de la Cuena Duke of Albu- querque, Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Marquis of Santillana, Don Roderigo Alphonso Pimentel Earle of Benauent, Don Pedro Manrique Earle of Treuigno, and others, some of whom were already with the Princeesse before the Kings death.

Lords holding the party of the Princes Ferdin-
and & Isabell.

Prince Ferdinand was at the same time in Cattalonia with his father King John, who beeing aduertised of that which hapned, came speedily to Segobia, where hee in like C manner was receiued and acknowledged as King, to the great ioy and contentment, not onely of the City but of the whole kingdome, who sent their Deputies vnto him, to doe him homage and seruice, as to their lawfull Lord and King, in the right of his wife: it beeing a matter out of all question, that Donna Ioane was a bastard, borne in adultery, and not capable of any right to the Crowne. Other Lords, which were absent, did in like manner send their deputies to make their submissions, and to take the oathes due to the new King. But the Marquis of Villena, who had Donna Ioane in keeping, and Don Aluaro d'Espuniga Duke of Arcualo, Don Roderigo Tella Gyron, Maister of Calatrava, and Don John Gyron Earle of Vregna, cousins to the Marquis of Villena, D with others their confederates and adherents, were of another opinion, and did not onely fauour Donna Ioane, who called her selfe Queene of Castile, but craued many things for their owne particular profit. The Marquis would haue the Maisterchip of things for the places belonging therevnto, which Don John de Pacheco his father Saint Iames, and the places belonging therevnto, and the had enioyed: The Duke of Arcualo would haue his Dutche confirmed to him, and the Maisterchip of Alcantara for Don John d'Espuniga his sonne; other men demanded other matters. Now the first thing that was thought vpon by the King and Queenes Councell, was, about the ordering of their treasures, and administration of iustice, the managing and execution whereof, was to be committed to fit persons, and capable of such affaires: wherefore Don Gustiere de Cardega, the Queenes Chamberlaine, and Don Gonzalo Chacon, were created chiefe Treasurers, and with them Roderigo de Villao was E ioyned: then they sent Ambassadors to Lewis the eleuenth the French King, to aduer-tise him of King Henries death, of their promotion, and to request him to continue, and confirme the ancient alliance with the house of Spaine. The Ambassadors had likewise commission and instructions, for the restitution of the Earldome of Rossillon to the King of Arragon. King Lewis made a shew of sorrow for King Henries death, and seemed to reioyce that they had succeeded him: but touching the restoring of the County of Rossillon, hee would by no meanes hearken therevnto, but sent a learned Lawyer to King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell to shew his reasons for the contrary, who came to Valiodolit with the Ambassadors, his comming beeing to no purpose.

Iustice, and treasures the principall members of a state.

2
Arragon.

The city of Perpignan beeing succoured (as heretofore hath bene said) by Prince Ferdinand, was after his returne into Castile againe besieged by the French. King Lewis willing and commanding his Captaines, who had shamefully raised their siege, and were retired into the countrie and territory of Narbona, on paine of being punished as traitors to their king and country, to returne and assaile the towne, and not to stirre from thence

A thence till they had taken it, although it should cost all their liues: whervpon, they came backe, and by the helpe of the Castle, did for eight moneths space, so presse the besieged, as they brought them to the extreamest poynt of necessitie: for besides the continuall toyle, watchings, fights, and daily reparations of the breaches, whereunto they were constrained, the want of victuals was so great in the towne, as they were not onely enforced to eate dogges, cattles, and all other sorts of vncleane meates, but also the very bodies of men, friends or enemies, which were slayne in the assault, yea, mothers did deuoure their owne children: such was the obstinacie of those people, who would not yeeld to an enemy, whome they had despised and offended, and from whome they did expect no mercie: but in the end, extreame necessitie, and inexorable famine brought them to that poynt which they sought most to auoyde, and they found more mercie then they hoped for: for they were taken by composition, their offences pardoned, and the Garriso- n permitted to depart with their armour and weapons: so as King Lewis, by the taking thereof, pretended now more interest to it then before. This was the last quarrell which King John of Arragon had with the French, or any other: for the gouite, his yeares, and other discommodities of old age, perswaded him to spend the remainder of his dayes in rest and quiet in the city of Barcelona, leauing the gouernement of the Kingdome of Nauarre to his daughter, who was heire thereunto, and his other dominions to the rest of his children and Lieutenants.

Famine in Per- pignan.

Perpignan yeated to the French.

C This yeare 1457. there grew a contention betwixt King Fernand and Queene Isabella about the gouernement of Castile, disputing which of them two had most right to the succession thereof: she, as daughter to King John of Castile the second: and hee, as sonne to King John of Arragon, who descended in direct masculine line from King John the first, in the third degree. Some, who tooke the Kings part, did say, that it was a thing against nature and all good order, that the regiment of so great a State should be in a womans power, and that so many great Lords and braue Knights should be vnder the command of that sexe, weake both in body and mind, without experience, wisdom or knowledge of what was profitable or hurtfull to a kingdome, vnlesse it were by hearesay, beeing ofteneft deceyued by ignorance, and which did follow their owne passions, D and those of them that they fauoured, who for the most part were chosen amongst the worst sort of people.

3
Castile.

That all kingdomes, Iurisdicions, and well-gouerned Common-wealths, as well auncient as moderne, had wholly reiected a womans empire, and if at any time they had submitted themselues thereunto, their ruine and desolation had soone after ensued: alled-ging for example the Sallicke law of France, which is a good old custome, alwaies profitable when it was obserued, either in the totall gouernement, or parts thereof. On the contrarie part, others who held with Queene Isabella, did say, that euery one ought to be maintained in their right, and that there was nothing more consonant to nature, then that children should succeed their fathers and neereft kinsfolke: that diuers women had E bene profitable to Kingdomes and Common-wealths, as well in old times, as of fresh memorie, namely, that there were sundrie recent examples thereof in the Monarchie of Castile. And as for Queene Isabella, her constancie, iudgement, and wisdom was sufficiently knowne, and that all men were assured of her good gouernement, and that shee was not the first woman which had inherited that kingdome.

Contentions betwixt King Fer- nand and Is- abella.

This last opinion was followed and allowed of, whereat King Fernand seemed to be highly displeased: but the Queene, who did dearly loue him, and would not willingly haue him discontented, told him, that her intent was not in matters concerning the af-fares of Castile and Leon to bee more obeyed than himselfe, and requested him to consider, that whatsoever was decreed in that poynt, was for the good and benefite of their F onely daughter Donna Isabella: if so bee that they should happen to haue no issue male, who otherwise should bee wholly deprived of that honour and royall dignitie, if what hee had pourfued and alledged, should take place, by these probable reasons the king was satisfied with that which the great Lords had decreed.

Yet neuerthelesse it was concluded and determined, that all letters missiue, writtings, and other expeditions, should bee made in both their names, and vnder the scale of the two kingdomes of Castile and Arragon, and that all coyne should be likewise stam- A ped with both their armes quartered therein.
of

4
The Marquis of Villena his demands.

The Marquis of Villena moued the King and Queene, that by their fauour he might be confirmed in the Master-shippe of Saint Iames, and that a husband might be prouded for Donna Ioane, with a dowrie befitting her estate: which beeing performed, hee promised to become their faithfull and obedient seruant: hee was one of the brauest Knights, and best men at armes in all Spaine: the King and Queene sent him word, that concerning the Master-shippe, hee should haue all their fauours and assistance, as well to the Pope, as to the Knights of the same Order, notwithstanding that Don Alphonso of Cardenna, and Don Roderigo Manrique had diuided it betwixt themselves, and were in B possession thereof, and that as for Donna Ioane, they would intreate her kindly and honourably, and prouide her a husband, but in any case it behooued him to deliuer her into their hands.

A seditious Prelate.

The Marquis who had bad counsell, and was still accompanied with seditious persons, refused to deliuer the Ladie, and that which was worse, at the perswasion of Doctor Anthonio Nuñez of Cité Rodrigo, hee beganne to broach new practises with Don Alphonso King of Portugall, for to procure him to marrie Donna Ioane, promising to make him King of Castile. On the other side the Arch-bishop of Toledo, a man of a turbulent spirit, and a lover of Innouations, complayned, that the King and Queene, did not accomplish that which he had hoped for and desired, nor yet what they had prom- C ised him before their comming to the Crowne, seeking all meanes and occasions to free himselfe from their seruice. But enuie was it that vexed him, to see the Cardinall of Spaine (whome he hated) to be in so great credit and authoritie by their meanes: for these respects hee left the Court, beeing accompanied by Hernando Alarcon his familiar Councellour, the great and renowned Alchemist of those dayes.

Hernando Alarcon.

The king and Queene beeing come to Vailladolid, by the way of Medina del Campo, the mote or fort whereof they left in the keeping of the Duke of Alua, they were visited by diuers Deputies of Townes and Citties, who came to do them homage, and to offer them all dutie and obedience. In the meane time, the Marquis of Villena importuned the king of Portugall to marrie Donna Ioane, with the kingdome for her dow- D rie, or else to defend her as an Vnkle, assuring him that hee should find readie to do him seruice, himselfe, the Master of Calatraua, the Earle of Vregna, the Marquis of Cales his brother-in-law, Don Alphonso of Aguilar, the Earle of Benauent, and also the Dukes of Arcualo and Albuquerque, and the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, together with fourteene of the chiefe Citties of Castile, who wanted but a head, who at his first arri-uall would furnish him with fife thousand Lances, with other forces and meanes. And among these bargaines, hee demanded of King Don Alphonso diuers great gifts and aduancements both for himselfe and for others.

Practises of
the Marquis of Villena in Portugal.

The king of Portugall hauing consulted with his Councell about this businesse, notwithstanding that their opinions were diuers and contrarious, yet hee sent Commis- E sioners to treat of this marriage with Donna Ioane his Neece, and by Ruy de Seça his Ambassadour, hee willed king Don Fernand and Queene Isabella, to giue ouer freely vnto him the kingdomes of Castile and Leon, the which they did vnjustly possesse and inherit, in regard they did belong and appertaine to D. Ioane, whome the Ambassadour called Queene, saying, that if they had any right or interest in those Realmes, they should submit themselves to the tryall of lawe, and that hee would lay downe his armes, so as they would dispossesse themselves, and leaue the kingdomes in the hands of a third person: and if they should refuse so to do, hee then tooke God for witnesse and iudge, that he was not the author of those miseries which should ensue.

Vntill that time, king Don Alphonso had liued and reigned in great credit, magnifi- F cence, and reputation, and with good and happie successe in his affaires concerning his State: but the couetous and greedie desire hee had to raigne in Spaine, by the meanes of Donna Ioane, whome hee had oftentimes reiected and refused, as beeing assured, and confidently resolved, that shee was not lawfull daughter to the late king Henry, did cast him head-long into a gulph of miseries, by the vnluckie and intestine warres, which

A which hee tooke in hand by her meanes against the Kings Fernand and Isabella: who by the aduice of their Councell, did wisely answer his demands, shewing him, that there was no reason in that which hee went about, and that he ought to call to mind the cause why hee had refused Donna Ioane in King Henries life-time, whose daughter hee very well knew shee was not, and that therefore they did greatly meruaile at that which hee now beganne to attempt: and they did likewise protest not to bee guiltie of any miseries which follow warre, beeing determined by all meanes to defend and protect their king-domes.

The King and Queene finding hereby, that warre would follow, they did seeke by all E meanes to giue contentment to the Marquis, the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo and others, on-whome those affaires depended, but their labour was in vaine. The Arch-bishoppe shewed himselfe most obstinate, who among other furious speeches, sayd, that he would teach the King and Queene what it was to offend the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo: and no perswasions nor intreatie of Don Pedro of Acugna, Earle of Buendia his brother, nor of other graue and religious persons, could alter his determination, but hee did still with great obstinacie persist in that which Hernando Alarcon had suggested: Therefore on either side great preparations of warre were made, and the Kingdome was in such sort diuided, as diuers, who seemed to be desirous of quiet, gaue occasion to haue their loyaltie called in question: souldiers were leauied euery where, and diligent watch was kept in all C the Citties, Townes, and Castles, some taking the Kings and Queenes part, others adhering to the King of Portugall, who aduertised his Partisans, that hee would shortly come into the Countrey with a great army.

Audacious speeches of the Archb.

The King Don Fernand, and Queene Isabella diuided betwixt them the charge of the defence of the Kingdomes, so as King Fernand should haue a care of that part which was toward the North, that is to say, old Castile, Leon, and the countries next adjacent, and Queene Isabella should looke to those Regions and Prouinces which are beyond the mountaines, namely, Toledo, Andalusia, and Murcia: shee was accompanied by Don Pedro de Velaço the Constable, Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, who was created Duke of Infantazgo, and by Don Garcy Aluarez of Toledo Duke of Alua: by the way shee cau-D sed the Arch-bishoppe to bee defended once againe, who lay at Alcala, sending the Constable vnto him, who was a wise and discreet Knight, who did so well handle the matter, as the Arch-bishop had consended to the Queenes demands, had not Hernando Alar- con and his associates perswaded him to the contrarie.

Duke of Infantazgo.

King Ferdinand beeing desirous to haue the Citties of Salamanca and Zamora to take a new oath of allegiance, went thither, and would willingly haue exacted the like from them of Toro, but hee would not hazard his person in going thither, albeit that Roderigo de Villosa his chiefe Treasurer, had the Castle in his power: for not long before, his elder brother Iohn de Villosa, had made himselfe Master of the Cittie, whither he had drawne di-uers leude persons, who fearing punishment, for their many heinous crimes, did shadow E themselves vnder his protection: who for his owne part did greatly tyrannize in the city and had newly caused the Licenciado Roderigo of Valdiuiesco to be hanged forth at the windowes of his owne house, and had moreouer receyued money of the king of Portugall, at whose seruice and deuotion he kept the same place.

The Cardinall of Spaine did at the same time write to King Don Alphonso, alledging many reasons to diuert him from a warre so dangerous and vncertaine, but the King in his answer wanted no contrarie reasons. Queen Isabella in the meane time furnished Toledo with Garrisons, and placed Don Roderigo Manriques, Earle of Paredes for an assistant there, who teamed himselfe Master of Saint Iames, and hauing by her presence well ordered that Cittie, and by letters and commaundements other places of Andalusia F and Murcia, shee returned to Vailladolid. At the same time the Inhabitants of Alcarraz rebelled against the Marquis of Villena, and craued ayde of Don Roderigo Manriques against the Marquis, who intended to beseege them, the which they obayned, moreouer the King and Queene sent vnto them the Bishop of Auila, and the Lord of Coca and Alaxos, who were both of them called Alphonso de Fonseca.

The Marquis fearing least other places might reuolt, by the example of Alcarraz, folli-

The army of Portugall
trechinto
Castill.

solicited the Kings of Portugall to make haste, and hauing taken Donna Joane whom he termed Queene, out of Escalona, hee brought her by Trugillo vnto Plaisance, where as King Alfonso of Portugall arriued with an army of fise thousand horse, of all sorts, and fiftene thousand foote. Hee was attended on by the Archbishoppe of Lisbon, the Bishoppe of Eborra and Coimbra, and many other Prelats, and Church-men, who are alwaie desirous to bee where stirres and tumults are, albeit the true followers of Christ Iesus, haue peace in greatest recommendation: moreouer, there were with him, the Constable, and Marshall of Portugall, the Duke of Bragança, and his brother the Earle of Faro, the Earles of Villa-real, Penela, Marialua, and Pegnamaçor, with a great number of other Nobillity, desirous to serue their King to winne honour, and to encrease their estates by the enlargement of so great a conquest as they hoped to make vpon the Kingdomes of Castile and Leon, with the territories annexed there-vnto, the most part of whome, hauing vpon this vncertaine ground, sold or morgaged their lands and liuings.

The king of Portugall and Donna Joane betrothed each to other.

Geneologie of Portugal.

An. 1475.

The King of Portugall and Donna Joane were betrothed each to other in the City of Playfance, protesting to craue a dispensation from the Pope: there were present, Don Diego de Estuniga Duke of Auevalo, and his brother the Earle of Miranda, and King Alfonso, and Donna Joane, were at that act and ceremony called and intitled, King and Queene of Castile and Leon. King Alfonso at his departure out of Portugal, least his Sonne the Prince Don John Regent and gouernor there, who was newly made father to a Sonne by his wife Donna Leonor, who was named Alfonso being borne at Lisbon in the year 1475. King Fernand and Queene Isabell did like-wise intitle themselves Kings of Portugall and of the Algarues, and either-side did beare the armes of both the Kingdomes indifferently. The gouernors of the frontiers were commanded to invade one another, which they readily executed with great cruelty, and to the great spoyle of the realme of Portugall, the people of Castile putting all to fire and sword that were neete to their borders, especially on the coast of Badajos, where the Castle of Nodar was taken from the Portugalls, and Martin de Sepulveda, one of the foure and twenty of Siuill, was made gouernor thereof, who from thence made sharpe warre vpon the Portugois, and yet in the end hee proued scarce faithfull to his Kings. Don Alfonso of Montroy, Treasurer of the order of Alcantara, who seemed him-selfe Maister thereof, did on the other-side winne Algretta.

In like manner Don Alfonso de Cardega, great commander of Leon, who called him-selfe maister of Saint James, did with sundry troupes of horse forrage and spoile the frontiers of Portugall, and brought great booties from thence. Don Pero Aluarez de Soto mayor, shewed him-selfe on the King of Portugalls side, and tooke Tuy, calling him-selfe Vicount thereof, and tooke also Bayon of Minio: sundry other exploits of warre, with burning of houses and robberies, were committed on the frontiers by this enraged multitude.

Now the king of Portugall did perceaue that the warre was likely to last longer and bee more difficult than hee had expected, and almost despairing of ending it with honour, vnles hee had the aide and supply of some greater power, hee sought by all meanes to incite the French King, Lewis the leauenth, to breake his alliance with the Kings of Castile, and to assaile them on that side of Guipuscoa, the which hee obtayned, as hereafter shalbe mentioned. In the meane time, hauing receiued the City of Toro, by the treason of John Villoa, hee assayed the Castle, and tooke it by force, and by the like treason made him-selfe Maister of Zamora, the which was deliuered vnto him, by John de Porras one of the chiefe citizens thereof, whose Sonne in law named Alfonso de Valencia being Marshall, was Captayne of the Castle, who had rather trust to the vncertaine promises of the King of Portugall, than respecting his owne honour, relie vpon the offers of King Fernand and Queene Isabell: from Zamora King Alfonso came backe to Toro, where his new betrothed wife and her mother Queene Joane lay, who was sister to this King, who dyed about that time, and was very honorably buried at Madrid in the monastery of S. Francis.

The

Toro deliuered to the King of Portugall.

Zamora in the power of the King Portugall.

A The Kings, Fernand and Isabella, greatly apprehending the wrongs and losses which they daily sustained, they hastened on their subiects and souldiers to suppress the Portugois, or else to fight with them. Great numbers of Lords, Knights, and men at armes came to Vailliodolit, where the whole bodie of the armie, from all places of Spayne, was assembled, Andalusia excepted, in which Prouince the quarrell did still continue betwixt the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and the Marquis of Cales, and betwixt the Earle of Cabrera, and Don Alphonso of Aguilar: and there was some likelihood, that the Marquis, and Don Alphonso would take the Marquis of Villena's part their brother-in-law. The men of note that were come to Vailliodolit, were these, Don Pedro Gonçal of Mendoza, B. Cardinall of Spayne, and his breethren Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, Duke of Infantazgo, Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Earle of Tendilla, Don Lorenzo Suares, Earle of Crugna, Don Pedro de Velasco, Constable of Castile, Don Alphonso Henriques high Admirall, Don Garcy Aluarez of Toledo, Duke of Alua, Don Roderigo Alphonso Pimentel, Earle of Benauent, Don Henry Henriques, Earle of Alua de Lista, Don Pedro Manrique, Earle of Treuigno, Don John Manrique, Earle of Castagneda, and his brother Don Gabriel Manrique, Earle of Osorno, Don Pedro Aluarez of Osorio, Marquis of Astorga, D. Diego Lopes Sarmiento, Earle of Salinas, Don Pedro of Mendoza, Earle of Montagu, D. Alphonso d. Arcellan, Earle of Aguilar, Don Pedro of Acugna, Earle of Buendia, with other Lords ecclesiasticall and temporall.

C Don Bertrand de la Cueva, Duke of Albuquerque remayned neuter, knowing not how to resolute: he would willingly haue adhered to the King of Portugall, who was to bee husband to her, who was reputed to be his daughter, but he durst not: yet for all that at the last, he tooke the partie of King Fernand and Queene Isabella, by meanes whereof diuers did take their parts, who before that time were doubtful what to do: Garcy Lopes of Padilla Treasurer of Alcantara, who was the last Master of that Order, and Don Diego of Castile, with diuers Knights and Commanders came to the Kings and Queenes seruice. The armie being mustred, there were of the Prouinces of Guipuscoa, Biscay, Alaua, Gallicia, and the Asturia's, thirty thousand foote, foure thousand men at armes, and eight hundred Genets or light horse. King Fernand with this mighty armie marched along the riuer of Duero against the cittie of Toro, where the King of Portugall, with his betrothed bride, did remayne: by the way the Biscans and Guipuscoans did take by force a place called las Hazegnas de los Hierros, and some of the Inhabitants thereof in regard of the rebellion, were hanged.

The King of Portugall who was inferiour in forces, would not come to field, but kept himselfe within Toro, before which cittie King Fernand stood with his armie embattelled about fise howers, and at the last he sent Don Gomez Manrique, to tell King Alphonso, that he should do well to giue ouer the title of king of Castile, and to returne into his owne kingdom, and that if his future wife did lay any claime to the Realme of Castile, that the same might be referred to the iudgement of the Sea of Rome, or if he had rather to trie the matter by armes, that then he should come soorth to fight, or else to accept the single combat betwixt them two, to saue that effusion of innocent blood: King Alphonso made answer to euery poynt with great modesty, but to that of Duell or single fight, hee required, that Isabella, and Donna Joane, (who pretended each of them to be Queene of Castile) should be kept as hostages, to the end that hee which should prouoe conqueror, might enioy his prize, to wit, the kingdomes of Castile and Leon: thereupon were diuers messages and answers sent too and fro, but to no purpose: so as King Don Fernand hauing tarried certaine dayes about Toro, his army beginning to want victuals, and other necessaries, hee was aduised to retire from thence, notwithstanding that hee was assured, that the Portugals were in the selfe same estate. Howsoeuer, the armie was brought backe, to the great discontent of the souldiers, who were extremely sorrowfull, that so great a force had bene so vnprofitably and idly employed: and they did much murmure against the great Lords, whome the king had much ado to qualifie and appease.

Being returned to Medina del Campo, Queene Isabella came thither from Tordeisillas: then the king had great need of money, by reason that his treasures were drawne dry,

Toro besieged
by King Fernand.

Jewels and plate taken from the church
by the Kings of Castile.

Marquisate of Villena re-united
to the Crown.

drie, hauing spent all that which King Henry had left in the Castle of Segobia, whereof Andrew de Cabrera was keeper, who was newly made Marquis of Moya, in recompence of his good seruice: the meanes to get money, and least hurtfull to the people, who were ouer-much spoiled and consumed, was to take the Jewels and plate of the Church, whereunto the Arch-bishoppes and Bishoppes did consent, in regard of the Kings neede. The Earle of Paredes, and other the Kings seruants did assaile Ciudad Real, which the Master of Calatrava, with other places, had vsurped: Moreover, the Earle being come to Vcles, made such sharpe warre vpon the Marquis of Villena, as hee hindered both of them from going to the ayde of the King of Portugall, taking diuers commodious places belonging to the Marquisate of Villena, thereby to frustrate the Marquis of the revenues thereof, which he receyued of the tenants with a better will then they payed it to the Marquis, in regard they did extremely hate the Portugals. Hauing rebelled, they did fauour the Earle in the taking of the Castle of Villena, who was likewise ayded therein by the Arragonois, and by that meanes the Marquisate was re-united to the Crowne, with promise, neuer more to alienate it. The Captaine of Reuegna deliuered vppon the fort to King Fernand, which held for the Marquis, being aduertized that the people were in armes readie to assaile it.

In these aduersities the Marquis alwaies shewed an incredible constancie, and sayd, that hee did not respect the losse of a little, seeing that hee hoped to haue the command of Toledo, Burgos, Cordoua, and Seuille; and hee did place good Garrisons in those townes and fortresses which were left. The Master of Calatrava, the Earle of Vregna, and the Duke of Arcualo were almost in the like distresse, for they were earnestly solicited by the King of Portugall, to accomplish what they had promised him, the which they could not performe, and they excused themselves, in regard they were of necessitie to defend the townes and forts which had taken his part, acquainting him with the toyle and trauaile which they did endure and vndergo, in going about to make him the king of Castile.

Queene Isabella magna animi.

The King of Portugall being in want and greatly troubled in his mind, was at the same time founded by letters from the Cardinall of Spayne, vpon what conditions he would end that warre, who made answer, that if they would giue ouer to him Toro, Zamora, with the Kingdome of Galicia, and readie money to pay his armie, hee would then with draw his forces, and pretend no more title: But Queene Isabella hauing notice thereof, sayd, that shee would neuer suffer the Kingdome which was left by her predecessors to bee dismembred of one poore Towne or Village: yet notwithstanding if peace might bee bought with money, shee would consent, that the King of Portugall should receiue such a summe as should be agreed vpon, and thought fit, by any reasonable and indifferent Iudges.

The Castle of Burgos was at the same time in the keeping of Don Iohn of Estuniga, who held it for his Vncle the Duke of Arcualo, one of the King of Portugals faction, who did great hurt to the townes-men and inhabitants, assailing them on the sudden, spoiling, killing, and taking all those prisoners whome hee could lay hands on: Don Lewis of Acugna, Bishoppe of the same Citie, committed the like disorders in the Countrey round about: Wherefore the King and Queene sent thither to the ayde of the oppressed, Don Alphonso of Arellan Earle of Aguilar, Don Pedro Maurique, Don Sancho de Rojas, and Don Stephano of Villacreces, who were followed soone after by the King, with great troupes of Biscains, Guipuscoans, Alauois, Asturians, and others. There came vnto him also his bastard-brother Don Alphonso of Arragon, Duke of Villa-hermosa: by these forces the castle was much distressed, and a Church neere to the same was taken, which was called Saint Mary the white, within the which the beseeaged kept their munition, wherein the king placed a companie of souldiers, whose Captain was Don Iohn of Gamboa, borne at Motrico in the Prouince of Guipuscoa, who wrote to the King of Portugall sent to demaund ayde of the Duke of Arcualo, who wrote to the King of Portugall by Iohn de Sarmiento, who was one of those who had bene driuen out of the Church of Saint Mary the White, aduertizing him, that if that Castle, which was the fort of the

chiefe

A Citie of the Kingdome were lost, he should neuer hope to raigne in Castile, therefore it behooued him to come and succour it: when the king of Portugall vnderstood thus much, he gathered together as great forces as he could conueniently, and marched towards Arcualo, where the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena did meete him with troupes of chosen souldiers, who againe did sweare vnto him, not to acknowledge any other King in Castile but himselfe. Queene Isabella was at the same time newly come to Vailladolid out of Leon, where shee had displaced the Captaine of the towers of the same citie, whome shee knew to haue intelligence with the Portugois, and placed an other in his roome; and hearing of King Alphonso's comming to Arcualo, and that the aboue-named Lords were ioyned with him, shee speedily sent Don Iohn de Silva, Earle of Cisfuentes to Olmedo, and Don Gutierre of Cardegna to Medina del Campo, to the end to hinder the enemies from enterprising vpon those places, and to wearie them.

The Earle of Cisfuentes, who was young, hotte, and desirous to winne honour, would (contrarie to the aduice of the elder, and more experienced Capitaines) needes runne to Arcualo, and there to lay an ambush for the enemy, but hee was discouered, and the enemy came forth vpon him with greater forces, so as hee was constrained with great dishonour to returne backe to Olmedo, being defeated and ashamed. After this victory the King of Portugall, the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, the Marquis of Villena and other Lords marched towards Pegnasil, a towne belonging to the Earle of Vregna, where they remayned, expecting some other companies which were to be ioyned to their army.

The Earle of Cisfuentes defeated by the Arragonois.

Vpon this occasion Queene Isabella came to Palenca, with the Cardinall of Spaine, the Admirall, the Earle of Benauent, and others, from whence shee sent the Earle of Benauent with certaine men at armes, who lodged in Balranas, a towne neere to Pegnasil, and from thence made continuall roades, cutting off those which carried victuals to the Portugals campe, who were greatly distressed thereby, wherefore the King of Portugall sent to assaile the same place, where the Portugals fought so furiously, as notwithstanding the great resistance which the Earle and his souldiers made, they entred and tooke it, and brought away the Earle of Benauent prisoner, being wounded, to the campe lying at Pegnasil, with diuers other braue Knights.

The Earle of Benauent taken prisoner.

These two ouerthrowes of the Earles of Cisfuentes and Benauent, did greatly trouble the Queen, who was aduised for the best to go to Burgos to the king her husband, where the castle still held out, and made wonderfull resistance. The king of Portugall in the meane time made no hast to succour it: for he was inferiour in forces to the armie of the Kings his aduersaries, and withall hee greatly feared, that the citie of Zamora stood not firme for his seruice, therefore hee chose the safest way, which was to returne to Arcualo, with purpose to put greater garrisons into Zamora and Toro. Donna Leonora Pimentel/Duchesse of Arcualo, who was sister to the Earle of Benauent, and a Ladie of great worth, obtrayned her brothers libertie of King Alphonso, agreeing vpon his rancome, and promised that he should no more serue the King and Queene in those warres: for assurance whereof, hee gaue the townes of Portillo, Villalua and Majorga in pawne: and albeit the king promised great honours and rewards to the Earle of Benauent, to the end to draw him to his seruice, yet he would neuer consent thereto, but in regard of this mishap, he remayned as neuter.

The yeare one thousand, foure hundred, seuentie fixe, those of Ocagna being kept short by the Garrisons of the Marquis of Villena, and tyred with their oppressions, returned to the seruice of the King and Queene, being ayded and fauoured by the Earle of Cisfuentes, and by Don Iohn de Ribera, who came thither with great troupes of souldiers: Queene Isabella gaue the gouernement of that place to the Earle of Paredes, enemy and competitor to the Marquis, who being by little and little dispossessed of what hee held, did greatly complaine thereof to the king of Portugall, saying, that he had sustained those losses by being in his seruice, and he did request him to passe on with his forces to Madrid, assuring him that by the assistance of the Archb. of Toledo, the Master of Calatrava, and with the forces of the same kingdome of Toledo, which took his part, not only in

D d d d

An. 1476.

in a short time to recouer what was taken from him, but that his affaires would prosper A the better.

The King of Portugall hauing had therevpon the aduise of the Lords, and Captaines, of his army, was aduised not to leaue the hilly country on that side of Burgos: for who- soeuer was possessed thereof, might boldly terme himselfe Maister of Castill and Leon: and withall, if he should seeme to march towards Toledo, the enemy would say, that he did run away from them: wherefore he enterrayned the Marquis, with promise to aide him in all he could, and moreouer to recompence him with great gifts, and honours, provided that hee would take some good order for his affaires, and in some sort prouide for the present danger.

The Marquis of Villena beginneeth to incline to King Ferdinand & Queene Isabel's
side.

From that time, the Marquis, who felt his losses, and saw no hope of rising againe, began to thinke vpon fit meanes to returne to the King and Queenes seruice: At the same time, the City of Zamora did seeke some fit occasion to rebell against the King of Portugall, whereof hee stood in some doubt, and vsed such diligence, for the discouery of their practizes, as hee had notice of a plot, which they had layd, for the which he caused foure of the chiefest Citizens to be put to death. Yet notwithstanding, Francis de valdez, Captaine of the bridge of Zamora, being solicited by Queene Izabell, did promise to deliuer that forte into her hand, and withall to giue her entry into the City, but that it behoued King Ferdinand to bee present in person at soe great an enterprife.

The King was not slacke at such an occasion, but leauing his brother Don Alphonso of Arragon, and the Constable at the siege of the Castle of Burgos, hee came thither in a disguised habit, being accompanied with three horse-men, by the way of Valiodolit, causing it to be giuen out, that he was sicke, and kept his chamber. Although this enterprife seemed to be kept close, yet the King of Portugall had notice thereof, and did meane to put a new supply, of such as he durst trust, into the bridge, vnder colour of sending certaine soldiers forth in the night a boot haling: but the Captaine would not suffer them to passe, bidding them come in the day time, saying that the night is ever dangerous to strong places, and passages of importance, as this was. The day following the King attempted the like, and finding the like resistance, would by force haue taken the passage, but those of the garde of the bridge did valiantly defend it, and did kill and hurt diuers Portugois: wherefore, King Alphonso, by the Arch Bishoppe of Toledoes counsell, withdrew his forces from the fight, and hee with Donna Ioane, his bethrothed wife, left the City about midnight, suspecting some treason, in regard that the bridge alone made such resistance, he being there in person.

The King of Portugall seer-eth the city of Zamora.

The inhabitants at the same instant brought in Don Aluaro de Mendoza by an other gate, who tooke and spoiled the Portugois, which were left, excepting a few, who saved them selues in the Cathedrall Church, who on the morrow after by breake of day yeel- ded them selues, King Ferdinand, the Admirall, the Duke of Alua, and other Lords, being there arriued. These soldiers were sent away without paying any ranfome, and carried their baggage away with them to Toro, where their King remayned, who to encourage his people, sayd, that the victory of a warre did not consist in the gayne, or losse of a few townes, or Citties, but in the issue of a battaill, the which alone would decide the quarrell, about the succession of Castile and Leon: for the which purpose hee did write to Prince Iohn his Sonne, to make as great a leuy of soldiers in his Kingdome as possibly he could, and with all speed to bring them to his aide. King Ferdinand being maister of Zamora, beganne to better the Castle, and caused the traytors to bee arraigned, and condemned, confiscating the goods of Iohn de Porras, and others.

Whilest these matters were handled at Zamora, Don Alphonso of Arragon, Duke of Villahermosa, and the other Captaynes who beseege the Castle of Burgos, did continually batter it, and gaue it many dangerous and rude assaults, but they that were within it wanted no courage to defend them selues. And as the sentinells and those of the garde, were reuiling one another, an Alcayde, or Sheriffe of Burgos, did

A called Alphonso de las Cuevas, beganne to talke to those of the Castle, and vsed such per- swasiue reasons and arguments, as they were resolu'd to hearken to some composition, especially when they did see a great quarter of their wall beaten downe, by meanes whereof they lay open to their enemies assaults: therefore being solicited, they did ca- pitulate about the yeelding of the castle, vpon condition, that all faults past should be forgiven, the which was granted by the Queene, who for that regard came from Val- liodolit to Burgos, and did receiue the Castle her owne selfe, whereof shee made Diego de Ribera Gouvernour, who had bene tutor and bringer vpe of her brother the Prince Don Alphonso: and hauing appoynted that which was requisite for the peace and quiet of the Cittie, shee returned to Vailliodolit, and from thence went to Tordesillas, to the end to be neerer to the enemy, the better to haue an eye to his enterprises and proce- dings.

The Castle of Burgos yeelded.

Thither Don Pedro de Estuniga, eldest sonne to the Duke of Arcualo, did come to the Queene, whose part hee had still taken, and had shewed himselfe faithfull vnto her, in regard whereof he was vnkindly vsed by his father, and by Donna Leonora Pimentel his mother-in-law. He besought the Queene to receiue the Duke his father into grace and fauour, promising to put all that hee did possesse into her hands, making an apologie, and excusing the faults which hee had committed by reason of his decrepit age, being wholly possessed and ruled by his second wife. It did greatly displease the Queene to par- don him, who had shewed himselfe so mortall and hatefull an enemy to the King her husband, neuertheless, for the sonnes sake shee did pardon the father, and the whole fa- mily. The title of the Dutchie was transposed from Arcualo to the Citie of Plaisance, and euer afterward the Lords of the house of Estuniga became affectionate seruants to the King and Queene.

The warres continuing after this sort in Castile, the French King inclining to the de- maunds and perswasions of the King of Portugall, and bearing no great good will to the house of Arragon euer since the warre of Perpignan, sent a great armie into the Pro- vince of Guipuscoa, vnder the conduct and commaund of Aman Lord of Abrit or Al- bret, whose posteritic hath reigned in Nauarre, as shall hereafter be declared. Diuers D Gentlemen and braue souldiers of the countie of Guipuscoa, vpon the report of the coming of this armie, did shutte themselues vp in Fontaraby, others went to Iruin, by which place the French-men were of necessitie to passe, who did burne Iruin, and slue cer- taine men: there they went vp and downe for the space of fixe weekes spoyling the coun- trie, not once attempting or offering to beseege Fontarabic, which was their chiefe desaigne.

6 Alliance betwixt France
and Castile.

In the meane time Iohn Lopes de Lascano, and Sancho del campo, entred the towne, being sent from the Court with about fiftie horse, at whose coming, the souldiers which were within the towne, made a salley, and came forth vnto the very limitres of Iruin, where they found about a thousand French-foote of the fore-ward of their armie with E their Captaine Parguet of Bayonne, who being assayled and set vpon on the sodaine, through want of good and prouident watch, and hauing no faithfull discoverers, were easily ouerthrowne, and put to a disordered flight: some of them, in this confusion, thin- king to saue themselues in a Tower of a mannor-houfe belonging to those of Vrdaniuia, they were there beseege'd, and burnt with Parguet their Captaine, the Master of the same house being the first man that set fire thereunto. The poore distressed souldiers, to auoyde and escape the implacable torments of the mercilesse fire, leaped out of the to- wer windowes in most desperate manner, and were with scoffes and mockes receiued vpon the enemies pikes. The Spanish Authours say, that three hundred were there slayne and pittifully massacred, besides diuers others that were captiuated and taken pri- soners.

Parguet a French captaine defeated.

Soone after Don Diego Lopes de Sarmiento, Earle of Salinas, Captaine generall for the King and Queene, came into the Prouince with certaine troupes of horse, bring- ing letters to the worthie persons and chiefe Magistrates of Queene Izabella's coun- try, who, with perswasive admonitions exhorted the Guipuscoans, to stand and continue faith-

D d d d 2

faithfull to their Princes, for which they were renowned about all other Prouinces of A Spaine.

An. 1476.

Now vpon the eighth day of Aprill this yeare one thousand, foure hundred, seuentie fixe, being Saint Denis day, the towne of Fontarabie was beseegeed by the French, where no matter of woorth was performed, saving some few light skirmishes with losse of men on either side, for the space of fve dayes onely, whilest the seege continued: for they easily found, that in regard of the strength of the place, it was to no purpose for them to carrie there: yet the Lord of Albret did not intend to depart out of the cuntry, without leaving some worthie markes behind him, and perceyuing his owne armie to be mighty, and that the King and Queene of Castile, by reason of their warres with the King of Portugal, and their owne subiects, could not readily send an armie against him, hee therefore determined to forrage and spoyle the cuntry with fire and sword: then hee entred into the valley of Ojarrun, two leagues from Fontarabie, where hee burned the parish Church, with fiftie men, who had with-drawne themselves into the steeple: they likewise burned and destroyed diuers houses in the same valley, and notwithstanding that the Earle of Salinas endeauoured to defend the towne of Renteria, yet the French-men tooke and burned it, and slue fiftene men there, taking the Lord of Lescan his son, and Martin Peres of Alcega prisoners.

The French do wast Guipuzcoa.

The Earle of Salinas being not strong enough to hinder those ruines and spoiles, and having regard to his owne safetie, and being to looke to many other places, retired himselfe in safetie to Saint Sebastians. The French-men returned the second time to the seege of Fontarabie, where they beganne a sharpe batterie. In the same citie re-mayned at that time Don John of Gamboa with a thousand souldiers, who was a valiant man, and borne in the Citie of Motrico in the same Prouince, vpon whome King John of Arragon had bestowed many fauours in recompence of his many yeares faithfull seruice, and had also ennobled him in Arragon, and made him of his priue Councell, permitting him to beare in a quarter of his owne shield of Armes, those of the kingdome of Arragon and Sicill, for a noate or marke of his valour and prowess, and besides that, had married him to Donna Leonora of Castro, giuing him meanes to maintain his estate honorably, whereunto, his sonne King Fernand, and Queene Izabella haue added more honours, making him of their priue Councell, and great Master of their horse.

Fontaraby besieged.

The besiegers as well as they that were besieged, did not spare the Cannon, which wrought no other effect, but the death of some sixtie persons in the towne, and a Captaine named Fortunato Sarauz, and the number of the assaillants which were slayne with the Artillerie, was vncertaine: and this second seege lasted little longer then the former, for the succours by sea which came to the towne from Saint Sebastians, being discovered, the French-men rayfed their seege, and hauing no hope at all to take it, they had begunne to make a great trench round about the Citie, which came to none effect.

The seege of Fontaraby rayfed.

In Castile King Fernand besieged the Castle of Zamora (as hath beene before mentioned) and not being able, either by prayers, promises, or threatnings to bring the besieged to yeeld, he commaunded certaine peeces of batterie to bee brought to enforce them thereunto: Whereof the King of Portugall hauing notice, and knowing that King Fernand had not forces sufficient to maintain the seege of Zamora, and to defend and guard his Artillerie, if it were assayled, hee forth-with made an enterprise vpon it, hoping by that meanes, either to take his peeces of batterie by force of armes, or else, if the king his aduersarie should come to defend them, that then the besieged should haue some time to ease and refresh themselves. Being come forth to Toro with all his forces for the same intent, hee had intelligence that the Artillerie was safely arriued at the Campe: Being disappointed of his purpose, he shewed himselfe in order of battaile readie to fight, and hee sent to desire King Fernand, who, if hee should refuse the fight, was aduised by him to returne into Arragon with his wife.

The

A The Castillian knights, and men at Armes, which were in the king Don Fernands armie, were exceeding glad of this challenge, desiring nothing more than to come to blowes: the King likewise was of the same opinion, but the Earle of Alua de Lixa was of another mind, and perswaded the contrarie, with diuers forcible reasons: Wherevpon answer was made to the King of Portugall, that if hee had a desire to fight, hee might come and rayse the seege before the castle of Zamora, which the King meant not to giue ouer, till hee had taken it, and chastised the Rebelles. With this answer the King of Portugall returned to Toro, where hee expected the succour which his sonne Prince John was bringing to him.

B In the meane time, Don Aluaro of Mendoza hauing met with the Earle of Pennamagor, both of them leading certaine bands of souldiers, did charge one another, in such sort, as the Portugals were defeated and put to flight, with great effusion of their blood, the Earle being taken prisoner. Not long after, the Cardinall of Spaine came to King Fernands campe, bringing with him great supplies from the Queene his wife, to the end he might be able to giue the King of Portugall battaile, without discontinuing his seege at the Castle of Zamora, as also to animate and encourage the Kings souldiers who had heard the challenge. There came likewise from Gallicia, the troupes of horse and foote, which the Earle of Lemos, and Don Pero Aluares Osorio, Lord of Cabrera did send to the King and Queene, with those of the Earle of Montroy, all of them being brauely armed, and choice souldiers.

The Portugals defeated.

King Fernands armie being strengthened by this supply, hee left sufficient forces before the Castle of Zamora, and marched towards Toro, where staying within halfe a mile of the Citie, in order readie to fight, hee sent to the King of Portugall, who lay in the Towne, to present him battaile, offering him the like brauado, which not long before he had receyued from him at Zamora: but his expected forces out of Portugall being not yet arriued, hee refused it, and there was nothing performed, but a few light skirmishes, so as King Fernand brought backe his armie to Zamora. Not long after, the Prince Don John arriued at Toro, bringing with him twenty thousand fighting men, to the exceeding great ioy of the king his father, who did hide from him the Duke of Arcualo's reuolt, and did write to the Duke, and aduertised him of the mighty ayde, which the Prince his sonne had brought him, exhorting him to come in person to the campe, and to bring his forces with him, or else to send them thither with all speede. The Duke made him a free and plaine answer what hee meant to doe, and complained of sundrie of the kings negligences, by meanes whereof hee had lost the castle of Burgos, and let slippe diuers fit occasions. King Alphonso did in like manner sollicite the Marquis of Villena and others, who excused themselves, in regard they were to resist their owne and his enemies: so as there remayned no more Lords of Spayne in his army, but the Archbishop of Toledo onely.

The King of Portugal forsaken.

These Portugall forces being ioyned together, made vp the masse of a great armie: the king left the duke of Guimaranes within Toro, and marched towards Zamora, on the other side opposite to the Castle, the riuer being betwixt them, and hauing planted his campe round about the bridge, hee did thereby hinder all men from comming forth of the citie on that side. The placing of the campe seemed strange to King Fernand, for the Portugals could no way from thence helpe those of the Castle, nor yet hinder his armie, much lesse could they come to battaile: and it seemed, that hee did rather seeke vainly to be accounted bold and valiant by lodging so neere his enemy, than to perform any worthie act, as it appeared by that which hee did write to the French king, the Pope, and to diuers other Princes, as also by that which hee published throughout all Spaine. Queene Izabella sent the Duke of Villa-hermosa her brother-in-law, and the Constable with two thousand horse to Fuente del Sabuco, and to Alahayos, to keepe and cutte off the enemies campe from victualles, and to distress it. In the meane time there wanted no mediators for peace betwixt both the kings, but it was in vaine, and to no purpose.

The King of Portugal was vanquished.

The Portugall armie hauing for the space of fiftene dayes beene abroade in the fields in the dead time of cold winter, the king Alphonso determined to returne to Toro. And to the

to the end he might do it safely, he sent Don Aluaro of Portugall, sonne to the Duke of A Bragança, and the Licentiate Anthony Nuges of Cité Roderigo to the King of Castile, to treat of a peace vpon certaine conditions, which beeing refused them, they had in charge to demaund a truce for a few dayes, thereby to bring matters to a finall agreement.

King Alphonso
of Portugal
dislodged from before Zamora

This was but a pollicie to auoyd battaile, and to be able to bring his armie in safetie backe to Toro: There were suadrie opinions thereuppon, and at the last, they were answered, that the truce which should be graunted, should bee but short, and if there were nothing concluded betwixt the two Kings, hee of Portugall might bee well assured not to bee suffered to depart thence with so great ease, as hee imagined. King Alphonso hauing vnderstood this answer, beganne to dislodge secretly the same night: the next day, the scouters seeing the place emptie, aduertized the King, that the enemy was dislodged, who forthwith commaunded the Captaines to leade the armie forth into the field, and to follow them: the presse was so great at the passage of the bridge, and at the going ouer the riuer of Duero, by boate and other waies, as the soldiers could conueniently, as a good part of the day was spent before the armie could passe the riuer, and much time was afterward lost in ranging the battaile into wings and squadrons, which was ordered after this manner:

Battel betwixt the Spaniards and Portugalls.

They made a squadron of the kings Guard, and of the troupes of horse of Lemos and Salamanca, of the Townes of Olmedo, Valodolir, Medina del Campo, with others, which was commaunded by the great Master Don Henry Henriques. On the right hand of this squadron were sixe battaillions, the first was conducted by Don Aluaro of Mendoza, who a little before that time was created Earle of Castro Xeris, and Don Gutierre of Cardenas, and Rodrigo of Villos: the second, by the two Alphonso's of Fonseca, the one Bishoppe of Auila, and the other Lord of Coca and Alaexos: the third, by Pedro de Guzman, the fourth, by Bernard Franc, the fifth, by Don Pedro de Velasco, and the sixt by Vasco de Binar, brother to the Bishoppe of Salamanca. On the left hand, the Cardinale of Spaine ledde the first battalion, the second, the Duke of Alua, the third, the Earle of Alua de Lista, the fourth, Don Garcia Osorio, who brought thither the troupes of the Marquis of Astorga his Nephew: betwixt these two, the footemen were placed, and in this manner the army marched on vnto the hilles which are betwixt Zamora and Toro, and there it stayed. It was thought that the Portugalls making such hast, would bee at Toro before the Spanish armie should passe these hilles: and a Councell beeing called to determine what was best to be done, the most part were of opinion to turne backe againe, and to content themselues to haue gained the honour, that the enemies had fled from them: but the Cardinall of Spayne beeing a wise man, and of an exceeding great spirit, thinking that they did iudge amisse of the King of Portugals desseignes, intreated the king to suffer him to goe to the toppe of those hilles with certaine troupes of horse, for discouerie, who hauing obayned leaue, and beeing gotten vp to a very high place, hee espyed the armie of Portugall in order of battaile, without any trouble or confusion at all. Returning then to the king, he told him, that the enemies meant nothing lesse then to flee, and that hee had seene them standing in good and martiall order, wayting if any would follow to fight with them: Whereuppon, euery man beeing placed and ranked in his order and squadron, the armie, with great courage and resolution, marched on.

The king of Portugall descrying the Spaniards marching towards them, caused his people forthwith to make a stand, and with great magnanimitie to turne their faces towards them, resolving rather to dye fighting, then to retire with shame. Hee was at the same time stronger in horse-men than king Ferdinand: wherefore after hee had diuided his squadrons, betwixt himselfe, his sonne the Prince, the Bishoppe of Ebor, the Earles of Bizaro, Villa-reall, and other Captaines, and encouraged the Knights, and souldiers with a large and well-composed speech, putting them in mind of the victorie which King John the first wonne from the Spaniards at Aljubarotta, he caused them to march forward to the fight.

The chiefe strength and flower of the Portugall Caualerie lay in the Squadron of Prince

A Prince John, against whom King Fernand caused the sixth battaillion on his right hand to aduance themselues altogether, albeit that D. Alphonso de Fonseca first of all, and Don Aluaro de Mendoça Earle of Castro after him, had requested the honour to bee the first that might charge them.

The Portugals which were in that Squadron ioyned with those whom the Bishop of E-bora conducted, made so braue a resistance, as the Spaniards turned their backs: so as at this first encounter, the victory seemed to be on the King of Portugals side, the Spaniards being sore hurt by the Artillery, and by the Crosse-bowes of the Portugall footemen. These being retired, the other squadrons gaue in vpon the residew of the Portugall army with better successe. Norwithstanding that the valor of either side made the fight doubtfull for three houres space. In the end, the Portugalls not being able to hold out, beganne to giue backe, and were disordred and put to flight, taking the high-way towards Toro as fast as they could gallop, but being pursued, there was a great slaughter of them, and there died more of them drowned in the riuer, who thought to haue escaped by swimming, then were slaine by the enemies hands. King Alphonso being not succoured by his sonne, and perceiving that resistance, without order, was to no purpose, did retire himselfe to Castro Nugno, where hee was receiued by the Gouvernor of the same place whose name was Abendagno de Villa-reall in Alaua, hauing once lost his royall standard (which neuertheless was recovered againe) thorough the carelesnesse of Don Pedro de Velasco, and Pedro Vaca, who for want of a good guard suffred the Portugals to take it from them: he which did beare it was taken, and beeing stripped out of his armor, the King and Queene caused it to be hanged vp in the Cathedrall Church of Toledo, in the Chappell of the last Kings. On King Fernands side likewise died a great number of souldiers, though vncertaine; and the Earle of Alua de Lista pursuing his enemies ouer eagerly, and beeing not well followed and seconded by his people, was taken at the bridge of Toro.

The Prince of Portugall made his retreat towards night vpon a little hill, and as well as hee could did gather together his disbanded troupes, and then retired towards Toro: and if the Spanish captaines had gathered and kept all their forces together they might as easily haue defeated all as some: but diuerse of them were busied in stripping the dead bodies, and others in pursuing the runne-awaies, who beeing come to the gates of Toro, the Earle of Guimaranes, who was left there for the guard of the City, fearing that the Spaniards who pursued them, would haue entred pel met with them, would not open the gates for no intreaty of the Archbishop of Toledo; who was the only Spanish Lord that was in that battaile, nor yet for the cries & lamentations which the poore hurt souldiers did make, vntill such time as the Prince Don John arrived with his troupes, and then they were all let into the City: but they were meruelously troubled, when they perceived that the King was missing, but the Earle of Guimaranes beganne to make a most pittifull lamentation, shedding abundance of teares, and tare the haire from his head and beard; and beleeuing for a certaine that hee was either slaine or taken, hee did greatly reproach and raile vpon the Portugalls, saying, that they were traitors to their King, and that they had basely and treacherously forsaken him.

But the Kings comming soone after, and newes from him by letters to the Prince his sonne in the meane time, did greatly comfort this Earle and all the rest of the army. It is reported that after the losse of the battaile, the King beeing at Castro Nugno, fell a sleepe as hee sat at meate, where at the Gouvernor did greatly wonder, who in regarde thereof reputed him a carelesse man, and said, that honourable Knights and souldiers did greatly wronge themselues in aduenturing their liues for such a King, and yet this gouernour did still shew himselfe faithfull and constant in his seruice.

Queene Isabell in the meane time did remayne at Tordillas, who beeing aduertified by the King her husband of his victory, shee caused generall proecessions to bee made, giuing thanks to God, after the accustomed manner, and shee herselfe went bare foote to the Abby of Saint Paule, without the towne, and as well there as in other Citties belonging

The King of Portugall doth little appe-hend the losse
of the battaile.

The Castle of Zamora, yeelded to King Ferdinands liberality.

longing to the Queene, great signes of ioy were made, The siege of the Castle of Zamora did still continew after that without any empiediment, till Alphonso de Valence the Captaine thereof, who was sonne in law to Iohn de Porras, obtained his pardon by the intercession of the Cardinall of Spaine his kinsman, and did yeeld it vp. There was found in the Castle great store of siluer, treasure, jewells, and other pretious mouables, belonging to the King of Portugall, which by King Ferdinands commandement were restored vnto him, who made Sancho d' Castile Captaine of the Castle, & after that he had ordayned, and prouided all things requisite for the safety of Zamora, hee came to Medina del Campo, where the Queene met him; This happy successe did daunt the courrages of all the Kings, and Queenes enemies, in so much as the greatest part of them, employed all their meanes, credit, and friends, to obayne their grace and fauour. The Constable obtayned pardon for the Maister of Calatraua, and for the Earle of Vregna his brother, vnto whom the Constable gaue one of his daughters in marriage. The Arch-Bishoppe of Toledo, beeing daily dispossessed of the townes, and places belonging to his Arch-Bishopricke, tooke leaue of the King of Portugall, and withdrew him selfe to Alcala de Henares, beeing accompanied with a gard and conuoy of horsemen, which did greatly hinder the Earle of Treuignoes enterprife, who was sent by the King for to take him.

There remayned in Atiença a Captaine of the King of Portugalls side, which did great hurt to the country round about, who with his wife, family, and all his goods, was taken in a night by a Knight named Garcy Brauo, who had entry giuen him by one of the Captaines seruants. This prey, amounting to better then tenne thousand ducats, was giuen by the King, and Queene, to this Knight, who did in like manner take Camarena, for their seruice, from which place Iohn de Tovar, did commit infinite spoiles. The King of Portugall finding that all matters fell out contrary to his desire, resolved to returne into Portugall, with an intent to craue aide of the French King: Hee carried Donna Joane his betroathed wife with him, and left good Garrisons in those townes of Spaine which hee did possesse, especially in Toro, where Don Fancisco Cotino Earle of Marialua was left for Gouvernour, in Iohn de Villosa his steed, who dyed not long before by a suddayne accident. Rodrigo of Castagneda, brother to the Earle of Cifuentes, did hold Madrid for the Marquis of Villena, beeing assisted by Iohn Sapata a Cittizen of the towne, and a violent and bitter enemy to all those which tooke the King, and Queenes part, whome by all meanes he chased from thence. He was cheefe of that faction. In the number of those that were banished, was Pero Nugnes of Toledo cheefe, like wife of those on the King, and Queenes side, who had retyred himselfe to the Duke of Infantado: this man with others, who were banished from Madrid, hauing conferred with the Queenes people, did thinke to surpriue the towne by intelligence, with some within the same. Iohn Sapata, at the first newes thereof, left the City, his owne conscience accusing him, and threatening him with death, for his many misdemeanors: neuertheless the commander Pedro of Ayala, a knight of the order of Saint Iames, being in the City, did defend it for a tyme, and then did deliuer it to the Duke. The Castle held two months for the Marquis, in which space it was beseegeed by the Duke, sent thither with certaine companies by the Queene. This same yeare, King Ferdinand and Queene Isabell, (their affaires prospering) did celebrate and keepe the assembly of the estates at Madrigall, where Donna Isabell, there onely daughter, at that time, was sworne vnto, and acknowledged, after the antient accustomed manner of Spaine; Brincede of the Aliuria, and eldest lawfull heire to the Kingdomes of Castile, and Leon, and the dependances thereof, in case no male child were borne vnto them. And in regard of the great zeale and affection they did beare to iustice, which had greates neede of their aide and assistance, the whole state of Spaine being to disordered, and full of confusion, as they which were strongest, would without any feare of punishment exercise infinite kinds of cruelties vpon the weaker sort, it was decreed, for the preuenting thereof, to renew and authorize the brother-hoods, and companies of the communalities. To the prouosts and iudiciall seates whereof, authority should be giuen to giue iudgement in fiae cases, that is to say, for murder, inforced theft, or those which should be hurt in the country or places farre

Donna Isabell, sworne heire to the kingdomes of Castile.

In what cases the prouosts of Castle may giue iudgement.

A farre from any dwelling: Secondly, they might iudge the selfe same crimes committed in the townes, and villages, in case the offender should flie away: Thirdly, the breaking open of doores and walles, scaling and burning of houses: Fourthly, the rape and violence offered to women or maides, of what age or condition soeuer: And fifthly for rebelling against the Ministers of iustice executing their charge: which brother-hoods should haue their prouosts and iudges in the townes, and their Ministers in all places of their iurisdiction, and whereas any controuersie should arise betwixt the ordinary Iudges and those prouosts vpon the enquiry and knowledge of offences, such differences should be iudged by the Kings Councell.

B Don Lope de Ribas Bishop of Carthagen was chosen chiefe president of all those brotherhoods, and it was decreed that an imposition should bee laide vpon the people, for the entertainment of the souldiars and officers of these Iudges, euery twentieth house to finde one horseman: so as by that meanes a power of two thousand horse was leauied, to assist the Iudges, and to purge and cleanse the country from theues and robbers. Of whom, Don Alphonso of Arragon, Duke of Villahermosa, the Kings brother, was captaine generall. These things beeing thus ordered, did neuertheless displease sundry of the great Lords of Spaine; but the Constable was well pleased therewith, who was the first that commanded his owne tennants, to contribute towards the payment of these companies, whose example diuers other great Lords did follow afterward.

C Now the King of Portugall had furnished Toro, Cantalapiedra, and Castro Nugno with good and strong garrisons, which did greatly molest all the country there abouts, especially that of Cantalapiedra where Alphonso Peres de Buiro was gouernour, who made continuall courses, vpon the territory of Medina, Salamanca, and other places: which to remedy, King Fernand resolved to beseege it, and sent thither the Duke of Villahermosa his brother, and Don Pedro Maurique Earle of Treuigno, with Artillery to batter it.

The siege being planted, and the Canon playing on either side, the beseegeed, who found themselves shut in, demanded aide of King Alphonso, who did forrage and overrunne the territory of Salamanca, thinking by that meanes both to diuert the army from before Cantalapiedra, and to succour the beseegeed, but it fell not out according to his desseigne; for the Earle of Treuigno marched against the forragers, and did beate them backe, and yet the beseegeed in Cantalapiedra were still as much distressed as before. It was treated concerning the exchange of prisoners: wherefore the Earle of Benauent was freed from his oth, which hee made, not to beare armes for King Fernand in that warre, and so the Earle of Pegnamaçor was deliuered forth of prison, the siege raised from before Cantalapiedra and the Licentiate Antonio Nugnes of Ciudad Rodrigo was restored to his goods, and the garrisons of that place were not to beare armes for a yeere afterward. The King and Queene gaue to the Earle of Benauent, foure millions of Marauedis, towards the charges hee had beene at, and confirmed his former gift of the city of Corunna, or the Groine, but the Inhabitants taking armes, did resist him, intending to maintaine themselves vnder the demaines of the crowne, without acknowledging any subalterne Lord, and draue those forth of the castle which held it for the Earl. The same time, King Fernand was sent for into Arragon by King Iohn his father, whither he did make a short iourney, & because his wars in Castile, but especially in Guipuscoa, concerned him very nerely, he made a quick returne to victoria: for the Frenchmen remained stil in that Prouince burning the country, to driue whom away, the King and Queene raised an army of fifty thousand men, the most part of them being footmen, out of the Prouinces of Guipuscoa, Alaua, Biscay, Asturia, and from other places on the confines of Burgos. Vpon the report of this great preparation the French men retired to Bayonne, with intent and threatening to returne againe the spring following.

At the same time, the faction of Beaumont and Grammont in the Kingdome of Nauarre, were at as deadly warre as euer, and the quarrell betwixt Don Lewis of Beaumont Earle of Lerin, and Pedro of Peralta the Constable, was pursued with all rigour and extremity: the Earle of Lerin beganne to treat with King Fernand to make him King of Nauarre, and to deliuer into his hands the city of Pampelona with

Nauarre, Lewis of Beaumont, the Realme of Nauarre.

with other fortresses of the same country: sending certaine Knights of Nauarre vnto him to victoria, to offer him his seruice with all that hee did possesse: the King did curteously entertaine those Knights, & thanked both the Earle and them for their offers, and good will: but concerning the rest, hee said that hee would not lay claime to anothers right, for the Realme of Nauarre did in right belong to his sister the Princeesse Leonora, and after her decesse, to her Sonnes Sonne, Francis Phabus Earle of Foix and Lord of Bearne, and withall because King Iohn his father did enioy the royall authority thereof, during his life: therefore, to enterprise any thing against the right of those persons, vnto whom hee did owe so much honour and respect, it would not onely be a sinne, but impiety and sacriledge, so as by no meanes hee would harken therevnto: saying moreover that hee was much grieued, to see the inueterate hatred betwixt the Earle and the Constable, and that hee would willingly take the paines to make them friends, thinking it an office worthy of him, to procure the peace and quiet of that Kingdome, which was ruined by the confusions of the ciuill warres, wherefore hee did inuite both of them to come to victoria, and to referre their controuersies to his arbitrement: with these holy speeches hee gaue content, and admiration to the Knights of Nauarre, at whose returne the Earle of Lerin, and the Constable came to Victoria, where if King Fernand could not wholly reconcile them, yet he procured a truce betwixt them, putting each of them in mind with great meekenesse mixed with grauity of their errors with the amendement thereof, to the good of the Kingdome, their own particular proffit and for the seruice of King Iohn their maister.

King Ferdinand meditates a peace betwixt the factions of Beaumont and Gramine.

King Iohn second marriage omits to the realm of Nauarre.

The Earle of Lerin marries a bastard daughter of Arragon and becomes obedient to King Iohn.

John King of Arragon falls in loue in his extreme old age.

The King of Arragon afterwards, perceiuing him-selfe at the graues brinke, and desiring to leaue quietnesse in that miserable kingdome, where the factions had bred such confusions, as neither the feare of God, nor the loue of honesty was able to containe men from executing all kinds of mischeefes, murders, sacrileges, robberies, burnings, and horrible desolations ouer the whole country, which were followed with the terrible, and fearefull iudgements of God, as plagues, famines, and other scourges of his wrath, all which were not onely encreased, but procured by the Kings second marriage: King Iohn I say being moued with these things, sent the Earle of Lerin such assurances, as hee caused him to come to Saragossa, being well accompanied, where the King did gently receaue him, graunted him peace, and gaue a generall pardon to all offences past, proceeding from both factions, and for a greater confirmation of the whole, he gaue the Earle a bastard daughter of his in marriage, called Donna Leonora of Arragon; by these meanes the Princeesse Leonora, widdow to the Earle of Foix, and future Queene of Nauarre, recouered without force her townes and fortresses, and was euery where obeyed, except in the City of Cafeda, which was battered, at the taking whereof dyed that Valiant Captaine Sancho of Eruiti, furnished the obstinate in the seruice of the Princeesse Leonora; about which time Alphonso Carrillo Bishop of Pampelona called a Synode at Estella, wherein they treated of ceremonies and other matters. After all these things, King Iohn being at rest and quiet, in the City of Barcelona, notwithstanding hee was very aged, and full of sicknesse, fell in loue with a yong Gentlewoman called Francina Rosa, with whole beauty and comelinesse hee did comfort by embraces, and fruitlesse kisses, the waywardnesse of his old age, leauing her concerning other matters free, and vntouched to him who after-ward married her.

King Fernand hauing (as hath bene already saide) made the pacification of Nauarre at Victoria, and by the renoune of his power, deliuered the country of Guipuscoa from the French army, would in like manner order the affaires, of Alua, Bilcair, and other places neere adioyning, where were many factions, and other disorders: hee therefore entred Bica, being attended on by Don Alphonso Carrillo Bishop of Pampelona, Pedro Lopes de Padilla, great gouernor of the Frontiers of Castile, Don Henry Henriquez, the Kings Vncle, brother to the Admirall, Don Pedro de Estuniga eldest Sonne to the Earle of Miranda, Doctor Iohn Dias de Alcocer one of the Kings Councill, Roderigo Villos his great Tresorer and Councillour, Don Diego de

Acugna

A Acugna sonne to the Bishop of Burgos, Don Fernand de Ayala sonne to the Marshall Don Garcia de Ayala, and by other Knights and Ecclesiasticall persons.

The Biscains had an ancient custome, which was, not to suffer any Bishop to come within their country, by reason perhaps of the attempts and wrongs which they had in time before sustained by the prelates and Churchmen, the which was vnknowne to King Fernand, who riding on with the Bishop, hee was aduertized of their custome, and was constrained to send him backe; the peasants and poore country people thinking the ground to bee infected wherevpon this Prelat and his Mule did tread were busied many daies after in scraping together the dust of the high-waies, which they laide vp in heapes, and threw it afterwards with curses and imprecations into the sea, the which certainly was not done without some mistery, those people not being voide of religion, but superstitiously deuour, as the rest of the Spaniards are. The King visited Bilboa, and afterward hee came to Guernica, where hee was receiued and reuerenced with all ceremonious duty. Hee called the Nobility of the country thither, and confirmed all their priuiledges by his letters patents, written by Gaspard Arin his secretary, dated the thirtieth day of Iuly, the yeere 1476. in the presence of diuers Noble personages of name.

10
Bishops, excommunicated out of the Country of Biscay.

Strange opinions of the Biscaines concerning Bishops.

The King being busied about these matters, a famous French Pirate named Colo, came with foure vessels to a place called the figge-tree of Fontarabie, to whom after that, five more ioyned: these nine shippes did ride there at an anchor for the space of eleuen daies, in the view of the towne of Fontarabie, and sundry times they landed their souldiars, who ranne vp and downe the country burning and spoyling all they met with: against whom the Garrison went forth, and slew more then a hundred of them; wherevpon they set saile towards Galicia, where they burned the suburbs of the City of Ribadeo, then sayling along the coast of Portugall, they met with certaine Carrakes of Genoa, with whom they graped, and the fight betwixt them was so furious, as seuen vessels were there burned, to weete two Genoueses and five of the Pirates, who with the other foure, which remained were repared at Lisbon. The report of this Pirate, caused thirty shippes of warre to bee set forth, as well from Saint Sebastian as from other places on the coast of Biscay, who met altogether at Laredo, and this sea-army parted from Conserua, and sailed towards Galicia, where they tooke, partly by force, and partly by composition, certaine places vpon the sea coast next to Portugall, which were reuolted from the Kings of Castile. Herevpon truce was granted and agreed vpon betwixt the French men and Guipuscoans, by land onely, for the space of three monthes, leauing the sea free for euery man to doe the best hee could: the army aboue mentioned hauing done that exploite on the marches of Galicia, returned laden with spoiles.

Combat at sea betwixt the Frenchmen & Genoueses.

Amongst other things, those of Saint Sebastian brought away two yron peeces of ordonance, whereof one did carry a stone-bullet of a hundred and threescore pound waight, taken from Bayon de Minio. The charges of this warre of Guipuscoa, was heauy to the whole Prouince with great discommodity and losse of their bloud: which warre, after the retreat of the French, did continue still at sea, where the French lost more then they did winne. King Fernand hauing discharged, honored, and praised the souldiars, and punished certaine euill liuers in that country, and ouerthrowne certaine strong houses, he returned to Victoria.

The Cardinall of Spaine, in the meane time, who was a very wise and polittike man, did trie by all meanes to draw away the French King from the alliance with Portugall, and to make him friend to his King: hee had in former time written sundry letters vnto him to that purpose, and now hee continued it, sending Alphonso Ianes, treasurer of the Church of Siguença vnto him, to put him in minde of the inuiolable Friendship which had bene in times past betwixt the houses of France and Castile, whose forces had bene so well vnited together to the preiudice of the English, ancient enemies and competitors of the crowne of France: whereas the Portugalls on the contrary had alwaies fauoured, and followed them to the great hinderance and contempt of the French Nation, and then hee besought him to consider what occasion hee had to

The Cardinall of Spaine, seeks to renew the peace betwixt France and Spaine.

bandy

bandy against the King of Castile for Portugall, requesting him henceforward to give A place to that which reason, humanity and profit, did require, which was to cause the warre to cease, and re-establish the holy friendship and league betwixt France and Castile. This Treasorer made diuerse voyages into France for this purpose, and handled the matter so well, as hee obtained truce for a yeere, and there was a place appointed betwixt Bayon and Fontaraby for the two Kings Commissioners for to meet at.

About this time the Earle of Paredes, who called himselfe Maister of Saint Iames, did beseege Vcles, where hee found sharpe resistance, and doing his vttermost to take it, the captaine, who held it for the Marquis of Villena, certified his Maister what need hee had of helpe: the Marquis beeing then at Alcala de Henares with the Archbishop of Toledo, brought him and as much power as they could raise betwixt them to Vcles, which were about three thousand horse. Yet notwithstanding the Earle made no shew that hee ment to dislodge, but against the opinion of all men hee maintained the siege, and hee had moreouer the courage to goe and affront the troupes of the Marquis and Archbishop, keeping them a whole day in alarumm, aking sundrie charges with aduantage: at the last, with the losse of some of his owne people he enforced them to retorne, not being able to driue him from the Castle, where soone after arriued men at armes to his succor, who were sent by the Duke of Infantazgo, and conducted by Don Hurtado de Mendoza his brother, with the which forces, ioyned to some of his owne, hee followed the Marquis and the Archbishop with great hope to haue defeated them if they would haue accepted the fight, but they wanted courage, albeit they were within a bow shot of them; but the Archbishop and the Marquis retired themselves about mid-night to a castle called Arauia, despairing euer to succor Vcles: which the beseegeed perceiuing, yeelded themselves with safety of liues and goods.

As these men did thus trouble themselves in Spaine, the King of Portugall beeing vexed, that his affaires succeeded so vnluckily, where as he was wont to triumph and bee victorious in Affrica, would once againe sollicite King Lewis, and determined to goe in person into France: Hee therefore imbarkeed himselfe, and hauing passed the Streights, hee came to Marseilles, from whence hee went to the King who lay at Tours D of whom hee was kindly entertained: but concerning the affaires for which hee came, hee gaue him no hope at all, but delaied him from day to day, excusing himselfe by the great warres which hee had against the English and the Duke of Bourgondy, entreteyning him without any concludiue answer: at the last hee told him, that it behooued him to haue a dispensation from Pope Sixtus the fourth then reigning, for to marry with his Neece Donna Ioane his sisters daughter, before hee could pretend any lawfull right to the Kingdome of Castile and Leon; whereupon either King did write to Rome to that effect, where the Ambassador of King Fernand and Queene Isabella, did mainly oppose himselfe against it, alleading the great troubles and miseries which such a dispensation might cause in Spaine: Yet notwithstanding at the entreaty of King Lewis, the dispensation was graunted, the which did containe that it was lawfull for Donna Ioane to marry any one within the fourth degree. It is reported that King Don Alphonso beeing in talke with King Lewis, and labouring to induce him to pursue this warre, vfed many base entreaties, and kneeled to him with other like iestures: ill becoming a King, who ought still to shew himselfe courageous, and constantly to resist all aduersities. And perceiuing that the controuersies betwixt the King and the Duke of Burgondy were a great hinderance to his businesse, hee tooke vpon him to reconcile and make them friends, to the end hee might the better procure helpe from both of them: for Duke Charles of Burgondy was his cousin germaine, borne of a sister to King Edward his father: but hauing made a journey to him, and beeing returned to Paris, the Dukes ouerthrow and death did sodainely follow, which happened before Nancy, in the yeere 1477. which did the more alienate the French King from giuing care to the affaires of Spaine, beeing more attentiu to recouer both the Burgondies, with the lands and townes of Picardy, Flanders and Artois, which Vvarre of Vcles against the Marquis of Villena.

12 Portugal. King Alphonso of Portugall doth in vaine sollicite the French King to undertake with him wars against Spaine.

The King of Portugall is abject courage.

An. 1477.

A which were dependances of his crowne, Duke Charles hauing left no other heire of his great Dominions but his onely daughter Mary who was afterward married to Maximilian of Austria, she was grand-mother to the Emperour Charles, heire to all Spaine after the death of King Fernand and Queene Isabella, in the right of his mother Donna Ioane their daughter, as shalbe declared in his place. Vpon these pretences concerning Bourgondy, King Lewis found sufficient occasion to delay him: promising that those businesse being ended hee would doe whatsoeuer the King of Portugall would request him, who being sorrowfull and discontented, departed out of France, and was brought into such despaire, as hee determined to goe to Ierusalem, and there to become a B Monke, without euer seeing Portugall any more: from which determination his friends and seruants dissuaded him, putting him in minde of the great wrong hee should doe to his honour and reputation thereby. In his absence, Prince John, by his fathers consent, tooke vpon him the title of King, but vnderstanding that King Alphonso was arrived at Cascaes, hee like an obedient sonne gaue ouer the title and authority vnto him.

King Alphonso of Portugall in despaire.

Queene Isabella in this meane space thought to haue surprised Toro by the meanes of the Admirall and the Earle of Benauent, who after a long and dangerous fight, were repulld by the Earle of Marialua who was Gouvernor. It happened in like manner, that the great Maister Andrew de Cabrera hauing taken the Licutenancy, or Captainship of the castle of Segobia from Alphonso Maldonado to bestow it vpon Don Pedro de Bouadilla his father in law, Maldonado beeing enraged thereat, went about to surprize the same place, there to recouer his former authority, and had intelligence with certaine dead paies of the castle, and feyning on a day to haue need of some certaine stones that were within the same, vnder collour of fetching them out, hee put foure fouldiars into the fortresse beeing instructed what to doe, who at the first, slue the porter, and being followed by their Captaine, they tooke Don Pedro de Bouadilla, and constrained the rest which were within it to saue themselves in a tower. In the same castle the Princeesse Isabella, the King and Queene onely daughter, was kept: whereupon there arose a great tumult in the City of Segobia, which beeing vnderstood by Don John de Arias, the Bishop thereof, who as then lay forth of the City, by reason of the dissention betwixt him and Andrew de Cabrera, hee came thither and easily made himselfe Maister of the gates which were held by those of Cabrera's faction, beeing fauoured by diuers principall citizens. Queene Isabella beeing aduertized of this inconueniencie came thither with the Cardinall of Spaine, and hauing made Gonzalo Chacon Captaine, shee enquired by way of Iustice of the Captaines behauiour, who hauing yeelded good account of himselfe, his iustifications were allowed, and he restored to his gouernment.

Castile.

Tumult in Segobia.

The Archbishop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena, beeing not able any longer to resist the King and Queene, made all the meanes they could for to obtaine E their grace and fauour, and they practized with the old King John of Arragon, that hee would bee a meanes to his children the King and Queene of Castile to receiue them as their faithfull seruants. The messengers that went about this businesse were certaine religious persons, who preuailed so much with King John, as by great importunity they obtained their pardon, and caused whatsoeuer they had possessed in time before, to bee restored to them (the castles of Madrid and Trugillo excepted) which remained at the Kings dispose and pleasure. The city of Huerta, which King Henry had giuen to Don Lope Vazques of Acugna, with title of Duke, was at the same time yeelded vp and willingly surrendered to the King and Queene. The Archbishop was more in fault, and more worthy reprehension, then any one that had F resisted the Kings.

The Archbishop of Toledo and the Marquis of Villena obtaine their pardon.

During these warres, the Castilian marriners made their first voyage into Guye-ney where were mines of gold, whereupon, as hath bene before mentioned, there grew a controuersie betwixt the Castillians and Portugalls, who had most right and title vnto that nauigation.

13 The Spaniards first voyage to Guyeney.

Eccc

Whilest

14

Toro surpris'd.

Whilest Queene Isabella remained at Segobia, the Spaniards tooke Toro by meanes of a shep-heard, who certified Don Alphonso de Fonseca Bishop of Auila, that there was a certaine part of the City which the Portugals did alwaies leaue without any guard, because by nature the scite thereof was strong. The Bishop sent to discouer it, and finding the shep-herds report to bee true, sent thither fixe hundred men, and him for their guide, they giuing no great credit to the poore man, went on very lazily to that enterprise, but being encouraged by Pedro de Velasco, and by an other young man called Alphonso de Fonseca, who was the first that entred it, they all followed, not being discovered by any one, and hauing broken open a gate, they gaue entry to the rest of their fellowes, the Bishop hauing sent a good troupe after them, and so they became Maisters of the City, the Earle of Marialua and his people hauing scarce leifure to recouer the castle, from whence afterward hee went to Castro Nugno, abandoning the said castle, within the which Donna Maria Sarmiento, widow to John V'lloa, did fortifie her selfe with those of her faction, who desired by all meanes to returne to the Queenes seruice. The Queene hauing vnderstood those good newes, came speedily to Toro, restored the banished to their goods, did honorably recompence the poore shep-heard whom they called Bartlemew, enfranchising him and all his posterity from tributes beside the ready money and pensions which she gaue him: and receiued Donna Maria Sarmiento into her fauour, who was sister to Don Diego Sarmiento Earle of Salinas, for whose sake and desertes she restored her vnto all her goods and possessions: and by this meanes the castle of Toro came into the Kings power.

15 Election of the Masters of Saint Iames, in the kings power
et.

About this time Don Roderigo Manriques Earle of Paredes, the pretended Maister of Saint Iames died in the City of Ocagna, whose competitor Don Alphonso de Cardena, great Commander of Leon did in all hast with great troupes of horse march towards V-cles, to the end he might be chosen there by the thirteene Electors: but the Queene pre-uented him, and delc in such sort as the thirteene, and the Commauder himselfe were contented to intreat the Pope to put the Maistership to the Kings disposing, the which was graunted, and the same dignity was afterward bestowed vpon the same Commauder.

16

After that, King Fernand returning from Guipuscoa by Toro and Ocagna, met the Queene at Toledo, in which city they builded that famous Monastery of Saint Iohn of the Kings, which is a Couent of Franciscan friers, and from thence they went to Madrid, where they were aduertised that the Portugals had entred Castile by the way of Badajoz, and Cite Rodrigo, with two armies, against whom were sent as Generals, Don Lorenzo Suarez de Figueroa Earle of Faria, and the great Commander of Leon: These did not onely bear backe the enemies, but they entred into the country of Portugal, putting the poore miserable subiects to fire and sword, who could not remedy their Kings ambition; to which place Queene Isabella, who was a woman of a manly courage, did march, the better by her presence to encourage, and fauour the enterprises of her army. From Madrid the King went to Medina del Campo, where he tooke order with his brother the Duke of Villahermosa, and the Constable, about forces sufficient to assaile foure fortresses at one time: by meanes whereof, in a short time hee brought vnder his obedience, Cantalapiedra Sept, Eglises, and Cubillas: but at Castro Nugno, which was the fourth, hee found greater resistance, his seege lasting long, so as all the forces which were disperfed abroad in sundry places, were faine to be drawne together to that place, and the King himselfe came thither in person, by meanes whereof the rowne was taken, but the castle made obstinate resistance, before which hauing left his army, hee returned to Medina del Campo.

There he receiued letters from Garcia Osorio, Corrigidor of Salamanca, who aduertized him of diuers outrages committed by a Knight named Roderigo Maldonado, who was of the same citie, who held the castle of Monleon, and from thence did many robberies and insolent attempts, as namely coyning of false and counterfeite money, with diuers others mischiefs: in regard whereof the King would needs go thither, and found meanes to catch this wicked man, who thought to haue saued himselfe

F

A in the Sanctuary of the Couent of Saint Francis, the which neuerthelesse did saue his life, at the earnest entreaty of the Friers, who deliuered him vpon that condition, as also that he should deliuer vp the Castle of Monleon, otherwise the King would breake open their gates. Maldonado beeing taken, gaue his wife and subiects notice of his estate, and willed them to deliuer vp the Castle to the King, the which they refused to doe, saying that they would haue some recompence of the King, otherwise they would deliuer it to the King of Portugall; and if hee were taken prisoner, he might thanke himselfe. Then the King caused him to be carried to a place, in the sight of those which were in Monleon, and commanded that in their view his head should be stricken off: but being come to the place, hee made such pittifull lamentation, as they compassionating him, yeilded the Castle and saued his life. From Salamanca, the King returned to the Campe before Castro Nugnes.

As Queene Isabella went towards Badajoz, shee sent from Guadalupa, to Pedro de Baes Captaine of the Castle of Trugillo, who held it for the Marquis of Villena, commanding him, following the agreement betwixt her and the Marquis, to deliuer vp the fortresse to Gonzall d' Auila, the which hee refused to doe, saying, that hee would neuer yeeld it whilest hee had life in him: the Queene tryed by faire meanes and promises to drawe him to deliuer it, but all was in vaine: wherefore shee raised a power, and marched to Trugillo, whether the Maister of Calatraua came, and Don Alphonso de Montroy, who called himselfe Maister of Alcantara, with diuerse other Lords and Knights: whilest shee remained there, shee recouered diuerse Castles of the same countrey, some of which shee razed. And knowing her selfe to bee strong and well accompanied, shee gaue ouer all milde and gentle meanes, and began to vse greuous threatnings, so as Don Pedro de Baes, became more tractable, and was willing to deliuer it, so as the Marquis would come thither in person, and bid him doe it. The Marquis was sent for, who to auoyde farther quarrels with the Queene, caused it to be deliuered, and Gonzall d' Auila was made Captaine thereof.

After that, shee did choose certaine Arbitrators at Caceres to compose the controuersies betwixt her and the Marquis, shee reformed the state of the towne, and made the officers thereof perpetuall: and from thence shee went to Siuill, the which City shee found in a miserable estate, and diuided into factions; which caused infinite disorders and villanies: for the inhabitants were of a long time bandied one against another about the quarrells betwixt the houses of Guzman and Ponce: and they were so grounded therein, as they fought for the same with incredible cruelties and impieties, the father against the sonne, the brother against brother, the wife against the husband, with more furie and obstinacie then the Guelphs and Gibelines in Italy, and the Gambosins and Ognazins in Biscay, the City of Cordoua beeing likewise infected with the same pestilence: Don Alphonso d' Aguilar Lord of Montilla, beeing chiefe of the faction for the Marquis of Cales, his brother in lawe, and Don Diego de Cordoua for the family of the Guzmans.

The Queene was receiued into Siuill with great honour, where shee made some stay, and tooke the paines to heare all these controuersies, with others, sitting her selfe in counsell, and giuing audience euery Friday, beeing accompanied with Prelats, Doctors, and other noble personages: whose example is to bee followed of all Christian Kings and Princes, who in regarde they will not take the paines themselves to harken vnto their affaires, doe see and heare by other mens eyes and eares, which caueth them to fall into greuous errors, by not knowing truly what is done in their Realmes and dominions, through the pernicious dissimulation, and damnable flattery of their Ministers and officers.

F The Queene determining to punish all those that were guilty of the maine miseries which this stately Citie had endured; the Bishoppe of Cales, Suffragan to the Cardinall of Spaine, Archbishoppe of the same Church, did admonish her in a wife and learned Oration, of the difficultie and danger of that shee pretended to doe, saying, that it was the end of all good Princes, and of Iustice, to amend,

Eccc 2

and 17 Reformation of the townes

and state of Andalusia.

The City of Siuill enuoyed
by the factions of Guzman, and Ponce.

A Queene
carefull of doing iustice to her subiects.

The end of all good government is to au-mend and not destroy offenders.

Gentle punishments whereby the delinquents in Siuill are appeased.

and not to destroy; otherwise in stead of Kings, they would bee accounted barbarous A tyrants, greedy of humane blood, true Ministers, not of the diuine clemencie, but of the destroying spirit, who had beene a murderer from the beginning of the world, applying to his speech many examples of old times, drawne out of the Holy scriptures: adding, that the number of the offenders was so great, that if all of them should bee punished according to their deserts, the City would want people to dwell in it: the Queene therefore being moued with these reasons, gaue a generall pardon for all matters past (apostacy onely and mens priuate interests excepted.) The Duke of Medina and the Marquis of Cales, who were the causes of all these euils, comming into the Queenes presence with great submission, would haue laied the fault one vpon B other: in the end hauing deliuered vp into her hands the places and fortresses which they had vsurped, as well the one from the other, as those which did belong to the City of Siuill, shee made peace betwixt them, and gaue to euery one his owne. The castle of Vtrera onely made resistance, the captaine thereof saying, that hee would not deliuer it, because it belonged to the Marshall of Sahauedra vnto whose father Gonzalo Arias of Sahauedra the late King Henry had giuen it, for which contempt, the Queene caused it to bee beleegged and furiously battered, in regard hee did defend it with such obstinacy: in the end, the place being taken by assault, himselfe, with all those that were within it, lost their liues, the most part of them in the heate of the fight: the residue of them being brought to Siuill serued for an example to others not to resist C a greater power, and were publicly hanged.

King Don Fernand staid not very long ere hee came vnto Siuill to the Queene, who about that same time was brought in bedde and deliuered of a sonne, who was named Don Iohn; for the which, great ioy feastings and gladnesse was made ouer all Spaine.

There came vnto the Kings, being at Seuill, an Ambassage from Muley Albohacen King of Granada, with whom they were at peace, notwithstanding hee had not paid the tribute which his Predecessors did vsually doe vnto Castile, the which the warres of Portugall had constrained the Kings to dissemble till a fitter time. These Ambassadors craued confirmation of the truce betwixt the Realmes and Kings of Castile and Granada; the which was refused them, vnlesse that Albohacen would send the arrearages due for the tribute: but the Moores answered (having expresse commissi- D on so to doe) that the Kings of Granada, who had beene tributaries to Castile were dead, and their bondes buried with them, and that the money of Granada was no more coined of gold or siluer, but the iron of launces, dartes and many other such like weapons, which they would turne vpon their enemies, and deliuer themselves from all slavery and bondage.

This braue answere caused the Kings to thinke (who were not yet freed from the Portugall warres) that it was not good to draw so many enemies vpon them at once, therefore they graunted them a truce, being sufficiently aduertized that King Muley Albohacen was the best provided of souldiers, armour, horses, artillery and all other munition, and more abounding in treasure, by reason of the long peace hee had enjoyed, then any of the Kings of Granada his Predecessors. King Don Fernand being highly offended at the rebellion of the Marshall Don Fernand Arias de Sahauedra, would haue had his proces made, and haue punished him as a contemner of the royall Maiesty: but diuerse of his friends and kinsfolke who were in the Kings fauour, and their faithfull seruants did saue him from this daunger, and obtained his pardon, with restitution of all his offices and possessions.

The Admirall recovered the government and captainehip of Tariffa with the castle thereof, the which was giuen to his brother Don Pedro Henriques Gouvernor of the frontiers of Andaluzia, who placed therein Pedro de Godoy, from whom the three castles of Carmona had beene taken, and were giuen to Don Gustiere de Cardegna, who therewith was promoted to the great Commanderie of Leon, because Don Alphonso de Cardegna who had beene great Commander was elected and confirmed F

A med Maister of Saint Iames alone, and the last that hath beene Maister of the same Order, the which dignity, with the rest of the Maisterhips hath euer since continued in the hands of the Kings of Castile; the Princes and their prudent Councell hauing considered and well weighed with themselves, that these Maisters were ordinarily followed by great numbers of Knights of their Order, men of warre; who had for the most part made such tumults and factions in the Realme of Spaine, as they haue not let for to make heads against their owne Kings. Queene Isabella would willingly haue had the Maisterhip of Saint Iames to haue beene for euer after extinct, but shee could not obtaine it. The King her husband leauing her at Siuill, returned to Trugillo, where he made B Sancho de Auila captaine of the castle.

These matters happened in the yeete 1478. in the beginning, whereof Philip An. 1478. Archduke of Austria was borne, who was sonne to Maximilian as then King of the Romaines, and to Donna Maria, the heire of Bourgondy, Flanders and other great Dominions, this Philippe was husband vnto Donna Isabelle of Castile, who, succeeded King Fernand and Queene Isabella her father and mother in all their Kingdomes of Spaine.

At the same time, King Iohn of Arragon being laden with many yeetes and nicere to his end, was desirous to see and conferre with his sonne King Fernand, concerning the affaires of Nauarre, Arragon, Sicill, and his other Dominions, hee therefore C fore sent to request him, if the Portugall warres would permit it, to meete him at Victoria. King Fernand being wonderfull ioyfull to see his father, came thither before him, where the King of Arragon soone after arriued, accompanied with a great number of Lords and Gentlemen, chosen amongst the ancientest of Nauarre, Arragon, and his other countries, so as the beholding of such a company of reuerend old men was very notable and to bee admired, for the youngest amongst them was about three score yeeres of age, all of them in decent habits besitting their yeeres, and yet differing one from an other. The sonne being gone forth to meet the father they did a great while strue about complement and ceremonies, and the King of Arragon, would neuer suffer his sonne of Castile to kisse his hand, neither would hee take D the place of him, but they entred into Victoria, the father riding on the lower hand of the sonne: and when they were come before the lodging which was prepared for the King of Arragon, and both of them on foote, as soone as the father perceived that it was his owne lodging, hee seemed to bee very sorry, as though hee had committed a great fault, and said, You my sonne, who are Lord and head of the Royall house of Spaine, from whence wee are descended, ought to receiue from vs all honour, reuerence, and seruice due vnto you, in regard the obligation which in this respect wee owe vnto you, as to our King and superior, is stronger then that of the sonne towards the father, therefore take horse againe, and I will accompany you to your lodging, for reason commaunds it to bee so, And King Fernand was E constrained so to doe thorough the great importunity of his father, who went with him to his lodging, where hee left him, and the olde King rode backe againe vnto his owne.

For the space of twentie daies that these two Kings remained in Victoria, the father did still giue the honour, ypper hand, and preheminance in all matters to the sonne, were it in sitting or rising vp, and in speaking, walking and keeping of company in writing, and in euery other thing belonging to honour and dignitie, wherein great Lords vse ceremony and complement to honour one an other with. Wherevpon their arose a disputation and controuersie betwixt the Lords and Knights of the Court, to weet, whether it were a seemely, and a decent matter for a father, to shew such great F submission to his sonne, who beside being his father, was also his guest, being an vsuall thing alwaies to honour and giue the places to those whom wee receiue into our houses, albeit hee were of meaner quality then our selues, and whether the sonne did well to receiue and accept of these honours. The Spaniards thought that either of them had done that which was fit. Now the chiefe communication betwixt these two Princes at this interview was concerning the affaires of Nauarre, touching Donna A Leonora future succession to the same, with her grand-child Francis Phœbus Earl of Foix:

 and some are of opinion, that the townes and fortes of Saint Vincent, Garda, Bernedo, Arcos, Larraga, and Miranda de Arga were at the same time wholly cut off from the crowne of Nauarre, in recompence of the charges which Don Fernand had bene at for the warre of Perpignan, with an agreement, that the customes rights and priuiledges which they had, should for euer bee maintained: but seeing it is certaine, that a long time before this assembly, Saint Vincent, La Garde, and Arcos, were possessed by the King of Castile, it is most likely, that they were at that time onely confirmed vnto King Don Fernand. They did likewise intreate of many matters belonging to the Kingdoms of Arragon and Sicil, and then they returned each of them into his owne Dominions, and the King of Castile did neuer more after that see his father, who spent the smal remainder of his daies at Barcelona, afflicted with the goutte and other diseases which doe ordinarily accompany old men.

The father &
 the sonne cut off diuers places from the kingdom of Nauarre.

Castro Nugno decided to king
 Fernand.

King Don Fernand returned vnto the campe before Castro Nugno, which was very faithfully and valiantly defended by the captaine Nicholas de Abendagno of Villareal, in the Prouince of Alaua, but the great want of victuals and of men (those which were with him, being in part dead, and the others were so tired and weak-ned with watchings, wardings and hurts receiued at the assault as they could hold out no longer) did constrain him to yeeld vp the same place, and yet vpon very honorable conditions, for he carried away into Portugall all those that were with him, without ransom, with their armor, weapons and baggage, and their ensignes displayed, and drummes beating; and was greatly praised by the King, the fort was presently razed downe to the ground: after the rendring whereof, the King returned to Siuill to the Queene, where order was taken for the well gouerning of the City, and expresse commandement given to the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and the Marquis of Cales, to remaine there. Don Iohn de Gamboa Gouvernor of Fontaraby, and the Licenciar Iohn de Medina, both of them of the Kings Councell were likewise dispatched into Guipuscoa, with instructions and authority, to treat and conclude the peace with the French Kings Ambassadors who were at Bayon. These, came to Fontarabie, and after that both sides did meet, at Saint Iohn de Luz, where they conferred together, and concluded the peace, renewing the alliances, leagues, and ancient friendship betwixt the two Kingdomes. The French Commissioners were the Lord of Lescut, and the Abbot of Saint Denis: and so the warre ended betwixt France and Castile.

Peace betwixt
 France and Castile.

19 Navigations
 and conquests of the Spaniards in the Oceana Sea.

20 Inquisition in Spaine against Jewes and Moores, did begin the negligences of the Bishops and Pastors.

The King and Queene before their departure from Siuill sent an army to conquer the Canaries vnder the conduct of Pedro de Vera, where, for the space of three yeeres, di-uerse notable exploits of warre were performed by the Castilians: Thirty five ships were likewise sent to Guiney, Pedro de Cobides being their generall, from which place great quantity of gold was brought, with great profit for the Kings, who had the fifth penny. In the first, the thing which was most esteemed of that blacke Nation was cockle-shells, who were of opinion that they had great vertue against thunder and lightning, by means whereof they were sold in Spaine at a great rate, so as men could hardly get any for money.

This yeere 1478. the inquisition beganne at Siuill, instituted at the first by the Coun-cell of Don Pero Gonzales de Mendoza Archbishop of the same City, against the lewes and conuerted Moores, which did returne to their superstitious ceremonies: this Prelate, and other, deputed for that search, thinking that for to conteyne them in the profession of Christianity, rigour and ciuill punishment was more expedient then other milder means, or greater care: Beeing content for to take away the occasion of se-ditions and troubles which grew in the Townes and Prouinces of the Realme, against these miserable creatures, most commonly at the instigation of Preachers, and other Clergy men, inciting the people to mutine against them.

Whereas in deed, they ought to haue bene instructed by good and wholesome examples: but the Bishops and Pastors had no great care of their soules health:
 for

A for the affaires of State, and worldly greatnesse hath so busied them for many ages, as they haue not had leysure to eleuate their eyes and minds higher then the earth. Since that time, the power of the Inquisition tribunall, which is diuided into diuers iurisdic-tions thorough euery Prouince of Spayne, hath bene chiefly banded against those who haue dared to speake against the pompe and pride of the Sea of Rome, and the abuses brought into the Church, for to entertaine the ease and wealth of the Clergie, a gulph which hath swallowed vp many good and honest families. Concerning this Inquisition, which within awhile made it selfe knowne for a fruitlesse inuention, more ample mention shall be made hereafter.

B The King and Queene hauing pacified and ordered the cittie of Seuille, left Diego de Merlo there, who was a good Knight, in qualitie of an assistant, and went themselves to Cordoua, which was in like manner afflicted by the factions of Don Pero Fernandes of Cordoua, Earle of Cabra, and that of Don Alphonso d' Aguilar, who in the last tumults had driuen the Earles forces out of the cittie, and had taken the forts and places thereof, which were in the keeping of the Earle, detaining them, with other places also belonging to the gouernement and iurisdiction of the cittie: they and their followers beeing moreouer charged with so many robberies, thefts, and murders, as the King and Queene had much ado to chastise the offendours, and to restore euery man to his owne. Alphonso of Aguilar was driuen forth of the cittie, and the fortresses taken from him. Vpon complaint made against the Iudges and Officers of the legall Courts, who did greatly exact, the King and Queene caused their fees and stipends to bee rated, more then which, they were not permitted to take vpon payne of forfeiting seuen-fold as much, which was executed vpon some, who neither feared God, nor reuerenced the lawes.

The cittie of Cordoua pacified.

As these busineses were managed in Andalusia, the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, who was euer turbulent and desirous of innouation, had secret intelligence with the King of Portugall, vnto whome hee vndertooke to deliuer the Cittie of Toledo, and to kill Don Gomes Manriques assistant there: and to the same purpose he had practised with the common people of Toledo, and had executed it, if the assistant had not been a proud and politticke man, who hauing discovered the plot tooke order for it, standing on his guard and by punishing some of the Conspirators, hee caused therest to containe themselves within their bounds for feare of the like punishment. The Arch-bishop who remayned at Alcala de Henares had inuited the King of Portugall to come vnto his house of Taluera, assuring him, that hee would put him into Toledo: who was in a readinesse to haue come thither, had not the Prince his sonne, with his friends and seruants, told him what small profite hee should receiue, and how great danger hee should incurre by such an en-terprife.

The Archb.
 alwaye disloyal
 and seditious.

The Kings, Don Fernand and Donna Izabella beeing aduertised of the Arch-bishops dealings, were iustly incensed against him, they caused all his temporalities to bee seized on, sending the Duke of Villa-hermosa to Madrid, to bridle that cittie, commanding all his tenants and seruants to forsake him, and no more to obey him, vpon payne of depriuation of their goods: and for a terrour to the rest, they did cause the houses of diuers of the Rebels, who had contemned their commaundement, to bee razed downe to the ground.

Wherefore the Arch-bishoppe within a few dayes was left alone, and his great friend
Hernand Alarcon did forsake him and fled presently into France, not daring any longer to tarry in Spaine. Don Tello de Buendia, Arch-deacon of Toledo, and a learned man, did vndertake to bring the Arch-bishoppe to his dutie, he vanquished him by reason, and perswaded him to humble himselfe to the King and Queene, of whome by his meanes he obtayned pardon: but hee gaue all the strong castles of his Arch-bishoppricke in hostage for his future fidelitie. The Marquis of Villena on the other side hauing entred into the Marquisate, began to picke quarrels with the Gouvernor placed there by the Queen, concerning the limits of his power and iurisdiction, saying, that he did surpe more then the couenants would permit him, and would haue letted him from punishing those of Cinchilla, with other rebellious and disobedient people, so that a power was sent thither vnder the conduct of Don George Manrique, and Pedro Ruis Alarcon.

The Archb.
 enioyned to his dutie.

Great

officers for-face the country in anyde punishment.

22

A murthrous
Bishop, murdered.

Petty tyrants
it ned to death by the common people.

A. 1479.

Notable loss of one brother to ward another

Great was the King and Queenes toyle, in ordering the peace and quiet of the coun-trei of Andalusia, for the people thereof were so giuen ouer to all manner of villanies, as if they had not vsed their meekenesse and elemencie, the citties and towns would haue beene voyd and empty of people: for it is most certaine, that this yeare and the former, there went out of Seule and Cordoua aboute eight thousand men, tainted of notorious crimes, who left the country for feare of punishment.

It happened about the same time, that Don Rodrigo de Vergara Bishoppe of Leon, borne at Logroño (it is not knowne vpon what occasions) caused Pedro Pasa Treasurer of his Church, to be slayne in the same Cittie, beeing a Knight of a great parentage, whose death his friends and kinsfolkes reuenged by the death of the Bishoppe, who assayled him in his owne house, and pursued him, as he thought to haue fled for safetie to the house of Diego Fernandes Quignones, Earle of Luna, where they murdered him in the bosome of the Countesse, who intreated them to spare the spilling of his blood for her sake.

In the towne of Fontoueja, the Inhabitants did kill with stones D. Hernand Gomes de Guzman, great Commander of Calatrava, for outrages and tyrannies which hee had done to them, for the which fact the Iudges which were sent by the King to informe of the matter, could neuer find any one witness, which would charge any one particular man with that murder, and they could haue no other answer, than this, that Fontouejuna had slaine him, which passed for a Prouerbe thorough Spaine. This same yeare the inhabitants of Saint Helizes de los Galegos, a place neere to Trugillo, did in like maner stone their Lord Gratian de Sese to death, who as it hath beene heretofore sayd, had bene Captaine of Trugillo.

In the beginning of the yeare, one thousand, foure hundred, secenty nine, the King and Queene left Cordoua, and came with great deuotion to the Monasterie of Guadalupa, and also to take order for the Portugall warre, which they daily feared. From Gua-dalupa they sent the duke of Villa-hermosa their brother to Almorox nere to Escalona, in which place were Don Iohn de Luxan, and Don Iohn de Pacheco the Marquis of Villena's brother, who ranne vppe and downe burning and spoiling the countrey round about.

The Marquis on the other side remayning in Garcy Nugnos, did violently resist the the Kings souldiers, and defeated the troups of Don George Manrique, who within a few dayes after, dyed of the hurts which he had receyued in that encounter. By meanes wher-of, others of the Kings Captaines, beeing iustly moued against him, did hang vp fixe of his seruants whome they had taken, to serue for a terrour to the rest: the Marquis in like manner would not be indebted to them for reuenge: but caused as many heads to bee stricken off, casting lots among the prisoners, which fell vpon a souldier who dwelt at Villa-noua de Laxara, neere to Alarcon, who amongst others was to bee beheaded, but a younger brother of his did beseech the Marquis, that he might dye in his brothers stead, who had wife and children, and did so much importune the matter, as hee redeemed him from death, giuing his owne life for him: a notable example of brotherly loue, and well worthie to haue bene considered by those who did cause the execution, if they had bene possessed with a noble and generous disposition. The names of these two brethren are vnjustly suppressed by the negligence of the authors. The Marquis yet notwithstanding sent Rodrigo of Castagneda to Court to excuse him to the King and Queen, and to lay the fault vpon their Lieutenants and Officers, whose pride and insolencie had prouoked him to those courses, the King answered that the Marquis should be heard according to lawe: but beeing aduertised, that Don Roderigo had intelligence with the king of Portugall, they sent him away prisoner to Talauera, where hee quickly ended his dayes.

Whilest the King and Queene remayned at Guadalupa, Donna Maria de Pacheco Countesse of Medelin, the Marquis of Villena's bastard-sister, beeing a proud and haughtie woman, who held the towne of Merida, and had driuen her owne son out of all his possessions, presented a petition to the King and Queene, the effect whereof was,
that

A that shee might enioy the Earledome of Medelin, during her life, with the commandery of the same cittie. An other petition came from Don Alphonso de Montroy, treasorer of Alcantara, who called himselfe Maister of the same order, and held most part of the fortresses belonging to the same, who requested that he might be confirmed in that dignity, notwithstanding any pretence that Don Iohn de Estuniga Sonne to Don Aluaro Duke of Auevalo could make, vpon whom the Pope had bestowed it. Both of them were answered, that vpon hearing of the parties, they should haue speedy iustice. The Countesse and the Treasurer not contented therewith, became enemies to the King and Queene, and did cleaue to the King of Portugall: Don Alphonso hauing forgotten, how that when he was taken prisoner by the Captaine of Magançala in Extremadura, the King had deliuered him and paid his ransome, bestowing diuers other benefits vpon him.

Ambassadors from the French King Lewis the eleuenth, arriued at Guadalupa to see the peace agreed vpon by the Commissioners at Saint Iohn de Luz to bee sworne and ratified. There the Popes Bull was seene, which dispensed with the King of Portugall about the marriage of Donna Ioane his Neece, not without excuses on the Popes part, who said, that he had bin circumvented, and finislerly informed, concerning that matter. And to the end the French King should on his part sweare, and ratifie the articles of the peace, the same commissioners, who had first treated thereof were sent into France, to meet Don Iohn de Gamboa, and the licenciad Don Iohn de Medina both of them of the Kings Councell. It was likewise agreeed vpon with the French Ambassadors, that the towne of Perpignan, with other fortresses of the Earledome of Rossillon, should bee deliuered as hostages, into the Cardinall of Spaines hands, and that with in five yeares following, arbitrators should decide, whatsoeuer king Lewis could pretend to be due vnto him.

Whilest the Spanish Court remayned at Guadalupa, God (being willing to make peace, betwixt Christian Princes in Spaine, to the end they might haue leasure to vndertake more worthy enterprises,) did inspire Donna Beatrice Dutchesse of Viseo, widow to the Infant Don Ferdinand of Portugall, Duke of Viseo, and Mother to Donna Leonora, married to Prince Iohn the eldest Sonne and heire of the Crowne of Portugall, with a desire to imploy her vttermost credit, and meanes for the effecting thereof, This Princess hauing sounded King Alphonso mynde, and finding him to be inclined to an agreement, sent word to her neece Queene Isabell (for shee was sister to her Mother Queene Isabell, widow to King Iohn yet liuing,) that if it would please her to come to the frontiers of Portugall, shee did hope that some good agreement would be made betwixt them; wher-vnto the Queene disposed her selfe with the consent of King Fernand her husband.

King Iohn of Aragon dyed about this time at Barcelona beeing fourescore and one yeares of age, hauing reigned in Nauarre fifty three yeeres and foure moneths, and one and twenty yeares and fixe moneths in Arragon: hee was buried in the monastery of Pobleta. By his last will and testament hee left his Sonne Don Fernand, heire to his Kingdomes of Arragon, and Sicill, and his daughter Princess Leonora, widow to Earle of Foix, heire to the realme of Nauarre: and soone after deputies were sent from the states of Arragon, Cattalogne, and Valencia to the Court of Spaine, to request King Fernand, to come and take possession of his dominions; they came vnto him in an vnseasonable time, by reason the Portugall warre was hotly beganne, by the practises of the countesse of Medelin, and Don Alphonso de Montroy, the pretended maister of Alcantara.

The King and Queene were aduertised that the army of Portugall was in a redinesse to inuade the country of Extremadura: by reason whereof they called the Constable, and other Spanish Knights to Court, and sent foices to the frontiers, with great garrisons to Badajos, and other fortes of the same marches, where Don Alphonso de Cardegna Maister of Saint Iames was generall, who lodged his army at Lobon betwixt Badajos, and Merida, wherein the Tresorer of Alcantara remayned, attending for the Portugalls, and the Bishoppe of Eboræ, their Generall, who came with an intent

Thursers, in regard they might not be authorised in their outrages do van-don them se nes
against the king

Aragon.
The death of John King of Aragon.

Castille.

The Portugall
army defeated
at Albuhera.

Battle of Al-buhera.

Defeat of the Spanish army
by sea.

Titles of King Fernand and Queene Isabell

24

Entervew of
of Queene Isbella and the Dutcheffe of Viseo, for the treatie of peace.

intent to ioyne with him: to preuent which, the Maister of Saint Iames did march against the Bishoppe, and gaue him battaile, in the fieldes of Albuhera, the which was fierce, and bloody, on either side: but the Portugalls were ouerthrowne, and the Bishop taken, (although afterward he escaped away) hauing lost their ensignes, bagage, and all the equigage and munition: the maister of Saint Iames, and all the King of Castiles Captaines were hurt: but about the rest the valour and prowesse of Don Martin de Cordoua Sonneto the Earle of Cabra, of Sancho del Aquila, of Alphonso Henriques and of Rodrigo de Cardegna, Cousin to the Maister of Saint Iames, was admirable: the which Maister by his Iudgement and valour, hauing gotten the King, and Queene this victory, was so charitable, as with his owne mony, hee releued the dearth and famine which at that time, did oppress the country of Extremadura, in regard whereof the King and Queene, did acquit him of three Millions of Maraueidis, which he was to pay, as a pension vnto them out of the reuenue of his place. After this battaile the Treasorer of Alcantara, went to Deleitosa, which had bene taken by Roderigo de Monroy his brother, and the Bishoppe of Eborra went to Medellin to encourage the Countesse, who perhaps, was valianter than him-selfe. Gods will was, that the King of Portugall, in recompence of this losse, should by his army at sea, take the five and thirty Spanish shippes which came from Guiney wherein was great store of gold, which ser-ued well to pay his soldiours, and the prisoners, to exchange for those which were taken at the land Battaille of Albuhera. After this manner are the euents of ioy, and sorrow, mixed in this miserable world.

King Fernand beeing importuned to goe into Arragon, and considering the notable vnion of those two Kingdomes, being at that time at Trugillo, where after hee had celebrated the obsequies of King Iohn his father, hee treated with the Queene his wife, and those of her counsell about the forme of precedency, and the order which should bee kept in the letters, and writings concerning the titles of the realmes, and dominions, which he commanded: diuers of them were of opinion, that they should intitle themselves Kings of Spaine, in regard the greatest part thereof did obey them: but they not beeing willing to exceed the bounds of modesty, nor yet to preiudice in that behalfe, the Kings of Nauarre and Portugall, with whom they were conioyned in blood, did place their titles after this manner. Fernand and Isabell, by the grace of God, King and Queene of Castile, of Leon, of Arragon, of Sicill, of Toledo, of Valencia, of Galicia, of Majorque, of Siuill, of Sardinia, of Cordoua, of Corsica, of Murcia, of Iacn, of Algarbes, of Algezire, of Gibraltar, Earles of Barcelona, Lords of Biscay and Molina, Dukes of Athens and of Neopatria, Earles of Rossillon, and of Cerdaigne, Marquis of Oristagni, and of Gocian. After this manner, were the titles of these Kingdomes and dominions, ordered according to their ranke and dignity: and in the shieldes of their armes, and deuices, it was appointed that the armes of Castile and Leon, should bee first drawne, and after them those of Arragon and Sicill.

The Court beeing come from Trugillo to Caceres, Queene Isabell was greatly solicited by Donna Be. trice Duchesse of Viseo, to come to Alcantara, where shee promised to meet her, and to conferre about the meanes of a peace betwixt Castile and Portugall: the King and Queene departed the one from the other, shee towards Alcantara, which for the same purpose was committed to the keeping of Don Guttiere de Cardegna the great commander by Don Aluaro de Estuniga Duke of Playfance or Arenalo, who held it as lawfull administrator of Don Iohn de Estuniga his Sonne, who pretended him-selfe Maister of that order: and King Fernand went into Arragon to take possession of his new Kingdomes. These Princesses beeing arriued at Alcantara, were lodged in one house, namely in the Castle, where they spent thirty daies in conference, and agreeing at the last vpon certaine Articles, the Dutcheffe beeing highly honored, by the Queene Isabella of Castile, and rewarded with many rich presents, and Jewells, returned into Portugall, carrying Roderigo Maldonado, one of Fernand the King of Castiles counsell with her, to communicate more at large with the King of Portugall, concerning them.

In

A In the meane space whilest these matters were conferred on, the Treasurer of Alcantara surprized the fortresse of Montanches on the one side, and those of the Countesse of Medellins part made sharpe warre in Extremadura on the other: the which countrey besides the miseries which it endured by the warre, it was oppressed with extreame famine: so as euery one perswaded the Queene to goe backe to Toledo: but her haughtie courage, would not suffer her to leaue such places where shee knew trouble and danger to bee, beeing able by her wisdom, speedily to redresse it. Shee then gaue order to be-sege diuers places at one time, from whence the enemies made sundrie roades with incredible spoyle, euen to the gates of Trugillo.

B The Master of Saint Iames was sent against Merida, Don Lewis Fernandes de Porto Carrero, Lord of la Palma besegged Medellin, Rodrigo de Monroy d'Elcitosá, and Don La-renzo Suares of Figueroa, opposed himselfe against those which molested the countrey of Badajos. The Treasurer of Alcantara ranne vppe and downe, and tooke booties now from one place, then from another, hauing his retreat at Piedra nueva, Castro nuevo, Majorga, Azagala, and other forts, and not contented therewith, hee went into Portu-gall, animating King Alphonso, not to giue ouer that warre, but courageously to pour-sue it with great hope, and not bee carried away by the perswasions of the Dutcheffe of Viseo: and hee did chiefly vrge him to come with a mighty armie, to raise the sege before Montanches, that place beeing the strength and importance of the warre: which D.

C Pero Fernandes de Velaço the Constable fearing, fortified his campe with trenches and walles of stones, so as he could not easily bee assailed on the sodaine. Don Lewis Fernando Porto Carrero, besegging Medellin, where the Countesse, and the Bishop of Eborra remayned, sustained infinite difficulties: for besides the continuall sallies and skirmishes of the besieged, who were very strong, his campe was troubled with a horrible number of flies, which constrained him to change his seat, and to retire halfe a mile from thence.

At the end of the sege, which lasted three moneths, those of Deleitosa yeelded, sauing their liues and goods, and with-drew themselves to Montanches. Great was the paine and toyle which the beseggers and besegged of this place did indure, with those likewise of Merida and Medellin, where the Bishoppe of Eborra spared no care nor diligence, to recouer his honour, and to couer the losses which he had sustayned at Albuhera, and also at the battell of Toro.

Hunger, sickness, and other inconueniences were the chiefe enemies, that either partie had to warre against: although Queene Isabella to her power had provided for the necessitie of her people, who from time to time receiued letters from Maldonado her Ambassador in Portugall, putting her out of hope of peace, by reason of King Alphonso's obstinacie, who could not bee brought to any reasonable conditions: she therefore willed him to returne into Castile. The Ambassadour beeing readie to depart, came to take his leaue of King Alphonso, who was at the same time accompanied with the Prince his sonne, and the Lords of his Council, who did perswade him by diuers reasons and examples of things fallen out lately in Spayne to condescend to a peace: which perswasion of his, beeing better taken and apprehended by the Prince and the other Lords, then by the King himselfe, were of such force, as he was drawne by them to receiue the peace which the Dutcheffe of Viseo had concluded at Alcantara: Whereupon the Ambassa-dours departure was prolonged, and the morrow after he assembled his Council, where the Articles were againe perused and considered of, which the King allowed, confirmed, and swore to obserue, after this manner.

First, that the King of Portugall should lay aside the title of King of Castile and Leon, and should wipe out of his shield the armes and deuises of the sayd kingdomes.
Secondly, that he should sweare not to marrie Donna Ioane his Neece, who called her selfe Queene of Castile and Leon.

Thirdly, that shee beeing at that time eightene yeares of age, should choose one of these things within sixe moneths, that is to say, to forsake the Realme of Portugall without hauing ayde, meanes, or any assistance from King Don Alphonso, or if shee would tarrie there still, then to marrie with Prince Iohn of Castile, who was newly borne, when he should come to age, or else to enter into one of the five Orders of Religion of Saint Clare

Queene Isabella perswades
the Rebels in Extremadura.

Peace betwixt Portugall and Castile.

Articles.

Clare in Portugal, and if she would consent to marrie Prince Iohn, shee should liue and A remaine in the meane time, in the company of Donna Beatrice Dutchesse of Visco.

Fourthly, that the Infanta Donna Izabella, eldest daughter to the King and Queene of Castile, should marrie the Infant Don Alphonso, eldest sonne to Prince Iohn, heire to the Kingdome, the which Infant and Infanta should likewise be committed to the keeping of the Dutchesse of Visco in the fort of Mora in Portugall.

Fifthly, that the Kings of Castile should in no sort let or hinder the king of Portugall, nor the Prince his sonnes voyage into Guiney, and that the States and people of Castile should bee bound to performe and maintaine that poynt inuolably.

Sixtly, that all crimes and offences, layde to their charge, who had fauoured and taken B the King of Portugall part in those warres, should be abolished, and a generall pardon graunted to them all, especially to the Countesse of Medellin, and to Don Alphonso of Monroy, Treasurer of Alcantara, and euery of them to be restored to their goods, liuings, and dignities.

Seuenthly, that this peace should be kept betwixt the Kings of Castile and Portugall for an hundred and one yeares.

This peace thus concluded, was proclaymed in the Court of Portugal, to the great contentment of all men, and presently the Licenciate Figueroa, one of the kings Counsell, and his Confessor, named Friar Martin, were sent Ambassadours to Queene Izabella, who lay at Trugillo: who on her part, did likewise sweare to ratifie it, the Castil- C lians beeing no whit displeased thereat; for they were all tyred with that pernicious warre. The which warre did wholly cease, and the seeges, from the aboue-mentioned places, were rayfed. Merida which belonged to the Order of Saint Iames, was yeldded to the Master thereof: Medellin was committed to the keeping of Don Lewis Fernand Porto Carrero, vntill the controuersie betwixt the Countesse and Don Pedro Porto Carrero her son, were decided by order of lawe. Newes hereof was carried to Barcelona to King Fernand, the which was most welcome vnto him, who gaue thanks vnto God therefore, causing great signes of ioy to bee made euery where, and did worthily recompence the messenger which brought tidings of so desired a peace: by meanes whereof those twoking- domes haue beene encreased and maintayned in the greatnesse whereunto they are ri- D sen in the dayes of our fathers, and in our time also.

In King Fernand, the two kingdomes of Castile and Arragon with their dependan- cies, were ioyned together, which had beene separated foure hundred, fortie, and fise years, euer since that the two States of Earledomes, became Kingdomes, after the death of Don Sancho the Great, King of Nauarre, who was the last Earle of Arragon and Castile.

Now King Fernand hauing taken order for all things belonging to so great a succe- sion, wherein hee found no difficultie nor resistance, hee came to the Queene his wife, who lay in the citie of Toledo, where with great solemnitie he swore the peace in the presence of the Portugall Ambassadours: and for a greater confirmation thereof, there were sent Ambassadours to the king of Portugal, Friar Hernand of Talauera, the king of Castiles Confessor, of the Order of Saint Hierome, great Prior of Saint Marie du Pré of Vailliodolir, who was afterward Bishoppe of Auila, and successiue first Arch-bishoppe of Granado after the conquest, and with him Doctor Alphonso Manuel of Madrigall, one of the kings Counsell, to reiterate and sweare the peace the second time. Donna Joane, who till then was called Queene of Castile and Leon, and by a particular surname the Excellent, beeing questioned vpon the Article of peace, which concerned her mar- riage with Prince Iohn, did rather choose a Monasticke life, who therefore was shorne and vailed in the Monasterie of Saint Clare the royall, at Coimbra, and casting off hir royall habits, shee tooke the Order of Saint Francis, not without great griefe to king F Don Alphonso, to see so great a Ladie in such manner to abase her selfe, where if she had so pleased, might haue reigned in Castile, Leon, Arragon, and Sicill.

The Ambassadours of Castile hauing executed their commission with the king of Por- tugall, went to the citie of Coimbra, where they did see this Princeesse to professe her selfe a Nunne, with profection to spend her dayes in such humilitie, notwithstanding that

25
Prison of Castile
and Arragon.

D. Joane, called, the Excellent, consen-teth with the marriage with the Prince of Castile, Arragon, &c.
and becomes a Nunne.

A that they brought her King Fernand and Queene Izabella's honourable word and prom- ise, to accomplish in her behalfe, all that which had beene agreed vpon in the treaty of peace, and to marrie her to their sonne when time should serue: but she with an incre- dible constancie refused all these dignities, and spent the whole time of her life (which was very long) in religion, and was euer after called, (in stead of royall titles which had had beene offered vnto her by the King and Queene) Donna Joane the Nunne.

The troubles beeing thus appeased in Castile, Don Diego Lopes de Pacheco, Marquis of Villena, who in his Marquisate had made warre vpon the Kings Lieutenants and Cap- taines, came to the Court at Toledo to iustifie himself concerning the same: and to speak truth, the matter beeing well weighed, hee was not found to bee the principall cause of those mischiefs, nor yet to haue any intelligence with the King of Portugall, since his last agreement made with the Queene, in regard whereof, the King and Queene recey- ued him to grace and fauour, vnto whome afterwards in the warres of Granado, hee did many notable seruices.

This yeare, 1479. in the moneth of Nouember, Queene Izabella was brought to bed in the Citie of Toledo, in a house belonging to the Earle of Cifuentes, of a daugh- ter named Joane, who in proceesse of time came to succeed in all the kingdomes, as by the progresse of this Historie shall appeare. This Infanta did in all poynts so resemble queen Joane of Arragon her grandmother, as when the King her father did play with her, hee C called her his mother. In like manner the Infanta Izabella, because she was in lineaments like to Queene Izabella her Grandmother, mother to the queene then raigning, was by her called her mother: the rest of queene Izabella's children were commonly called her Angels. At the same time that these things happened in Spayne, the armie of Mahomet the second of that name, Emperour of the Turkes, did houer about the Isle of Rhodes, the seate of the Knights of Saint Iohn of Hierusalem, Peter d'Aubusson a French-man, beeing great Master of that Order: the Sicillians fearing lest the Turkes would haue lan- ded in their Isle, sent messengers to king Fernand, to obtaine of him ayde and succour, vnto whome certaine shippes laden with munition, armour, and other prouision, were sent.

Marquis of Villena re-con-ciled to the King and Queene.

D

Donna Leonora Queene of Nauarre, and 33. in order.

A S King Fernand succeeded in the kingdomes of Arragon, Valencia, Sicill, Major- ca, and principallie of Cattalonia, with other dominions and dependancies therof by the decease of the late king Don Iohn his father: the Princeesse Leonora in like manner, E daughter to him and to his first wife Donna Blanche, queene of Nauarre, did inherit the same kingdome, nine yeares after the death of the Earle of Foix her husband, remaining all that time a widow. She was crowned queene in the citie of Tudela; where she did sweare and promise to maintaine the rights, lawes, priuiledges, franchises, and liberties of the country, in the same manner as her predecessors had done before her. Her raigne was so short, as we haue no matter afforded to speake of, but onely her death, which happened by a sudden sicknesse fiftene dayes after she was crowned, in the same citie of Tudela: she was buried in the couent of S. Sebastian of the Order of S. Francis, neere to the city of Tafalla, which was since ruined by the commandement of Cardinal Francis- co Ximeenes, Archbisshoppe of Toledo, and Gouvernour of Castile, who thought that the strong building of that Monasterie, was no good neighbour to such a towne. Albeit we haue already in the precedent booke spoken of this Princeesses children, yet wee will somewhat more amply enlarge the discourse thereof in this place. Their eldest sonne was Gaston, who bearing the title of Prince of Viana, was married to Donna Magdalene of France, and dyed at Libourne, beeing misfortunately hurt with the splinter of a Lance, as hee there ranue at Tilt: hee was father of two children, that is to Ffff say,

26
Nauarre.

Genealogie of
Nauarre.

say, Francis Phœbus and Katherine, who were King and Queene of Navarre, and Earles A of Foix, successiue the one after the other. Their second sonne was John, who had the Vicountie of Narbonne for his portion, purchased by his father for readie money, and married Marie, who was daughter to Lewis, Duke of Orleans, who was French king, and the twelfth of that name. Paradin sayes more truly, that she was daughter to Charles, Duke of Orleans, of whome were borne, Gaston of Foix, Duke of Nemours, who dyed in the barraille of Rauenna, and Germaine, who was second wife to Fernand, the Cathollicke King, and after that shee was secondly married to Fernand of Arragon, Duke of Calabria, lawfull son to Fredericke king of Naples, who dyed being Viceroy of Valencia.

This John Vicount of Narbonne, was Gouvernour of Daulphiné, and afterwards of Guyenne, a hardie and valiant Knight, renowned in the warres against the English, and in those of Italy, whither hee went with King Charles the eighth, in great credite and authoritie, and afterwards dyed in the raigne of King Lewis the twelfth at Estampes where he lies buried.

The third sonne of Earle Gaston, and Donna Leonora, was Peter borne at Pau in the countrey of Bearne, the yeare one thousand, foure hundred, forty nine, who gaue himselfe to studie, and did choose an ecclesiasticall life, vnder the gouernement of his great Vncle, the Cardinall of Foix, Bishoppe of Lescar, and the Popes Legate in Daulphiné and Prouence: after whose death having profixed at the Vniuersities of Tholousa, Pauia, and Ferrara, in the ciuill and canon Lawes, hee was also by Pope Sixtus the fourth, made C Cardinall of the title of Saint Cosmo and Damian, beeing before Bishop of Vannes, and prouided of many rich Benefices, by the fauour of Francis Duke of Brittain his brother-in law, who had married his sister Ladie Margaret of Foix, mother to Queene Anne.

The fourth sonne of the Earle of Foix, and of Donna Leonora, was called James, hee onely of all their children was borne in Nauarre, and was a Knight highly esteemed, and honoured by King Lewis the twelfth, with the Order of Saint Michaell, and with the leading of an hundred men at armes: in the warres of Lombardie and elsewhere; he purchased the commendation of a valiant and wise Captaine, but hee dyed young, having not attained to the age of thirtie yeares, and was neuer married. Hee left certaine base children, who professed an ecclesiasticall life, and did possesse rich benefices, euen till the later dayes of King Francis the first.

Besides these foure sonnes, Earle Gaston and Donna Leonora had fiue daughters, the first whose name was Mary, was married to William Marquis of Montferrat, who, by the Popes authoritie, erected the church of Casall into a Bishops See: this Ladie was brought to her husband, the yeare one thousand, foure hundred, sixtie sixe, by her brother Peter of Foix, by Bernard the Bastard of Foix, Godfrey Basileac, Bishoppe of Riues, by the Bishop of Conferans, and Peter of Sobreuille, and by diuers other Lords and Knights: Of this marriage no male children were borne, but daughters onely, the eldest of whom was married to Lewis, sonne to Thomas Marquis of Salusles, and these daughters did not succeed their father in the Marquisat, but a brother of his. Ioane second daughter of Earle Gaston, and Donna Leonora, was married to the Earle of Armagnac, sonne to him who was slaine by the commaundement of King Lewis the eleuenth: with which marriage, the King beeing displeased, the Earle was so persecuted, as hee was constrained to flee for safetie into Castile, where trusting to the faire speeches, oathes, and promises of the Cardinall of Albi, the French Kings Ambassadour, in the sayd kingdom, beeing returned into France, hee was there cruelly stabbed to death with daggers. Whereupon his wife Donna Ioane of Foix, returned into Bearne, hauing had no children by him: The third daughter was Marguerite, wife to Francis the last Duke of Brittain, by whome hee had two daughters, Anne and Isabella; Isabella dyed young, but Anne was married to two French Kings successiue, Charles the eighth, and Lewis the twelfth: by Lewis she had two daughters Claude and Rene; Claude who was first promised to Charles, who was sincking then duke of Angoulesme, and afterwards French king, first of that name. Rene was married to Hercules of Este duke of Ferrara: the Earle Gaston and his wife D. Leonora, had besides these, Catherine, married to the Earle of Candale, and mother of 3. children, the

A the eldest of whome was Lord of Candale, the second Arch-bishoppe of Bourdeaux, and the third who was a daughter named Anne, Queene of Hungarie and Bohemia, wife to Vladislaus, son to Casimir King of Polonia. This Vladislaus first king of Bohemia, had before married Donna Beatrix of Arragon, widdow to King Mathias of Hungarie, for whose sake the Hungarians chose him for their King; but he was diuorced from her in regard of her loose life, and afterwards married this Ladie Anne of Foix, who was brought to her husband thorough the Dutchie of Milan, at that time possessed by the French, and by the cittie of Venice, the great friend and ally of this King, Leonardo Lauredan being at that time Duke thereof. Of this marriage was borne Lewis, who succeeded his father in the kingdomes of Bohemia and Hongarie, husband to Queene Marie of Castile, who was sister to the Emperour Charles, and a daughter named Anne married to Ferdinand of Austria, afterwards Emperour and Brother to Charles, and by her, king of Bohemia and Hungarie, after the death of his father-in-law King Lewis, of the which Fernand and Anne, the Emperour Maximilian was borne, and many other children: the fifth daughter of Earle Gaston, and Donna Leonora of Nauarre, dyed vnmarried, beeing onely promised to the Duke of Medina Celi, issued from the same house of Foix, and was called after her mothers name Leonora. This house of Foix and Nauarre hath brought forth this off-spring of great and illustrious Princes, giuing to Christendome at one time foure Queenes, who were cousin-germaines, namely, Catherine Queene of Nauar, Germaine Queene of Castile and Arragon, Anne Queene of France, and Anne Queene of Bohemia and Hungary.

Francis Phœbus, the foure and thirtieth King of Nauarre.

L E t vs now go forward with our Historie: after Queene Leonora's decease, her sonnes D of Nauarre, the yeare, one thousand, foure hundred, seuentie nine, beeing brought vp in his Earldome of Foix, and Lordship of Bearne, vnder the gouernement of Donna Margaleine of France his mother, and the Cardinall his Vncle: but three yeares were expired before hee durst passe into his Kingdom, by reason of the seditions which suddenly after the Queene Leonora's decease, were renewed betwixt the Beaumontois, the Earle of Lerin beeing their head, who held the Cittie of Pampelona, and those of Grammont, who followed Pedro of Peralta the Constable, and Philip of Nauarre the Marshall, who had for their forts the places of Estella, Sanguessa, Olica, and a great part of the citrie of Tudela.

The young Kings mother made a iourney thither, as appeareth by letters graunted E by her this same yeare, dated at Pampelona; where shee laboured (though in vaine) to settle peace and quietnesse in the Countrey: diuers Prelates and great Lords of Castile and Arragon did in like manner, but to none effect, go about to appease these obstinate seditious persons, who were hardened in their wickednesse. The Faction of Grammont was much discontented, to see the Earle of Lerin married to a Ladie of the blood royal; sister to King Fernand of Castile, and for that hee was possessed of the citrie of Pampelona, the chiefe of the Kingdom, they sayd, that hee thought to make himselfe king of Nauarre. These quarrels beeing sharply pursued by either side, it happened that Philip of Nauarre, successefull to his father in the office of Marshall, and in hatred to the Earle of Lerin, did surprize the citrie of Viana, but he could not get the castle, wherein a knight F of the house of Gongora was captaine for the Earle: and beeing out of hope of beeing able to keepe the towne, so great was his hatred towards the Earle, as hauing comploted with Don John of Riueira, Gouvernour of Logroño for the king of Castile, Captaine Mudarra, and other Spanish knights, he deliuered the towne into their hands: the which deed of his, the Earle of Lerin greatly resenting, endeauored to recouer that losse, which did not so much touch him nor his faction, as the whole Realme in generall, and hee, did

Seditions awak-
ked by those of Beaumont and Grammont in Nauarre.

Viana surprised by the M.
shall Philip.

Exploites of
the Earle of Lerin.

so well bestirre himselfe, as he did not onely recouer Viana, but Larraga likewise, which A had beene before that time possessed by the king of Castile, and if he had beene as strong as hee was courageous and skilfull in martiall affaires, he would, without all doubt, haue recouered the places of Saint Vincent, la Garde, and Arcos, the which hee attempted: but hee was too weake: with this good happe, yet neuertheless hee rooke the towne of Miranda vppon Argas, and caused those which held it, to leape into the riuier. In these troubles was the Realme of Nauarre, when this young King, Francis Phœbas, came to the Crowne, in danger vppon such like occasions, to haue the kings of Castile attempt some thing to his preiudice, as well thorough the euill offices of the chiefe of the Factions, as by the superfluous duties of the Capitaines of the frontiers, who to bee accounted good B and profitable seruants, do oftentimes draw their masters into vniust quarrels, contrarie to their owne minds and dispositions.

28
Castile.
Parliament at Toledo.

Consultation touching the reueuion of the royall reuenue.

The Court of Castile remayned yet at Toledo, in the which cittie in the beginning of the yeare, one thousand, foure hundred, eightie, the kings had called a Parliament: there the Deputies of the citties, who were accustomed to haue voyces, hauing well weighed and considered the disposition of the royall reuenue, which was alienated to particular persons, in recompences, perpetuall rents, superfluous gifts, and other such like wastes, which were not well digested, did craue reformation thereof, and demanded to haue C those things which had beene giuen from the Crowne, to be restored to the same: and they were the more instant therein, because they did fore-see, that if the kings did not looke to it, necessitie would constraîne them, to seeke money in another nature, and to charge the people with new tributes and taxes.

The matter being consulted on by the kings, the Cardinall of Spaine, and by other Prelates, Lords, and Knights, it was determined, that regard should bee had to the peoples admonishment: but concerning the manner how, the opinions were diuerse: some thought it fit, that whatsoever had beene alienated should be vniued againe: others sayd, of opinion, to call that onely in question which had beene euill employed: others sayd, that no distinction ought to be made in that point, but either to take all, or leaue all. Vppon this diuersitie of opinions, the Kings knew not what to resoluë; but wrote their letters to the great Lords of Spaine to come to Toledo to giue their opinions concerning D that businesse, and if some of them could not come thither in person, that they should set downe in writing, what they thought was fit to be done, and to send it. The most part of them thought it requisite, that the whole reuenue of the Crowne should be reunited.

Whereupon the Cardinall did secretly aduise the Kings, to make this difference in the matter: namely, to take away from those vppon whom the late King Henry had bestowed anything, that is to say, from the Lords and Knights which had beene the cause of the troubles, and had followed the Prince Don Alphonso: and not to mention those gifts which they themselues had giuen vnto such as had serued them. In these difficulties the Kings made this conclusion: That all those who had gifts, reuenues, and other such like E pensions out of the ordinarie reuenue of the Crowne, should by a certaine prefixed time come and shew cause, how and wherefore they had obtrayned such graunts: and Friar Fernand of Talauera was appoynted to search out the truth, and set downe an order, vppon whose good conscience and integritie, all men reposed great trust, and to satisfie euery man according vnto right and reason; who with other assistants did so order the matter, as hee brought backe three millions of reuenues into the kings coffers, and diuers men had their graunts confirmed, others were cut off in part, others had all taken from them, and others enioyed their pensions during their liues. The Estates were likewise very much busied about other matters, and euery day was a Councell held, in fiue feuerall chambers: one was for the State, another for the administration of iustice, another for the affaires of Arragon and Sicill, another for the businesse of the commons, F and for the iurisdicions of the Hermandades or brotherhoods, and the fift and last, for the treasure and royall reuenue.

At the same time iustice, which had a long time beene banished out of Spayne, was called home againe and reuerenced, and diuers wicked persons punished, among whom

Hernand

A Hernand Alarcon, the familiar friend and instigator of the Arch-bishoppe of Toledo, a seditious and turbulent person, was beheaded, by meanes of which example, euery man submitted himselfe to law, and framed himselfe to a ciuill and honest life: then did the tyrannies of great men cease, the thefts and robberies of their followers were suppressed, in such sort, as the fields were as safe as good townes, those things which were vsurped were restored to the right owners: the seates of iustice were well ordered, and diuers good lawes and Edicts were made.

It was there enacted, that the Iewes and Moores in townes and citties, should dwell in streetes and places by themselves. All Noblemen were forbidden to carrie Guards about with them, to place Crownes vppon their shields and armes, or to haue vsfers to carrie maces or rodde before them, vnlesse they were Magistrates; nor to vse titles in their letters, belonging to Princes and Soueraigne Lords: And for that the Kings felt their consciences burthened with the death of many poore people, who had followed them in their last warres, whose widowes and children were in great necessitie, they appoynted a summe of twentie millions of Marauidis to bee distributed vnto such people by Friar Hernand of Talauera, as he should thinke it meete and conuenient, thinking by laying this charge vppon him, to discharge themselves.

Charity of F.
Fernand and Queene Isabel.

In this assembly of the Estates in the moneth of May, the Infant Don John was, according to the custome of Spayne, sworne vnto, as Prince of the Asturia's, and heire to the C Kingdomes of Castile and Leon, in the presence of the Prelats and Lords, whose names follow: The Cardinall Don Pedro Gonçales of Mendoza, Arch-bishoppe of Siuill, and withall, Bishoppe of Sigüenza: Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, Bishoppe of Palence, Friar Alphonso of Burgos, Bishop of Cordoua, with others of the Clergie. For the Nobilitie and State militarie, Don Alphonso of Cardegnia, Master of Saint Iames, Don Pero Fernandes of Velasco, Constable of Castile, and Earle of Haro: Don Alphonso Henriques great Admirall of Castile, and the Kings Vnkle: Don Pero Aluarez Osorio, Marquis of Astorga, and Earle of Transimara: Don Aluaro of Mendoza, Earle of Castro: Don Lorenzo Suarez of Mendoza, Earle of Crugna: Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Earle of Tendilla, Don Diego Lopes of Estuniga, Earle of Miranda: Don Fernand Aluarez of Toledo, D Earle of Oropesa, Don Guttiere de Sottomajor Earle of Benalcazar: Don Bertrand de la Cueva, Earle of Ledesma, Don Diego Fernandes of Quignones, Earle of Luna, Don John de Ribera, Lord of Montemajor, Don Aluar Peres of Guzman, Lord of Saint Eulalia: Don Guttiere of Cardegnia, great Commaunder of Leon, with diuers others of name and place: For the third estate, the Deputies of the Citties on this side, and beyond the mounts, did take the accustomed oath, to wit, for old Castile, Burgos, Leon, Segobia, Auila, Soria, Zamora, Toro, and Salamanca: and for the other part, Toledo, Guadalajara, and Cuenca: and for Andalusia, Siuill, Cordoua, and Iaca, and the Cittie of Murcia for that Countrey: Diuers Lords likewise of the Realme Arragon were present at this solemnitie, as Don Raymond Bishoppe of Vrgell, and Don Philip of Arragon E bastard-sonne to the late Prince Charles, Nephew to the King, and cousin germaine to Prince Iohn.

Prince Iohne
sworne vnto
with great solemnitie.

At this assembly, Don Andrea de Cabrera, and Donna Beatrix of Bouadilla his wife were created Marquises of Moya, with graunt of twelue hundred vassals neere to Segobia for the good seruices which they had done to the kings Don Ferdinand, and Donna Isabella, at whose table, the more to honour them, they did eate, the same day. The Parliament or assembly of States being ended, the Court came to Medina del campo, where they began to take great paines to haue the ordonances of the Estates executed, and put in practise, vppon the vsurpations, tyrannies, quarrels, and enmities which were past. In the same towne a knight, whose name was Aluar Ianes of Lugo, was put to death, who F being couetous to adde to his owne great wealth the goods of a certaine Cittizen, hired a certaine Notarie or Scriuener to make some false and counterfeite contracts, and to the end the deceit might not be knowne, hee fourth with payed him his hire, cutting his throate, and burying him secretly in the back-side of his owne house: the which murder was discovered by the diligent inquirie of the poore widdow, whose husband was neuer scene abroad, since hee was scene to go into the Knights house.

A mother as gentle as a child.

King Fernand
and Queene Isabel jealous of Iustice.

29
Nauarre.

The Estates of Nauarre at Tafalla.

Bishop of Pam-pelona (since by
D. Pedro de
Peralta.

Marquis of Fajeta.

This Gentleman was taken; conuicted, and beheaded notwithstanding his great friends A and kindred, who offered fortie thousand Duckets for to saue his life, which was a great summe in those dayes, which sundrie of the Councel wished the Kings to take: but these Princes beeing great Iusticers, would not hearken to it: but the Knight was executed according to his deserts.

The yeare 1481. the Kings departed from Medina, and did take leaue the one of the other for a certain time, the Queene went to Vailliodolit, and the King made a voyage into Arragon with intent to haue the like oath made there to his son Prince John, as the States of Castile had done at Toledo, and to order the State of his owne patrimonial Kingdome, as also to demaund a certaine subsidie of money of his subiects there.

The King beeing at Sarragossa, the Cardinall of Foix, and his brother Don James, Vn- B kles to the young King Francis Phæbus of Nauarre, came thither to him, to beseech him to ayde him with forces and meanes to suppress his audacious subiects, which did di- sturbe the peace of his Kingdome, who contemning his youth, did commit infinite ty- rannies there, whom king Fernand did most louingly receiue as his Nephewes, sonnes to Queene Leonora his sister, and did promise concerning their demaunds, to performe the office of a Christian Prince, friend, and neere kinsman to the young king. During his a- boade at Sarragossa, the Marshall of Nauarre, who was at Tudela, had ordinarie intelli- C gence with diuers Castilian Lords, some of whome knowing their masters will, did be- ginne to treat of meanes for the pacification of the factions of Beaumont and Gram- mont, by whome the kingdome was spoiled. Amongst those which did most earnestly employ themselves therein, was a Friar, Preacher to king Fernand, whose name was A- barca, who dealt in such sort, as hee agreed vpon a marriage betwixt Philip of Nauarre the Marshall, and a daughter of the Earle Lewis of Lerin, which he thought would bee a meanes, that these two Lords would forget all former hatred, and become heartie and affectionate friends, by whose example, the rest of the factions would do the like, but the poore Friar was deceyued in his hope: for those of the Grammontois faction, rejecting this marriage, as hurtfull to their side, and fearing to lose so mighty a Captaine, did so preuayle with the Marshall Philip, as notwithstanding that matters were in such forward- nesse, as neither of the parties could go backe with honour and credit, the Marshall ne- uertheless refused that alliance, and went wholly backe from his former promises: whereat the Earle of Lerin beeing extremely enraged, and beeing of a haughtie and proud spirit, was fore-reuenged, by killing the Marshall, as hee rode from Sanguessa to Villa-franca to speake with Don John de Ribera, the Earle hauing attended for him vpon the way, as well for to chastise his lightnesse and inconstancie, as for ialousie that hee had, concerning the businesse that the Marshall went about in conferring with that Ca- stillan, doubting some treason as well towards himselfe as the kingdome, like to that of Viana which he still remembred, and could by no meanes forget.

In this manner, the father and the sonne, both of them Marshalls of the Realme of Na- uarre, did perish by one self same hand: in which Office Peter of Nauarre succeeded, who E was younger brother to Philip, and the fourth of that family, who had held the same di- gnitie. The Constable Pedro de Peralta was at the same time out of the Realme, who ha- uing with great labour obtrayned absolution from the Pope, for the murder committed on the person of Don Nicholas of Echaurri, Bishop of Pampelona, did publicly ac- knowledge his fault in the cathedrall Church of Valencia, and liued not long after, lea- uing one onely daughter who was called Ioane of Peralta, heire of his house, who was wife to Don Tristo Carillo of Acugna, sonne to the Arch-bishop of Toledo, of whome we haue often spoken in this Historie.

This house of Peralta, descended from the royall stocke of Nauarre, and by the death of Pedro of Peralta, the office and dignitie of Constable ended in that family, the F successors whereof were called Earles of Saint Stephen, and great Chamberlaines to the Kings of Nauarre. Lewis of Beaumont, Earle of Lerin, entring into that Office was af- terward dispossessed thereof, and the Constableship fell since to Don Alphonso, grand- child to Pedro of Peralta, the heires of whose house, in proceesse of time, were called Mar- quis of Falles, a towne in Nauarre.

Ciuiil

A Ciuiil warres spoyling after this manner the poore Kingdome of Nauarre, the young Kings vnles returned into the Realme, accompanied with diuers Lords and Knights of the King of Castiles Court, who promised them that if by faire meanes, they could not bring the Kings rebellious subiects to his obedience, the which hee wished them in any case to trie, that he would then furnish him with men, munition and money for the warres: these Lords being come to the towne of Tafalla, they did forthwith assemble the generall Estates, by vertue of a commission which they had from the King, the Cardinall and Lord James of Foix promising free and sure accesse and safe conduct to all men.

E The Deputies of the three Estates of the Kingdome being assembled, and hauing vn- derstood by the Cardinall the cause why they were come into Nauarre, wherevnto were ioyned the French King Lewis the eleuenths letters, which did exhort the Nauar- rois to continue obedient to their King, and to acknowledge and serue him as faithfull subiects ought to doe, providing thereby, for the welfare, rest and quiet, of their coun- try: they did all with one generall consent make answere, that the Lords and people of Nauarre, did neuer meane to forsake their obedience towards Francis Phæbus the young King, whom they did acknowledge for their naturall and lawfull Prince, but that on the contrary they had euer till now beene ialous and fearefull, in regard of his youth and absence from the Realme, least some stranger should haue made himselfe

C Maister thereof, and therefore they did no lesse desire his comming then himselfe, and they humbly besought him to make hast as a thing most necessary: and if his comming had beene hindred by meanes of the ambition and tyranny of a few priuate persons, they gaue him to vnderstand, that it was to the great grieve of others, and in no sort occasioned by common consent; therefore they intreated him to come in a lucky ho- wer, seeing they were ready to receiue and honour him, accordingly as it did become them. The Cardinall and his brother vnderstanding so pleasing and desired an answer, did forthwith write thereof to the young King Francis Phæbus, and to King Fernand his great vncl. And because whatsoever was done, was to no purpose vnlesse those two great houses of the Earle of Lerin and the Marshall Don Pedro were reconciled,

D the Cardinall did vse the best meanes hee could to make them friends: but by reason of their inueterate quarrels hee found matter enough whereon to set his iudgement and industry a worke, and also incredible resistance against his brothers authority and his owne, so as diuers times they were in despaire of the matter: neuertheless, knowing that by perseuerance, all difficulties are surmounted, and that in such holy and laudable actions we ought to vse our best endeauors, they laboured so earnestly therein, as in the end they thought that they had wholly reconciled them. And for a greater and more strict band of this alliance, this assembly of the Estates beeing in the time of Lent, the Cardinalls would needs haue the Constable and the Marshall to receiue the Sacrament together, in an hostie parted betwixt them in the Monastery of St. Sebastian in Tafalla.

E But as the heart of man is oftentimes different from the outward shew, so this reconcil- iation prooued but feigned and counterfeit; for notwithstanding promises, oaths, and all respect to Religion, which are oftentimes but masks to euill intents, the Earle of Lerin thinking with these ceremonies to haue sufficiently secured his aduersary, did determine to kill him vpon the first proffered occasion, perswading himselfe that if he could dis- patch this man, as hee had done his father and brother in time before, that then in Na- uarre, hee should haue no more great enemies left to make head against him. There- fore vpon the very next day after their reconciliation which was good Friday, he hauing intelligence that the Marshall rode from Tafalla towards Tudela, or else to the Mona- stery of Oliua, hee came with a great troupe vnder the hill of Agnorba and there lay in

F ambush intending to assaile him on the sodaine as hee should passe that way. The Mar- shall who feared no such matter, came riding in the company of the Earle of Saint Steuens the Constable of Peraltas successor with their traine, and beeing come neere to the place where his death was prepared, Gods will was that hee had some inkling of the Earles treachery, wherevpon on a sodaine hee galloped backe againe as fast as hee could, beeing so hardly pursued by his enemy, as without the assistance of Arnaud

Gouernor

The Estates of Nauarre at Tafalla.

Perseuerance ouer-come
all difficulties.

Feigned reconciliation betwixt the Earle of Lerin and the Marshall
of Nauarre

Treachery of
the Earle of Lerin against the Marshall.

Starb recom-
mited by the Earle of Lerin.

gouvernour of Vngul, who speedily thrust him into a Church, he had beene there slaine. A
The Earle beeing madde that the Marshall had escaped, did the very same day execute his furie vpon other Gramontois, for with his owne hand hee slew Leon de Garro the bastard, the Arch-priest Mendigorria left Iohn de Velez of Medran for dead, with diuerse others slaine and hurt, and then returned home to his house: not long after that, certaine of the family of Artieda, hauing murthered some of the house of Ayane, the mur-therers were vpheld and receiued by the Constable the Earle of Beaumont, by reason whereof, those of the family of Ayane, who had euer followed the Beaumonts faction, reuolted from their side to those of Grammont. These things are set downe by some, to bee more likely to haue beene done after the assembly of the estates, and they say, B that it is not to bee beleeued that the Constable would so much forget himselfe, as to commit such an act the next day after his reconciliation, which was made in so religious a manner, especially seeing the Cardinall and his brother were in the realme, and the estates of the kingdome there assembled, and they rather beleue, that this quarrell was renewed a long time afterward in the reigne of Queene Catherine, vppon some new wrongs offered betwixt these Lords.

30
Castile.
The decrees of the Estates executed.

The peace of Castile, according to the determination of the States at Toledo, was vertuously procured by Queene Isabell, who in her husbands absence remained at Valiodolit, beeing accompanied and counselled by the Cardinall of Spaine, the Earle of Benauent and others; by whose aduise were sent into Galicia, to order the affaires of C that Prouince, which had been greuously shaken by the fore-past tempests, Don Ferdinand d'Acugna a good and a vertuous Knight, sonne to the Earle of Buendia, with title of Gouvernor, vnto whom the Licenciart Garcí Lopes de Chinchilla of the Kings councell, and a man of great integrity, was ioyned in quality of Corrigidor, or Iudge, who found much to be reformed there; for diuerse tyrants oppressed their neighbours, vsurped the temporall and spirituall patrimony and reuenews of the Church, nor caring for God, the King, nor Iustice, nor acknowledging any superiority, and did keepe backe the Kings tribute. The cities of Lugo, Orense, Mondogredo, nor the townes of Biuro and Corunna were exempted from such calamities, in regard whereof the Gouvernour and the Corrigidor, accompanied with two hundred horse, went to the city of S. James, D there to make their residence, and to begin to order the affaires according to the forme of law: The inhabitants of Saint James seeing their company so small, were afraide that they were too weake to take in hand to bridle so many tyrants as were in that coun-trei, did make some difficultie to let them into the city: but at the last being satisfied by the reasons of the Licenciart, they opened their gates, and promised to their power to aide and assist them to execute iustice: wherefore they began to fall to worke, and they made such executions, without partialitie or respect of persons, as they were not afraide to strike off the head of the Marshall Pero Pardo, who had committed infinite mischiefs, so as in lesse then three moneths, more then one thousand five hundred persons, attainted with notorious crimes worthy of death, went out of the countrey of Galicia: and these E Commissioners did raze downe to the ground diuerse strong houses, which serued for places of retreat to theenes and robbers: by meanes of which executions, euery one did acknowledge his dutie, and there were many, who without any constraint by iustice, did restore that which they held of other mens, by meanes whereof Don Ferdinand de Acugna, and Garcí Lopes de Chinchilla got much honor and credit.

Iustice established in Galicia.

31 Spanish Army
in Sicilie.

This yeare, fiftie ships of warre, with men and munition, were set forth out of Biscay, Guipuscoa and Castile, vnder the title of warre against the Turkes, wherevnto the people of Biscay did contribute, not preiudicing their priuiledges and exemptions, onely for the present occasion of so holy a warre, the Armie met together at Laredo, and was sent into Sicill, vnder the conduct of Don Francisco Henriques, sonne to the Admirall F of Castile, and serued at the taking of Otranto, which the Turkes had taken from Don Ferdinand the bastard of Arragon, who at the same time reigned at Naples: Before the Armie departed from Laredo, the standards and banners of the ships were blessed, Don Iohn de Ortega Pouruoier of Villafranca, singing a sollemne masse: then they sailed alongst the coast of Spaine, and ioyned with other twenty vessels that came from Galicia, so as
the

A the whole army of Castile consisted of three score and tenne ships gallantly rigged and furnished, who sayling towards Otranto perceiued the army of Portugall to be there before them. By this succor the towne was recouered from the Turkes, who yelded it vp vpon the newes of the death of their Emperour Mahomet, which happened at the same time. The Turkes being gonne forth of Italy, and the suspicion of other enterprises ceasing, the Spanish and Portugall ships returned home into their owne countrey.

The first acts of the new Inquisition in Spaine were at that time so sharpe and violent, as this yeere 1481. Don Pero Gonçales de Mendoza Cardinall of Spaine vpon the B extreame complaints which the Conuerts did make, by reason of their vniust persecutions were enforced to take some milder and gentler course: for there were already more then three thousand house-holds destroyed and rooted out, onely in Siuill, and the Diocesse thereof. For these causes the Cardinall and other Prelats met together to moderate the cruelty and violence of the pittifull Inquisitors. Then friar Thomas of Torquemada, a Iacobin, was chosen chiefe inquisitor: who by the Kings leaued did appoint diuers Iudges in the Prouinces of Spaine, which by the Popes authority did enquire of euery ones faith and manners. This iurisdiction hath beene oftentimes since then amplified and reformed vntill that the tribunalls and seates were established in manner following. Valiodolit, and Calaoorra on that side of the C mounts towards Burgos, and Toledo and Cuença on the other side, Murcia in her owne iurisdiction: Siuill and Cordoua in Andalusia: and Erena in Extremadura: then after the conquest of Granado in the same city.

Rigor of the Spanish Inquisition moderated.

Friar Thomas
of Torquemada.

The Inquisition was successiueley receiued into Arragon, at Saragossa, and Valencia, and at Barcelona for Cattalonia: All which Prouinces are twelue in number. Na-uarre answereth to Calaoorra, the seate whereof was transported to Logroño for better ease and commodity. The knowledge of these Iudges Inquisitors did at the same time chiefly extend to the Iewes, and Moores, which were conuerted, and yet neuer-theless did secretly adhere to their old sects: then to heretikes, and such as were reuolted from the Catholike faith, to Magitians, Blasphemers, and those that were attainted D with the sinne against nature. The generall Inquisition remayning at Court nere to the Kings person did rule and were chiefe ouer all these other Tribunalls. At the same time Pope Sixtus the fifth, did allow and authorize all that the Cardinall and his Coun-cell had decreed concerning that matter, and he did confirme the election of friar Thomas of Torquemada of the order of the Preachers, and Prior of the Monastery of Santa Cruz in Segobia, vnto whom Diego de Merla the Assitant of Siuill, and Pero Martines Camagno the Kings Secretary were ioyned as coadiutors. The first effect of the Inquisition after that it was ordained, was to set downe an edict that all Heretikes and Apostataes should appeare, and re-unite themselves to the Church of Rome, acknowledging their offences: More then seuteene thousand persons, did appeare E at this commaundement, who were enioyned what to say and doe; then they proceeded against the obstinate and rebellious, more then two thousand of them were burned and their goods confiscated, and taken from their children and heires: the same sentence was executed vpon those that were absent and dead, digging vp their bones and burning them: in such sort as the Inquisition continuing thus rigorously, great numbers did leaue Castile, and with-drew themselves into the Kingdomes of Nauarre and Portugall; others went into France, England and to other farré Countries.

Power of the Inquisitors.

Sharpe and rigorous executions of the Inquisition.

Let vs now returne vnto the Court, which was then at Valiodolit where the Queene of Castile was accompanied after the accustomed manner with a greate F traine of Ladies and Gentlewomen, the Nobility (who in these latter times giue themselves wholly to the exercise of armes, and doe for the most part contemne all other course of life which causeth them and not without cause to be esteemed of all men as people very vnprofitable in time of peace) did in this Court thinke vpon nothing else then for to serue and court the Ladies and Gentlewomen, and gawe themselves to such other like vaine and idle pleasures, accustomed in Princes Courts, and most of them into the riuer, fearing to bee pursued by the Queenes people, and by the breake of day he arriued at Villalobos, where he changed horses and kept on for his greater furety the way of Benauent though it were the longest, and passing the bridge of Castro Gencalo, he turned on his left hand towards Saint Ciprians Church into the which he entered, as triumphing of his victory, with his vnclé Don Pedro de Guzman, and his brother Don Pedro Nugnes de Guzman, who waited for him there, and from thence, they came altogether to Torall, the which place they beganne to fortifie fearing that the Admirall, who was a great Lord, and the Queene likewise would send thither to beseege him. Ramir Nugnes leauing his vnclé and his brother at Torall, came to Leon, where diuerse of his friends met him, reioycing with him for what he had done. It is reported that entring into the Church of Saint Dominike in the same city, where diuers of his predecessors were buried, after that he had said his praiers he said openly before all men, that since the time he had bene disgraced, hee durst not come into that Church, being ashamed to be found in a place where the memories and remembrances of so many illustrious and honourable persons did remaine: but hauing now recovered his owne honour, his fathers, and that of their whole family, he was boldly come to visit them. Hauing afterward visited his mother, and his betrothed Lady Donna Maria de Quignones youngest daughter to the Earle of Luna, and tarried a while in the city, he withdrew himselfe by his vnclés counsell to the castle of Auiados, where he told him that he should be in greater safety then at Torall. Now after that this outrage was committed at Medina del Campo, the Marquis of Astorga, being present thereat, did enforme the Queene who commaunded Alphonso Osorio to pursue Don Ramir Nugnes and his people with fifty horse, who hauing rode all that night and the next day without finding any of those whom he sought for, he came and lodged at Villademor, a place not farre distant from Torall, where afterward, other captaines and souldiars sent from the Queene did meet together, who made a shew as if they would beseege the towne. The Bachelor La Font, came thither likewise to commaund Pedro de Guzman in the Queenes name to yeeld the place, hee receiued this answer, that if Don Ramir Nugnes had done any thing for the recouery of his honour, it was not a fault that did deserue to haue him spoiled of his patrimony and goods, lest him by his predecessors, therefore he besought the Queene to proceed in this businesse by order of law, and if that Don Ramir should be found guilty, then to punish him: with these speeches they entertained La Font, and gained time to the end that Don Ramir might haue leasure to fortifie himselfe. Whilst La Font went to the Court, the souldiars did much hurt in the country neere to Torall, and prouoked the Inhabitants and souldiars which were within the towne, to come forth and skirmish with them, albeit that Don Pedro de Guzman withheld them from so doing, as much as in him lay: for hee would not giue that aduantage to Don Ramires aduersaries, to say that those of Torall had fought against the Queenes forces, who commaunded Alphonso de Quintanilla to vse all fit means that hee could to take the towne and castle of Torall, Alphonso hauing demanded to speake with Don Pedro de Guzman and Pero Nugnes his Nephew, acquainted them with the Queenes resolution, exhorting them not to delay the time till they brought the canon, they answered that they would in no sort shew themselves rebellious to the Queenes commaundement, but they onely entreated that Don Ramir might be proceeded against by the ordinary means of Iustice, which being graunted they were ready not onely to yeeld vp Torall, but the castle of Auiados in like manner, and namely if need required to put Don Ramires person into the hands of the Duke of Medina Sidonia in hostage, or to Don Gomes Suarez de Figueroa Earle of Fertia: the which was agreed vpon betwixt them and signed by a Notarie, and a truce made betwixt the beseegeors and beseegeed whilst that Alphonso de Quintanilla might goe and come from the Court. The Queene was at the same time gone to Cordoua, wherefore Alphonso being come to Valiadolid, and hauing conferred with the Admirall, sent the dispatch to Cordoua to the Queene, who appointed for depositor of Don Ramires lands and person the Earle of Fertia who had married D. Constance, D. Ramires Aunt, the Earle accepted it vpon condition, that he should be aduertized siue and twenty daies before the sentence should bee pronounced, and that the Kings should promise

33
Quarrell betwene D. Ramir Nugnes de Guzman and D. Frederike Henriques.

A promise him by writing, not to demaund Don Ramires person during the time of the processe, for he would assure him whilst he was in his power: On the other side, Don Ramir sent to the King of Portugall to know, whether that if it should happen, that a sentence should be pronounced against him which might touch his life and honour, hee would permit him to come into his Kingdome and Court in safety. These things being graunted, Don Ramir was brought to the castle of the towne of Fertia, for greater surety, and there kept in prison, vntill his processe was ready to be iudged; and then the Kings according to their promise, did aduertize the Earle of Fertia thereof at the appointed time, who sent Don Ramir well accompanied into Portugall, where King John the second of that name did then reigne, who entertained him very curteously, as shalbe hereafter declared.

Queene Isabella as hath bene said made a voyage into Arragon, and carried thither with her husband John Prince of the Asturias, and was receiued into the city of Calatayub with great and magnificent triumph, whether the King came not long after, who at the same time was at Barcelona with the Lords and Deputies of the States of Arragon, by whom Prince John was likewise sworne vnto and acknowledged for Prince of Girona, heire vnto Castile and Arragon, and true successor in these Kingdomes, the Kings in like manner did sweare and promise to maintaine the rights, priuiledges and exemptions of the country: That being done they went to Saragossa, where they made as triumphant an entry as at Calatayub. Thither was newes brought of the death of the great Turke Mahomet, of the succession of his sonne Bajazet in that Empire, and of the discord betwixt him and his brother Zemin, and also how that King Fernand of Naples had recouered the towne of Otranto which Acomat Basgia had taken from him the yeere before. For all which desired newes, the Kings yeelded thanks vnto God by generall processions after the accustomed manner. The Kings did in like manner assemble the Estates at Barcelona and Valencia, where the like others were made vnto Prince John as next future heire: but touching the subsidies they demaunded, it was impossible to obtaine any, and they were faine on the contrary to grant many things to the people, and in diuerse sorts to supply their wants, being but poore euer since the last warre that the Cartelans made against the King Don John.

The States of Arragon sworn to Prince John.

Estates at Barcelona and Valencia.

D Don Iohn the second of that name, and 13. King of Portugall.

A Bout the same time died Alphonso King of Portugall at Sintra, who since the last warres betwixt him and Castile, had euer led a melancholy and discontented life: he lay sicke siue and twenty daies, and deceased the three and fortieth yeere of his reigne, being of the age of nine and forty yeeres and seuen monethes: his body was buried with great solemnitie and funerall pompe in the royall Monastery of the bataille, of the Order of the Friars preachers: the Catholike Kings remayning still at Barcelona did there celebrate his obsequies. After him reigned his sonne D. Iohn, father to D. Alphonso who did not succeed him, because he died before his father, as hereafter shalbe mentioned.

34
Portugal.

King Fernand hauing ordered the affaires of Arragon, Catalonia and Valencia, returned with the Queene his wife into Castile, where, during her absence, the Constable and the Admirall were appointed Viceroyes, who committed the Earles of Luna and Valence to prison, in regard of certaine tumults and seditions which they had raised in the Kingdome of Leon. The Court remayning at that time at Medina del Campo, happened, as hath bene heretofore declared the reuenge of D. Ramir Nugnes de Guzman against the Admirall.

Castile.

There arose at the same time a new contention betwixt the Kings of Castile and the Pope, wherein they shewed no want of courage. The Episcopall See of Cuenca was vacant by the decease of the Bishop, Pope Sixtus gaue it to a Nephew of his borne in Genoa, Cardinall of the title of Saint George, without the knowledge or 35

Gggg

consent

consent of the Kings, who being highly displeased that the Bishopricks and great benefices of Spaine should be possessed by strangers, against the ancient decrees of the Estates of the Kingdome, obserued from time to time, did hinder this Cardinall from taking possession of the Bishoprike, and gaue the Pope to vnderstand how preiudiciall it might be to the Realmes of Spaine, whereof the Pope making no account and continuing in his former purpose, the Kings commanded all their subiects that were in the Court of Rome, to depart from thence, and made protestations to the Pope that they would procure a generall Councell to bee called to redresse these and other such like disorders.

Generall counsels a thorred
by the Popes.

The Pope who abhorred that more then any thing in the world, sent a Gentleman of Genoa, whose name was Dominico Centurion for his Ambassador into Spaine, who being come to Medina del Campo, and crauing audience, it was refused him, and he was told from the Kings, that because their Ambassadors were euill intreated and contemned at Rome, they would not entertaine nor harken to the Popes, therefore he should doe well and wisely, speedily to depart from thence, and concerning his owne person, they would no farther assure it in their dominions, then whilst he could returne towards Italy. The Ambassador being amazed at this commandement, did forthwith reiect the name and priuledge of an Ambassador, and befought them to hold him as their subiect, for he was borne in their Kingdome. The Kings in regard of this humillity, committed him prisoner to the fort of Medina, from whence soone after he was deliuered, by the meanes of the Cardinall of Spaine. When the Pope vnderstood what the Kings had done, hee was content to let them enioy their antient rights, and they made couenants and agreements together, by the which it was decreed, that the Kings of Spaines presentations to the Bishopricks, should from thenceforth bee admitted in the Court of Rome, and they should be bestowed vpon such as had well deserved of the Spanish common-wealth: and by this meanes it hath bene oftentimes scene that diuers good religious persons haue bene, against their willes, constrained to become Bishopps, as Don Pedro de Maluenda, generall of the Order of Saint Ierolme, who was enforced to take the Bishoprike of Coria, and Doctour Don Tello de Buendia that of Cordoua.

Couenants betwixt the Popes and the King of Spaine.

36
Nauarre.

Before we end this booke, it shall not be amisse to returne to Nauarre where wee left the Cardinall of Foix, and his brother Iames of Foix, much busied to ouer-rule the chiefe of the factions in that Kingdome. They hauing had an answer of the States such as they desired, and ordered the affaires of the country as well as they could, came backe into Arragon before King Fernand went thence, with whom hauing consulted, they concluded that it was expedient, that King Francis Phabus should come into his Kingdome, and enter it in armes and military Order as soone as conueniently he could, before the peoples mindes and affections should be changed by any occasion that might happen; wherefore as soone as they were returned into France, they declared to the King and to Donna Magdalaine his mother, what they had effected, as well in Nauarre, as in Arragon, signifying vnto them that the chiefe hope consisted in in diligence: wherefore they sodainely assembled their friends and seruants from all partes, and gathered together a thousand or fiftene hundred horse, and like number of footmen, with which forces, this young Prince, accompanied with his mother, and the Cardinall his vnckle entred into Nauarre, where hee was receiued by the Nobility and townes, without any difficulty or resistance at all, namely the Earle of Lerin albeit he was not pleased with his comming, did deliuer vp the city of Pampelona vnto him, considering that if he should doe otherwise, the young King had the King of Castile on one side, and the French King on the other, mighty Princes and his neere kinsmen, who would contraine him to doe his duty.

King Francis Phabus entreth into his Realme of Na-
uarre.

King Francis Phabus in the month of Nouember the yeere 1482. made his entrie into the City, where the three Estates were assembled, he was there crowned, and did giue and receiue the othes of fidelitie, and good gouernment, in the Cathedrall Church after accustomed manner, in the presence of the Cardinall his vnckle, the Lords of his Kingdome, the Princeesse his mother accompanied with with Ladies and Gentlewomen, and by the Ambassadors of Castile, France, and from other potentates being at that time not aboue fiftene yeeres of age: and the same day and many daies after, tilts, turneys, and other royall feasts were there made in magnificent manner. These matters being ended, he went in person to visit the townes, cities and fortresses, as well to see the manner of the gouernment of the country, as to receiue the particular othes of the captaines and gouernors, to see iustice administred, and to make how firme and constant euery one was in his seruice: and the better to provide for the publike peace and quiet, he commanded proclamation to be made by sound of trumpet both in his owne Court and ouer the whole Kingdome, that no man vpon paine of death should any more vse the seditious names of Beaumont and Grammont. And the more to gratifie the Earle of Lerin and to binde him more strictly to his seruice, hee confirmed the office of high Constable vnto him which Peter de Peralta deceased had held in time before and gaue him moreouer Sarraga and other places which he had won from the Spaniards, Viana excepted, because it was the chiefe of the principallity, and the title of the eldest sonne of Nauarre. In the Cathedrall Church, where hee was crowned, he gaue gifts, and graunted priuiledges, namely to be free from lodging, the letters whereof were dated at Tafalla in the month of Ianuary, the same yeere: he did gratifie in like manner other Lords, Knights, Churches, Townes, and particular persons with such moderation and equity, as all men did admire so great wisdom in such young yeeres, and did praise God that had giuen so good a King vnto Nauarre: In all which matters, he was ruled by the wisdom of the Princeesse his mother, of the Cardinall his vnckle, and other persons of State and experience which were in his Court and neere his person. Whilst in his nonage his mother the Princeesse did gouerne the Kingdome, shee vsed these titles in her letters. We Magdalene daughter and sister to the French King, Princeesse of Viana, gouernor and protectresse of our deere and best beloved sonne Francis Phabus by the grace of God King of Nauarre &c. This Prince was surnamed Phabus because he was faire as the sunne among the starres, and also in regard diuers of his race were of the same name. Diuers marriages were procured for him, but none was accomplished: for he died fiftene monthes after he was crowned, hauing but shewed himselfe to the world, and sodainely vanished in the prime of his youth. King Fernand his great vnckle, would haue married him to his second daughter Donna Joane, who was since heire to all his Kingdomes: but the Princeesse his mother following the counsell of King Lewis the eleuenth, who did not greatly affect the affaires of Castile, did hinder that match. The like hinderance was ministred by her and King Lewis in the marriage of his sister Catherine who was Queene of Nauarre and the Prince Don Iohn of Castile heire to the same crowne: for King Lewis who had great descignes in his head, did goe about to marry this King Francis Phabus to Donna Joane the Nun at Coimbra the pretended Queene of Castile: and by that pretended right, and the forces of his owne Kingdome, to cast King Fernand and Queene Isabella out of the Realmes of Castile and Leon, and for euer to keepe the Earldome of Rossillion to himselfe, with other purposes which vanished into aire: and the better to effect what hee had determined sent Ambassadors into Portugall to King Alphonso, whose death happening this yeere with that of the King of Nauarres soone after, did quite frustrate these practizes: to the which, King Iohn of Portugall, who succeeded his father Alphonso, would by no means harken.

Rules and orders for the regimentallity of the Kingdome
of Nauarre.

Titles of Lady Magdalaine of France.

The end of the two and twentieth Booke.

Gggg 2

THE

THE THREE AND TWENTYTH Booke of the Generall History of Spaine.

The Contents.

- I The beginning of the long warre of Granado against King Muley Albohacen.
- 2 Death of King Francis Phœbus. Marriage procured by the Kings of Castile for their sonne D. Iohn with Queene Catherine of Nauarre.
- 3 Continuance of the warre of Granado. Conquest of that great Canaries: Switzers hired for this warre against the Moores.
- 4 Causes of suspicion of King Fernand and Queene Isabella against the heire of Nauarre. Intelligence and practizes with the factious to get that Kingdome.
- 5 Continuance of the warre of Granado.
- 6 The reign of King Iohn the second of Portugall. Discovery of Manicongo: the King intitles himself Lord of Guiney: Conspiracies: Death of the dukes of Bragança and Visco, with other irreligious acts in the same Court.
- 7 Continuance of the warre of Granado against Muley Boabdellin the one and twentieth King of that Country: The Pope helpeth forward the warre of Granado: Politike acts of the Kings of Castile.
- 8 Christopher Columbus his first coming to the Court of Castile: his disposition and qualities.
- 10 Siege of Malaga.
- 11 Hermandades or brother-hoods: Inquisition in Arragon.
- 12 Iohn d' Albret, and Catherine of Nauarre the five and thirtieth in Order of the Kings of Nauarre: The viscount of Narbonne quarrels about the Earledome of Foix: Enterprizes of Castile against Nauarre by means of the factious.
- 13 King Fernand's fauours toward Amand d' Albret: aide granted by him to the Princes and Lords confederate against the French King Charles the eight.
- 14 Death of the duke of Alua, and other Lords of Castile. Exploits done against the Moores.
- 15 Navigations of the Portugalls into the Ocean sea: search and discovery of unknowne lands, and great diligence of King Iohn of Portugall about these matters.
- 16 Treaties of marriage, and other domestick acts in the Court of Castile, oppression of the Conuersts.
- 17 Continuance of the warre against the Moores of Granado. Siege of Baga.
- 18 Mastership of Calatrava incorporated to the Crowne of Castile, with other matters belonging

The Contents.

- A long to the same Order.
- 19 Pursute of the Moorish warre, Baga yeelded up.
- 20 Pursutes against Mahomet the Little, the last King of Granado, to dispossesse him of the same city, vnder colour of right.
- 21 Marriage of Prince Alphouso of Portugall with Donna Isabella the Infanta of Castile.
- 22 Siege of Granado, and yeelding up of the same city.
- 23 Politike acts of King Fernand and Queene Isabella of Castile.
- B 34 D. Alphonsus of Portugall his pittifull death.

In this three and twintith Booke, for continuance of the Kings reigning in Spaine, mention is made of.

35. Iohn D' Albret, and Catherine his wife, King and Queene of Nauarre, himselve
the second of that name.

Gggg 3

THE

Qualities of King Muley Albohacen.

He warre which King Fernand began and ended against the Moores of Granado, was one of his most memorable acts: for the Kingdome of Granado did flourish more at that time, then it had done in many yeeres before, being full of men, riches and armor, and governed by one of the wisest and politike Kings that euer reigned ouer that Nation: namely Muley Albobacen, if hee had beene a little more faithfull, and lesse ambitious and proud, which qualities did plunge him into troubles, and miserable diuisions as well against his subiects in the bowels of his owne country as against the Castellians his neighbours. Hee had enioyed a long peace, and as it were with pride and brauing he pulled vp the assurance thereof by the rootes from the Kings of Caile, hauing freed and discharged himselfe from the tribute which his predecessors were accustomed to pay them. And albeit the same was greuous to King Fernand and Queene Isabella, which were magnanimous and impatient of all losse and diminution of their royall Estate: who besides that, were pricked forward as well by their owne zeale to Christian Religion, as by the perswasion of the Popes and Prelates to undertake the same warre: yet notwithstanding, the truce agreed vpon, the charge and discommodities of the warres which they had newly ended against the King of Portugall, the present confusion wherein the Realme of Castile was at the same time, did counsell them to waite for a fitter opportunity. Now when it pleased God (vnto whom all times and occasions are subiect) that this Mahometan superstition should take an end, and that this race of Moores should bee rooted out of Spaine by armes, seeing that other more conuenient meanes could not bee vsed by the Church, the warre which was constantly pursued against them, and wholly ended in the space of tenne yeeres, did beginne in this manner.

I
Nauarre.

King Muley Albobacen hauing beene aduertized that the city of Zahara was negligently kept by the Christians, and presuming vpon the truce, caused it to be taken in the night by scaladoe, together with the fort and castle; he carried away the men, catraile, and all the riches that he could finde therein, and manned it with a good and strong garison of Moores. The taking thereof being knowne in Granado, one of their Philosophers which they call Alphagiques cried out publicly: Either mine Oracles deceiue mee, or the end of the ancient reigne of the Moores in Spaine is at hand: the which in deed came to passe, the surprising of this towne giuing King Fernand occasion to lay hand vpon this conquest, with all his forces and meanes, and with incredible perseuerance: The newes that the truce was broken by the Moores being vnderstood at Medina del Campo where the Court then was, diuerse companies were dispatched to the frontiers of Murcia and Andaluzia, vnder the charge of Don Alphonso de Cardenaz Maister of Saint Iames, who lay in garrison at Eccia, Don Roderigo Telles Giron Maister of Calatraua, remained at Iuen and others in other places, besides the ordinary garrisons and forces of Don Pedro Henriques Gouvernor generall of the frontiers of Andaluzia and assisted by Don Pedro Ponce de Leon Marquis of Cales, the Duke of Medina Sidonia and others: the King commaunded all of them to make sharpe warre in the country of Granado with fire and sword, the which they beganne to execute with all violence; for hauing ouer-runne and ruined a great part of the country, they did winne by the industry of Diego Merlo assistant of Siuill, the city of Alhama, as carelesly guarded by the Moores as Zahara had beene by the Christians: by reason that it was aldest in the midst of their country: the castle was the first that was taken, being scaled, a valiant souldiar of Carmona called John de Ortega a great scaler of walles being the first man that entred it, being neerely followed by Martin Galindo a Knight borne at Eccia, John of Toledo and others to the number of thirty, who cut the next Court of garde in peeces, whom they found fast a sleepe, then they breake open a posterne gate, and gaue entrance to the rest of the army.

Alhama taken by the Castilians.

The Moores which were resident in the towne, hearing the noyse and clamour of this surprize, ranne confusedly and in great disorder (and not yet thorowly waked) to succour the castle: but they soone perceiued that it was past all remedie: therefore

A therefore they fortified themselves in the Mesquites or Churches, and in the towers of the walles, with all sorts of armes and engines for defence: giuing notice to their next neighbours of what had befallen them, and craued speedie ayde, which they expected also from Granado, which was ten miles distant from thence. The Christians who in like manner made account, that if they did not driue the enemies soorth of the towne the same day, they themselves should be ouer-runne with the multitudes which would come thither, did resolute valiantly to assaile them, by the perswasion and example of Sanchez de Anila Captaine of Carmona, and of Nicholas de Royas Gouvernor of Arcos: but finding great resistance, the opinion of those was almost followed, who would haue the castle razed downe to the ground, and so to returne: yet for all that the Marquis of Cales, nor the Assistant of Siuill not consenting thereunto, they began onely to ouerthrow that part of the castle which looked vpon the towne, and the souldiers beeing againe brought to the fight, did behaue themselves so valiantly, as, notwithstanding the Moores braue resistance, before the latter end of the day, all the churches and forts were taken, and the towne wholly wonne, which was esteemed the goodliest prize, that they could haue wished, for the importance of the warre. Three thousand Genets or light-horse were brought to this expedition, and as many foot-men by Diego Merlo, Don Pedro Henriques, and the Marquis of Cales, who for the hatred which he did euer beare to the duke of Medina Sidonia, would not haue him made acquainted with this enterprise. The Moores of Granado beeing greatly astonished for the losse of Alhama, beganne to make euill presages of the end of the warre, and to murmure against King Muley Albobacen, not sparing to say, that his taking of Sahara would sticke to him and to his posteritie to the worlds end. He did speedily send a thousand horse to their ayde, but they could not come time enough.

Euill presages
of the Moores.

In the meane space he gathered together all his men at armes from all parts of his kingdome, and came in person to beseege Alhama, not bringing any artillerie with him, imagining that the Christians not beeing yet fortified therein, would quickly leaue it, but he was deceiued; for hee found them sower and stubborne aduersaries; but chiefly there was a bloudie incounter at such time as the Moores went about to turne away the riuer which passeth by the towne, where diuers of both sides lost their liues: and it is to be doubted, that without the ayde of God sent to the besegged, they had beene overcome by so great a power, as then fought against them, for they began to be out of hope and beganne to spoile all that they could not carry away, and were resolute to yeeld it, when Don Henry de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia, arriued with a sufficient armie of his owne tenants, friends, and followers, with others entertained with his owne money, which (they say) amounted to three thousand horse, and forty thousand foot, with whom were ioyned the Earle of Cabra, and Don Alphonso of Aguilar, and his brother Don Gonzal Hernandez of Cordoua, who was afterward called the great Capraine in the warres of Italy, bringing with him the troupes of Seuille, Eccia, Cordoua, and other places. All these forces, which were great and wonderfull, for the short time wherein they were gathered together, did march towards Alhama.

The king of Granado besies Alhama.

King Fernand hauing notice of the taking thereof, made himselfe toorthwith readie for to come into Andaluzia, hauing in his company Don Bertrand de la Cueva, Duke of Albuquerque, and the Earles of Treuigno and Tendilla, with many other knights, the Earle of Cifuentes meeting them at Toledo, and then they altogether passed the mount called Sierra Morena, to ioine with the armie which the king commanded to attend him there: but the Commanders knowing the necessitie of those of Alhama, went forward with great diligence to deliuer them, the which they did onely by the noyse of their coming: the Moore King beeing retired in the night with his whole armie. The king who followed, passed on to Anteguera, and there receyued newes, that the sege before Alhama was raysed, wherefore he returned to Cordoua to meet the Queene whom he had left to leaue souldiers.

Now the Marquis of Cales, who was besegged with great danger in Alhama, considering the generosity of his aduersarie the Duke of Medina, who for the weale-publike and seruice of the king, hauing forgotten all enmitie, had come to his ayde, he did highly esteeme

Don Henr de Guzman comes to the succour of his aduersaries.

Debate betwixt the besseged, and those that came to their ayde.

Alhama preferred at the instance of Don Iuanel.

Death of Don Alphonso Carrillo.

esteeme of him, and casting away all euill will and hatred, he ranne to him and embraced him with great loue, giuing him infinite thanks for so great a fauour: and these two Lords had such louing and pleasing conference together, as euer after they liued in strict and vnfaigned friendship; this Moorish warre hauing brought forth effects contrarie to the feditious in Castile. The Chieftains beeing agreed, there arose contention betwixt the souldiers, those which came to their ayde did say, that they ought to haue their part of the spoyle of the towne, the others gaine-sayed it, in such sort, as if the wisdom of their Captaines, and their new reconciliation had not preuented it, they had fallen into tumult. The spoyle remayned to those who had defended the place, and the new come souldiers were appeased with reason and good words, and they all dislodged with the Duke and the Marquis, and returned euery man to his home: after the garrisons were refreshed, and the towne well manned, where Diego de Merlo, Don Martin of Cordoua, and Hernand Carrillo remayned Captaines. After that the armie was gone, the King of Granado hauing notice thereof, he did forth-with returne backe to assaile Alhama, and brought at this time no more engines of batterie with him, than at the former, but only a great number of ladders, thinking in regard it was not yet thoroughly fortified nor rampired, to take it by the multitude of his souldiers: and at last hauing assayed it day and night without ceassing, he earely in a morning scaled it in a place which was not thought vpon: so as he put three-score and ten Moorish souldiers into it, and had caused greater numbers to haue entred, had not a souldier perceyued them, and giuen the alarme: wherefore the Christians running to that place, did cut in peeces those that were entred, and repulsed the rest who endeauoured to follow them. The successe of those assaults was not according to king Muley Albohacen expectation, therefore he went thence once againe, with an intent to returne thither with artillerie. In the meane space Queene Isabella hauing left the Admirall Viceroy of Castile, marched with those forces which she had leauied, towards Cordoua, to meete the King, being attended on by the Constable, who refused to be Viceroy of Castile, saying, that warre and armes were the proper offices belonging to an high Constable of Spaine. The Kings Councell did determine and almost conclude to raze the Cittie of Alhama, in regard it stood in the midst of the Realme of Granado, and therefore very hardly to be kept: but the Queene, who was desirous to preferue it, as the first conquest of her raigne, did perswade the contrarie, so as it was not ruined: and order was giuen to assaile, and take in all the forts and castles nere adioyning.

The Kings came after that to Eccia, where they receyued newes of the decease of Don Alphonso Carrillo of Acugna, Arch-bishop of Toledo, who dyed at Alcala de Henares: they procured the election to the same dignitie for the Cardinall Pero Gonçales of Mendoza, the seuentith Arch-bishop of that Sea and Primate of Spaine, and the Arch-bishoppricke of Siuile was giuen to Don Inigo Manriques Bishop of Iuen. There were at the same time with the King, Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza Bishop of Palence, the Masters of Saint Iames and Calatraua, the Constable, the Dukes of Villa-hermosa, Infantisgo, Medina Celi, Albuquerque, the Marquis of Villena, and Cales, the Earles of Vregna, Cabra, Treuigno, Tendilla, Cisuentes, and Benalcazar, Don Alphonso d'Aquilar, Don Henry Henriquez great Master, and the Kings vncler, Iohn Chacon, Roderigo of Villosa, Don Frederick of Toledo, sonne to the Duke of Alua, Don Iohn de Ribera Lord of Montmajor, Don Alphonso of Cardenaz, Don Antonio Fonseca, Hernand of Vega, with other Lords and Knights of great name: Don Iohn of Estuniga, master of Alcantara, by reason of his young yeares was absent, with his father the Duke of Plaisance. With this companie the king departed from Eccia, with eight thousand horse, and great numbers of foot, and came to Alhama, the which they fortified with rampars, bulwarkes, and other sufficient defences, and the king made Don Lewis Fernandes Porto Carrero, Lord of Palma, Gouvernor thereof, leauing him foure hundred horse: the Cardinall did purifie and blesse the three Mesquites or churches with the accustomed ceremonies, and dedicated them to other vses: then the army began to ouer-run the country on euery side, whilst the queene busied her selfe in providing victuals, armes, munition, and other necessaries for the wars. The Christian army being strengthened with new supplies, did presently bessege Loxa and

A and was lodged amongst the Oliue trees, vallies, and little hills neere to the riuer of Guadaxenil. The Moore king on his part lost neither time nor courage, but fortified and defended the passages and streights, by the which the enemies might assaile him, and approach towards Granado: sending to the Kings and Potentates of Affrica, to aduertise them of the dangerous warre wherein he was ingaged, intreating them for the religion common betwixt them, for the honour of their nation, for the equall danger which threatned them, if Granado should be lost, that they would come or lend to his ayde: and he did in the meane time oppose his owne forces against the Christians, and on either part there were valiant encounters and skirmishes performed, where neuertheless Don Roderigo Telles Giron Master of Calatraua's shappe was hard, who dyed beeing shot thorough the bodie with two poysoned arrowes, and Don Garcia Lopes of Padilla was promoted to his place, and was the last Master of that Order. King Fernand beeing desirous to change and alter the seate and lodging of his armie to a more conuenient place, there were sharpe skirmishes in the remoouing of the campe, where the Constable receyued two wounds in his face: the besseged, who were not aboue three thousand, made continuall sallies vpon the Christians with such furie and brauing, as it was to be wondered at: and did oftentimes put the great Lords and Captaines which kept those quarters which they assayed, in great danger of their liues: committing notable spoyles vpon their troupes, and the Duke of Medina Celi, and the Earle of Tendilla, did hardly escape with their liues, beeing rescued by the forces of the Earle of Playfance, which his sonne Don Francisco of Estuniga brought to their ayde: the Kings owne person was likewise succored by Don Iohn de Ribera, Lord of Montmajor, assisted greatly by Don Fredericke of Toledo, sonne to the Duke of Alua, Don Antonio de Fonseca, Don Alphonso of Cardenaz, and Hernand of Vega. Such was the enraged hardinesse of the Moores, as notwithstanding that they were beaten backe and streightly shut in by the valour and industrie of the Marquis of Cales, yet they constrayned King Fernand to raise his sege and returne to Cordoua.

The souldiers which lay in Alhama hauing notice of what had happened, and of the Kings retreat from before Loxa, fearing that the Moores would returne to bessege them, cried out to haue the towne razed and ouerthrowne, and to returne home to their houses: but Don Lewis Fernandes Porto Carrero, and Pero Luis of Alarcon, with others, did oppose themselues against it, and hindred it. The king of Granado came thither the third time, and did greatly annoy them: but they valiantly defended themselues vntill K. Fernand came with succour to deliuer them from the sege, who changed both the garison and the Gouverneur, and left other souldiers there, vnder the command of Don Lewis Osorio Arch-deacon of Astorga, and brother to the Marquis of the same place. That beeing done, the Christian armie did forrage, burn and spoyle the countrie of Granado, from whence they carried away much spoile, and many prisoners to Cordoua.

E Mahomet Boabdellin called the Little, and the twentieth king of Granado.

THE Christian souldiers found smal resistance in this latter roade, in regard the Moores were greatly diuided among themselues, by meanes whereof King Muley Albohacen was dispossessed and driuen away; for hee was much feared and hated, because of his tyrannies which extended chiefly to the Nobilitie, and he had namely euill intreated the family of Aben-caraxes, one of the most illustrious houses among the Granadins. These men with their complices and allies constrayned Muley Albohacen to giue place, and they deliuered the cittie with the Alhambra or fort thereof, to his sonne Mahomet Boabdellin surnamed the Little, who was fled to Guadix for feare of beeing slaine by his father, who was carried away with vnreasonable amorous passions, and false suggestions of a second wife, a renied Christian, whom hee had married for her rare and excellent beaurie, in regard whereof she was called Zoraya, which significth Morning-starre. This woman woman being desirous to aduance her children which shee had by the King, did indea- A uour by all meanes to roote out those which hee had begotten on the Queene Aixa his wife, a Ladie of a great and illustrious house, and his neere kinswoman, who because she would not see her eldest sonne murdered, which was this Boabdellin, she caused him on a night to be let downe out of the window of the castle with the helpe of her woman by a rope made of their vailles, and night tyres, and thereby gaue him meanes to saue himselfe in the cittie of Guadix, where the Abenceraxes his kinsmen, who were of great power there, did kindly receiue him, and dealt in such sort with their friends of the city of Granado, as they acknowledged him for their king. The father hauing retired himselfe somewhere else, made fierce and sharpe warre vpon his sonne, which caused the losse of their Crowne, and totall ruine to the raigne of the Moores in Spaine. B

The Moores make furious sallies vpon the Christians.

The sege of Loxa raised.

Seditious betwixt the father and sonne.

The Moores take Cagnette. Albeit that those barbarous people were at such dissention among themselves, yet when there was any cause they would agree together to annoy the Christians, so as they tooke the towne of Cagnette, spoyle it, and carried away all the inhabitants and souldiers for slaues, and afterwards razed it downe to the ground. These things were done in the year 1482. whereia is to be noted, that foure seuerall Christian armies entred in a few moneths space into the kingdome of Granado. King Fernand and Queene Isabella appointed Captaines for the frontiers, namely, for Iuen Don Pedro Manrique Earle of Treuigno, who was newly made Duke of Nagera; the Master of Saint Iames for Ec- cia, and Don Iohn de Silva Earle of Cifuentes for Siuill, the assistant Diego Merlo being C late dead. Towards the end of the yeare, the Queene in the cittie of Cordoua was deli- uered of a daughter, called the Infanta Maria, who was afterward Queene of Portugall, and after she was churched, the Court remooued to Madrid.

The beginning of the yeare 1483. was sorrowfull to the Nauarrois, by reason of the death of their king Francis Phœbus, whome the Princessse his mother had carried backe into France, to auoyde the importunate solliciting of marriages which they would haue procured in Spaine both for him and his sister Donna Catherine, wherewith King Lewis the eleuenth was not contented: hee dyed not without suspicion of poyson: for without any apparance at all of sicknesse, hee felt himselfe to be stricken with a deadly pricking, as he was playing vpon a flute, which was presented vnto him, in which, and all other in- struments of musicke, hee did greatly delight. Being neere to his end hee repeated these words taken out of the Gospell: My kingdom is not of this world, therefore I leave the world: trouble not your selues, for I go to the Father. He dyed in Bearne, in the castle of Pau the fourth yeare of his raigne, if we reckon from his grand-mothers death, Queene Leonora, being but fifteene yeares of age fully compleat: hee lyes buried at Lescar in the Cathedrall Church of S. Mary.

King Fernand and Queene Isabella receiued newes of his death at Madrid, where they had called a Parliament, and because the Crowne of Nauarre descended to the Infanta Donna Catherine sister to the deceased king, they sent the Licenciado Rodrigo Maldonado of Talauera, one of their Councell Ambassador into Bearne, to the Princessse Magdalen her mother, to demaund the Infanta in marriage, for the Prince Don Iohn their sonne. The mother Princessse notwithstanding that shee would willingly haue condescended thereunto, made answer that shee could not bestow her without the consent of his brother the French king. Vpon this answer, the Catholike kings sent Iohn de Ribera with troupes of men at armes towards the frontiers of Nauarre, to haue intelligence with the Earle of Lerin, who had married King Fernandes bastard sister, to the end to hinder the French-men from enterprising any thing, and from entring into that kingdome. The E- states assembled at Madrid granted a subside to the King, towards the warre of Granado: and besides that, the Pope permitted them to leaue one hundred thousand Crownes v- pon the Clergie of Spayne, and sent them a Croizado, to gather contributions and gifts for the same purpose: and in this Parliament, the power, authoritie and iurisdiction of the Hermandades and vnions of the Communalities was ordered and reformed. After- wards the Kings diuided the affaires betwixt them, that they might the better prouide for matters: (hee remayned in Castile, and he prepared himselfe to returne into An- dalusia, but the troubles which were raised in Galicia, by the meanes of D. Pero Aluarez Orosio, F

A Orosio, Earle of Lemos did call him into those parts. The Earle dyed there before the Kings arriual, and by that meanes saued the King a labour, who otherwise would haue had him arraigned by order of lawe. Another contention arole betwixt a bastard sonne of the late Earles called Rodrigo Orosio, whome his father had appointed heire in the Earldome of Lemos, to the preiudice of his lawfull daughter, who was married to the Earle of Benaunts sonne: she sayd, that in regard Rodrigo was a bastard, he was incapa- ble to inherite: he on the contrarie alleaged his legitimation by the Pope: the king im- posed silence and peace to both parties, and referred the cause to his Councell to bee orde- red according to iustice: and in the meane time did commit the towne of Ponferrada, and the Lordship thereof, being a parcell of the litigious inheritance, to the keeping of his

B Vncle Don Henry Henriques great Master, excepting one strong hold of the same Lord- shippe, which he gaue in keeping to Don George d'Abendaño his countri-man, and a Knight of the Kings house. These matters thus ordered, the king returned to Madrid, from whence he dispatched Ambassadours to procure the peace of Italy, which flamed with intestine warres, the Pope and the Venetians hauing ioyned, to the preiudice of King Fernand of Naples and the Florentines, drawing all the Potentates of Italy to their Factions: who by the diligence and good meanes of Don Iohn Bishoppe of Gironne, chief of that Ambassage, and by the fauour and authoritie of the Kings of Castile were reconciled: albeit the Venetians did alwaies nourish a secret hatred and contempt of King Fernand and Queene Isabella, and did not greatly care to obserue the peace.

C In this meane space the Captaines, which lay vpon the frontiers of Granado, made inroades and incredible spoyle vpon the Moores, especially those of the Garrison of Alhama, from whence a craftie and cunning Squire, whose name was Iohn de Corral, of Diego Lopes d'Alcala his companie, came forth by meanes of a safe-conduct, to con- ferre with the King of Granado, giuing him to vnderstand, how that hee of himselfe could vse meanes to cause Alhama to bee restored vnto him, wherewith the Moore king was so pleased, as he offered readily on his part to yeeld vp Zahara, and to set all the Christian prisoners at libertie, giuing a great quantitie of gold, and besides that, to pay tribute, and for euer to become vassall to the kings of Castile. Iohn de Corral with these promises, came to the Kings, and declared to them in part what he had treated with the King of Granado, his chiefe drift being onely to get gifts and rewards, whereuppon D the Kings giuing credite vnto him, gaue him limited authoritie to contract with the Moore.

Being returned to Granado, the Moore King, who thought that the principall Ar- ticle of his Commission, was for the restitution of Alhama, had not the patience to con- sider and looke vpon Iohn de Corral his authoritie, but beganne readily on his part to performe what hee had promised, causing diuers Christian prisoners to be set at liberty. Then Iohn de Corral contenting himselfe with that which was done, came to Iuen and told the Duke of Nagera how he had deceived the king of Granado, who presently sent to the Duke to complaine of this deceit. The Duke sent Iohn de Corral to the Court, ad- uertising the Kings what he had done, whereat they were highly discontented, and they did commaund that the prisoners ransomes should bee payed, and that Iohn de Corral should pay backe the money, jewels, and other presents that hee had receiued of the King of Granado, and that hee should bee kept prisoner in Anzequera, vntill hee had made full restitution, and that the warre should stand vpon the selfe-same termes as before.

Notwithstanding that the Kings had begunne the warre of Granado, and did greatly suspect the French on the side of Nauarre, yet for that they did not giue ouer to vnder- take matters of great importance, either of them being of an haughtie and magnani- mous courage.

Of the seauen Islands called the Canaries, which are girdled with the Atlantick Ocean, foure of them were already conquered by the valor and industrie of certaine inhabitants of Seuill, euer since the raigne of King Iohn the second, and there remayned yet the great Canarie, Thenerif, and the Ile of Palmes to be brought vnder the subiection of the kings of Castile: therefore this yeare 1483. they sent thither Alphonso of Muxica, and Pedro de Vera.

Sedition in Galicia.

Years of Italy appraised.

Integrity of K. Fernand and Q. Isabella.

Canaries made subjects to the Kings of Castile.

Vera, valiant Captaines, and no lesse skilfull in sea-fights than at land, who landed in the great Canaries, where they found two kings striving for the principallitie thereof: they fauoured one of them, and dealt in such sort, as hauing rooted out the other, they obtained the gouernement of the Island: the Cittie was erected into a Bishops See, and translated from the Isle of Lançarot.

The Christians
defeated.

In Andalusia the Master of Saint Iames, the Marquis of Cales, the Earle of Cifuentes, Gouvernour of Siuill, Don Alphonso d'Aguiar, Don Pedro Henriquez, Captaine of the frontiers, and others, came to Antequera with an intent to spoile the countrey of las Lomas de Malaga, called Axarquia, a territorie abounding in cattell: of the which enterprize the Moores had notice, who made themselves readie to charge them on the sudden, when they should least looke for it, hauing driuen their cattell into streights and strong places. The Christians being entred into the countrey beganne to spoyle, and they soone found sharpe resistance: wherefore in regard of the streightnesse of the countrey, and because they found not such booties as they expected, they thought to turne backe: but being ignorant of the wayes, and overtaken by the night, they fell into streight and narrow places betwixt certaine hilles, which were filled with enemies, at the last they came into a valley, where with great labour and disadvantage, they were enforced to fight all that night with the Moores, the which did greatly amaze the whole army. The Master of Saint Iames being valiant and courageous, in striving to ascend an hill, lost his Ensigne-bearer, and a kinsman of his owne called Iohn d'Osorno, Iohn Bagan, and other Commaunders, who sold their liues at a deare rate: the Marquis of Cales did in like manner follow the Master of Saint Iames, but the victorious Moores ouerthrew his troupes likewise, and slue Don Diego, Don Lope, and Don Bertrand his brethren, and Don Lorenzo, and Don Manuel his nephewes euen in his sight: yet notwithstanding, himselfe, the Master of Saint Iames, and Don Pedro Henriquez did escape with great danger. The Earle of Cifuentes making meanes to escape among the rest, was taken prisoner, with Don Bernardin Manrique, the Captaines of Antequera, and Moron, and diuers others: great was the slaughter of the souldiers at this defeat, the which was notable and of great consequence.

The Moores carried away the Earle, and the rest of the prisoners to Granado: but they did not long reioyce in the good hap of their victorie; for the Christians soone after tooke a sharpe vengeance on them: for King Mahomet Boabdellin, surnamed the Little, hauing with great troupes of horse and foote ouer-runne and spoyled the territorie of Lucena and Aguiar, at his returne backe being pestered with great herds of cattail and other booties, Don Diego of Cordoua Earle of Cabra, who lay in garrison at Beana to resist such enterprizes, and Don Diego Fernandes of Cordoua, on the one side, did pursue him to cause him to leaue his bootie behind him, and Don Alphonso of Aguiar on the other side with his troupes placed themselves in ambush in a narrow streight, thorough which they were to passe at their returne with intent to charge them on a sudden. Now the King who had tenne Moores for one Christian of the Earle of Cabra's band which followed him, made no difficultie to stay for them, yet they charged one another with great furie, where the Moores notwithstanding their multitudes prooued the weaker: and thinking to make a safe retreat, they fell into Don Alphonso d'Aguiars ambush, who slue a thousand of them vpon the same place: the rest, leauing their prey behind them, fled away as fast as they could, forsaking their king, who was there taken prisoner. There were taken at this encounter nine hundred mules, siue hundred horse, and nine Moorish Standards, besides other spoiles, which were distributed among the souldiers, and the Kings person fell to the Earle of Cabraes share: in token of which victorie the Earles of Cabra, by the aduice and grant of the Kings of Castile, do beare for their armes a Mores head in prison, tyed with a chaine of gold, with a bend ouerthwart their shield, wherein nine standards are painted. By this ouerthrow King Mahomet the Little lost much of his reputation, and many strong Castles reuolted from him to his father Muley Albohacen: during his imprisonment he was honorably vsed and like a king.

King Fernand being ioyfull for this victorie did thinke it fit to follow the occasion, and with a great armie to assaile the Moores, who were astonished with their losse: wherefore

A wherefore he tooke order that the Affrican Moores should not come by sea into Spaine to their ayde: and then hee entred into the Countrey of Granado with an army of tenne thousand horse, and thirtie thousand foote: among whome there were great numbers of Switzers, with a great trayne of Officers, victuallers, Merchants, and other people who serued and followed the campe: before which the Earle of Cabra and Don Alphonso of Aguiar did march with troupes of auantcoursers, who burned the countrey round about Illora and Montefrio: the armie passed by Illora which was not easie to be taken without great Artillerie: but they tooke the towne and castle of Tagara, which lies betwixt Alhama and Loxa; the King would not take those of the Castle to his mercie, because they did not yeeld at the first assault, which together with the town was razed to the ground.

Switzers in the wars of Granado.

B Diuers valiant men of the Christian campe were hurt at the taking thereof, as namely, Don Henry Henriquez the Kings Vncle, and Lord great Master of his house. Being come to Alhama, the King caused it to be well fortified, and left Don Imigo Lopes de Mendoza, Earle of Tendilla Gouvernour there, who was a very vertuous Knight: then he led his armie farther into the countrey of Granado, ouerthrowing and destroying all that stood before him, but for want of victuals, he returned to Cordoua. The Moores being thus persecuted and afflicted, did beginne to intreate for peace, and offered to pay the King tribute, and some Moore children of Noble houses for hostages: Wherewith King Fernand acquainted the Queene his wife, who then lay at Victoria to looke to the affaires of Nauarre, which shee feared would shortly stirre, who was of opinion to haue the hostages to be townes and castles, and not children, whereunto the Moores not consenting, the warre stood at that same stay as it was before. Thereupon the Moore Queene, mother to the King, made meanes for her sonnes deliuerie, and sent to offer King Fernand perpetuall homage, twelue thousand Duckets for yearly tribute, and a great summe of readie money for his ranfome, and besides, to set three hundred Christian prisoners at libertie, such as he would please to name, and shee offered sufficient hostages for the performance of what shee promised.

The King commaunded the Earle of Cabra to deliuer the prisoner vnto him; the which he did, and deliuered him to Martin Alarcon, Captaine of Porcuna, whether King Fernand sent to visite and comfort him, for the which, Mahomet gaue him infinite thanks, saying, that he could not be in care, so long as he was in the hands of so great and courteous a King, whome he had euer desired to serue being at his full libertie, and to receiue the Crowne of Granado at his hand, in the same maner as King Ismael his Grandfather had done from King Iohn. And because the King had occasion to go into Castile, and also to Arragon, he did determine to deliuer the Moore King: the opinions concerning his deliuerie were diuers, some agreeing thereunto, and others, not, wherein the master of Saint Iames, and the Marquis of Cales were contrarie one to the other: Wherefore they sent to haue the Queenes opinion in the matter, who therein agreed with the Marquis, that he should bee deliuered: the prisoner was brought to Cordoua, where he wold haue kissed King Fernands hand, but he would not permit it, the better thereby to oblige him to himselfe: hee did there sweare to accomplish whatsoever was agreed vpon, and he was set at libertie hauing bene honoured with rich presents. King Fernand after that went to Victoria, from thence he passed into Arragon, and going by Guadalupe, being a deuout Prince, he there performed a vow.

King Mahomet
deliuered.

The Frontier was well furnished and provided of all things necessarie against the assaults of the Moores: yet notwithstanding, they hauing notice of the Kings departure out of Andalusia, did make diuers roades into the countrey, being extremely moued against King Mahomet, in regard he had bene so well intreated by the Catholicke King, and was become his vassall, and of whom, besides other benefices, he had promise of aide and assistance against Muley Albohacen his father, and they sayd, that it was a matter displeasing to God, and against all right for the Mahometan Kings to beg any assistance of Christians against the Princes of their owne religion: wherefore diuers forsaking him, they tooke part with Muley Albohacen, and brought him with siue hundred Knights into the Castle of Alhapubre, where he slue all such as were of his sonnes faction, who retired himselfe to Almeria.

Hhhh,

Now

The Moores defeited, and their King taken prisoner.

The Earle of Cabraes armes.

Now the army of the Moores being strong and resolute to do their worst, entred in A to the marches of Andalusia, the Garrisons and chiefe Commanders of the warre being in the cities, were forthwith aduertised thereof by the souldiers called Almogaraues, or ordinarie watches of the frontiers: therefore Don Lewis Fernandes Porto Carrero, Lord of Palmas, who was afterward made Earle thereof, with the forces of the Master of Saint Iames, of the Marquis of Cales, those of Eccia, Xeres, Arcos, and others which were gathered together, did march against the enemies, whome hee found disbanded, spoyling and destroying the territorie of Vtrera: whome he charged with such resolution and courage, as in an instant they were all defeated and put to flight, with losse of diuers of their captaines, great numbers of souldiers, fiftene ensignes, and all their spoyle: of which victorie the Queene being aduertised, shee caused generall processions to be made in the citie of Victoria: and because this encounter happened vpon the sixth day of Ianuarie being Twelfth day, shee sent a gowne of cloath of gold to the Lord of Palmas wife, to the end shee should weare it euery yeare vpon that sollempne festiual day.

The Moores defeated at Vtrera.

Zahara surprised by the Christians.

The Christians in Andalusia hauing this good hap, the Marquis of Cales was aduertised, that Zahara was ill furnished of souldiers and victuals, wherefore hauing communicated his desseigne with the Lord of Palmas, they went forth on a night being accompanied by the troupes of Xeres, and hidde themselves in covert places neere the towne, whither they sent tenne men, who in great silence lodged themselves at the foot of the wall, towards the Castle: these were seconded by three-score and tenne other souldiers. At the breake of day, the Marquis sent certaine light horse to runne about the towne, against whome three-score and ten Moorish horse-men came forth, (and with them also, the Sentinels and Guard leauing their places) to skirmish, then the ten men did set vp ladders against the Castle, and beganne to make a shew, as if they would haue skaled the walles; to the defence whereof as many as stayed within came running: in the meane space the three-score and tenne souldiers which were hidden, did seize vpon one of the gates: besides that, those which were come forth against the Christian light-horsemen, perceiuing themselves to be charged by others, who came to their ayde, turned their backs and fled towards the towne, and were so narrowly pursued, as they all entered pell mel together: and being in this fort surprised on euery side, they lost the town. The castle would haue made resistance if it had bene well victualled, but for want thereof they yielded, compounding for their liues.

The Earle of Tendilla who kept Alhama, would not suffer the Moores his neighbors to rest, but he oftentimes annoyed them, so as he was feared like lightning ouer all the Countrey. The winter this yeare was very rainie, by meanes whereof a great part of the wall of Alhama fell to the ground, making a large breach for the enemies, if they had then assailed it: whereat the soldiers which were within were greatly amazed and thought vpon nothing but flight, but the courage and valour of the Captaine, which is cuer of much woorth, contrayned them in their duties, who delt in such sort by hanging of painted cloathes against the breach with such art and cunning, as the enemies neuer knew, that the wall was fallen downe, till it was made vp againe stronger then before. The Earle Don Isigo, true sonne to the Marquis of Santillana, caused the tower of Alcalá la reale to be repayed, on the topp whereof euery night a burning lampe was set, which serued to direct the poore slaues that fled from Granado. His souldiers being disobedient for want of pay, (money being very dangerous to be sent vnto them without the conuoy of an armie) the Earle inuented a certaine kind of counterfeit money, and of diuers stampes, the which hee named and prized according to the coynes of gold and silver which were currant in Spayne, and with the same hee payed his souldiers, promising them to change all that false money into good, according to the value of euery coyne, and by this meanes hee did appease them.

Counterfeit money.

4
Nauarre.

Whilest these matters fell out in Andalusia, King Fernand and Queene Isabella were in great doubt to be disturbed on that side of Nauarre by the French: it may bee that this suspition came from their owne consciences touched with their sinister proceedings

A proceedings with the Earle of Lerin, and with the treatie of marriage of these poore Princes of Nauarre, and matters happened vpon those occasions. Now Queene Catherine, who was newly come to the Crowne of Nauarre, besides her being wholly at the deuotion of France, and vpon the poynt of her marriage with John d'Albret, sonne to the Earle Alaine, King Lewis his death happened a little before, which had openly troubled and hindred the alliance betwixt these two great kingdomes of France and Spayne: for Ambassadors being sent from one to another, as well for to make the accustomed condolements, and consolations ordinarie at such accidents, as for to treat of the alliances, and moreouer, about the restitution of the Earldome of Rossillon which the French held, the Ambassadors of Spayne receyued no pleasing answer from the young King Charles the eighth, who succeeded King Lewis his father, nor from his tutors and counsellors, so as they made the protestations and declarations which Princes usually do make, when they are vpon the point of making warre one against another: therefore Queene Isabella had furnished the frontier of Castile ioyning to Nauarre with strong garrisons, and sent forces to Tudela a towne in Nauarre which held their partie, vnder the conduct of John de Ribera.

After the death of King Francis Phœbus, his mother the Princeesse fearing, and not with our cause, the reuolt of that nation, which was an enemy to rest and quiet, had sent thither the Cardinall of Foix, and the Lord of Abenas, brother to the Lord of Albret, who did call a Parliament, to receyue a new oath of fidelitie for Queene Catherine, and commanded them moreouer to receiue the sayd Lord of Abenas for Viceroy, notwithstanding that the Constable Earle Lewis of Beaumont did resolutely oppose himselfe against it, hauing secret intelligence with his brother-in-law King Fernand for the same purpose. The Lord of Abenas was a graue, wise, and modest Knight, who by these qualities and vertues had well gouerned the Realme of Nauarre, and maintained it in peace and quiet, vntill such time as Queene Katherine, hauing married his Nephew John d'Albret, came her selfe in person to rule and gouerne the same. The Constable in the meane time, who held the Citie of Pampelona vnder his power, and many other places besides, did rayse troubles, and brought the Castilian men at armes into the Kingdome, vnder colour of the Factions of Beaumont and Grammont, during all these actions they still poured the marriage, so that after King Lewis his death the Princeesse Magdalen being continually solicited to marrie her daughter Queene Katherine to Prince John of Castile, shee was aduised to make a finall answer, and to say, that the inequalitye of their yeares would not permit it to be done, in regard her daughter was marriageable, and the Prince a little child in his cradle: and that in the meane time, before hee should come to age, there might bee great troubles and combustions in the Realme of Nauarre, which stood in need of men to gouerne it, and to suppress the vsuall contentions and quarrels which those people did naturally entertaine: and that without this let, her selfe, and her daughter would thinke themselves happie in so great an alliance; for they esteemed no match in the world like to that of Prince John, who was presumptiue heire to so many rich and mightie Kingdomes. All this notwithstanding, Queene Isabella perswading her selfe to effect this marriage in despite of all these hinderances, married still at Victoria, the most part of this yeare 1484. at which time (as hath bene sayd) shee sent Don John de Ribera with forces into Nauarre, who hauing intelligence with the Earle of Lerin, tooke Viana, the Castle of Saint Gregorie, that of Iturera and others: which disorders the Viceroy sought to redresse with great prouidence, and kept the people in their obedience to the Queene their naturall Princeesse. About this time Pope Sixtus the fourth dyed, in whose place succeeded John Baptista Cibo, Cardinall of the title of Saint Laurence in Lucina, and Bishop of Malfetta, who was called Innocent the eighth. The yeare before King Lewis the eleuenth dyed, who (as it is reported) had ordained by his last will, that the Earldome of Rossillon should bee restored to King Fernand the lawfull Prince thereof: but his sonnes Counsellours thought it not conuenient. This King being very deuoute and greatly honouring Saint Iames, had giuen tenne thousand Crownes, and sent great store of mettall and worke-men to make the greatest bell there in all Christendome.

Don Lewis of Beaumont who by afflictionate to the Kings of Castile.

Hhhh 2

Now

Now for the causes heretofore declared, the Kings of Castile did enterprise against A Nauarre and France, notwithstanding the warre of Granado, the which they would in no sort giue ouer, but did earnestly sollicite it, and prouided sufficiently for it.

Moore.

King Fernand being yet in his Kingdome of Arragon, there were assembled in the cittie of Cordoua, and afterwards in Antequera, the number of fixe thousand horse, and twelue thousand foot-men, which ouer-ran and spoiled the Countreies of Alora, Coin, Caçaranouella and Carthama, where diuers notable skirmishes were made: the Master of Saint Iames, the Marquis of Cales, and Don Alphonso d'Aguiar were Captaines of them. This armie was refreshed with victuals from Siuill and Xeres, and then returned to Antequera laden with spoyles. The Queene in the meane time visited the Prouinces of Guipuscoa and Biscay, and at her returne to Victoria, the King arriued there out of Arragon, where he found much to do, for the Arragonois were not so easily gouerned, nor so ready to please their Kings appetites, as the Castillians, both of them left Victoria, and came to Tarassone, where the Estates of Arragon were appointed to meet, whose Deputies, did set downe such difficulties and delayes, as they would by no meanes contribute money towards the warres of Granado, nor against France for the Earledome of Rossillon, so as they were at the point to dissolve the assembly: for the time of making warre being come, it behooued them either to assaile or defend on the frontiers of Granado.

Estates of Arragon.

The Kings Councell made long disputations vpon the difficultie of making this C double warre: for King Fernand was desirous to assaile the French for the recouerie of the Earledome of Rossillon, and the Queenes mind was to pursue the Moores, euen to the totall ruine of their State, and expulsion out of Spaine. The most part of the voyces fauoured the Queenes desire, and shee, to please her husband, was of opinion, that hee with the forces of Arragon, Valencia, Cattalonia, and some part of Castile should war vpon the French, and her selfe with the rest of the armie would pursue the Moores. Hereuppon they seuered themselves, the Queene went towards Toledo, and the King stayed to make an end of the assembly. The Cardinall of Spaine did accompanie the Queene, and hauing not yet made his entrie into the cittie of Toledo, since hee was Arch-bishop thereof, he entred the same in great pompe, in which sollemnitie vpon that D day by an auncient custome the Arch bishop of Toledo was preferred in all honors and ceremonies, about the Soueraigne Magistrate: neuertheless the Cardinall gaue place to the Queene, albeit shee would haue had the old custome obserued. From thence they went to Andalusia, where they ordered and reformed certaine customes which the people of Iuen, Baesa, Vbeda, Cañona, Andujar, and others had concerning feasts and plaies nothing profitable to the common-wealth. When they came to Cordoua the great Lords did there meete to conferre about the warres: there came also diuers French and Almaine Gunners; for Cannons and Bombards were not as yet much vsed in Spaine. There was likewise a great army by sea seufoorth, Don Aluaro of Mendoza, Earle of Castro being Generall. The Queene would haue made the Cardinall Generall ouer all her land and sea forces: but the kings vnlookt-for returne, who could do no good with the States of Arragon, gaue end to his commission. They were determined to beseege Loxa: but for the easier execution thereof, they first of all did assaile Alora, the which they took hauing beaten downe two towers with the Cannon: The Moores fledd into the Castle, and did afterwards by composition saue their liues and goods.

The Cardinall entred Toledo as Archb. The king giues him place that day.

Ceremonies vsed after the taking of any towne from the Moores.

The King and Queenes custome was, so soone as they had taken any towne from the Moores, to send three ensignes thither which were consecrated or blessed, (as they rearm it) the which were to be set vp on the highest tower or place of the same towne: the first, was of the Crucifixe for a signe and token of the redemption of mankind; the which was carried to the highest toppes of the towne or fort, and there by an ensigne-bearer displayd and flourished in the ayre: the whole army kneeling downe, and giuing thanks to God in diuers prayers: but this prayer was chiefly rehearsed with a loud voyce, as followeth:

Deus qui per crucem tuam, populo in te credenti triumphum contra inimicos tuos concedere voluisti, quesumus, vt in tua pietate adorantibus crucem, victoriam semper tribuas & honorem. Others did say: Exaudi nos Domine salutaris noster, et per Triumphum sancte Crucis

A Crucis a cunctis nos defende periculis. The Clergy and Ministers of the Church did afterwards sing, Te Deum laudamus.

